Two things were a great concern to him at this time—one, that he might make reparation to any whom he had financially wronged; the other, that his wife also might share in God's renewing grace. "He always thought I was good," she writes naïvely, "and when he found that goodness did not mean the new birth, he became very anxious; but about a month after his own conversion, he had the joy of knowing that the Lord had revealed Himself to me as my own personal Saviour, and so we started together, and have been kept ever since 'by the power of God.'"

Dr. Barnes was then resident at Newport, Mon., and was much helped by a mission taken at St. Paul's by Dr. Morris. He immediately set to work with the energy which characterized him in everything. He got hold of a hall that had been used as a dancing saloon, gave free breakfasts on Sunday mornings, and evangelistic addresses on Sunday evenings. About the same time his wife started a Band of Hope and mothers' meeting. He became churchwarden to Dr. Wrenford, and had thoughts of seeking orders in the Church of England. With this view he had interviews with the Bishop of Llandaff; but about this time, conversations with one who was "in Christ" before him, brought to his view difficulties about the Catechism and the baptismal service, and a church at Basingstoke where a revised liturgy was used being pressed on his acceptance, he gladly welcomed it as being altogether a providential opening. The church was in Lady Huntingdon's Connexion, and in that communion Dr. Barnes rejoiced to continue to the end of his earthly service.

At Basingstoke, and afterwards at Folkestone, enthusiastic congregations crowded the churches of which he was the minister, in the one case for three, in the other for six years. But this by no means exhausted his energies. He was often heard, both in evangelistic meetings and in Conferences for God's children, and also in meetings of the Children's Special Service Mission.

No account of our friend would be complete without reference to the profound impression produced upon him by a Convention for the deepening of the spiritual life at Tunbridge Wells, which he attended as a listener during his ministry at Basingstoke. The Convention was a revelation to him; he saw there, under the light of God's Spirit, that self had mingled with all his ministry. The sight was humbling and painful, but the sin was confessed and renounced, and from that time he sought to live wholly for God, to do everything in the power of the Spirit, and nothing in the energy of the flesh. Those who knew him best are most conscious of the change which pervaded all that he said and did and was. If that Convention at Tunbridge Wells bore no other fruit, those who projected and carried it out must have had (if they were aware of it) more than enough reward for their labours in the humbling and hallowing of this "good minister of Jesus Christ."

THE LATE REV. DR. BARNES.

From Photograph by Mr. Lang Sims, 9, Church Street, Folkestone.

If man were any judge of the fitness of things, it would have appeared as if this were the beginning of years of usefulness; and, indeed, about seven such were added to our friend's life. Into these seven he put as much as many men put into a lifetime. He travelled to and fro, was instant in season, out of season, was earnest by conversation and by letter to follow up the words given him to speak in public; but in the midst of these labours he was suddenly struck down, in April, 1901, with weakness and suffering, and though he sought in change of place, and remedies suggested by skilled physicians, that which might stay the progress of disease, all was unavailing. He bore the sufferings, sometimes agonizing, with heroic fortitude, and, attended to the last by his devoted wife, he sank into the Everlasting Arms on April 15, exclaiming, "Not my own, but saved by Jesus," and then, after a pause, "I am before the Royal Throne."

They took his remains from London to Folkestone for interment, and on the 21st a great throng gathered in Emanuel Church, and again at the cemetery, where Revs. A. E. Clementi Smith, J. B. Figgis, and Bickford Heard laid in the grave all that was mortal of this valiant soldier of the King of kings. His coffin bore the inscription, "Jas. Barnes. Born 7th August, 1847. Born again 5th August, 1888. Entered into rest 15th April, 1902."

Dublin Waifs and Strays.

IT is now just a year since God called dear Mrs. Smyly, the friend of the little waif children of Ireland, to His heavenly home; and the future of that work, to which she gave her life, depends, under God, on the offerings of His stewards. The needs are as great as ever, and the funds do not keep up in proportion, so the question often has to be faced, "Shall the work go on as in Mrs. Smyly's life-time, or will it be necessary to close any of the Homes?" One can hardly realize what it would mean to Christian workers in Dublin if any of the work had to be given up.

A typical case of the work is afforded by the story of a friendless boy, brought up in a Roman Catholic Industrial School. He had failed to keep his first situation, and finding himself destitute on the streets of Dublin, applied in person at the Home for admission. He was taken in, but having a very bad temper, he was always fighting with the other boys, and generally upsetting the peace of the Home. The boys came to know that he had been sent to the Industrial School as a little child for stealing a pig's cheek, and when they were annoyed with him the temptation to allude to this was irresistible. Then he would get furious, and a torrent of bad language would burst forth. Over and over again the matron sent for him to her little parlour and prayed with him, but the most she could get from him was, "It's in here, ma'am," pointing to his heart, "and I can't keep it in. When the chaps annoy me, it always comes out."

On one of these occasions, feeling in despair about him, she told her difficulty to Mrs. Smyly, saying how she had prayed for him, and how much she had borne with him, yet seemingly in vain. Mrs. Smyly laid her hand on her shoulder, and said, "Don't give that boy up; I am certain your prayers will be answered; keep on praying for him." So she felt encouraged to go on giving him chance after chance, till at last it looked as if Satan was getting his own way with the boy. Then he ran away, inducing some others to go with him. The next time we meet him is as an attentive listener in a Bible-class, a new creature in Christ Jesus.

Two ladies feel the work carried on by the Misses Smyly amongst the waifs and strays of Dublin so important that, hearing of the great need of the Homes, they offer to give £300 if nine others will give £100 each, or eighteen others £50 each. C. A. Pigott.

St. John's, Terenure.

From Dr. Baedeker.—Writing from Skien on July 2, Dr. Baedeker says:—"The Laurvik Conference is over, and was very happy on the line of international and interdenominational oneness. I left Laurvik yesterday, and at four p.m. a fire broke out, which burned about 100 houses, a great loss for the poor owners. I hope to return to Christiania (Hotel Augustin) on Monday next, and thence via Malmö to Berlin, where I hope to arrive on July 9, and after a short visit to Miss V. Blücher, I go to Hungary and Austria, and thence by Schloss, Treffen, and Switzerland, I hope to return to England. I may perhaps be in time for Keswick."

"Sanctuary" and "Sea."

By Rev. JAMES MURSELL.

Thy way, O God, is in the sanctuary. Thy way is in the sea. (Ps. lxxvii. 13, 19).

SANCTUARY and sea; the chiming of the bells and the thunder of the surf; the quiet of God's house and the tumult of the waves; high on the cliff the church spire rising higher still, far below the sullen dash of the breakers on the beach; within, the music of the hymn of praise, the hush of prayer, the voice of the preacher who publisheth peace; without, the boom of the minute gun, the roar of the tempest, the cry of men in peril of their lives. What a contrast! Calm and storm; peace and peril; worship and woe; sanctuary and sea.

We should suppose that there could be nothing in common between two such opposite elements; nothing in the sanctuary that is also in the sea; nothing in the sea that is also in the sanctuary. But the Psalmist tells us that there is at least one thing to be found in both —God's way. We find it natural and easy to believe that God has His way in the holy place, but the stormy waves are the last place in the world where we should expect to find His footprints. Nevertheless there they are: in storm as in stillness, where the wild winds rage and the wild waves rule, as well as where thanksgiving and the voice of melody are found, God has His way.

The way of God is the path on which His will walks to work out the purpose of his heart. "Have your own way," we sometimes say, by which we mean, "do what you will." God also must have His own way; He must do what seemeth Him good. Only His way is righteous, His will is everlasting love at work. And what this ancient poet sees, with flashing insight, is that in scenes so various, and elements so contrary, and experiences so opposite, as those which are expressed by the words, sanctuary and sea, God has His way.

"SANCTUARY" LIVES.

For instance, God has His way in both the sanctification of the believer, and in the rebellion of the sinner. In its practical aspect sanctification is just God having His way with us. Saints are people who are separated from earthly aims and devoted to the purpose of God. He takes hold of their lives, and builds them up into a spiritual house, a holy temple. Such lives are sanctuaries in which the Holy Spirit has His way. We all know men and women whose one desire is to learn what the will of the Lord is, and then to do it. His commandments are not grievous to them, but joyous; they delight to do His will, and His law is within their hearts. Such people carry an atmosphere about the world with them that is more easily felt than described. Perhaps the best description of it is that suggested by the word, sanctuary. It is the atmosphere of the sanctuary; there is a calm about them as of the quiet House of God, a beauty not of this world, that makes aspirations after it in our hearts; a fragrance as of spiritual incense about their characters.

The truth is, God is having His way in these lives. This is what He means his children to be: He is fulfilling in them all the good pleasure of His goodness, and the work of faith with power. Through them He is able to reach and bless the world. They bring sweet and holy influence into the crowded city and the shadowed home, so that these also are builded up into houses of God, sanctuaries in which God has His way.

"TROUBLED SEA" LIVES.

But there are those of whom this cannot be said. They are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest; their hearts are lifted up like waves in rebellion against God; self-will is their only law; their affections are set on things below: they covet the world's wealth and men's applause; they must have their own way, but as to God's, they will have none of it.

It is too much to say that such lives are no hindrance to God's purpose. So far as they themselves are concerned, they appear to frustrate it utterly. Whatever they were as children, as men and women they wax worse and worse. Innocence vanishes and purity does not come; their ideals grow lower and lower, their characters worldlier and worldlier; less and less can you feel about them that they are what they would be if God had his way with them. The unrest, the rebellion, the stormy outbreaks of the sea, are the symbol of their lives.

Such men undoubtedly also hinder God's purpose in the world. If not actively opposed to righteousness, they are indifferent to it. They are obstacles to the progress of truth, hindrances to the victory of love, dead weights on the angel-wings that bear the messages of peace and salvation to men.

GOD'S WILL IN THE EARTH.

None the less, God makes His way through the rebellion of wicked men just as the great liner makes its way through the gigantic billows of the Atlantic. God makes the wrath of men to praise Him. The French Revolution, as well as the Protestant Reformation, was made subservient to his purpose. Scepticism is turned in its own despite into a minister of His glory. Individuals may successfully oppose Him in their hearts, but in the broad spaces of history nothing is more certain than that through the opposition of the ungodly, as well as through the faith of His believing people, the will of God moves on to its predestined goal. That goal is a world beneath whose new heavens, and on whose new earth, there is no more sea. The end must either be a world which is all sea, all unbelief, all wild and tumultuous rebellion, or one which is all sanctuary, all consecration, all holiness and peace. "I saw no temple therein," the Seer of the Apocalypse says of the Eternal City, "for the Lord God and the Lamb are the temple of it." No temple, yet all temple; all activities sacramental, all work worship, all music praise, all wills blended into the one perfect Will. Heaven is the sanctuary in which God's Will is perfected.

IN LIFE'S MYSTERIES.

Again, God has his way in the plain, and in the mysterious, providences of life. Sometimes the guidance and the guardianship are easily descried. His providence makes a sanctuary about us, so that we say, "Thou, O Lord, art a shield unto me;" but at other times His way is hard to trace. We do our best, yet fail. The bread-winner is stricken down, and the mother and her children are left alone. A little child is given, and the mother who should be its guard and guide is taken away. These are a few of the things we cannot understand. At such times we feel like sailors in a water-logged vessel on a stormy sea; nothing is plain except loss; nothing sure but mystery; nothing visible but lowering clouds and rolling waves.

These are days in which we need to remember that the way of God is in the sea as well as in the sanctuary. The ocean is a trackless waste to the landsman; even the white wake of the great ship is soon lost among the waves; and it is the path in front, not that behind, we long to see. Yet the captain knows the way he takes, and steers the vessel steadily where we can see no path. It is the same in life. There are days when we are out on the wide, wild waters of mystery. We do not know which way we ought to go. Then we need to call to mind the truth that God has hidden ways as well as plain paths. We need to remember that while, in the guarded sanctuary, He makes the place of His feet glorious, He also plants His footsteps in the stormy sea; and His footsteps leave a print where the keel of a huge ship leaves no furrow. The mysteries of life are not mysteries to God. The trackless waters have a path for Him, although no bird of prey knoweth it, and the eye of the vulture hath not seen it. He who guides to the shelter of the sanctuary can also steer us safely over the strangest sea.

He knows the way He taketh,
And He will walk with me.

Once more:—God has his way in the perils of life as well as in its safeties. There are periods when we live in sanctuary, guarded by unseen sentinels. Childhood is often one of them. The child grows up in the oratory of a Christian home, sheltered from the rough blast of trouble, and guarded from the burden of care. His little vessel rides at anchor in the calm waters of the haven under the hill. But there comes a day when he must steer out upon the wide sea of life; over the harbour bar, across the bay, away out to the boundless ocean. How the mother's heart aches for him; how she hopes and fears, rejoices and trembles. She knew that it was well with him at home; he was in sanctuary there. God's way was always before him in his father's example and in her prayers; but now——. O mother heart, be still and know that God is God: God of the stormy wave as well as of the peaceful place of prayer; God of the godless world as well as of the godly home; Lord of Sabaoth and God of Bethel. Learn to say and believe "Thy way, O Lord, is in the sanctuary; thy way is in the sea."

Sanctuary and sea! Providence and mystery! Safety and peril! God is in all. Somehow they are more one and less twain than we suppose. Life has its contrasts and its paradoxes, but they only skim the surface, they do not fathom the depth; there, life is one. There is music at the heart of things. And so it is that the sea is in the sanctuary, and the sanctuary is in the sea, and God in both. There are mysteries of grace as well as difficulties of nature; perils of faith as well as dangers of unbelief; stormy cries rise from the holy place, and peace that passeth understanding has a home in the heart of the storm. I can hear the dash of the breakers in the quiet of the sanctuary, and when the tumult of the waves is noisiest I still can sing my little song of praise.

God's is the presence that makes what else would be a distracted world and a contradictory experience, a blessed unity. When He indwells our life, no changeful scene fails to reveal his mercy or to unfold his will. Hush of worship and rush of work; guarded hours and perilous posts; clouds of mystery and shinings of Providence will alike be passings to and fro of that eternal love and that unchanging Friend of whom the Psalmist said, "Thy way, O God, is in the sanctuary; thy way is in the sea."

The Blackgang Mission.

THE Blackgang Mission is the outcome of a remarkable manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power, whereby a whole family was used of God in the production of a spiritual awakening. From time to time The Christian has given reports of the continuance and growth of this work, now of some twenty-nine years' standing. The original band of workers and others who joined later have all been removed or called to the higher service, save one, Mrs. Christopher W. Smith (née Edith Reade), who since the death of her beloved husband has of necessity filled the position of pastor, the Mission having merged into a duly-constituted church, with properly-elected officers—elders and deacons, &c.

A new hall having become a necessity, a piece of freehold land was secured on mortgage in 1898 (to become the property of the Mission on the death of the owner), on which an iron building was erected, and a site reserved for a worker's house, or future manse. It is in relation to the need for this that I am desirous of enlisting the sympathy and help of some of the Lord's stewards. Mrs. Smith is feeling the need of a helper, but has no accommodation to offer one, not even temporarily. The architect's estimate for a house such as would meet the requirements is £500, and this sum is being asked of God in prayer, either as a gift or as a loan, from one or more of His servants, who would feel it a privilege to put the top stone to a work which has been lovingly and faithfully carried on, without fee or reward, first by the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles Reade and family, then by Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Smith, and now for some ten years by Mrs. Smith alone. Having the privilege of being one of the trustees, I shall be happy to answer any questions, as likewise would Pastor Frank H. White, of Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill, W.

Books for Vancouver.—In a new mining district of Vancouver Island, B.C., where vice flourishes and weapons of spiritual warfare are few, a Methodist pastor is anxious to establish a library for the use primarily of his Sunday schools, and, if possible, to extend it for the miners. He thinks that many homeland readers may be glad to send volumes. Address Rev. Gordon Tanner, B.A., Ladysmith, B.C., Canada.

Other Lands.

Through Equatorial Africa.-2.

By Mrs. A. B. FISHER (C.M.S.), of Toro.

Mrs. Fisher will be better known to many readers as Miss Ruth Hurditch, of Uganda. The tour described is Mr. and Mrs. Fisher's journey from Kabarole to Entebbe (the Government headquarters in Uganda) to have their marriage officially registered.

THE KING'S WIVES.

THE first house I went to was that of the king's women. As he is not yet a baptized Christian, he still has seven wives, and I found these girls sitting in a semi-circle in their grass house, which was horribly stuffy, as the people do not believe in water, but instead rub butter over their bodies and all over their bark cloths; this of course, turns sour, and then more gets rubbed on. They began by asking me to take off my hat and show them my hair. I replied that I would do so if they first showed me their faces. Immediately fourteen eyes popped out, and a row of fat, smiling faces appeared. After satisfying curious questions about my clothes, my age, my parents, and how long I had been married, I tried to find out a little about them all. All were learning to read, as the Christian women teachers went each day to teach them—otherwise they do nothing, sitting in this veiled condition from morning to night; they neither cook, sew, plait grass, nor engage in any of the native industries. As their minds have thus been allowed to lie dormant for so long, it is a wonder that they can learn to read so readily. Our Unyoro books are splendidly adaptable to these people, as the language is so closely akin.

It will be readily seen how essential it is that Toro should supply Ankole with teachers. We brought out with us, two chiefs who had offered themselves and had been trained for this work; also Ana Kayeye, one of our first women missionaries, thus making five in all from Toro that are now working in this distant part. The latter met with a most enthusiastic reception from the women and two Buganda women teachers; as she is such an important lady she is listened to everywhere, and when I left she was already in full work, teaching the wives of the chiefs in their own homes at eight o'clock a.m., then going a round of sick folk, dressing their wounds as I had taught her, then visiting in the houses, getting to know every woman, gathering them all around her for a talk, and starting them right away to learn to read.

A CHRISTIAN KING.

After five happy days here we again moved on, Mr. Willis accompanying us for three days of the journey, visiting some of his stations. We skirted a long, wide swamp for a distance of three or four miles; it was one vast stretch of papyrus grass, the habitation of mosquitoes. On the fifth day we arrived at Rakai, the capital of Koki, where two ladies, Miss Robinson and Miss Turnbull, have recently been stationed.

The king, Kamswaga, who is a baptized Christian, with all his chiefs had gone up to Entebbe to meet the new Commissioner, Colonel Sadler; consequently we found the place much quieter than usual. However, the women made up for it and came down from the Court in large numbers to welcome us. Koki is made attractive by a large lake, which is beautifully wooded all round its shores. Here we went by canoe to a church garden on the opposite end of the lake, where we had a service with the people. They have a splendid little church here, and quite 100 to 150 women must have attended the morning service on the Sunday. The novelty of European ladies has not yet worn off here, as Miss Robinson and Miss Turnbull, the first they had seen, have been working here only a few months.

When we called to see the Queen, the house quickly became overcrowded, all wanting to talk and listen to me. I handed them all round coffee-beans, which the Queen had given to me to dispense, and I nobly struggled to crack these tough berries, which seem no obstacle to their strong teeth. As I left, they pressed round in such numbers that Miss Robinson had to come and rescue me by force. I came home with my wrists bedecked with all sorts of curious wire and bead bracelets, which the women had taken off to give me.

IN A ROMANIST STRONGHOLD.

Three days more marching brought us to Budu, the stronghold of Roman Catholicism: at nearly every cross-road a tall wooden cross was standing, and nearly everybody had the medallion, or scapula, hanging round the neck. At Kaguna, where the C.M.S. station is situated, we found a strong R.C. mission; here their people, who had not seen a white woman, came tearing out of their houses like mad creatures, yelling and clapping their hands.

Our mission is planted on a high hill overlooking the Victoria Nyanza Lake. Rev. C. H. Casson and Rev. O'Connor gave us a very kind welcome. Really, Mr. Casson is a wonderful builder; he had adopted quite a new plan, dispensing with the mud and wattle idea. This is of solid mud, beaten down between wooden boards, which are taken away when the mud is dry; thus there is a house of one solid brick about 2ft. thick. I expect it is only this kind of white clay soil that would consolidate so firmly. The roof is of banana bark stripped off and knotted on rows of poles. Besides this the doors and fittings are wonderful. A regular timber-yard has been set up in an adjoining forest, which belongs to the church property. We paid a visit here one afternoon, and found Mr. Casson superintending two natives hewing out a huge block of timber. By means of native adzes they were forming this timber into square blocks, thus preparing them for the sawyer's tools. Mr. Casson asked me to have a little service with the women. In spite of language difficulties, I promised to do my best, and I found the schoolroom quite full, and several standing round the windows and door. It is splendid to find that such a good work is going on here, for it is uphill work. The Roman Catholics are very strong, and I think there is no chief reading with us. Thus very little inducement is held out to the others to join us; those that do so must come with a real desire to read and be baptized. There were twenty-one being questioned for baptism when we were there.

BACK TO THE LAKE.

A fifteen miles march from here brought us to the shores of the lake, where two canoes waited to take us on our way to Entebbe.

Ultimately, on landing, Mrs. and Mr. Wilson (who has now been appointed Deputy Commissioner of all Uganda Protectorate) came to meet us, and kindly took us across to their house for the evening, while the boys were getting camp ready. You should see Entebbe. There are rows of neat little villas with the strips of gardens back and front resembling the bijou villa of the London suburbs, and splendid wide roads with avenues of trees planted. Then in the market is to be found an English butcher's and a dairy; an Indian bakery, where delicious little loaves can be bought for four annas (fourpence); then further on is a large Indian firm, which sells all sorts of tinned food, native cloths, boots, lamps, &c., and which now manufactures mineral waters at about two-pence per bottle. Of course, there is a decidedly cosmopolitan population. The Europeans number about fifty.

Colonel Sadler, the new Commissioner, had gone on a visit to Kamfala, but we awaited his return, and Mr. Fisher had a long, interesting interview with him. Mrs. Sadler was exceedingly kind. We can only rejoice that those so interested in and cognisant with native life should come out to control affairs.

April 19 found us once more on the move. The lake did its utmost to upset us and the boat; instead of two hours as we had supposed, we found it a row of five and a half hours. We felt tired out when we reached the landing stage, but we could only wait to get a cup of tea, and then hurry on for the seven or eight miles' walk into Mengo. And then how delicious it was to feel once more the warm homelike missionary atmosphere!

A Priest's Emancipation.

A FEW weeks ago there introduced himself to Pastor Martin, of the Eglise Libre (Free Church) of Cannes, a "religieux" of the Order of Redemptorists, Father Léon Revoyre, a parochial missioner. This man, although still young, counts twelve years in his Order and four years of priesthood. But, finding that Rome, instead of ministering Christ, makes capital out of Him, he asked himself if it could be right, and if Rome's doctrines and practices were true. The final argument and support of all Rome's errors being Papal Infallibility, he found, on examining the Scriptures for himself, that they do not reveal the Pope as alleged, nor prove his authority, either by statement or example.

Avowing his doubts to his superiors, he was sent to consider his ways to a Trappist monastery on an island near Cannes. The prior refused to receive him, although forewarned of his coming as a priest wavering in his former faith. Thus, for conscience sake turned adrift from Rome, stranded in Cannes, he was, in God's providence, attracted by the words, "Au Christ Rédempteur" on one of the Protestant churches, and wrote to the pastor, as already intimated.

Proving to be truly a brother in the faith, fervently loving our Lord Jesus Christ, and desiring to follow the teaching of the Gospel; he was received with gladness amongst us. Thus he attended a Protestant meeting and handled a Protestant Bible for the first time in his life, both acts being technically "mortal sin" to a Romish priest; after two days he threw off the priestly robe, and—ate meat on a Friday! On the Saturday, relics, crucifixes, rosary, and scapular were abandoned. On the Sunday he spoke at some of the meetings in the chapel. His address on "Prayer" revealed not only eloquence but deep spirituality. That some expressions should have a Roman flavour is not surprising, since the same sermon had been preached in his own churches, and less than a week had passed since the speaker had said Mass as priest.

Late on the Sunday evening he was with the pastor and other brethren (one of whom had himself been a Franciscan monk, Father Elisée Le Garrec) discussing the question of conversion and regeneration. Our priest was astonished to find salvation was a settled thing. "Then I am saved," he joyfully exclaimed; "that's delightful; is that in the Bible? show me." (It was not hard to turn to such texts as John i. 12, 13, v. 24, x. 28; Rom. viii. 1, 38, 39; 1 John v. 13, in both French and Latin versions.) "It is fine; I ask nothing better; I am overwhelmed;" and we laughed with joy till we cried. What upset him most, said Father Revoyre, was the perfidy (déloyauté) of the Romish Church in hiding and withholding the assurance, of present salvation. Later on he addressed the Gospel meeting held weekly at Mouans-Sartoux, a neighbouring village almost entirely Romanist. He receives letters constantly of contempt or appeal, and awaits formal excommunication.

These first steps of a fervent soul's emancipation from error will not, I am sure, be without interest to readers of The Christian. Will they join in prayer that individual priests and people in the Church of Rome who are sincere may be led into liberty and light? Their number is large, but when doubt or inquiry is discountenanced, and even forbidden under pain of sin, and when apostasy from the religion of one's fathers is accounted the greatest shame, their deliverance can be effected only by the light and power of the spirit of truth and of God.—Alfred T. Best.

Central Nigeria.—Pastor Mojola Agbebi, superintendent of the native Baptist Mission, Lagos, West Africa, has recently undertaken an extensive Evangelistic tour through a large portion of the Lagos and Southern Nigeria Protectorates. At Owò, the chief city of Central Nigeria, the King and chiefs detained Mr. Agbebi while they built a school-chapel. A native prince, a convert of the mission, who has been conducting a school gratuitously for three years was placed in charge of the work. Mr. Agbebi visited in all forty-five large towns, proclaiming the "good tidings."

The Church's Duty to China.

In most districts of China, many of the literary men, and others, are now anxiously inquiring after Western scientific education and training, and are eager to get an understanding of the application of this new light to their present circumstances and surroundings.

The Emperor's well-known strong desire for alterations and improvements in national education, and the certainty that a knowledge of Western lore will soon be the only way to advancement or emolument, is, of course, a great incentive to numbers to seek to secure such information. Those, even, who still think that their own old methods are better, and who may be mortified that any enlightenment should be supposed to come from the outside world, are compelled to bow to the inevitable, and struggle to get this knowledge like the rest.

NATIONAL LIFE AND METHODS.

The outside world looks on with deep interest, and in many cases with deep sympathy too, at the struggle of a minority among an old and conservative people, to change their whole national life and methods; and there are many who now come forward with patent nostrums for the permanent improvement and upbuilding of the Empire. Indeed, the thing seems most easy to those who have little or no experience in matters national, either in China or elsewhere. Hoary-headed statesmen pause, being puzzled—while these modern wise men could settle questions in a moment of time!

In the midst of all this turmoil, and the conflict of opinion that is natural for worldly and fortune-hunting men and nations at such a time—their various ideas and suggestions being largely the outcome of their own selfish interests—we do well to pause and seriously reflect as to the work to be done by the Church of Christ at this time, and in these circumstances.

GREATNESS OF THE WORK.

It will require all the missionaries in China, and a very great many more, in addition to all the help to be expected from native Christians, to put forth all the strength they can command for a real and well-sustained effort, before, in any true sense, "every creature" in China will hear the glad tidings of salvation. Evangelization means a great deal more than hurried journeys through the country, leaving a book here, and a tract there, and speaking a word to another. The evangelization that will produce the results that the Lord expects means that, in much smaller districts than at present, the missionaries will live among the people, and by life and lip commend the Gospel of the grace of God. Wide itinerations, while nothing better could be done, were, of course, necessary, and prepared the way for a much closer dealing with the people. The things that were right and proper in the days of infancy, become ridiculous in later years. The real danger is that, with the usual tendency to walk by sight and not by faith, which we all have to confess and deplore, many, even of the Lord's own people, should be more taken up with what is seen than what is not seen, but which, nevertheless, is eternal.

CHRISTIANITY OR ATHEISM.

An atheistic Confucian China with all modern improvements, having discovered her internal resources (which foreigners will have taught her the value of, by their eagerness to exploit them), and having also learned how to use these resources, could not fail to be a menace to the peace of the world. Many intelligent Chinese think that information that has taken Western nations hundreds of years to discover and put in orderly array can be mastered in a few weeks or months (see Chang Chih-ting's book). This does not give much promise that increased knowledge will promote that humility of mind that would lead to peaceful intercourse with the other, equally proud and self-sufficient, nations of the earth. And one can see that a heathen Japan and China combined—and this has been the dream of the cleverest Japanese statesmen—might easily become, in the Lord's hands, a terrible scourge to other nations of the earth. On the other hand, let true Christians be multiplied all over China, and then each home will be a centre to promote goodwill, not only within its own borders, but with others outside, so that the influence of the preached Gospel would be to bring the national blessings that are desired by all.

The Gospel, then—the old Gospel—preached in the old way, and to the masses of the people, as was done by the Lord and his apostles, is the great need of China to-day and always. And the supreme duty of the Church towards China is to meet that need to the full, as she is so well qualified to do by her Divine Lord and Master.

The Needs of Hyderabad.

At the last session of the South India Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Rev. W. H. L. Batstone, M.D., was appointed to the Hindustani Mission at Hyderabad, formed some fifteen years ago. Feeling that the present time is a favourable opportunity for making known the prospects of missionary effort in the great walled city, Dr. Batstone writes:—"The work is divided as follows: Educational, colportage, and evangelistic. Our educational efforts are confined to a splendid Anglo-Vernacular school of about 130 caste Hindu and Mohammedan boys. It has five teachers, the headmaster being a consistent Christian and a graduate of the Madras University. The Bible is here taught daily. Evangelistic work, too, is aggressively carried on. We preach in the streets and bazaars of the suburbs, as well as in the surrounding villages. Many Sunday-schools are regularly held, and public lectures occasionally given. As yet, no street preaching has been done within the city walls, as it has been deemed wise not to stir up the fanaticism of the place in the early stages of the work.

CONVERTS FROM HINDUISM.

"What is the result of our efforts so far? In such a fanatical centre, where twenty years ago we dare not enter, one is not surprised if the work moves slowly. We have had a number of converts, however, but when a Mohammedan in Hyderabad becomes a Christian, his life is no longer safe. One of our women converts sealed her testimony with her blood, having been brutally murdered, and others have been compelled to flee for safety. Most of our present Church membership, therefore, is composed of converts from Hinduism.

"It is now our earnest desire to develop for Christ's sake a strong and effectual work in this commanding centre, and to do this in the capital will be to influence for good the mission work of all societies throughout the dominions.

FURTHER DEVELOPMENTS.

"In order to do this we need (1) a house for the missionary to live in, which will cost about £1,000; (2) a property within the city walls for our school, bookshop and dispensary. During past years we have spent hundreds of pounds in school rent, and this drainage of income can only be effectually stopped by having a property of our own. There is another serious aspect of this work, and that is, we are in constant danger of having our school destroyed while it is held in a rented building. We need for school, bookshop and dispensary about £500.

"Our third need relates to the evangelistic section. We need preachers and teachers; £20 a year will support a fully-qualified Indian preacher of high grade. We have one such now, but urgently need five more."

Dr. Batstone is now on furlough in England, and will be glad to have opportunities for representing the needs of Hyderabad. He may be addressed, 40, Kennington Avenue, Bishopston, Bristol.

The Indian Famine.

POOR AGRICULTURISTS' LOSSES.

"A GRUESOME record," says the Bombay Guardian, "is that of the Land Records and Agriculture for the year 1900-1901 showing the export of bones from Bombay. This amounted to 55,263 tons as against 21,297 tons during 1896-97. No other figures could show more clearly the terrible extent of the recent famine which has killed the cattle of the poor agriculturists in such numbers. It was on those cattle that the poor farmer depended for the ploughing of his fields. No country can easily recoup losses such as are here represented.

FAMINE WAIFS.

On June 1, Mrs. J. C. Lawson, of Aligarh, wrote as follows to her husband, who is in England for a time:—"My mind has been much exercised during the past week. The native pastor returned from the famine district bringing one woman, five girls, and six boys. He has gone again. I expect he will bring in at least a hundred orphans by the time this letter reaches you. Praise God for £15 sent by The Christian. It will cost three rupees per month for the support of each child, in addition to their travelling expenses." Describing the rescue work Mrs. Lawson adds:—"Women come to us every week of Hindus, Mohammedans, and Christians. Three women lately, from different places and at different times, walked two or three hundred miles to get to our home. Although under the Methodist Episcopal Mission, we work for and with all."

Protestants in Portugal.

An event has just occurred in Oporto which will become historical in connection with Protestant work in Portugal, involving, as it has done, the first formal and public recognition of our schools in connection with a patriotic demonstration. Several years since, some 300 children from these schools sang a patriotic song in a torchlight procession, and this seems to have suggested the idea of utilizing them in a series of festivities just held, whose object was to raise funds for a monument to Almeida Garrett, the poet, patriot, and statesman, who was born in Oporto in 1799. One item in this series was a Children's Festival in the grounds of the Crystal Palace, all schools being invited to contribute something, according to their ability.

Although a foreigner and a Protestant, I received an invitation to sit on the committee, and discovered that, in the face of strenuous clerical opposition, the majority of the members were determined to capture the Protestant schools for mass singing at the great gathering. I hailed with thankfulness this opportunity of showing that Protestants take as keen an interest as any in public affairs, and that the idea of our having political and anti-national aims is but a libel circulated by our opponents. I therefore undertook to consult my fellow-labourers in this city and neighbourhood, with the result of securing a total of over 800 children from the eight centres in Oporto and Gaia, four being Methodist, and four Episcopalian. We all worked in perfect harmony; three of Garrett's poems and our hymn for the Fatherland (by Mrs. Kalley) were allotted to us.

The programme was varied and most interesting. When our turn came, the ultra-clericals retired with their scholars in high dudgeon, but the public remained to listen to the first display of children's singing on such a large scale ever witnessed in the city, so far as I can learn. I have since heard, the people were impressed with the ready discipline of the children, and also with the fact that they are taught to love their country, a most important achievement which will help to kill the old slander, and doubtless will raise up many sincere friends for our cause.

The Northfield Schools.

THE reports this year from the heads of the two schools at Northfield are far in advance of those of past years. The girls' school is regularly refusing two applicants for every one it is able to accept, and it is thus enabled to pick scholars most in accord with the principles on which the school was established. This year's body of students was largely made up of such as, had it not been for the peculiar advantages of Northfield, would have been obliged to forego the benefits of further schooling. The unique features of the school have always been the prominence placed on Bible study, and the low fee of £20 a year.

Mount Hermon likewise has had a prosperous year. Over 700 students have, during different times of the year, been enrolled there, and the new arrangement, by which it is open all the year around, has enabled many, who could not otherwise have done so, to benefit by further study. The summer term has been popular with Englishmen who have been in the States, and the school probably shows a higher percentage of British subjects than any American institution south of the Canadian line.

The newest feature is a special series of courses in Bible study during the summer for Y.M.C.A. secretaries, Sunday-school teachers, and others, who can at the same time brush up on other subjects if they so desire.

American Notes.

THE trustees of the celebrated Plymouth Church, Brooklyn (Henry Ward Beecher's old church) have raised a fund to set apart one of the best pews for the use of English visitors. This pew is immediately behind that formerly used by Mr. Beecher's family. An English flag has been placed under glass at the side of the pew, and also a plate bearing the inscription, "Reserved for English Visitors." This action has been taken in recognition of the action of the vestry of St. Margaret's, Westminster, in devoting one of the best pews in that church for the exclusive use of Americans.

The Y.M.C.A. authorities in New York are taking steps to respond to the call for a saloon substitute. At a cost of 15,000dols. the building long used for Association purposes in Second Avenue, near Ninth Street, is to be remodelled, in order that the character of the work carried on in it may be developed. The sign to be displayed above the main door will be "Men's Club," and every variety of club feature for men and boys is to be introduced. The building front is to be exceedingly attractive.

Church Union in Canada.—Informal proposals have lately been made for uniting the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches in Canada. At the sitting of the Presbyterian General Assembly in Toronto, on June 18, a deputation was introduced bringing fraternal greetings from the Congregational Union. The spokesman of the deputation, Rev. T. B. Hyde, expressed the opinion that a union of the two bodies could be attained, if the Presbyterians would make some modification in their creed, and the Congregationalists in their Church polity. The Moderator, in his reply, said he was confident that there would be no difficulty in arriving at an agreement. Presbyterians would be ready either to welcome any approaches made by the Congregationalists, or even to take the first step themselves if that were desired.

Opium in Formosa.—Having regard to the report that the Japanese are opposing the sale of opium to the Chinese in Formosa, Dr. J. L. Maxwell, of the English Presbyterian Mission, Tainan, Formosa, writes: "When the Japanese first took over the island, they proposed, as reported, to take drastic measures to stop opium-smoking among its Chinese subjects. Unhappily, the temptation of the revenue proved too strong, and at present Formosa suffers more severely from the opium curse than it ever did in the old Chinese days. The statement that 'the importation of opium is wholly prohibited' requires to be followed by the words, 'except by the Imperial Government.' Every opium-smoker receives a licence according to the class of opium he consumes. Not only is the sale of opium pushed to its utmost, but the breaking-off of the evil habit is made doubly difficult by the suspicions which a reformed opium-smoker meets with at the hands of the police."

Obituary.

E. A. ERIKSON-ENBLAD, M.D.

THE death is announced of the distinguished Swedish physician, Dr. Erik A. Erikson-Enblad. He passed away at Stockholm, where he had practised for years. He was celebrated, not only in his own country, but in foreign lands, which he visited generally in the summer months. The news of his death will be a great grief to his many friends and patients. Dr. Erikson-Enblad is the first physician who introduced into his country the super-heated air treatment (for gout and rheumatism) of Mr. Lewis Tallerman; there is now, also, a free institute of the treatment at Stockholm. It is through the influence of Comtesse Lucille de Manin that Mr. Lewis Tallerman most kindly consented to give an apparatus free to that beautiful town. The gift has been found such a great boon to the necessitous poor of Stockholm, that the Government has made a second grant for its support. Dr. Erikson-Enblad was a man of high culture, and possessed the sterling and noble qualities of a true Christian. It was said by those who were with him, that he was continually reading a book called "The Very Words of our Lord."

THE LATE MRS. BRAINERD RADCLIFFE.

Our readers will feel a pathetic interest in the following particulars—although not written for purposes of publication—sent to us by Miss Radcliffe:—

"Mother was forty-eight when she left us on the night of June 20. She had been an invalid, and a very brave one, for many years; and since father died, four years ago, she had longed to go too, but always said, 'I don't want to go before I've done my work.' On June 18 she grew weaker, until she passed quietly away very happily, after bidding us to 'cling together' and 'put Christ first.' In all her pain for months and months she was never heard to say one hasty or cross word. She told us all to be very calm whatever happened, and not to make a fuss. She said she would like to have

Rock of Ages cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee put on her gravestone. She is buried in the vault by father in Smithdown Lane. She preached by her living, and she did so by her death."

Mrs. Radcliffe was the means of spiritual blessing to many young people who attended her educational establishment—"Rougemont," Great Crosby, near Liverpool. The work of education will be continued on the same lines by the daughters.

MR. WILLIAM PAYNE.

At the ripe age of eighty, Mr. William Payne, senior deacon of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, passed to his rest on Saturday last. For forty years he held the office of principal clerk to the City Chamberlain, and was held in general esteem for his uprightness and integrity.

"Mr. Payne (wrote the late C. H. Spurgeon, in Sword and Trowel) is a man of independent mind, and it would have been small wonder had he been long a wanderer in the mazes of doubt; but, by sovereign grace, he found rest in Christ Jesus, March 17, 1847, and at once became a Sunday-school teacher at St. Andrew's, Holborn. A few weeks after he was helping at Field Lane Ragged-School, and he has never ceased to feel the deepest interest in that notable institution. He was speedily a communicant of St. John's Church, Bedford Row, of which the venerated Baptist Noel was the minister, and when Mr. Noel left the Church of England, Mr. Payne shared that good man's views, and became a member at John Street Chapel. In 1855 Mr. Payne removed to Clapham, and was transferred to the church in Arthur Street, Walworth, from which he removed to the Tabernacle in May, 1861. In 1865 he was called to the office of elder among us; and his care for the sick and the poor, and his love for the service of the Lord's house were abundantly known to all associated with him in that work. In 1876 he accepted the position of deacon. Besides doing all that was in his power at the Tabernacle, our friend has been a very earnest member of the South London Division of the Evangelical Alliance. No one is better known in that direction than Mr. Payne. The Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. had him for many years on its managing committee, and the same may be said of the Widows' Friend Society and the Book Society. He served for six years on the Committee for the repeal of the C. D. Acts, and was greatly rejoiced by the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Act." Most of the members of his family have taken prominent and useful part in Christian work.

Southport Convention.

THE Southport Convention, which opened on Tuesday and closed on Friday, last week, was one of great spiritual power. The prominent theme throughout was holiness. Rev. S. Chadwick, superintendent of Leeds Wesleyan Mission, preached once daily, and his helpful sermons will not soon be forgotten by the crowds who heard them. Many said that it was the best Convention, on the whole, that they had had for years.

The highest point of spiritual enthusiasm was reached on missionary day, Wednesday, when nearly the whole day was devoted to missions. Missionaries from China, India, Burma, Arabia, Armenia, South America, and elsewhere, told of what the Gospel of Christ is doing in those lands; and so glad were the people to hear it that they subscribed about £170 to missions. An hour every day was also devoted to the same purpose.

It was an inspiration to see the venerable Rev. Dr. Jenkins, formerly a missionary in India. His gracious benediction will long remain with the missionaries who were present. The success of this feature of the Convention was very largely due to Rev. J. Gregory Mantle and his estimable wife, who had been planning and praying for it for months. Mr. Mantle goes to India in October. J. C. Lawson.

Y.W.C.A. Progress in London.

FEW organizations show such continued vitality and embrace so large an area of usefulness as the Young Women's Christian Association. It has long proved itself indispensable to the ever growing needs of the young women of London, and the report for 1901 testifies to the excellent organization of its departments and branches.

There is scarcely a want in the lives of our girls which is not supplied, both their physical and spiritual needs being carefully considered. The restaurant scheme, for providing at a very moderate cost cheap but wholesome dinners, has been recently started, and promises to be successful. At the same time the primary object of the Association, the salvation of each individual soul, is not lost sight of; and it also aims at providing Christian friends and good social influences, especially for those who come from the country into town.

Tens of thousands are being added yearly to the population of this vast Metropolis, and the number of working girls and women grows in proportion, needing more homes, more institutes, and more restaurants. Much more could doubtless be done, but any extension of work must depend upon the support accorded by a generous, sympathising public, who in the report are urged to remember that "a growing work needs growing help."

Melksham.—The annual convention recently held at Melksham was largely attended. At the morning meeting, Mr. George Stratton (Convener) presided, and a very helpful address was given by Rev. J. Pawley-Smith, rector of Manningford-Abbas. Rev. F. J. Horsefield, vicar of St. Silas, Bristol, was the chairman at the afternoon meeting, and Rev. F. B. Meyer gave a Bible reading on part of Col. iii. The evening gathering was presided over by Mr. W. H. Seagram, and Mr. Horsefield spoke on the words "I can do all things through Christ." Mr. Meyer followed with an address on the story of the lame man at the Beautiful Gate of the Temple (Acts iii.). The convention was a season of heart-searching, and was assuredly the means of blessing to many.

Uncle Tom's Cot.

My Dear Young Friends,—Little Hannah—who has for so long occupied Uncle Tom's Cot in the Ragged School Union Cripples' Home at Southend-on-Sea—can at last move about! This is the news for which some of you have been waiting and watching for a long time. Of course, for the present she is obliged to use crutches; but to get about at all, after lying upon one's back for six years, is an untold blessing, especially to a child. Hannah trips about, and is beginning to enjoy life as she never did before.

Did I call her "little" Hannah? I beg her pardon; for she has grown quite a big girl now! You dear young people became acquainted with her when she was but eight years of age; but now she is twelve and a half years old, and little folk have a way of growing out of all knowledge during this eventful period of their lives. But, dear me! most of Uncle Tom's nieces and nephews who became interested in Hannah four and a half years ago are themselves now in their teens—so quickly do the years slip by!

But to the point. Jesus, when He called His twelve disciples and sent them forth, gave them power "to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of diseases." And I think He must have said to the young readers of The Christian, "Restore little Hannah, a poor cripple child lying helpless at the R.S.U. Home at Southend." Because it is through your kindness, humanly speaking, that she has so far recovered.

When I first told you of Hannah's case, I did not imagine that so long a rest would be necessary; but you must remember that she was discharged from the hospital a hopeless cripple, with irons round her waist and down each leg—really encased in irons. In these "splints" she has remained until a few months ago, when it was decided by the doctor that one splint might be removed, thus setting one leg at liberty.

Hannah's doctor was alway hopeful of her, and felt confident that if she could only remain at the Home long enough, she would yet be able to walk. I wrote to the doctor a few days ago, asking him what he thought of his young patient, and the following is his reply:—

"Southend, July 2.

"The young readers of The Christian will be glad to know that their little friend Hannah, who has been an inmate of the Southend-on-Sea Cripples' Home, is very much better, and there is now hope that she may be able to walk again. That God is blessing the kindly act of the young people is evident, and if they will still maintain Hannah in the Home for another nine months, I am hopeful that we shall be able to say that Hannah is no longer a cripple.

"A. Clough Waters."

So you see the doctor is still hopeful, and so is poor Hannah herself. She wants to stay until she is quite well. And her parents, who, though very poor, are very respectable, are most anxious that Hannah should remain in the Home until she is quite restored. And I feel sure that you kind young friends, to whom she is so much indebted, will be pleased to maintain her as long as it is necessary for her to occupy "Uncle Tom's Cot." But I judge that at least £25 or £30 will be required to meet this expense, and I much hope that your contributions will flow in as liberally as ever, so that the good work begun may be continued until it is completed. Uncle Tom will be pleased to acknowledge in this column sums received for this purpose.

I am glad to tell you that Hannah in her sufferings has all along been very patient. She starts the tunes at prayer times, and at the children's little gatherings in the Home, and does it splendidly, too. She is very thoughtful, and most considerate towards her companions, who are always proud to wait upon her and be at her beck and call. I do not know what the matron and her staff will do when Hannah is able to leave the Home and run about as other children; but all will be delighted for her own sake, and will rejoice with you that they, too, have been able to help in the restoration of a little crippled girl.

I must add a word about the Home. It has been built specially to afford poor crippled children a holiday—most of them staying a fortnight, some a month. Of course, Hannah's is a special case. It is not possible for every child to have a prolonged stay such as Hannah has had—the Council of the Ragged School Union would be glad if it were possible! But a fortnight or a month at Southend in many cases does a great deal of good, and at any rate, is a welcome break in the monotony of many a dreary pent up life. There are two other Homes for Cripples—one at Margate, and the other at Bournemouth—a visit to either of which is a never-to-be-forgotten treat to the little sufferers.

The Cripple Mission is, of course, only one branch of the great institution with which the name of the noble Earl of Shaftesbury is so closely associated, and in which he took so much interest until the day of his death. But for the various agencies in operation in connection with the Ragged School Union, I must refer you to the annual report, which will be gladly sent on application to the Secretary, Mr. John Kirk, 32, John Street, Theobald's Road, London, W.C.—Yours sincerely, F. T. Watt.

A Word to Boys.

A prominent man, writing a special message to young people, said:—"'Begin right, and right away,' is a motto which would have saved many a youth disaster. Nothing is more delusive than delay. I have known more people come to grief through procrastination, indolence, and dillydallying than from almost anything else. There is nothing else quite so destructive to energy, or which so paralyzes the executive faculties, as a habit of dawdling.

"The only possible corrective of it is to determine stoutly to begin, on the instant, the task before you. Every moment's delay makes it harder and harder to start. It is the beginning which is difficult. If dawdlers could only once be set in motion, many of them would run awhile; but they lack the power of initiative. Shun the fatal habit of 'putting off,' as you would a temptation to crime. The moment you feel a temptation to dawdle come upon you, jump up, and then go with all your might at the most difficult thing you have to do.

"Everybody admires a boy who, like a racehorse, is always ready to start. A ready boy makes a prompt, efficient man. Somehow, readiness and promptness seem to brace up all the other faculties, and raise their value to the highest power. They follow in line when promptness leads the way."—The Ram's Horn.

Personal.

Many thanks for flowers received.

Miss Forbes, of Lee Park, Blackheath, wishes me to convey her thanks to those who kindly responded to her request for magazines.

Dorothy Cooper.—In reply to your question, flowers are sent for distribution among sick and poor folk, and little children who have few or no opportunities for seeing and enjoying the beauties of nature.

Elsie Boritzer (Constantinople).—It is not sufficient to give chapter and verse only; the words of the text should be given also.

Clouds.

God paints His bow on all the clouds He sends;
Though they be black, and oft surcharged with death;
Yet frames He them in rainbow tints of love,
And circles all with His sweet promises.
And ofttimes God will fold back all the clouds,
That our weak faith may see His radiant face
Of matchless love, and full-orbed tenderness.
Then sendeth He a summer breeze of heaven,
Laden with hope and messages of grace,
To calm our hearts, and still them into peace—
Peace heralding that day when we shall be
At home with Him in His eternal rest.

The Abiding Comforter (John xvi. 7-14).

THERE is no adequate translation for the Greek word Paraclete, which means that you have called one to your side, who stands beside you. Advocate is the exact Latin correlative of this. Comforter is also a Latin word, which signifies that with another standing beside you, you become strong. May we not, therefore, address the Holy Spirit, saying, "With Thee, I am strong; without Thee, weaker than a bruised reed."

Notice that the Lord Jesus is one Paraclete (1 John ii. 1), and the Holy Spirit the other. When the one ascended the other descended. The Holy Spirit proceedeth from the Father and the Son, and is communicated through the Son to us, because it hath pleased the Father that the Fulness of the Godhead should dwell in Him bodily (Col. ii. 9). It is easier, therefore, for us who are still in bodies of clay to receive the Fulness of the Divine Spirit from Him who is raised to the right hand of the throne, in a transfigured and risen body. It was needful for the Church to lose the sensible manifestation of the first Paraclete that she might receive the spiritual indwelling of the Second. Though the Lord Jesus departed, He returned in the Holy Spirit, the one aim of whose advent is to glorify Him and make Him a living, bright Reality (xv. 26).

The Holy Spirit came to the Church on the Day of Pentecost. As the Apostle Peter said, "He was received by the Lord, and shed forth by Him" (Acts ii. 33). Thank God, He has never been withdrawn, though often quenched and grieved, and it is because He abides in the Church that the Church abides. Nothing else can account for the continued existence of the Church amid persecution of the most awful character, but that the lamp has been perpetually fed from the oil of the indwelling Spirit.

The emphasis in 7th verse is on the words "unto you." The Spirit comes to the world through the Church. His work on the hearts of men is through the Body of Christ—the Church. As of old the Lord wrought through His literal body, so now He works through His spiritual body. He seemed to deal with Saul of Tarsus directly, but you will remember that in that case also there were goads, against which he was kicking, e.g., the dying testimonies of Christian martyrs.

Since the advent of our Lord, a new sin has been possible to the children of men. Before they stoned the servants, now they have crucified the Son (Matt. xxi. 38). It is no longer the sin but the Son question. There is no sin worse than the deliberate rejection of Christ. "This is the condemnation, that light has come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light." Again, we should not be aware of the righteousness of Christ in affirming that He was ascending where He was before, if it had not been for the advent of the Paraclete, who bore witness to this fact, as the wagons sent by Joseph convinced Jacob that his long-lost boy was yet alive. Notice that the judgment referred to is not that which is to come, but the present judgment of the prince of this world. He is ruled out of court. His pretensions to supreme power have been canvassed, and dismissed as absolutely worthless. Our judgment, also, is over. There is all the difference between the dock and the bench, the prisoner and the judge; but we have nothing to fear from the former, for do we not sit with Christ in the heavenlies? Oh, how foolish it is to identify yourselves with one who has been adjudged to be a liar from the beginning, and cannot keep the promises with which he allures his votaries!

As the Second Person of the Trinity declared the Father, so is He in turn declared by the Holy Spirit. Those who walk in the Spirit shall be led into the knowledge of Christ. F. B. M,

International S.S. Lesson.

Golden Text—Matt. xix. 19.

THE portion appointed for to-day's lesson is the latter six commandments of the decalogue. Jewish tradition says these six were written on the second, while the first four commandments occupied the first, of the tables of stone which were given to Moses on the Mount Sinai. Unlike the civil or criminal codes of a nation, which, with their confusing specifications and endless definitions, fill volumes almost innumerable, and the study of which takes up a great portion of some men's natural life to understand and teach, this Divine code of laws can be, and was, reduced to one principle, and voiced in one word, by the Great Rabbi—LOVE.

(1) From men towards God are required love, reverence, devotion, and exclusive worship, as due to Jehovah, Creator, Preserver, Redeemer. (2) From children to parents, love and veneration, while to this commandment a special promise is attached, marking obedience to this law as peculiarly acceptable to God. (3) From one individual to another.—This Divine code of laws safeguards all the vital interests of social intercourse, life, chastity, property, and character, leaving at the finish the same binding stamp and seal—"LOVE."

DUTY TO PARENTS.

The initial and foundation duty of man to man is "Honour thy father and thy mother," which is also "the FIRST commandment with promise" (Eph. vi. 2).

1. What do children owe to parents? Life, home, daily care, food, clothing, kindliness, love.

2. How can children honour their parents? First, by their love and veneration; and secondly, by their outward acts of obedience to their commands. The two are but one. "In the Lord" is like a second cord wherewith to bind the ties of nature. Note the reproof Jesus gave to the Scribes and Pharisees who had whittled this law down to breaking-point (Matt. xv. 3-6; Prov. xx. 20). Children may get quite clever at deceiving their parents, but they cannot deceive God (Job xxxiv. 21); and "Doth not He see my ways, and count all my steps?" (Job xxxi. 4). Parents have been called "heaven's lieutenants" to children, and "even a child is known by his doings" (Prov. xx. 11). The Lord said (Lev. xix. 32). "Be courteous" (1 Pet. iii. 8). Dependence is exercised in social life as well as between parents and children. Our daily needs are procured by mutual help. Trust and confidence must exist between the individuals, if the community is to hold together. "Put thyself in thy brother's place."

THE SACREDNESS OF LIFE.

Verse 13. Life is a sacred thing, and respect to it our first duty to our neighbour. Life is obtained from God, and none else; therefore it is for Him to take, and no one else. We can do much to preserve, strengthen, and support the lives of others. Children often get the medal for saving life. The heathen cast off parents in old age. Christian children think it an honour to support them by the work of their own hands. If my own life is dear to me, the life of my neighbour ought to be dear to me also.

LOVE FORBIDS TO STEAL OR LIE.

Verses 14, 15. Unless we love ourselves better than our neighbour, we shall not take from him anything which rightfully belongs to him. "Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you." "Love is the fulfilling of the law" (v. 16). False witnessing may be direct or indirect. Or it may be the truth told in such a way as to convey the sense of a lie; also a lie can be told in such a along as to appear truth. To allow an evil report to roll along in our hearing without trying to stop it, is as bad as setting it going ourselves, in the sight of God. The Lord reads behind our silences as well as between our words. Note carefully Lev. xix. 16, 17, 18. Rebuke when needs be; if we do NOT, there is the OPPOSITE to love in our hearts towards our neighbour (Prov. xi. 13). Don't be a leaky vessel (Prov. xvii. 9, Matt. xii. 36, Ps. cxxxix. 4). A whisperer cuts wounds that are hard to heal (Prov. xvii. 9) and blows the fire of strife (Prov. xxvi. 20; read James iii. 5, 6-18).

A SIN OF THE HEART.

Verse 17.—"Covet." This word lays bare the secret feeling." "The Lord looketh on the heart" (1 Sam. xvi. 7). Out of the heart comes as in Matt. xv. 19. "Jesus knew their thoughts" (Matt. xii. 25). "Afar off" (Ps. cxxxix. 2). If we pray (Ps. cxxxix. 23, 24), God, who "knoweth the secrets of the heart" (Ps. xliv. 21; Jer. xvii. 9-10) will "cleanse the thoughts of our hearts," and fill us with His love (Rom. v. 5), so shall we will and do of His good pleasure (Phil. ii. 13, 14, 15).

The sermon on the Mount was a sequel to Sinai, given not with the terrors of the law (Ex. xix. 18, 19), but with the penetrating voice of Omnipotence, "For He taught them as One that had authority." "Hear ye Him." "Hear and obey," for "To obey is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams" (1 Sam. xv. 22).

GOD'S COMMANDMENTS.

A TRAVELLER who has crossed the ocean many times declares that when on board ship he can tell at a glance if the vessel is being steered by the captain himself or by one of his subordinates. When the captain is in command, a direct course is kept, and the trail of the ship is seen to be quite straight, away over the water. If another officer is in authority, a zig-zag course is often steered, and the fact is at once apparent by a look from the stern of the vessel. God gave his commands from Sinai, and as long as the children of Israel obeyed they kept a straight course: they wandered only when they hearkened to the voice of another.

HONOURING A FATHER.

When on one occasion Dr. Johnson was staying at Lichfield with a few old friends, he took a post-chaise to Uttoxeter. He there found the spot in the market-place where his father had sold books from a stall some fifty years earlier, and having uncovered his head, the doctor stood in an attitude of deep reverence. Despite the derision of many of the bystanders, he remained, hat in hand, for well nigh an hour, honouring the memory of his worthy father; and having completed his devotion, returned to his chaise and drove back to Lichfield. Dr. Johnson understood the command to "honour thy father" (v. 12), and he was not ashamed to put the law into practice.

THOU SHALT NOT KILL.

A missionary working in Central Africa tells of the increasing value placed upon human life, wherever the natives have received the Gospel message. While in one locality cannibalism was common until a few years ago, the missionary is now able to prevent human feasts merely by his presence, and on one occasion he saved a victim, whose body had been actually marked off for the disgusting meal. The poor fellow had been left while the villagers disputed for the various portions of his body, and on the appearance of the missionary the natives all ran away for fear the white man's God should be cross. In all parts of the earth where Christianity reigns human life is held sacred, and the command of God, "Thou shalt not kill" (v. 13), is there willingly obeyed.

THOU SHALT NOT STEAL.

Among those employed by a well-known large London firm there exists to-day a certain distrust of any of the men who talk volubly of religion. This prejudice has arisen from the fact that, a few years ago, a Christian professor, who worked for the firm, was discovered to have committed a series of thefts of goods from the business. By stealing, the man not only committed sin himself, but became a stumbling-block to many men who had hitherto looked to him as an example. Theft is a sin against God, a crime against one's neighbours, and a dark blot on one's own character. Thou shalt not steal (v. 15).

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

FIVE Associations now exist in Iceland, where a National Committee has been formed, with the Lutheran bishop as president. The Y.M.C.A. at Reykjavik occupies a small building of its own.

Mr. R. D. Pringle, representative of the English Council, has arrived at Colombo, and received a cordial and representative welcome. After twelve months at Colombo, he will take up work at Singapore.

Mr. W. Gordon Sprigg, who has recently relinquished his fruitful work at Cape Town, has accepted for a time the secretaryship of the Johannesburg Y.M.C.A., in connection with which he will retain the position of secretary to the South African Council of Associations.

The American Year Book, just issued, shows that there are now, in the United States and Canada, 1,575 Associations, with an aggregate membership of 323,224. This is an increase in the twelve months of ninety-nine Associations and 54,747 members, of which number 38,312 are juniors, not previously included in the returns. Four hundred and fourteen Associations own buildings, valued at £4,560,606. Over sixteen hundred men are in the work as general secretaries, or other paid officers of local Associations or state and national committees. In the army and navy department, work is organised at forty-two points, while many others are reached and served; 133 travelling libraries are in circulation; and seventy-five tons of reading matter and supplies have been used. Railroad work is organised at 172 centres; student work at 606; for coloured men at twenty-eight; and for Indians at thirty-five.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

A REVIEW.

IN September, 1901, Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, D.D., came to this country to aid the Free Church Council in its effort to secure 1,000,000 more total abstinence pledges during the first year of the new century. Since that time he has conducted 327 meetings in more than fifty centres of the United Kingdom, and in these gatherings has addressed nearly 600,000 people, and taken over 40,000 new total abstinence pledges.

The objects of this Campaign have been to arouse the Christian conscience with reference to the enormity and horror of the drink problem, and to win the people to lives of pledged teetotalism. The effort to accomplish these ends has been accompanied by the manifest blessing of God. A new Temperance constituency has been created, an exalted tone has characterised the discussions of this problem, and a Christian character given to the movement, which has not only been unifying and constructive, but of a distinctly spiritual nature.

Probably no speaker on the Temperance question has ever reached so many representative and influential people in the same length of time. Everywhere the largest halls have been crowded to the doors to hear this "field-marshal of a noble reform." Among the important gatherings addressed may be mentioned the Congregational Union of Great Britain; the Baptist Union; the Temperance Breakfast of the Established Church of Scotland; a large number of the officers and ministers of the United Free Church of Scotland; the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Ireland; the National Christian Endeavour Society; the Mildmay Conference; the annual gathering of the British Temperance League; a large meeting of the school teachers of Edinburgh; sixteen hundred Sunday-school teachers and ministers in Belfast, and the National Free Church Council; besides important drawing-room meetings in many localities where influential temperance and Christian workers have been addressed. In this Campaign special attention has been given to children, great demonstrations in their behalf having been held at almost every centre. Among those who have signed the pledge have been scores of Christian ministers, representatives of the nobility, the provosts of cities, superintendents of asylums, headmasters of schools, councillors by the score, influential employers of labour, policemen in large numbers, and working-men by the thousand.

The meetings have demonstrated the willingness of the people, both young and old, to undertake temperance work when the proper motives are appealed to, and the supreme objects of temperance reform, namely, the glory of God, and the welfare of the people, are definitely and clearly put before them. There is an encouraging attitude among the people in reference to this colossal curse of strong drink; the ministers and the churches, as well as the people are, to a great extent, ready for an aggressive and persistent Christian assault upon this supreme iniquity of the modern world. As Sir Wilfrid Lawson recently said, "All things are ready, and the people only want to know what to do and how to do it." The challenge of the hour is for a constructive and Christian programme, and for a wise and enthusiastic leadership.

This is the opportune moment. The war in South Africa is over; domestic questions will now come to the front; the supreme of these problems are the habit and traffic in strong drink. This is God's work, to be done by God's people, equipped by His power. It is worth doing well. It should be organized on a permanent basis, and should receive systematic and self-sacrificing financial support.

The temperance and Christian forces of every locality should be federated for local ends; that is, to enforce existing excise law, to build up public sentiment, to secure the election of better local officials, to protest against the growing infamies of the habit and traffic in strong drink, and to protect both the children and pledged people from the pitiless power of this unscrupulous foe.

The messages delivered by Dr. Henry have been most cordially received by the people. A vast amount of self-sacrificing service has been performed by the people of many communities in order to make the work a success. In Airdrie, Scotland, one-fourth of the population (20,000) have signed the total abstinence pledge in the last five months. All the policemen, with a single exception, are pledged abstainers. In Falkirk, no fewer than 3,335 new pledges were taken in six days.

Altogether the outlook for this kind of temperance work was never more hopeful. An additional income of a few hundred pounds would greatly strengthen the Campaign; it is hoped that many who are interested in the maintenance of this noble work, and the promulgation of temperance truth, will heartily co-operate. Communications may be addressed to the Hon. Sec. Christian Temperance Campaign at office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

REV. DR. HENRY'S FUTURE MEETINGS.

July 13, Marylebone Presbyterian Church, 11, a.m. (Dr. Hanson's); July 20-23 and also 27, Bromley, Kent; July 31, Alford, Lincs.; Aug. 1-30, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; Aug. 31, Lincoln; Sept. 4, Louth; 6-9, Taunton; 10, 11, Newport, Mon.; 12-14, Taunton; 15, 16, Llanelly; 18, 19, Dunfermline; 21, Free St. George's, Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Whyte's); 22-24, Dunfermline; Sept. 26-Oct. 3, Alloa; 4-17, Perth; 18-31, Greenock; Nov. 2-Dec. 4, Ireland (Nov. 2-5, Cork; 6-9, Limerick; 24-Dec. 4, Dublin; other announcements later); Dec. 6-16, Worcester; Jan. 9-15, 1903, Motherwell.

Foreign Warships at Spithead

IT is not given to all Christian workers to become missionaries in foreign lands, but sometimes opportunities are given to home workers to act as such for a few hours. Some of us were able to say last week that we had put our feet on no less than a dozen different foreign lands in four hours, since every vessel claims to be part of the territory of the kingdom whose flag it flies. Mr. Hogben, of the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, with other Christian workers, felt that the presence of these ships at Spithead, offered a similar opportunity to that of the Diamond Jubilee, of evangelising the seamen and distributing some portions of God's Word to them, as a souvenir of their visit to this country.

The British and Foreign Bible Socieiy agreed to the proposal of our committee (which represented every section of the Christian church in the town) to bind specially either the whole or portions of the New Testament in attractive covers, and to stamp them in gold with the King's monogram to remind the receivers of the occasion. Our visit was settled for the Wednesday of the Coronation week, and a launch hired for the occasion. Returned missionaries speaking foreign languages were sought for, and came from various parts of England in order that the printed message might be accompanied by personal testimony. Several English-speaking workers accompanied the different missionaries who spoke the languages, and these did the work of distribution; not a few had personal dealing with officers or men who spoke English.

HEARTY RECEPTION ON BOARD.

The whole visit took us seven hours. We commenced at the beginning of the line of foreign vessels and dropped the workers at each vessel, after having obtained permission and entrance for them, and went through to the other end; then returned to pick up the workers in the same order, thus giving them about four hours on each boat. None complained of it being too long—in fact, some begged to be allowed to remain longer, but this was impossible. The Argentina, Chilian and Spanish vessels afforded the workers the most encouragement.

The chaplain on board tried to interfere in one case, but unsuccessfully. Pastor Graham (of Argentina), Mrs. Wirtz, Mrs. Blamire, and Mr. Gillman (all from Spain) gave glowing accounts of their reception and of the pleasure expressed by the receivers of the books. These workers found the time all too short. On the Italian ship the 500 portions provided proved insufficient, and many were the expressions of disappointment by the non-receivers. Many, too, on several of the ships desired copies to send to their homes; but we had not provided for this.

The Germans gave the workers a hearty welcome, and all received the portions gratefully. Mrs. McFarlane, of Waterlooville (who is Dutch), kindly went with her husband and friend on the Holland, and found not a few who had preserved their copy of the N. T. given them here at the Diamond Jubilee. Mr. Inouye (Japanese) and Mr. Paget-Wilkes (of Japan) visited the two Japanese vessels, with eight or ten other English workers, and all were accorded a most hearty welcome. In some cases the officers piped the men on the various vessels into batches, that greater facility might be given to our workers to distribute the books; others told off men to carry the packets for the lady workers and take them over the ship. On one vessel the commander himself came forward and accepted a copy, expressing his pleasure, and thus setting an excellent example to all his officers and men.

Miss Ridout and Mrs. Cook, of Gosport, heartily co-operated with us, and the latter kindly found the workers for the Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish vessels, on each of which full liberty was accorded to distribute books and speak with the men. The French and Russian officers allowed us to leave the packets of books, promising to see them properly distributed, but would not allow us to undertake it.

The only two nationalities who objected to both us and the books were the Greeks and the Portuguese—the former objecting to the bad translation of the Modern Greek, and the other to the "forbidden" matter. These, however, were caught on shore.

Not a few vessels allowed the sailors to mass along the sides of the ships as we picked up our workers, and, with hurrahs or hat-waving, answered our Coronation song as we left each vessel, "Crown Him Lord of All," the Japanese especially massing by hundreds, their dark brown faces showing a good deal of appreciation for the soul-care expressed by their English allies.

THE SAILORS ASHORE.

At the "Welcome Mission," tables of refreshment were laid, where every foreign sailor on shore was invited to enter and help himself gratis; and providentially the opportunity was seized by the Greeks and Portuguese more than by any others. Some who on entering refused the books proffered them, after seeing that the English Christians sought to care even for their bodies, accepted the book with readiness, and sat down straightway to read portions of it. The one word most knew was "Good!" and not a few said it. Two or three evidently knew more than they could express, showing by signs, pointing to the heaven and then to their hearts, that they fully understood our purpose.

We spared nothing in order to do our best, feeling sure that God would eventually supply all the need through some of His servants when the effort was made known. We purposely avoided giving publicity to our purpose beforehand, lest it should be frustrated in any way; but now that the work is done, we feel we may ask the prayers and interest of God's people. Mr. Hogben may be addressed, "Welcome Mission," Portsmouth. W. G. POPE.

Bible Colportage in Ireland.

THE forty-third annual report expresses devout thankfulness to Almighty God for the manifest tokens of blessing that have attended the work of the year. The past twelve months have not been very favourable to the colporteur and his work, whether carried on in town or country, especially in regard to the disposal of books. Yet the sales indicate that the agents, increased by two during the year, have visited 8,000 more families and made 1,000 more sales than were recorded in the previous report. There has been improvement in the sale of Bibles, Testaments, Douay Testaments, and good literature, with an increase of over 7,000 tracts distributed.

NOTES ON THE MEETINGS.

It is not often that a squad of police is required to keep people from "rushing" a religious meeting, but stalwart members of the force were on duty at the doors of the Exhibition Building to regulate the crowds. It is significant of the good work done by the ushers that no single accident occurred during the Mission, in spite of the tremendous throngs.

At one of the Exhibition meetings Mr. J. J. Virgo sang "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" with wonderful expression, and in response to a number of requests he repeated it at the midday meeting next day. While the air was still vibrating with the chorus which followed the second verse, a young man sprang up in the audience, and cried, "Here he is, and he is coming back to Jesus to-day." The young fellow, who was a drunkard and an atheistic lecturer, was under deep conviction, but went away from the hall (after speaking to Rev. Dr. Torrey at the close of the meeting) in great joy, having found the light.

A rather striking incident happened in Warracknabeal. A circus pitched its tent opposite the building in which the services were being held. On the first night the drummer thumped his drum, and the cornet-player did his best; but the attendance was scanty. Next night the instrumentalists worked just as hard for even worse results; still the music was very annoying to the people in the mission service, so Rev. D. O'Donnell, the missioner, prayed about it. "And like a shot," says one who was present, "the drum ceased to beat, the cornet stopped, and the circus people struck their tent and came over to the Mission."

Speaking of the duty of the churches in view of the large number of people who have professed conversion during the mission, Dr. Torrey said: "My idea is that each Church ought to get these converts to come into classes for systematic instruction in the greatest fundamental doctrines and in Christian living; that they ought to have training classes to teach the new converts—and the old Christians, too, for the matter of that—to pray and to do personal work and set them to do it; and that they ought to seek now for a great many more conversions. I think they ought to work for and expect far more conversions now than they had during the mission. Emphasis must be laid on personal work as a means to conversion. Then, the people ought to magnify the work of the regular pastor, and uphold his hands by prayer. In my own church work I have not used special evangelists much—I have been my own evangelist, for the most part, in all the churches of which I have been pastor. Before I took charge of the church and institute where I am now, I used to preach or speak six nights every week, and anything from three to ten times on Sunday. There was scarcely a day in the year on which there were not conversions. And for the past eight or nine years that I have been in my present pastorate I do not think there has been a single day on which there have not been conversions. Of course, I am not at home all the year round—in fact, I am away for three or four months of the year; but still the work goes on. It is a never-ending revival, and I hope that one of the results of this Simultaneous Mission will be that similar revivals will be set going in some of the churches of Melbourne."

The Warrnambool Standard says of the Mission: "That the Simultaneous Mission meetings conducted at the Town Hall by the American evangelists, Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, are making a remarkable impression on the mind of the community is evidenced by the throngs of people who attend the meetings every afternoon and evening, and by the under-current of earnestness and sincerity manifested during the impressive services. There has been an entire absence of the hysterical emotionalism so often associated with meetings of the kind, and this fact is accepted as an assurance that the impressions made upon so many people will prove lasting. The results of the mission have been carefully noted by the committee, and they unhesitatingly pronounce it to be the most encouraging ever known in the history of the town.

Captain Wolstenholme, Church Army pioneer missioner for Liverpool diocese, has just concluded a seventeen days' tent mission in St. Leonards parish, Liverpool. Night after night the tent has been well attended, and many persons have sought the Saviour. One cause for thanksgiving was that quite a number of men and women who professed conversion in a tent mission conducted in the same parish, by the same preacher, in 1899, took earnest part on the present occasion. The tent is now erected in St. Gabriel's parish, Toxteth.

Canon Aitken at Blackpool.

The Gospel services conducted in the Alhambra Theatre, Blackpool, under the direction of the Y.M.C.A., were resumed on Sunday last, when Rev. Canon Hay Aitken was the preacher. The morning subject was "The Gravest Danger of our Time," and the afternoon, "Pleasure or Happiness." In the evening Canon Aitken spoke on "The Call of God's Goodness." The attendances were good, and an excellent re-start was made. Mr. W. R. Lane takes the services on Sunday next, and from July 20 Mr. Jack Cooke, the boy preacher, will be the missioner.

Rev. Jas. Lyall in New Zealand.

Writing from Stratford, New Zealand, Rev. James Lyall says:—"At the close of a two weeks' mission in Wanganui nearly 100 souls were gathered in as fruit. In Hawera, a town of 2,000, we spent eight days, the churches uniting. Two meetings were held each day, the Theatre Royal being used for the evening services. During that time some fifty names were received from those who had professed to receive Christ. Last night (June 5) we closed an eight days' Mission in Stratford, a rapidly-growing town in the midst of a large dairying population. The town itself has only 2,000 people. Some of those converted drove twenty miles to the services. It is a great joy to be able to touch some of these smaller centres, the people are so simple and responsive. Over seventy have yielded to Christ here."

Lewiston, Ill.

Writing in The Evangelist (New York) on "Evangelistic Methods," Rev. J. A. McGaughy, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Lewiston, Ill., U.S.A., says: "Our ministers were satisfied that the churches were not reaching the masses. All, therefore, united in a special effort to bring the Gospel to every home and heart in our community. We invited the evangelists, Messrs. Smiley and M'Kinsey, to organize and direct our movement. A temporary tabernacle of rough boards and weathertight roof was erected, and comfortably seated. It held 1,200 people. This rude structure in the centre of the town, was in itself a call to righteousness. The evangelists preached and sang the Gospel for three weeks. The crowds came night after night. The first convert was a drinking man who had cursed the erection. Entire families were converted, and large accessions were made to all our churches."

Tent Mission at Preston.

During the last month, Mr. Shields, of the Evangelization Society, has been holding a tent mission in Preston, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., and with hearty help from the Y.W.C.A., and members of most of the churches. Attendances have been good, and every meeting has been followed by anxious enquirers, and apparent decisions for Christ.

At a conference of workers, addressed by Mr. Matthews, superintendent of the Manchester City Mission, it was pleasing to see friends from other towns where missions have been held, including Kirkham, Blackburn, and Accrington, some of them owing their conversion to Mr. Shields' labours there.

Other interesting features of the mission are the union of members of the various churches, and the zeal and earnestness of the young members belonging to the Y.M. and Y.W. Associations. A young girl might be seen in the inquiry meeting pointing out the way of salvation to another of her own age, while young men were keeping an oversight in the case of their fellows who have professed to decide. One poor fellow, who tramped into Preston, with wife and child, starving and desperate, has found help for body and soul, and a hopeful start in life. Mr. Shields' full and clear statement of the Gospel has truly been owned and blessed by the Holy Spirit. G. R. K.

Messrs. Williams and Maxwell in Edinburgh.

We have now entered on the sixth consecutive week's work of these evangelists in Edinburgh, and, certainly the blessing to Christians and to the unconverted, has been great. There has been a remarkable revival of interest in all the departments of the Carrubbers Close Mission. On Sabbath evening week, meetings that were crowded and of great interest, were held, both at the Mission and in the Haymarket United Free Church, in which spacious building the work during the present week will be carried on. Perhaps the best comment on the work is the weekly necessity for continuing the mission. It can truly be said that there is an ever-increasing number of people in our city who thank God for the visit of our friends. In the more recent meetings, Mr. W. F. Stewart, Rev. Jas. Robertson, and others have given much help in speaking, while in the musical arrangements Mr. Robertson, Miss Helen Adams, Mrs. Barclay, Miss Darling, and a large choir have supplemented the splendid work of Mr. Maxwell. On Sabbath last the evangelists conducted services in St. Michael's parish church (Rev. Dr. George Wilson's), and on the Calton Hill, where a great crowd gathered in the afternoon. G. A. B.

Evangelizing the Hop-Pickers.

An ample field for labour is afforded during the summer among the hop-pickers, and good work is done by Rev. John Burnham and his helpers in Worcestershire and Herefordshire. Large crowds from "slumdom" gather in the hop-growing centres during the month of September. Many of these toilers are outcasts, who, without any regular homes, mix daily with vice and crime of every description; and the few weeks that such men and women spend in the hop-fields offer unique opportunities for personal intercourse, such as it is almost impossible to obtain in the congested state of our great cities. A purer life, physically and morally, is set before them, and many interesting stories can be told of lives thus won back to the paths of goodness and truth.

This is Mr. Burnham's twenty-fifth year of service, and he is anxious to place two additional missionaries on the field, making fourteen in all. These workers are, in most cases, accorded a hearty welcome by the farmers, who testify to the benefit resulting from their labours. Tracts and Gospels are distributed; services are held daily in the camps; sometimes (as on Sundays) by daylight, an ordinary open-air service, using hymn sheets; if too dark for this, a lantern service in the yard, using Scripture scenes, casually interspersed with a hymn; the sick are tended, and every effort is made to bring the message of "good tidings" home to the hearts of the people. Interesting details of the work are given in Miss Boobbyer's booklet, "Fulfilled Desires." (2d. Dulwich House, N. Malvern). The work is spreading, and a great deal more may yet be accomplished if additional funds are forthcoming. Rev. John Burnham may be addressed, Fernbank, Brentford.

The tent mission at Canning Town, E., which Mr. William Grove is conducting, continues to arouse much interest. Many people, chiefly of the working classes, attend the meetings, and on frequent occasions inquirers are pointed to the Saviour.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis proposes to take a tour through part of England into Scotland on his cycle, preaching the Gospel where there are openings, Friends desiring such help may address him at 2. Brunswick Square, Gloucester. He will start July 17, Will some brother join him?

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has just completed a fruitful eight days' mission in the Adult School, Albert Street, Grimsby. Among many cases of blessing may be mentioned that of a lady who had been attending meetings of spiritualists. She had become so impressed that she had made up her mind to join them. Under deep conviction of sin, she accepted Christ as her Saviour. J. Moody.

Mr. A. W. Smart, of the Evangelization Society, has just concluded a three weeks' tent mission at New Ferry, Birkenhead, in co-operation with the Wesleyan Churches of the neighbourhood. The Gospel was faithfully preached night by night, and the interest and influence of the mission increasingly deepened and spread. In particular, a number of young men received good, some making it the time of their religious decision. One result is a young men's band for Bible study and open-air work.

About Books.

JAMES CHALMERS OF NEW GUINEA.*

IN the Life of James Chalmers, given us by Rev. Richard Lovett, a very important addition has been made to missionary literature. Some works of this class, though interesting and useful, have only a passing value. Here, however, we have not merely a life-story, but a contribution to the history of the Church of Christ among the islanders of the South Seas. Those who would wish to begin that fascinating study, may start with this volume; older folk, who read John Williams' "Missionary Enterprises" two generations ago, will find these pages at once a sequel and a contrast. The sequel is found in a succession of very readable chapters dealing with Polynesia and its people; the contrast appears in the glimpses that are from time to time afforded of Christian life and progress in regions where, at the beginning of the nineteenth century, the sway of dark heathenism was unchallenged by Gospel influences.

From first to last this is a remarkable book. Chalmers left some autobiographical materials, and they are presented along with communications from some of his life-long friends and correspondents. As the author of "James Gilmour of Mongolia," Mr. Lovett brought ripe experience to his editorial work, and once again he has achieved a conspicuous success. He writes from the heart regarding one whom he loved, and whose labours he followed with warm appreciation. Considerable space is devoted to the ten years which Chalmers spent on Rarotonga. That period was a severe apprenticeship whereby the devoted missionary was fitted for his subsequent achievements in dealing with savage humanity in New Guinea and elsewhere.

As a man, a missionary, a martyr, Chalmers was undoubtedly great. His letters are characteristic and self-revealing. Writing from Port Moresby in 1882, indicating the marvellous changes that had taken place within a very few years at the east end of New Guinea, he asked the following searching question: "Is it impossible to find missionaries who will gladly dare all for Christ? Not the 'life in hand' business, or the 'sacrifices I have made'; but men and women who think preaching and living the Gospel to the heathen the grandest work on earth, and the greatest of Heaven's commissions. . . Leave the twaddle of 'sacrifices' for those who do not appreciate the sacrifice of the Cross. Let the Church give her very best in heart, mind, and body, for Christ's world work. The best and greatest of all works requires the best and greatest of men."

James Chalmers would have attained distinction in any walk of life that could have engaged his heart and soul. Mr. Lovett gives abundant proof of his Christian consecration. "On the platform and in the pulpit Chalmers was great; but in the quiet home, after the day's deputation work was over, in congenial society—it was then that the simplicity, the single-heartedness, the consecration, the Christ-likeness of the man shone out most brightly."

Not only in exertion and conversation was the man great, but also in his influence upon others. "He was a man who could, and who did, nerve others to become willing and ready to sacrifice even life itself in the effort to help men to become the children of Jesus. Having kept back nothing himself, he was able to inspire in others a burning enthusiasm for the salvation of savage men akin to that with which his own heart was aflame."

There are many beautiful stories in the letters of "Tamate." Here is one from the Rarotonga days, regarding the death of a young girl: "I met one of the deacons two days after her death, who told me that he had frequently visited her, and the last time he was there he asked her, 'My child, do you hold firmly on to Christ?' She answered, 'He holds me, I cling to Him.' 'Are you afraid?' 'No; the rope is strong, I shall see Him, I love Him.' The old deacon wept while he told me of that visit."

This handsome volume is no fancy picture. It tells the story of a man whom God fitted for a great work. The pages read like a romance, and they bear out the opening sentences of the preface:—"Chalmers owed little to education or to the influences that mould the majority of men. He owed all that he was to the sense of the boundless love of Jesus Christ; he gave his whole being in loyal and enthusiastic surrender to the Saviour who had redeemed him; he caught a large measure of the Master's own Spirit; and he counted it his highest joy to be spent in the effort to win for Jesus Christ the drunkards of Rarotonga and the cannibals of New Guinea."

Church of England.

Hooligan Labour Homes, conducted by the Church Army at Shepherd's Bush, W., and Newcastle-on-Tyne, are available without charge for all classes even of "aggravated" cases. Encouraging results have been met with, the only key being that of personal sympathy and influence.

The Bishop of London has consecrated the completed church of St. James, Muswell Hill, in the presence of a large congregation. The new building represents a brave effort on the part of the vicar, Rev. J. S. Whichelow, and the parishioners to cope with the growing needs of a rapidly-developing suburb.

The annual "open Sunday" men's service at St. Peter's, Upper Holloway, N., when women are invited to attend as well as men, was held recently. The church was crowded, extra seats having to be provided. Rev. J. F. Osborne (vicar) conducted the service, and Rev. A. Hindle (curate) gave a telling address on "Clouds." The service maintains its high average attendance of from 500 to 600 weekly.

The Bishop of Islington dedicated on Friday last the temporary iron church of the new mission district of St. Cuthbert's, Chitt's Hill, to be worked under the London Diocesan Home Mission by Rev. E. W. Platt. The rural dean of Tottenham, the vicar of Totteaham, and Prebendary Blomfield Jackson, secretary of the London Diocesan Home Mission, took part in the service.

The Church Pastoral Aid Society has been able to make twelve new grants. The twelve parishes aided are taken from ten dioceses, and have a united population of 118,527. Eight of them had received no previous help from the Society. Under these grants £480 will be spent on securing seven curates; £30 will provide for one lay agent; and £140 will go towards the payment of four women workers.

Difficulties have arisen at the Church of St. Mary Magdalene, Paddington, in consequence of the introduction of what is known in the Roman Church as the "Cult of the Sacred Heart." It appears that the month of June is specially set apart for this "devotion." A special High Mass was said (or sung) on its introduction, a large statue being carried in procession and ceremonially blessed, while red lamps, votive candles, and offerings completed the function. As a protest against the novelty, Rev. J. Dixon, curate of St. Mary Magdalene, and Secretary-General of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament, has resigned his position.

Right Hon. R. J. Seddon, Prime Minister of New Zealand, during his visit to his native town, St. Helens, Lancs., addressed on Sunday last the men's Bible class in the Parish Church. The building was crowded in every part, nearly 2,000 men being present. Mr. Seddon said he learned with satisfaction and gratification that the Bible class was the largest in Great Britain, and expressed a hope that they would grow in numbers and go on with the good work, because there is a danger which besets our Empire to-day—not the danger that might arise from envious nations, but that of religious indifference. That danger can only be met by hard, good, and strong work by those entrusted with the spiritual welfare of the people; but they are few in number, and unless they are seconded and assisted by members of Bible classes and Sunday-schools, it will be impossible to teach the people. There have been great and glorious Empires which are now no more, because they forgot the greater Power.

Congregational.

The Congregationalists of Bramhall, Yorks, having held services for upwards of two years, have now formed themselves into a church. At a service held last week, conducted by Rev. J. W. Paull, of Cheadle, twenty-five persons signed the roll of membership.

One of the most successful anniversaries ever held at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, S.W., took place on Friday, July 4. Rev. F. B. Meyer (pastor) presided over the public meeting in the church at 7.30 p.m. Brief displays and processions of the Sunday schools, P.S.A., Boys' Brigade, and other organizations of church work filled up some part of the interesting evening. Bright and inspiriting addresses were also given by Revs. George Hanson, D.D., J. W. Ewing, B.D. and John Wilson. That the church has collected and subscribed about £6,500 for the maintenance of its varied philanthropic, social and missionary work is some indication of its vigorous life and service to the neighbourhood.

Baptist.

Rev. E. G. Gange is retiring from the pastorate of Regent's Park Chapel, N.W. He is not in vigorous health, and finds the continual strain of so important a sphere too much for him.

On Sunday last Mr. Henry Varley preached to large congregations in the Putney Baptist Chapel. His powerful and lucid expositions of Scripture truth will not soon be forgotten by those who were privileged to hear this honoured servant of God.

Rev. John Bradford, of Leytonstone, has undertaken the secretarial duties of the London Baptist Association, which have so greatly increased during recent years as to necessitate the appointment of an officer to devote his whole time and energy to his work.

The chapel at Radstock has been reopened, after being closed for alterations for about three months. The extensions and additions comprise a new Sunday-school, capable of accommodating 300 children, with two large class-rooms; the re-seating of the chapel and the construction of an entrance lobby, and many other alterations, the whole costing about £800.

Rev. Evan Morgan, of the Baptist Missionary Society has sailed for China. He is returning to Shansi, his original sphere of labour, to reinforce the mission staff, which has been much weakened in that Province. It will be remembered that Mr. Morgan was stationed in Shansi at the time of the massacre, and, receiving timely notice of the impending movement, succeeded in making his escape.

Methodist.

The amount of expenditure sanctioned by the Wesleyan Chapel Committee during the past year exceeds the sum of £626,000.

In connection with the Free Methodist churches, it is gratifying to note that the decrease in Sunday scholars has not only been stemmed, but there is evidence that the tide has turned. The returns show an increase of 962 teachers and 2,858 scholars. There has also been a very large increase in the membership of the Senior and Junior Endeavour societies.

The authorities of the Wesleyan Seamen's Mission, having invited the Primitive Methodist Conference to appoint a representation of two on the Board of Management of that mission, the conference decided to fall in line with other Methodist bodies in this matter, and two representatives were appointed, viz., Rev. John Hallam and Alderman F. C. Linfield.

The authorities of the Primitive Methodist South-East London Mission, the headquarters of which are at St. George's Hall, Old Kent Road, sent a petition to the recent Conference for a suitable minister to be appointed superintendent. Rev. James Flanagan has been the chief factor in the creation and development of this mission; but he feels he cannot retain the superintendency and itinerate the country raising money. The Conference, by special resolution, invited Rev. Joseph Johnson, of Stoke Newington, to undertake the work.

The Wesleyan Missionary Committee, at its meeting this week, has decided, after hearing the report of Rev. Marshall Hartley on his official visit to the South African mission churches, to recommend the forthcoming Conference to increase the missionary staff at Pretoria, and also to appoint an English missionary to Delagoa Bay. The Conference will also be asked to appoint Rev. Amos Burnet, of Nottingham, who previously has had large experience as a missionary in India, as the chairman and general superintendent of the Transvaal and Swaziland district.

Rev. Dr. Gregory, of the Children's Home, Bonner Road, N.E., has received an offer of £925 from the executors of the will of the late Mrs. Joseph Jones, on condition that a house for the accommodation of children should be named as a memorial of Mrs. Jones and her husband. This gift was most cordially accepted. Two new houses have been opened at the London Branch. One, which is to be a receiving house for boys, will be known as "McDougall House" in recognition of the many years of generous service rendered by Miss McDougall, and also in recognition of the valuable help rendered for many years as a member of the committee by Sir John McDougall, chairman of the County Council. A new house for boys is to be known as "Curnock House," the name commemorating the practical interest and service rendered by Rev. Nehemiah Curnock, editor of the Methodist Recorder, who is the author of "The History of the Children's Home," and has in very many ways aided the work.

Presbyterian.

Rev. J. D. Dowie, M.A., has preached his farewell sermon at Houghton-le-Spring. At the close of this address Mr. Dowie spoke with deep feeling of the kindness and encouragement he had received from his people, and of the unbroken harmony which had prevailed during his four years' residence amongst them. A large congregation attended the service.

Society of Friends.

The Friends' Temperance Union annual garden party took place recently in the grounds of Donnington and Frontenac, Willesden, by kind invitation of Joseph Allen and George S. Baker. About 150 attended.

Friends at Bournville, Birmingham, spent some £2,500 over their building at the Cotteridge, and they feel amply repaid for the effort by the successful work already carried on there. Morning and evening meetings for worship, adult schools, Sunday school, mothers' meeting, &c., are all successful. Friends at the neighbouring village of Selly Oak have made a new departure, the little meeting-house that they have built costing only, completely furnished, some £150. It was opened recently by J. W. Hoyland, about eighty persons being present. A cottage meeting has been held in the little hamlet for some time, and the room was overcrowded.

Salvation Army.

Miss Eva Booth has recently conducted meetings in Skagway, Alaska, and among North American Indians.

General Booth's meetings in Berlin have been the most successful he has ever held in that city, and at Copenhagen 6,000 people attended his meeting in the King's Gardens.

In connection with the Army's Pan-American Congress, the Mayor of New York, the Hon. Seth Low, received a deputation of officers at the City Hall, and congratulated Commander Booth Tucker upon the progress of the work.

Of the 282 destitute men present at the free breakfast given at Blackfriars Shelter on Sunday morning last, 250 had spent the previous night on the streets, and 137 came through invitations distributed by the Army's Midnight Brigade.

During the past month Mr. Samuel Bradfield, in charge of the Bishop Hooper Protestant Van, has been holding some Protestant missions in several parishes in Gloucestershire. At one parish church Mr. Bradfield went into the vestry at the end of a service and raised an earnest protest against the mass being celebrated in the Church of England.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. J. T. Hartwell, Wesleyan Methodist, died at his residence in Gloucester on June 24, at the advanced age of eighty-five years. He became supernumerary in 1887, and settled down in Gloucester, having completed an active ministry of forty-seven years.—By the death of Rev. George Hobson Wesleyan Methodism has lost a minister who is described by a former colleague as "an ideal superintendent for any typical Northern circuit." He was born at Sheffield in 1839, and became superintendent of several important circuits in the North of England, in every one of which he is affectionately remembered for his fine Christian temper, his devotion to the welfare of the churches under his charge, and his genial visits to the homes of the people.—Rev. George Chandler, for thirty-six years Baptist pastor at Thurleigh, Beds.—Mr. Thomas Hudson, an old Congregationalist, aged eighty-six. He could recollect sermons by Robert Hall, William Jay, John Angell James, Rowland Hill, Adam Clarke, and Dr. Chalmers.—Rev. Dr. Rankin, of Muthill, who has just passed away, was one of the oldest and best-known of Church of Scotland clergy. He was in his seventy-first year, and for the last thirty-four years had been minister of Muthill Parish Church, whither he was translated from Greenock, his first charge.—At Southampton, on Saturday last, Major Evered Poole, who succumbed to inflammation of the brain, following upon a fall from his horse while serving in South Africa.

Notes & Comments

"Signs of This Time." Dr. Woods Smyth's article (p. 11) will, we think, interest our readers, for it gives expression to the thoughts of many. Four years ago, in California, at a Convention, the Methodist minister who was conducting it uttered the same thoughts in regard to modern spiritual teaching. It is difficult to hold the different elements of the faith in due proportion. At one time objective truth is exclusively emphasized, and then comes the necessity of translating our standing in Christ into actual experience. At another time experience is dwelt upon and asserted, for which there is not much of a rock foundation; and we need to be recalled to the consideration of our redemption, justification, and the grace wherein we stand; and, forgetting ourselves, to rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

The Great Problem. For, the first great and all-inclusive problem before the universe is not the salvation of the sinner, nor the sanctification of the saint, but the vindication of God from the slander of the fallen spirit, and the revelation of His nature and character in the Son of His love: "I have glorified Thee on the earth; I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do."

Government Changes. By the resignation of Lord Salisbury, the country loses the services of a distinguished statesman, as politicians of all shades have readily acknowledged. The intention of Sir Michael Hicks Beach shortly to retire from the position of Chancellor of the Exchequer is another event likely to bring disturbing elements into the life of the country. "One generation passeth and another cometh." Mr. Balfour, who succeeds his uncle as Prime Minister, is a man of remarkable ability and power, a keen thinker, a forcible speaker, and an astute controversialist. The successor of Sir Michael Hicks Beach will be more difficult to find; and other changes may develop in the course of reconstructing the Cabinet. Will the younger men enjoy, in the same degree as their predecessors, the confidence of the public, and in like manner exercise caution in regard to England's relations with other powers? Here is subject for earnest prayer. And may God so rule and overrule, in these administrative arrangements, that neither by new education laws, nor any other legislation, Romanism may gain ground in our land!

The Life that is Natural. It is worth anyone's while to look around at the number of old men—octogenarians chiefly—who are still engaged in active and useful work. Several of the most notable, active men of our time in various departments of life have passed their fourscore years. This spectacle ought to rebuke the pessimists who are always complaining of the lassitude of life. They tell us that the tenure of life is not what it used to be. For lives such as some of them live, that may be true; but it is not true of normal, healthy life. These old men, whose vigour shames many complaining people of middle life, owe their longevity to simplicity of habit, and to naturalness of life. The ennui that torments so many arises from the disregard of the law of God. When men turn night into day, give way to excesses, and dissipate their energies, they must not be surprised to find themselves out of harmony with the rest and joy of all life. All life's misery is the product of unnaturalness and sin.

Boast not Thyself. The uncertainty of human affairs has been again vividly illustrated by the unfortunate accident that befell Mr. Chamberlain last week. In the midst of pressing public engagements, due to the presence of so many Colonial representatives, he was suddenly laid aside, and was detained in hospital several days. "Life's incalculables" form one of the most baffling problems in our earthly discipline. We "know not what a day may bring forth" to any of us. Rich and poor, great and small, are equally impotent to forecast their personal future. Science has mastered the secret of star-movements; but there is no advance in our mastery of the events of to-morrow. It has gone out of fashion to add D. V. (Deo Volente) to our plans and projects; it would be well if we at least remember that none of us have the sure ordering of an hour of our time, and that all we hope to do is by the permission of One who does not consult us as to anything that shall happen to us. The true refuge is to fall back on the psalmist's comfort, "My times are in Thy hands."

Famine and Pageant. The lavish entertainment of the Indian princes who have come over to the Coronation festivities presents another aspect when we understand that the cost has to come out of the pockets of the Indian taxpayer. When we think of the fact that, while India is about to enter on the fourth year of a terrible and continuous famine, £7,000 is spent on a single banquet, for which the poor as well as the rich have to pay, the pageant fades, and the picture of the suffering thousands takes its place. The sum spent thus lavishly on one night's display would, if otherwise spent, preserve the lives of hundreds of starving creatures, who are suffering through no fault of their own.

Drink at the Coronation Dinner. Since our last issue, evidence has been steadily increasing that the one real blot on the Coronation dinner to the poor was the provision of free beer by certain leading brewers. In some of the centres, where the amount was strictly limited, the evil was kept in check; in others it led to some most regrettable scenes of excess. The behaviour of the inmates of the "teetotal tent" was conspicuous in contrast with that of some of the others. The protest of the temperance party had been scornfully derided in some of the newspapers; but the results have fully justified that protest. To associate the drink evil with a scene of national rejoicing and thanksgiving for the King's rapid recovery, was a blunder of the worst kind; and the true friends of the poor are those who would have made such scenes impossible.

The Ministry of Hymns. It has been frequently stated, in regard to the late intercessory services, that the King's favourite hymn is the one which was sung at most of them—Dr. Watts' fine version of the ninetieth psalm, "O God our help in ages past." There is doubtless ground for the statement, as the King has himself selected that hymn for use on several occasions; but in 1895, when his Majesty was approached on the subject, he wrote to say that he considered that "there is no hymn more touching, nor one that goes more truly to the heart, than the one commencing, 'Nearer, my God, to Thee.'" In the light of recent events, the Royal preference assumes a pathetic interest. To many in times of trouble that hymn has brought comfort; to numbers it has been a basis of trustful submission and of deeper consecration to the will of God.

South African Prospects. The outlook for a speedy and amicable settlement of racial differences in South Africa continues to be bright and promising; and this is largely due to the spirit of generosity manifested in the recent war settlement. There are many unsettled problems to face, some of which will require tact and forbearance on both sides, but goodwill is all that is needful to bring them to a friendly solution. Considering the prospects only a few months ago, there is here reason for devout thankfulness and joy. As Louis Botha has recently said, "The Boers will soon settle down, if treated fairly."

Peace in our Time. The Bill altering the conditions and duration of military service in France, which has now passed the Senate, although, on the face of it, intended to secure greater efficiency, undoubtedly will go far to make for peace in Europe. Strongly opposed by the military party and by the privileged classes, whose sons, holding degrees, or being students at art and professional schools, were required to serve a year less, it has been welcomed by the masses of the people, upon whom the chief burden of the conscription and the war expenditure falls. As the new Minister of Marine also is endeavouring to cancel his predecessor's contracts for war-ships, it would seem that a better feeling is growing in France. It is now for England and Germany to follow the example, for there can be no doubt that the existence of mighty armaments is a daily source of danger, not only to Europe, but also to the world.

A Missionary Trial. Friends of the devoted workers of the China Inland Mission will sympathise with the Boys' School authorities at Chefoo in the distressing experience reported last week—that twelve of the scholars had died from ptomaine poisoning. It seems that six of the lads were children of missionaries, namely, Gershom Broomhall, Hugh and Norman Gray-Owen, Herbert Parry, Howard Fishe, and Stewart Kay. The last-named was the orphan of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Kay, who perished in Shansi, while the father of young Fishe was also among the martyrs. It would seem that the putrid matter which caused death was consumed with chicken pie. Mr. Walter B. Sloan, secretary of the C.I.M., invites prayer for the bereaved parents, also for the staff of the school, who are thus placed in such a painful position. He adds, "Let us remind ourselves that God is over all, and may the confidence of our hearts be rooted and grounded in His faithfulness."

A Simultaneous Open-Air Mission. The Metropolitan Free Church Federation is at present engaged in promoting a great Simultaneous Open-Air Mission to be held in all parts of London in September next. The arrangements are now being carried forward by the local councils, and in all probability an appeal will be made to the London County Council for permission to use the parks for this demonstration. It has been generally said that the Simultaneous Mission of last year failed to touch the outside crowds. This may be relatively true, for no mission will touch all, but it is also true that very many, wholly indifferent, were reached and led to decision. This effort is, however, a going out to the crowds where they are wont to assemble, and it ought to have the prayerful and earnest support of all Christian people in our great Metropolis.

A Noble Service. A passage which appears in a published interview with Rev. F. B. Meyer in the Daily News, July 10, points to the wisdom of reformers putting in force the machinery of existing laws, while they are agitating and waiting for more drastic legislation. It also shows what a few earnest men can do in the direction indicated. Mr. Meyer said:—

> The Lambeth Free Church Council, of which I am President, has carried on a crusade against vice in the district, which has led to the closing of 320 brothels, and has largely cleared the streets of objectionable characters. The working-men of our Brotherhood felt it was impossible to live in the neighbourhood, and students going to the South London Polytechnic and the Morley Hall had to pass districts full of flagrant vice. The Strand had overflowed into our neighbourhood, and the thing would become an octopus which was going to throttle us if we did not throttle it. At first the Lambeth Vestry was indifferent, but our working-men secured an influence on the Borough Council, which led to the taking up of this work, and now it would go on without our aid.

The Betting Commission. There certainly is reason for congratulation that the Report of the Lords' Committee on Betting goes as far as it does, as it is evident from the fact that—had it not been for the attitude taken by a section of the members, including the Bishop of Hereford and the Earl of Aberdeen—the document would have contained a recommendation to the Government to adopt the vicious pari mutuel system, under which part of the profits of a huge State bookmaker's business go to charities and to the Department of Agriculture. A clause in the draft expressed the opinion that the introduction of such a system "would be attended with the best results"; but in the published report the Committee "fear that the evil of adopting the system would, by its encouragement of the gambling instinct, far outweigh the gain that might accrue." Possibly the four peers on the Committee who are connected with the Jockey Club, and interested in racing, thought that a Government which is so indebted to the drink trade might consistently handle a share of the profits in another evil, which, in its turn, is responsible for a large amount of crime and poverty.

The Way to Uproot Hooliganism. Sir Robert Anderson, whose right to speak on the subject no one can doubt, writing in the Nineteenth Century, makes a suggestion as to the best way to put down hooliganism. He traces this outbreak of ruffianism to the fact that so many youths of depraved nature and upbringing are permitted to roam about the streets without any settled occupation, and to whom a legal sentence and period of imprisonment have no terrors under present conditions. What these youths fear most is to be made to work. Idleness in the well-to-do leads to vice, in the poorer classes inevitably to crime. Therefore, he argues, the way to put down hooliganism is by sending the culprits to sea in a training ship or to some kindred institution. Make idleness impossible to them, and the evil is killed at its root. There is sound sense as well as humanity in this suggestion. If carried out, it would mean the redemption of many lads from sure degradation to a life of industry and self-respect.

Crime in London. It is cheering, however, to note that crimes of violence in London are rarer than in other great cities. In a city three times as large as any other in the world the average number of murders in the year within the Metropolitan Police District, with its population of 6,000,000, is about eighteen. We were shocked at the recent murder of a young man returning home after the Peace festivities by a gang of roughs. While we deplore such a crime as this, therefore, we have reason to congratulate ourselves on the efficiency of the police system (the most humane in the world), the devotion of our city missionaries, and on the standard of public order attained.

An Insanitary Stage. Perhaps nothing has been said more strongly condemnatory of the tendency of modern plays than the remarks of the judge and counsel in a case before the courts a few days ago. The proprietor of a dramatic paper was sued for damages for alleged libel concerning a play which, in common with several leading dailies, it had denounced in unmistakable terms. The judge twice expressed his surprise that the Lord Chamberlain had licensed it. It may reasonably be asked, "What is the use of the Censor, if insults to common decency (as an influential contemporary terms them) are permitted to flaunt themselves on the public stage?" It was intended that the censorship should be the barrier between the public and immoral representations. Unhappily of late years it appears to have miserably failed of its purpose. What the verdict, and the keen observations of Mr. Justice Ridley will do to improve matters, remains to be seen.

Morality and Licence. There is great need, too, for stricter censorship over the songs and "patter" of certain well-known music-hall performers. A rare instance occurred last week in regard to a French singer whose songs in rehearsal were ruled out by a management which certainly does not hold a reputation for squeamishness, but which realised that "the line must be drawn somewhere." In a complaint to an interviewer, the chagrined performer detailed her methods, one of which was to voice suggestive lines "with an apologetic gesture." In defence of her broader utterances, she protested those who did not understand would receive no harm, and others who did understand—why, then, it could not hurt them! We are glad the management draws the line at all; it might, however, advantageously draw it higher still. But we suspect the financial loss that would accrue from a withdrawn licence has more to do with it than the question of morality.

The Boast of Romanism. According to the proverb, it is right to take hints from the other side. What do Romanists regard as favouring their operations in Great Britain? Let us heed the words of Monsignor W. Croke Robinson, from a sermon preached at Canterbury on the occasion of a recent Roman Catholic pilgrimage to the cathedral city. According to the Kentish Observer:—

> He declared that progress was being made towards the conversion of England, instancing the decline of the "No Popery" cry, the action of the Law Courts in the recent Jesuit prosecution, and the replacement of statues of the Madonna at Westminster Abbey, St. Mary Abbot's, Kensington, Oxford, and elsewhere. It was difficult to find a Low church among the parish churches, and a well-informed friend told him that, but for the Simeon Trustees, they would be obliterated altogether. Memorial services for the dead, too, were a step Romeward, and he looked hopefully upon the Ritualistic movement.

In other words, the work of Rome is being done by Romanisers in the ministry of the Protestant Church of England. And the silence of such as are afraid of controversy, or of earnestly contending for the faith, is made to support indifference of such as no longer raise the cry of "No Popery." The speaker said that he looked hopefully to Ritualism which God was using "to bring back the faith to the English people, and which was doing for the Roman Church what it could not do for itself." It is no wonder, in the face of these views, that the Romish party in England is hand-in-glove with the promoters of the present Education Bill, which is being engineered by the Ritualistic party as essentially their own. To hand over our children into the power of these men, whom Romanists look upon as practically doing their own work for them, would be a crowning disaster to British Protestantism. There is yet time to prevent the mischief, if the English people will but awake to the facts.

The Dearth of Servants. The difficulty which is now so widely experienced of obtaining domestic servants, has called forth many suggestions as to the remedy. Perhaps one of the most practical is that made by Mrs. Fenwick Miller, who, after stating that in Ireland many families of five or six persons live upon a less income than that which a fairly competent servant can earn for herself alone; and that at some of the "settlements" in the East of London, hundreds of poor girls who would be glad to be trained for service are turned away for want of means—suggests the establishment of properly-organized training homes for the special purpose of fitting such girls for domestic duties. Evidently there is sufficient "raw material" and a large demand, and it would be true philanthropy to utilize both. Certainly one result of the silly stigma which has come to rest upon domestic service has been that of crowding the labour market with semi-starved girls, and the adoption of Mrs. Fenwick Miller's suggestion might do something to remedy this. But many mistresses have also much to learn as to the art of making good servants, and retaining them.

"Signs of This Time."

By Dr. W. WOODS SMYTH.

THE vision of the Prophets of the Old Testament ages included a practical knowledge of the history of their own times. They possessed also accurate information regarding the social condition and family life of the people of their own nation, and showed a thorough acquaintance with the several factors and forces, moral or otherwise, which for good or ill swayed the minds of the people. Our Lord and His Apostles exhibit the same close acquaintance with the men and the events of their own time; and all these true servants of God in every age were guided by this practical information in all their appeals to the people; and they moreover made manifest the fact that their ministry held in its purpose and power the salvation or destruction of their nation and also of other surrounding nations.

It should be understood that Herod the Great, by the force of his personality, and by his influence at the court of Rome, had made the last kingdom of Israel, for a brief time, next to Rome herself, the most influential power in the whole world; and that from the variety of interests which attracted numerous nationalities to Jerusalem, our Lord met face to face a cleverer, a more quick-witted, and in some respects a more cultured people than if He stood to-day in the midst of the decaying populace of London or Paris.

The Prophets, our Lord and His Apostles, openly charged the prominent religious men of their day with ignorance and blindness as to the signs of their own times, as to the true state of religion, as to the trend of national events, and approaching judgments of God. How is it with us?

ARE WE AWAKE AND ALIVE

to the character and circumstance of present-day life—religious, social, national; or does the blindness and condemnation of former ages apply in force to us to-day? Let us inquire.

In a single generation, and with accelerated movement, the whole character of our nation has become changed. The destruction of the agricultural interests of Great Britain and Ireland has driven some of the best of our nation to foreign lands; many others have left the open country for the cities and large towns—mostly for the slums. Alas! their degradation, and too often their demoralization, swiftly followed their change of residence. Naturally, in due course, a longing for the country they have left leads them to look for occasion to revisit it again, and many have relatives and friends remaining there.

The several railway companies readily afford them the desired opportunity; week-end, and especially very many cheap Sunday trains, are run for their convenience. In town they have mostly relinquished their religion, and have embraced all the corrupt instincts which low haunts and low places of amusement have suggested to them. Arriving in the country on the Sunday, almost their first words to relatives and friends are—"You are surely not going to church (or chapel) to-day when we have come to see you?" Revelry, dissipation, and Sunday desecration, replace the hallowing influences for which God set apart one day in seven. A week of work and engrossment, with little if any of true religion in it, and a Sunday given literally to the service of the devil, are surely the most potent factors we could well conceive of for the demoralization of the nation.

A SORROWFUL STATE OF THINGS.

To such a degree have these events advanced in Kent, that the better class of people and the police authorities have lately made the most strenuous efforts, by memorialising the railway companies, and by other means, to stay this Sunday traffic, but all to no purpose; and observe, the cause and the effect are as widespread as the nation. A short time ago Mr. G. M. Trevelyan, writing in the Nineteenth Century, points to the destruction in a single generation of the rural life of the country—to "the rapid diffusion of the vulgarity bred in those great cities into every corner of our island by locomotion; this and the cheap press have destroyed all that was characteristic of Old England." A leading member of Parliament, whose name appears in the "Honours List" just published, speaking of these things a few days ago in conversation in the National Liberal Club, said:—"There is a village in Scotland which I have visited for my holidays for thirty years, and in later years that village has been growing steadily worse and worse."

These are great facts, and they bring to the door of all who are placed in positions of influence in the pulpit, the press, or on the platform, a weight of responsibility towards God and our neighbour which should cause us the gravest concern. It is not among the masses only where this social down-grade is manifest; the classes also are travelling upon the broad road. Mr. George W. E. Russell, in The Daily News, writes:—"We are living in an age of decadence, and we pretend not to know it. Not a feature is wanting, though the worst cannot be mentioned. . . . Religion has degenerated into juggling and table-turning, and philandering with cults brought, like the rites of Isis, from the East."

What can be done? No ordinary measures, legislative or otherwise, can save the nation from ruin. Divine power to change the instincts of the people can alone save us—the power which drove the people in Jonathan Edwards's days from the taverns and gambling saloons to the House of God; the power which, at the request of Rowland (I think it was), destroyed a racecourse meeting in Wales from that time onward. How omnipotent are true prayer and genuine faith on behalf of God's interests and Kingdom!

Our present religious measures are conspicuously failing. A fundamental change has arisen in most minds as to the Gospel. It is no longer a message of Glad Tidings and the power of God, but rather a burden requiring heroic qualities to accept its requirements. It is no longer,

In my hand no price I bring,

but we are told, we "must pay the price." It is no longer, "The God of peace Himself sanctify you wholly" (R.V.), but it is the legal command, "consecrate yourself," "make the surrender," "put your all on the altar," &c. Hence the only converts of to-day who stand are those who possess native or phrenological virtues before they come to Christ. Hence the great number of backsliders. Poor things, heavily handicapped, by inheritance or otherwise, with base instincts—having heard no Gospel of power to transform their nature—how could they stand? It is the word of man's wisdom, not the power of God, upon which their faith rests (see 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5). Hence we often hear, in the language of to-day, of how very much such and such an address or speaker helped the inquirer, and but little of how the Lord Himself helped. Copious notes of popular addresses are taken and kept, and when the verbally-created experience runs low, which it is sure to do, recourse is had to the notes again, rather than to the Lord.

I am not despising the due use of these means, but am calling attention to the power of God in Christ Jesus through the Holy Ghost, to be sought for, waited for, believed for, and realized. Pilkington, of Uganda relates how often he had consecrated and surrendered himself without any appreciable result; but when he sought the revival power of the Holy Ghost for himself and others, he then, and not till then, reached the solid reality. Thirty thousand converts in due course showed the wisdom and importance of that prayer, the reality of that power.

Now, for about a quarter of a century we have been upon these lines of over-much self-consecration. At first, the power of God was more distinctly looked for and realized. It is not so to-day. The Godward side of salvation and sanctification does not receive adequate recognition. Let us seek the apostolic "demonstration of the Spirit and of power;" then all difficulties will be swept away, all questions answered, all truth reached.

Upon returning to Ulster after years of absence, I was curious to know what the leading converts and workers of the great Revival of 1859 understood by holiness or sanctification. Accordingly, I closely questioned a brother. He had never been to a holiness meeting, or convention for deepening the spiritual life, yet I could teach him nothing; the Holy Spirit had taught him all things, and views and doctrines were evidently secondary in his mind to the power of God.

Therefore, with all earnestness and insistence, I declare: "It is time to seek the Lord," that His own power may appear amongst us, for herein alone is the remedy for declining faith, for failing churches, for multiplying social evils, for hastening national decay. The interests of our country, of the nation, and of the Empire, do not lie in the hands of the Government, nor in the two Houses of Parliament, nor in the influence of the secular Press. These only follow, give effect to, and record, national feeling. The interests of the people, and of the Empire, are in the hands of the genuine Church of Christ, without respect to denomination, and for these interests we shall be held accountable.

The Church of Christ has more than once changed the whole history of the world; in holy, living power she can change it again, can change the national feeling, and thereby the current of historic events.

The Christian Tourist's Equipment.

Take with you, loved ones, journeying far,
In quest of health or rest,
A praying heart, a thankful soul,
To keep the spirit bright and whole,
And make each moment blest.

And take you to the sylvan scene,
Or shore or flowery dell,
Fit treasures for the restful hour,
Strong bulwarks from the tempter's power,
And each alluring spell.

Maintain the hours of sacred prayer,
For leisure hath its snares;
Repose might even steal away
Devotion's fervour, day by day,
Not less than earthly cares.

Where'er you are, wherever placed,
Or mingling whom among,
Live, that the hours of change may be,
To those who join your company,
One sweet, continued song.

Thus, soul and body both refreshed,
Shall hail a glad return,
Each loving service to renew
Whate'er the hand might find to do,
Or love for Christ discern.

Conversion.

By J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

THE simple but searching words which our Lord addressed to Nicodemus remain still the most obnoxious of all the Master's teaching to the man of the world. Whether his world be that of the materialist or of the philosopher, of the worshipper of gold or the slave of society, of the ambitious or the pleasure-seeker, he revolts against the law so distinctly laid down, as that of the Heavenly Kingdom: "Except a man be born anew, he cannot see the Kingdom of God." Like the Pharisee of old, he asks, "How can these things be?" and still there comes from the Old Book the emphatic reply: "Ye must be born again."

It is doubtful whether there is any single doctrine of the Gospel which encounters more bitter opposition than this. It may be admitted that it has sometimes been presented in a form so extreme as to provoke hostile criticism. That there have been, and still are, sudden and almost instantaneous conversions, I cannot doubt. In the course of a prolonged ministry, I have seen many examples—that is, cases in which the soul has been awakened, and the whole course of the subsequent life been determined, by a flash of conviction as sudden and unexpected as the piercing words which called Saul the persecutor to become Paul the Apostle. I do not pretend to say—probably even the subjects of the change could hardly say themselves—how far there had been any preparation for this spiritual revolution. On this point there would, doubtless, be great diversity of experience, and for myself I cannot doubt that, in numbers of cases, there was no previous history which might even help to explain this sudden turning to God. But while believing in the possibility of

INSTANTANEOUS CONVERSION,

I am far from contending that this is the normal method of the Spirit's working in the soul of man. The variety in that method is clearly indicated by our Lord when he adds: "The wind bloweth where it listeth; and thou hearest the voice thereof, but knowest not whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

So do we find it in our own observation. The story of the inner life of man varies as much as he lives in the sight and company of others. This is really only what we might expect. One has been educated in a Christian family, and amid the most gracious and tender of Christian influence; the memories of his childhood are sanctified by associations of the most sacred and enduring kind. Another has been trained amid all that was most fitted to starve the intellect and corrupt the heart. He has lived in a company where God is unknown, whose members are practically saying, "Evil, be thou my God," and under the continuous influence of vice the heart has hardened, until the terrible figure of Scripture, hard as the nether mill-stone, is not too strong to apply to it.

It is hardly possible that the relation to the Gospel of these two, trained under circumstances so different, should be precisely the same. The difference is implied in those pregnant words of Jude: "On some have mercy, who are in doubt; and some save, snatching them out of the fire; and on some have mercy with fear." Such diversity of treatment implies diversity in the subject. This there certainly must be when we consider not only the difference in original constitution, but in all the influences by which it has been affected. Even if the prodigal from a Christian home has strayed into the very wilds of sin and sunk into the depths of vice—and there are too many examples even of this—he has recollections of something different which have no place in the memory of one who has been educated in evil. We expect those who have had so different a training to be affected in different ways. Yet it is equally true that in the one case as in the other there must be a conversion—a turning to God.

The underlying question which is continually being raised, though not in open and direct form, is between

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION.

It presents itself in its most acute form in the case of those amiable members of Christian families, who are so piously disposed, so gracious in manner, as well as unselfish in spirit, so full of good works, that they might seem to need no conversion. It is not simply that their conduct is beyond reproach, that they are exemplary in all the relations of life, and that the voices of family and acquaintances are all loud in their praise; but further, the whole spirit of their life is in harmony with these outward manifestations. What more (it may be asked), is to be desired in relation to them? It may sound stern and severe, but it is, nevertheless, true, that it is possible to be (like that young man to whom the Lord bore such striking testimony), not far from the Kingdom, and yet not to be in it.

The question comes, after all, and it is not to be lightly answered, as to the ruling power in the heart and the life. Custom, education, association, the temperament, conventionalism, in short, a number of causes may determine the course of life, and among them all may not be found that simple, self-renouncing, inspiring, and controlling love of God, which is the essence of true religion.

It cannot be doubted that in some cases the yielding of the soul to God may be so slow and gradual that there is no time on which the subject can fix as the hour of conversion. At one time this was hardly recognized, and numbers of godly souls went "mourning all their days" because they could neither determine the time nor trace the circumstances of their conversion. Happily, we have learned better to understand the diversity of the Divine method. Some are led so quietly to Christ, step by step, that they hardly realise the nature and extent of the change, until in some hour of serious retrospect they compare the present with the past, more or less distant, and can say, "Old things are passed away; all things are become new; all things are of God."

INTELLECTUAL CONVERSIONS.

That there may be intellectual conversions perhaps no one will deny. A man may renounce beliefs which he has firmly held, and adopt others which he has strenuously opposed. It is conversion in character which the quasi-philosopher of to-day treats with such supercilious criticism. We are told that "at heart men are very much alike. The average saint does not differ very widely from the average sinner. In both alike you may find a certain number of good qualities, and in both they are counterbalanced by others of a very different type. Neither is free from selfishness, but on the other hand neither is incapable of generous and kindly deeds; and it is even possible that in some critical emergency both may surprise you by a complete reversal of the parts you might have expected them to play. It is absurd, however, to attribute any difference between them to the action of religion, and, still worse, to talk of any mysterious spiritual change, such as you call conversion."

Granted at once that this change belongs to the mystical side of religion—the region which is known to faith alone. But is it, therefore, to be ignored as though it were unreal? It is surely something, to carry into life in all its departments, the sense of a living God who loves righteousness. There have been men whose name is a power to this day, whose strength was due entirely to the force of this truth. They believed in God, and because of that faith they were able to resist evil, and, if need be, to die rather than yield to its dominion. Their faith had inspired a love to God which expressed itself in a love to man for His sake. The world was not worthy of them and cast them out, but the world itself was richly blessed by them.

THE TRUE HEROES.

Liberty, progress, righteousness, all that helps to elevate and ennoble humanity, are debtors to the men who served men because they had first been taught to love God. I do not suggest that freedom has had no other martyr, and humanity no other servants. But I do assert that, if you subtract from the list of the world's heroes the men whose heroism has been inspired by love to God, you will so impoverish the record that it will lose much of its lustre; and if you extinguish to-day the forces working for progress which owe their birth to the same gracious influences, you will so materially reduce the force of the host as to ensure failure.

I will only add here that the reality of conversion must be justified by the conduct. A new birth is the beginning of a new life. Emotionalism is a poor thing, but intense feelings which vindicate themselves by pure and noble lives are not to be got rid of by a sneer. The contention of Evangelical Christians is that the life which is sketched in the Sermon on the Mount—whose leading outlines are given in the Beatitudes—can be reached only by those who are born again. Culture will not produce it; mere pious instincts will not inspire it; no social influences can foster it; it will not be reached by any process of evolution; it is possible to them only who are led by the Spirit of God. That leading is conversion.

To a Discouraged Missionary.

WE, who live in the midst of superabounding privileges, can hardly realize the thoughts and feelings of those bearing the burden of the Lord in far-away places. Well may we, in our public and private worship, pray for such, that the Lord may make up to them that which they have given up in leaving friends and home for His sake. It is, indeed, a "living sacrifice," and we can understand the temptation to consider it sometimes, as not "a reasonable service."

Further, it is disheartening that the Church at home, as a whole, feels so little the responsibility of the missionary's burden. But, "God is in His heaven," and He knows the care, the anxiety, the depression—did not our blessed Lord Himself experience it all?—and, "in that He suffered being tempted, He is able also to succour them that are tempted."

Yes, He suffered; the pain of it was His before He went to the cross, and we are called, in our own measure, to "the fellowship of His sufferings." "Who is among you that feareth the Lord, who walketh in darkness and hath no light—let him trust in the Lord and stay upon his God"

Christ's Rebuke to Ritualism.

(Adapted from Philip Doddridge, D.D.)

By E. F. ALLWORTHY.

AT the Feast of Tabernacles, which was instituted in commemoration of God's giving the Law to Israel, and guiding them through the wilderness, where they dwelt in tents, there was much ceremony and ritual. The feast lasted eight days, during which the people lived in tabernacles, or arbours made up of branches of the most shady trees. Besides other institutions then to be attended, the whole law was to be read over in the audience of all the people, from the original copy which was laid up in the holy of holies.

Jewish writers assure us that they had a peculiar ceremony on the last day of the feast. After they had surrounded the altar seven times, with palm branches in their hands, and Hosannas of praise, some of the Levites used to pour out in the court of the temple a considerable quantity of water, drawn from the fountain of Siloam, the people, in the meantime, singing these words of Isaiah, "With joy shall they draw water out of the wells of salvation." This was as a token of their expectation and desire of the Messiah's appearance; who was to "pour water on him that was thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground." It was probably during the time of this ceremony, or immediately after it, that our Lord, as the evangelist tells us (John vii. 37) "stood and cried (or made proclamation) saying, if any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink."

What a rebuke! Well did John the Baptist say, "There standeth One among you whom ye know not." You believe the promises of the Messiah, and you have invented this rite as a token that you expect His coming, and long for the effusion of the Spirit, which is then to be bestowed. "Behold in Me," Jesus would say, "the One whom you profess so eagerly to expect! He that believeth in Me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water," i.e., he shall receive the communications of the Spirit, in such abundant degrees as shall not only be refreshing to himself, but shall render him capable of administering in the freest and most plentiful manner to the comfort and edification of others. Thus the evangelist himself teaches us to expound these words, when he says, v. 29, "This spake He of the Spirit, which they who believe on Him should receive."

"If any man thirst let him come unto Me." No priestly intervention needed here. "Come unto Me." No great ceremony or ritual required—immediate access the only qualification. Are you thirsty? Are you needy? "Then," says Christ, "let him come unto Me and drink." How blessedly simple, setting aside all forms and ceremonies which may only be blinding the eyes to the presence of Him whom we profess to believe in; let all the thirsty souls of men "stoop down and drink and live." Prove for yourself the truth of the words of Jesus, "Come unto Me and drink."

CHRIST'S INVITATION TO THIRSTY SOULS.

The Lord of life exalted stands,
Aloud He cries, and spreads his hands;
He calls ten thousand sinners round,
And sends a voice from every wound.

"Attend, ye thirsty souls, draw near,
And satiate all your wishes here!
Behold, the living fountain flows
In streams as various as your woes!

"An ample pardon here I give,
And bid the sentenc'd rebel live;
Show him my Father's smiling face,
And lodge him in His dear embrace.

"I purge from sin's detested stain,
And make the crimson white again;
Lead to celestial joys, refin'd,
And lasting as the deathless mind.

"Must I anew my pity prove?
Witness the words of melting love,
The gushing tear, the lab'ring breath,
And all these scars of bleeding death.

"Come to the living waters, come!
Sinners obey your Maker's call;
Return, ye weary wand'rer's, home,
And find my grace is free for all."

A Modern Parable.

THE FACTORY THAT WOULD NOT GO.

(From an Address by Mr. Edgar Geil, the American Evangelist).

A MAN had a factory!

He walked round the outside and then walked round the inside. There were the shafts, all properly set, the cogs all sharp and clean, the great engine all complete. The machinery was all there, but it didn't move a spoke.

He was looking disgustedly at the factory when a man came up and said, "Your factory?" "Yes," he replied.

"What do you make?" "That's the trouble. I don't make anything."

"Doesn't it run?" "No."

"What's the matter with it?" "I don't know."

"Ah," said the man, "I'll tell you; you want to get some hook-nosed oil-cans and some imported oil, and oil up all the bearings."

So he got the hook-nosed oil-cans, and the imported oil, and he employed men to go round and oil all the machinery and all the bearings.

Then he came down again, walked round inside and outside. Nothing moved. A man came up to him and said, "Your factory?" "Yes," he replied.

"What do you make?" "Don't make anything."

"Don't it run?" "No."

"What's the matter?" "I don't know."

"I'll tell you; you want to fresco it—side walls and ceiling—and I would recommend you to put a couple of bare-footed angels, with trumpets eternally ready to blow—and do it properly."

So he put workmen in and frescoed the factory, putting a couple of angels on the ceiling, with trumpets at their lips, ready to blow.

Then he came down, and looked it over again, but still it did not move, and while he was looking a man came up and said, "Your factory?" "Yes."

"What do you make?" "Nothing."

"Why? Don't it run?" "No."

"What's the matter?" "I don't know."

"Ah," said he, "I will tell you. It has got no steeple. You want to put up a nice steeple on one of the corners, and I'd advise you to put in a fine pipe-organ, and get a quartette choir at the same time."

So he set men to work, got the steeple up, with a chime of bells that was marvellous, put in a pipe-organ, with lots of pipes, got a quartette choir that would beat anything you ever heard, specially on the "Amen." When they got hold of an "Amen" they just chased it up and down stairs fit to make your hair stand on end.

Then the man came down, saw the steeple and the organ, and heard the choir and the chimes. But not a thing moved.

"This your factory?" said a man who came up. "Yes."

"What do you make?" "Nothing."

"Does it run?" "No."

"What's the matter?" "Don't know."

"Ah," he said, "you want a picture of the thing taken. Get a photographer to take a picture, have a lot of big copies made and framed and hung up all round, in the railway stations, in the hotels, in the barbers' shops, and so on, telling about the time the thing is expected to move. Say it will move at eleven o'clock in the morning and seven o'clock at night, and the people will come to see it move."

So he got a great big picture taken, and had copies hung up at all the places the man told him about.

Then he came down, walked round inside and out; but couldn't see a hair moving. He was perfectly disgusted. Not a cog trembled!

Just then a working man came up, a hard-handed man. He took off his hat—he was very polite—and said, "Beg pardon, sir, is this your factory?"

"Who told you to ask me that?" grunted the owner of the factory.

"Beg pardon, but is that your factory?" repeated the man. "Yes."

"What do you make?" "Don't make anything." "Don't it run?" "Run! No, it don't run at all—except into debt!"

"What's the matter, sir?" "I don't know. A man told me to get some hook-nosed oil-cans—and there they are. Another man told me to fresco it and put in a couple of angels. I frescoed it, and if you will come in and have a look you will see two bare-footed angels on the ceiling ready to blow their two trumpets.

"Another man told me to put on a steeple, to get a pipe-organ, to engage a quartette choir, and I did. Do you hear those chimes? See that organ? Listen to that choir chasing that 'Amen' up and down! Another man told me to get a photograph taken and hung up. I have hung it up! But the machinery don't move a spoke, and I am disgusted with the whole business."

"Well," said the working-man, "pardon me, sir. I have never been to school, and I don't know anything about those angels; but I would like to ask you one question: Did you ever put any fire under the boiler?"

"Why, I never thought of that."

"Well," said the working man, "if you will take the chances—it will scare the choir, likely—but if you will take the chances I will put some fire under the boiler."

"Oh," said the man, "go ahead. Move it somehow. Make something of it, if it's only ashes!"

So the working-man went inside, took off his coat, opened the door of the furnace, put in the wood, threw on the petroleum, put in the coal, lighted a match, got the fire going, set on the draughts, shovelled in some more coal, and pulled back the throttle valves. The steam rushed into the cylinder, hit the end of the piston rod, the great wheels began to tremble. It revolved, and the machinery all over the factory began to move. A little more coal—and more—and more—and more, while faster—and faster—and faster went the machinery. The quartette choir got scared to death—went out at the back window. The whole thing was moving. Something had happened. Praise the Lord!—The Southern Cross.

Do We Know Our Bible?

SIR,—I have been much exercised lately at what seems to me to be the culpable neglect of the use of the Word of God both in the churches and in the homes of professing Christians. Very few use the Bible when in church, and at the weekly service I often find myself quite singular with the Book open. I have spoken to my minister about the matter, but he seems not to think it requiring any notice.

Can you suggest any means whereby the Bible may become a more used book? I am convinced, if it were more used in the pew it would be more used in the home, and its precepts practised in the daily life. It is very surprising, and at the same time lamentable, to note the ignorance displayed by many real Christians of the Bible. A short time ago I asked one to turn to the third chapter of Hezekiah. He could soon do this, but, of course, failed! In the course of an address I was giving, I had occasion to refer to Ezra, when I observed a deacon of an evangelical church, and a genuine believer, turn to find it among the Minor Prophets!

I have no doubt many think they know the Bible, i.e., if they ever think at all about it. If they would only test themselves they would, I fancy, soon find, to their surprise, how ignorant they are of it.—Yours,

O. S. D.

Light upon the Lesson for Sunday School Teachers is the title of a publication dedicated to the use of all British Sunday School Teachers. It consists of a digest of Scripture references upon the International Lesson, reproduced in full for convenience of study during preparation. The series of lessons for the fourth quarter of the current year are included in a compact little book well printed; and we trust many teachers will try the method, which is a praiseworthy illustration of the principle of Scripture being its own interpreter. It may be added that the method engaged the interest of many teachers who tried it some months ago, when a specimen lesson was circulated among London workers. (3d. Morgan & Scott.)

SUNDAY, July 20. Deuteronomy xxiii.

THE necessity of moral and spiritual purity was enforced by the strict regulations about ceremonial purity, of which there are many examples in this chapter. Entrance into "the Assembly of the Lord" probably refers to enrolment in the list of males, which was strictly refused to certain individuals, named in verses 2, 3, 8. As Israel lived in close contiguity to Ammon and Moab, it was wise to build up these strong barriers, that the moral infection of these nations might not injure them. There was to be a distinction, however, in their treatment of the Edomites and Egyptians, for the one was related by blood, and the other had shown much kindness, to say nothing of Joseph's Egyptian marriage.

How comforting the assurance of verse 5 is, that God is ever prepared to turn the curse of those that hate us into blessings. Let us ever be on the alert to claim this at His hands, and never forget those who have once shown us kindness.

As it was in the camp of old, so it is now in every church of the Lord Jesus; the Lord walks in the midst to deliver us and smite our enemies before us; we must be very careful, therefore, that He should see nothing unclean or abominable. Nothing will more surely burden the exercise of His power than this. Here is another illustration of the lesson so constantly being taught us, that consecration must precede full deliverance from known sin.

Notice the incentives to holy living, supplied by the constant refrain of "the Lord thy God," and the references to His choice and will. What was an abomination to Him must be avoided, and what was vowed to Him must be rigorously paid. Oh that we might ever live in the light of His face!

MONDAY, July 21. Deuteronomy xxiv.

Let us note the considerateness of the Divine Law. How clearly it raised the standard of the Hebrew people above the level of the peoples around them. In fact, Christians may do well to observe and do these things, for love ought to exceed law, and we should remember that our Lord came not to destroy but to fulfil.

Here was considerateness for a divorced wife; the writing out and signing of a bill of divorce set up a barrier against the hasty and passionate action of her husband; whatever was done must be done with due thought. Here was consideration also for the newly-married wife, that her husband might be left to her for the first twelvemonth; for the poor, that the millstone, needed for the daily grinding of the household corn, should not be taken in pledge; for the defenceless, that the slave-trader should die; for the debtor, that there should be no violation of his self-respect or his home; for the hired servant, that he should have his wage at night-fall; for the fatherless, the stranger, and the widow (17, 19, 20, 21).

What courtesy and considerateness for others are insisted on in these verses! And how potent the argument (see v. 22). Let us earnestly cultivate this sacred grace, and look, not every one on his own things, but every one also on the things of others. Let us not forget how God's love has dealt with us.

TUESDAY, July 22. Deuteronomy xxv.

Even in the administration of judicial penalties, the considerateness of which we spoke in the last note was very noticeable. The punishment was inflicted in the presence of the judge, instead of being dealt out in private by some cruel official, who had become hardened by his familiarity with similar scenes; and the highest number of strokes was to be forty. In later years, the Jews, being extremely scrupulous of the letter of the law, subtracted one stroke, to avoid the danger of miscalculation (2 Cor. xi. 24). The reason for the restriction of the number of stripes was that human nature, made in the image of God, should not be degraded (3). We should ever remember the necessity of respecting men, and teaching them to respect themselves. "Honour all men."

The patient cattle that strode round and round on the threshing-floor, treading out the corn, were to be allowed freely to pick up a mouthful when they chose to do so. How much more humane was this than a more thoughtless practice of placing a bag over their mouths, or tying up their necks (Prov. xii. 10; 1 Cor. ix. 9; 1 Tim. v. 18). It was not only that God desired to teach the humane treatment of the dumb creation, but that a lesson was to be taught to all time of properly rewarding those who labour for the highest interests of men.

This law of marriage dated from the earliest times, and was necessary to preserve the name and honours of the eldest son, and to retain his property in his family. It was remarkably illustrated in the story of Ruth (Ruth iv. 4; Matt. xxii. 25; see also Num. xxxiii. 54; xxxvi. 9). We learn from verses 14, 15, the necessity of perfect honour in business, of sound and just decisions in all cases submitted to our adjudication, and of having one price in our stores. Strict integrity must be our law.

These particulars of Amalek's encounter are not mentioned in the earlier history. Evidently they were a cruel and crafty people, and it was probably a necessary judicial act. God is always calling nations to his bar, and adjudging them to come or to depart (Matt. xxv.).

WEDNESDAY, July 23. Deuteronomy xxvi.

To use a legal phrase, the Israelites were God's tenants-at-will. The entire produce of the land was viewed as being His, and they were required to give Him tribute in the form of first-fruits and tithes. The season's produce was yearly presented at one of the great feasts—the first fruits of barley at the Passover (Lev. ii. 14; xxiii. 10), of wheat at Pentecost (Lev. xxiii. 15; Num. xxviii. 26), and those of other fruits as they ripened.

There is not the least reason why every Christian should not bind himself to this sacred custom, not from legalism, but love. All we earn and possess is equally the gift of God to us. Let us acknowledge it by giving Him always a proportion of the results of every new enterprise, of every advance in wages, of each new crop or brood or herd. Of how many of us are not those words of the ancient collect true (verses 5-10)? When once we realize that God has given us all, we can rejoice before Him unfeignedly, because what He has done, He can and will do, and the burden of responsibility is off our shoulders on His. In addition to this, the Hebrew people tithed their belongings twice in the year, appropriating the first to the Levites (Num. xviii. 21); the second being divided thus: for two years out of three it was eaten at the great central sanctuary, but in the third year it furnished sustenance for the poor and needy (xiv. 22, 28) of the neighbourhood in which the donor dwelt.

It is when we have given to God His just dues that we can intercede for our land and people, and, above all, for the progress of the Church (v. 15). Which of my readers will to-day enter into a holy covenant with the Lord, and repeat it at each consecration of first-fruits and tithes (16-19)?

Ebal and Gerizim are two great masses of limestone rock, reaching 2,700 and 2,000 feet above the sea-level, respectively. They stand N. and S. of a beautiful valley, about 300 yards in width. It was there that the solemn service described in this chapter took place. On great stones in this valley, covered with plaister, the words of the law were engraved; here also an altar of unhewn stones was erected. At the foot and slopes of Gerizim stood the direct descendants of Rachel and Leah; on those of Ebal those of Zilpah and Bilhah, together with Reuben, who had forfeited the rights of the firstborn, and Zebulun. Then the Priests and Levites, standing around the ark, uttered, first the benediction, and next the solemn denunciations of the law; each item eliciting the responsive Amen, first from the group on Gerizim, and then from that on Ebal. In the clear, quiet air of that valley, the voice would be heard over a long distance with the greatest possible facility.

What an interesting revelation is given in these denunciations of the comprehensiveness of the Law of God. To make a blind man wander from his way, and to wrest the judgment of the fatherless, was held to be as reprehensible as to commit those terrible breaches of the law of purity, which are universally reprobated. The love of God is sensitive of very little things. Nothing is insignificant or trivial when judged by its standard. Lord, let our love for Thee make us very careful of our behaviour in the smallest matters.

FRIDAY, July 25. Deuteronomy xxviii.

The opening verses of this chapter may be compared to the Beatitudes of Matt. v. It was wise, as the people stood on the threshold of their inheritance, that they should learn the great alternatives that lay before them, of blessedness or misfortune and misery. And it must be always remembered that these lie deeply embedded in the very nature of things. It is not only that God steps out of His way to reward the obedient and punish the ungodly; but that godliness is necessarily blessedness, because the godly are in harmony with the nature of things, with God and the holy angels, with the stars in their courses, and the creation in its order. If we are at one with God, through Jesus Christ, we are at one with His universe. All things serve the man who serves Christ. In this sense, "all things are yours."

Believer in the Son of God, put thy hand on these things, and claim that they should be spiritually thine. Ask especially that the Lord should smite thine enemies before thee, that the Lord should establish thee unto Himself, and that He should open to thee His good treasure. All things are ours in the Son of God's love. Take this list as an inventory for thy rights in Him, and possess thy possessions!

It would be impossible within these limits to show how literally all these terrible penalties have been inflicted on the Jews in each of the Christian centuries. The sixty-eighth verse was literally fulfilled when Titus transported myriads of Jews to Egypt, to be employed in the public works or to fight in the amphitheatres. Ah, Israel, how sorely thou hast suffered! When wilt thou return to the Lord thy God! (Acts iii. 19, 20).

SATURDAY, July 26. Deuteronomy xxix.

In one great final convocation, Moses rehearsed the covenant, and sought to bind the people to its provisions. It becomes us from time to time to look into the vows we have made, reviewing them to see if we are carefully keeping them; enlarging their scope, if needs be, and renewing them before God. And happy is it, when we can gather our whole family, even to the humblest of our servants, before God, engaging itself in His holy service.

It is not true that godliness is of little profit. A man has no right to say that religion is a matter of indifference. If, with these words in his ears, a man blesses himself in his heart, saying, I shall have peace, though I follow my own devices and desires, he will find himself bitterly disillusioned. God will find him out. "Cleanse, therefore, the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee, and worthily magnify Thy Holy Name."

What a verification of verse 24 is afforded by the present state of Palestine. The infidel Volney, viewing it, wrote:—"Why is not that ancient population reproduced and perpetuated?—a mysterious God exercises His incomprehensible judgments. He has, doubtless, pronounced a secret malediction against the land. He has struck with a curse the present race of men in revenge of past generations." These are His secret things (29)—His unsearchable judgments (Rom. xi. 33).

Quaint Texts from Queer Places.

By MR. CHAS. COOK.

'TWAS in an old-world garden, o'errun with weeds, that I came across this inspiriting text on the old sun-dial.

Grey with age, its stone support partly hidden by lichen, I had missed its cheery words on that cold, blusterous morning, had not the sun shone out from a dark bank of clouds, and lit up the gnomon of the dial; and, curious to see the time by this natural clock, I found not only the hour, but a word of comfort also.

Of course no dark hours were registered by the dial; those only which the sunshine pointed out were recorded. What years had passed away since it was first erected! How many owners of the stately mansion in the grounds of which it stood had lived, and loved, and lost since then! The sun-dial had only noted the bright hours.

The brass on which the words were recorded was black with age, but a little rubbing made the text stand out most conspicuously, and the glint of the sun did the rest.

May we all emulate this old-time motto, for we all need it. "My wife is always sitting on her coffin," said a friend to me the other day, and he appeared depressed by the desponding temperament of his pessimistic helpmeet.

David says in Psalm xxxiv., where he speaks of "troubles" and "afflictions"—"The Lord delivered me from all my fears"; and one is tempted to think they were worse than the afflictions.

"I've had a great many troubles," said a preacher once, "but the worst of them never came." That's just it! We jump our ditches before we come to them, and a large number of the Lord's people destroy their own happiness, hinder their usefulness, and tend to depress their many friends with whom they associate, and their family with whom they live. Let this quaint text be a blessing to all of us, let us sing:—

Go bury thy sorrow, let others be blest;
Go, give them the sunshine; tell Jesus the rest.

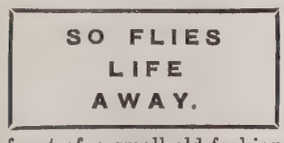
Let us trust in our God, come weal, come woe, sunshine or shower; and though there be "fightings without and fears within"; He is guiding, and He will grant us peace always and by all means.

Whichever way the wind doth blow
Some heart is glad to have it so;
Then blow it east, or blow it west,
The wind that blows, that wind is best.



On the front of a small old fashioned public-house at Chiswick is another sun-dial with the above words on it. Standing in the midst of a number of up-to-date modern shops, the old building looks most conspicuous by its old tumble-down appearance, and adds point to the meaning of the text.

The Hebrews tell a story of Methuselah. They say his great length of life was early made known to him. His friends counselled him to build a substantial house for himself. He refused, saying, "It is not worth while building a house at all for such a short time." He realised the shortness of life, not its length.

Are we not reminded of this by the home-calling of our friends and colleagues? Spurgeon, Moody, Talmage, alas, have gone, and every week THE CHRISTIAN tells of some honoured servant called to his rest and reward.

We never miss the water till the well runs dry.

"Is there anything I can do for you?" asked a friend of a dying man. The passion for life dictated the answer. "Give me back my youth." Oh, that we might value this present life, its possibilities, and its potentialities! Be we saints or be we sinners, we do not live as we might live; we do not value life as we should value it. List to the cry of that dying millionaire, "My life has been a failure!" Hark to the wail of the last words of Charles Churchill, who died a miserable death at Boulogne—"What a fool I've been!" What an end to the career of the brilliant writer of "The Rosciad"!

That death might happy be
To live learned I;
That life might happy be
I learned to die.

Such is the epitaph on the monument of Major-General Bannister, at Spanish Town, Jamaica.

Are we workers for Christ? May we work—as Apelles painted—for eternity. Time is short! "The Lord is at hand"; and the lives of our neighbours and friends ephemeral. Would we win and woo them to the Saviour? "Work while it is called to-day—for the night cometh when no man can work."

On one of the municipal buildings at Aberdeen is a sun-dial, constructed in 1597, with the motto:—

"Ut umbra, sic fugit vita."

Truly, as Burke said in the House of Commons, "What shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue!"

Divinity Course for Lady Students.

A COURSE of Divinity lectures for lady students has been most successfully carried on at Westfield College, Hampstead, under the superintendence of the mistress, Miss Maynard, during the session that is just over. We, who have attended the course, feel that these lectures have been of the greatest possible help to us, and we wish to make them known more widely through the medium of your paper, in order that others may have a similar privilege next session.

We have felt the extreme difficulty of bringing into one consistent whole the various areas of knowledge, and have feared the effects of scientific methods when applied to religious thought. These lectures have supplied just what we needed. We know that many have the same difficulty, and these lectures are intended for those who are, or expect to be, engaged in educational, literary, or missionary work, more particularly students who have had some collegiate training. The course of lectures comprises most of the subjects where difficulties arise:—(1) Criticism of the Old and New Testaments; (2) Church History (Specially the Reformation); (3) The Creed, and I.—V. of the Articles of Religion of the Church of England; (4) The first two chapters of Genesis in relation to modern science; (5) The Inspiration of the Bible; (6) The Problem of Evil, &c.

The lectures are given by Miss Maynard herself, and Revs. G. A. Schneider (Cambridge), J. M. Willoughby, and C. Anderson Scott. We feel that, at this juncture, Christians of all denominations need help in meeting:—(1) The indifference of the world to the great questions of religion; (2) The attacks on Holy Scripture itself from various quarters; (3) Difficulties arising from the apparent irreconcilibility of modern thought with the Christian position. The next term begins in October.

Particulars can be obtained from the Secretary, Westfield College, Hampstead, N.W.

A Siege and a Surrender.

ON the one side, the Americans were our next neighbours; and we had a good deal of intercourse with them by letter, as a great many of our near relatives were over there, and many more very likely to go and join them soon, for it was very hard to make out a living in Seafield, as the land was poor and scrubby.

There were about eight families in our townland, and we lived on rather friendly terms with each other. In religion, so far as we professed any, we were all Protestants; but the only sign we ever gave of any respect for religion was just to go to the parish church when either of us wanted to get married, or had a child to baptize, or to attend a neighbour's funeral.

In these days—they were in the fifties, just before the great revival of '59—the only church we cared to attend was the public-house, and our prayer-book usually a pack of cards; and as for our prayers, well, they were always breaches of the Third Commandment.

There we lived as if we would never have any account to give in the great and awful hereafter; and I must add, if I am to give anything like a true picture of our state religiously,

"NO MAN CARED FOR OUR SOULS."

It seemed as if we not only lived behind the mountains, but also beyond all civilizing and religious influences.

Such was our wretched state, and there were hundreds in a similar condition in that same parish then, and for years before, when a young and very zealous minister belonging to the people called Methodists came to live in a village some two miles away, and he used to hold meetings in the farmers' houses.

One night, not far from our place, his turn was to preach in the house of a very good man, who, before the service began, told the stranger all about us and our godless way of living, and then finished up by asking the minister if he could do anything for us.

Before that meeting broke up, to the great surprise of all present, the young preacher publicly announced a meeting at ten o'clock next morning, to pray for us poor careless sinners in Seafield, in a farmhouse just at the other side of the hill from us. The kitchen and adjoining room were packed full, though it was a very busy harvest day. After that strange prayer-meeting about twenty of them, men and women, led by the preacher, came over the hill, reaching our little village about twelve o'clock at noon, and no one sending for, or even wanting, them at that busy season. All the same, there they were, and every one of them a home missionary for the time being. We all got a very hearty invitation to hear the strange young minister preach.

After their interest in us, and taking the trouble to visit us, we could not see our way to refuse, so one and all we came and filled two large rooms, most of us standing all the time. When the service was over, and we were separating, one poor fellow, the father of a large family, trembled and wept, asking if it was possible for him to be saved? The preacher was at once by his side telling him of the Friend of sinners. Another, an old man, over eighty years of age, and the owner of the house, asked, with tears, if the preacher would not come back soon again?

"Yes," said the preacher, "this night week, at seven o'clock, please the Lord."

How shall I describe that next meeting? The preacher came and the people came, but the best of all was, the great Master came. And such a breaking down, and all just in the middle of the sermon — weeping, sobbing, groaning was now the order of the day, and as the result over a score decided then and there to serve God and cast in their lot with His people. From this on they came to the sanctuary regularly, and sent their children to the Sunday-school, giving every evidence of a thorough change of heart. Thus did Seafield first surrender to Christ. E. The Simultaneous Mission, Melbourne.

A GRACIOUS AND WIDESPREAD REVIVAL.

THE Simultaneous Mission, which was recently brought to a close in Melbourne, was a season of rich revival. "Showers of blessing" were given, both in the district meetings with which the campaign was commenced, and in a wonderful series of united gatherings which were subsequently held in the Exhibition Building.

From the outset there were abundant signs of general interest. On many occasions vast throngs attended the services, and the missioners rejoiced in the earnest attention of the people, and in their spiritual readiness to hear and accept the Gospel message. "Sinners," says an evangelist, "were converted, and the churches were reconverted." The Southern Cross testifies: "There are thousands of men and women in Melbourne to-day who can bear rejoicing testimony to the fact that in the mission they have found the secret and the power of a new spiritual life." Rev. Dr. Torrey's verdict was: "While I cannot speak definitely as to numbers, I should judge that many thousands of people have accepted Christ; but I always aim to do my work so that the best part shall come after I have gone. Though

I like to see immediate conversions in an evangelistic mission—and we have seen them in this movement—I look, rather, for a great arousing of the churches, so that the revival may not be stopped as soon as the evangelists have departed."

SOME PROMINENT MISSIONERS.

Mission committees, including practically all the ministers and prominent laymen, organized the local meetings with completeness and devotion. Rev. Dr. Torrey's powerful addresses had a telling effect, while an extraordinary attraction was found in the originality and pungency of another American evangelist, Mr. Edgar Geil.

Unconventional and pithy, with a characteristic American breeziness, Mr. Geil drew enormous audiences, and his "catchy" sayings undoubtedly served to awaken the conscience. "Right is right and Wrong is wrong: hot or cold, young or old, clear or cloudy, saint or sinner, Right is always right and Wrong is always wrong; Wrong is never right and right is never wrong." So said the evangelist in the course of an address, proceeding:—"The right thing to do is to accept Jesus Christ, and go to work to win souls for Him. You know this is right; therefore do it, without waiting to debate the policy or the result of doing it."

ENTHUSIASTIC SINGERS.

The singing was also a remarkable feature. No difficulty seems to have been experienced in enlisting the services of choirs, who laboured with much more than a musical interest.

For the Exhibition gatherings a chorus of 1,200 voices was organized by Mr. Alexander, who, says Rev. S. Pearce Carey, president of the mission, "has thrilled the vast audiences of Melbourne through the choirs his fervent soul has inspired." Mr. J. J. Virgo also led combined choirs.

"GREAT AND GOOD NEWS."

One of the most fruitful of the missions was that held at Warrnamboul, where a hallowed feeling of expectancy prevailed. One of the speakers, Rev. R. Philp, told how, many years ago, a London merchant visited Scotland, and, on his return, he was asked, "What's the news?" The merchant replied, "Great and good news! I heard there Robert Blair, who showed me the majesty of God. After him I heard Rutherford, who showed me the loveliness of Christ. Then I heard Dickson, who showed me all my heart." He (the speaker) thought that during this mission many of the people before him had had their own hearts revealed to them. "Such searching sermons have aroused within us thoughts and feelings, desires and aspirations, to which many have been strangers for years. The work that has been done in this mission is the important and necessary work of convicting of sin. The plain speaking and faithful preaching have, under the Spirit of God, produced this, as perhaps never before in this town." Mr. Philp told the story of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's conversion, and urged all who were stricken with a consciousness of sin to look to Christ.

WORKING FOR SOULS.

Here is a typical passage of Mr. Geil's, addressed to regular church-goers:—"Now, we know the right thing to do. The only question is—Are we going to do it? It is a mighty nice thing to go and hear sermons preached on Sunday; but, what difference does the preaching make in our lives? I declare we have enough sermons for anything in my country. Every Sunday 260,000 sermons are preached in the United States, and most of them good ones. Now, if there were but one convert to each sermon, we would have a continuous revival in that great republic of the Western Hemisphere. What is the matter? Those sermons don't average anything like one convert each. What is wrong? We don't do enough. We want to do more work. What difference is the preaching you will hear, and this service you have attended, going to make to you? Will you take your Bible in your hand, and, as a man of God, go out, get hold of some sinner, and bring him to God; or is to-day going to be wasted as so many a day has been wasted? Will you go to church to-day, hear the sermon, and probably never ask a man till this time next week if he is saved or not, or if he wants to be?

"I remember one time in a prayer-meeting hearing a woman pray, 'O Lord, go Thou forth into the highways and hedges, and compel the wanderers to come in.' But, after all, that woman is like a lot of the saints in the churches—just asking the Lord to do what they ought to get up and do themselves. It is possible to pack any church in this city, at any time, day or night, providing the people will obey God's plan for getting the crowd together. Go out into the highways and hedges. And if all you Christians did your duty, the churches would be filled. It is an insult to the Almighty to have houses of worship only half full of people, when they could be filled if his professed followers would do their duty. Yes, the great question to be faced to-day is—Will you help men to be saved or not?"

THE THREE CALLS.

In a striking address on Matt. xxiii. 37, Mr. Geil said:—"A hen has three calls. Number one is the call of warning concerning danger; number two is the call to food for strength and beauty; number three is the call to rest. Now, these three calls form the outline for my sermon to-night."

The speaker's concluding passage was as follows:—"It is eventime, and the sun is sinking behind the western hills. The chicks hear the call of the old hen to come home and rest, and they come toddling in, and get under the big, strong wings. It is the call to rest—and that, too, is the Lord's last call. It is a double call—the call to the peace of God which passeth understanding in this world, and the call to the rest which remaineth to the people of God. Thank God there is a rest which remaineth. It is waiting for His people. Is not that a beautiful thought? Now, the way of the transgressor is hard, and the transgressor soon gets as hard as the way; but for the people of God there is a rest.

"Men, are you not tired of sin, of the reprovings of your conscience, of the wrong you are doing to other people? If you are, just heed the call of Jesus to rest. Will you take it? Come out to-night for a clean, noble, Christ-like life. Will you, for your own sake, for the sake of other people's children whom your example is cursing, for Christ's sake? Oh, if you could only see Him standing in front of you, with pierced hands, saying, 'Men! Men! Let Me have your sins. There is one thing you have got that I want; I want your sins. Let Me take them to-night!' And, men, do you know what He will do with them? He will tear them out by the roots, put them behind His back, and remember them against you no more for ever. He will blot them out as a thick cloud. Look up into the sky and see that dark cloud. Look away a moment, then glance upward again; it has gone, and it has left no scar behind. So it will be with you if you let Jesus Christ blot out your sins. Oh, let Him save you to-night; let Him cleanse you, purify you, and make you fit to live here, and in the land of the hereafter."

REVIVALS AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Foreign Mission gathering in the Exhibition Building is described as "the greatest meeting of its kind Australasia has seen." A few facts will give some idea of the interest taken in the gathering. About three o'clock in the afternoon, people began to arrive in the Exhibition grounds with baskets and brown paper packets, and by half-past five o'clock one might have imagined that a picnic was being held. At 5.30 a steady stream of workers and choir members was flowing in; at six the doors were opened, and at 6.5 there was barely standing room in the great Concert Hall. At seven o'clock Dr. Torrey, with the aid of an escort, struggled through a dense crowd to the door, and gained admission. At 7.15 an overflow meeting was announced, and 1,200 people were taken away without making a great deal of difference to the crowd that still clamoured outside each entrance of the Exhibition.

Inside the building the densely-packed audience was "eager for anything, just as obedient as a well-trained Sunday-school class." They listened to, and aided, the choir, readily following Mr. Virgo's directions. Dr. Torrey's every word was eagerly taken, and during the hour and a quarter that Mr. Geil spoke there was no sign of flagging interest. It was a happy thought that welded together all the various missionary societies in this effort, and the thousands who attended must have been impressed with the breadth and grandeur of missionary work.

"Let me say, friends," said Dr. Torrey, "it is a fitting thing that a great religious awakening, such as we have been having in this city, should terminate with a missionary meeting. Every revival that is of God will result in a renewal of missionary interest. The whole programme of Jesus Christ and the Church is a programme of missionary enterprise. Jesus Christ founded the Church for one purpose—the evangelization of the world through the Church. The Church that is not a missionary Church is not the true Church of Christ. An individual professor of faith in Christ, if he has not a deep missionary interest, is not a true Christian. I oftentimes have people say to me, who profess to be Christians, 'I have no interest in foreign missions.' It is a very sad confession. If you have no interest in foreign missions, you are either not a Christian or a very unintelligent one."

WIDE-SPREAD REVIVAL.

In reply to an interviewer, Mr. Geil expressed the opinion that "revivals of religion will spring up all over Australasia as the result of the wonderful work of grace in Melbourne. Charles G. Finney used to say that the best way to arouse a revivalistic spirit in a community was to send to that community the news of recent and powerful revivals of religion elsewhere; and as I believe multitudes of people, aside from the activities of the Press, are sending out the news, there will be not simply great revivals, with mass meetings, in the big country centres, but an immense number of smaller services in school-houses, private residences, and far-away spots. Whatever may be the tabulated results of professed conversions in the city of Melbourne, I feel quite sure that it can be multiplied by ten for Australasia as the outcome of the Melbourne movement.

"The air is full of religion in Melbourne as the result of the mission. I believe that wherever the pastors find it wise to conduct an evangelistic meeting on Sunday night they will not only find it to be a great blessing for the new converts and other professing Christians, but find it to result in many people publicly confessing Christ as their Lord. The fact that I have been invited by certain infidels to conduct a service for them, and for the unconverted people, without admitting church members, might be considered as indicating that many men who have not expressed themselves as ready to come to Christ, are, at any rate, seriously thinking on moral and religious subjects."

A Happy Resting Place.

WHILE on our holiday, we received Miss Reynolds's twentieth report of "her happy resting place for some of the many women and girls who work in the city of London;" and our minds at once returned to town, and contrasted the open Somerset hills fanned by sea breezes with places in the heart of the Metropolis, where thousands of young lives are working for an average 8s. or 12s. per week. To many of such a real holiday is out of the question but for "Homes" such as that kept open all the year by Miss Reynolds, where the comers pay a little or nothing.

Anyone sending 8s. will insure a poor toiling girl a week of true rest under the care of a Christian matron, who aims at spiritual as well as physical results. Two sending 4s. each will accomplish the same ends. Clothing, house linen, books, and food are all acceptable at the "Home." Those who cannot do more, might take "a penny a week" money-box. Releasing "White Slaves."

MR. WILLIAM ALEX. COOTE.

THE career of Mr. William Alexander Coote, in its intimate association with the history of the National Vigilance Association, affords a striking example of the extent to which one faithful man, called of God, may become instrumental in overcoming a powerful and skilfully maintained system of organized wickedness.

Mr. Coote's philanthropic labours had their origin in an intense desire to benefit the suffering and sorrowful, which dates from the hour of his conversion. One night, when a young fellow of only sixteen years of age, he was proceeding to his home in West London, when he was stopped in the street by three young men, who first asked his acceptance of a Gospel tract, and then engaged him in earnest conversation on spiritual topics, urging on their surprised listener the claims of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"These things are not in my line," was the excuse he put forward, but ultimately he promised to seek Divine guidance. On arriving home, therefore, instead of going to rest, he betook himself to prayer, seeking God with simple earnestness, although beset by spiritual darkness and many doubts. Presently, as the young man poured out his soul's desire, there came by faith the assurance of acceptance.

The holy revolution thus accomplished, our friend's life was henceforth devoted to the Master's service. More particularly he engaged in open-air speaking, and in ministering to the necessities of the sick and dying in Metropolitan hospitals and infirmaries. As an evangelistic missioner he co-operated, while still a youth, with Mr. Richard Weaver, with that energetic street preacher, Bos'n Smith, and other notable evangelists, both amid the sordid miseries of East London poverty and the gilded sins of the West.

LONDON'S SHAME.

The condition of Piccadilly by midnight, even at the present time, is sufficient to strike a Christian beholder with a burning sense of shame. Colonists who gathered of late from the ends of the earth for the Coronation celebrations have been astounded that the flaunting abominations of profligacy should thus be tolerated in the homeland. Mr. Coote, however, recalls the ten-fold horrors of former days, when the Haymarket, ablaze with light, was the scene of drunken revelry throughout the night. Public-houses and boxing saloons remained open till morning, and were the noted haunts of the very riff-raff of society. In the by-streets were rat-pits, where people sat round, tier upon tier, watching dogs chase and kill rats. Indeed, the district was given up to a midnight carnival of sin. Surrounded by such scenes of degradation, Mr. Coote was wont to take his stand distributing Gospel literature and preaching Christ crucified.

Impressions received during his visitation of infirmaries, where he found many miserable women agonizing and dying as the outcome of an immoral life, had already convinced Mr. Coote of the need for organized effort in the cause of purity; the lamentable condition of the midnight streets added force to the conviction; yet, it seemed impossible, humanly speaking, that any great change could be wrought in the attitude of government authorities or public opinion.

However, in 1885 came the moral convulsion brought about by Mr. W. T. Stead, when the ghastly traffic in women and girls was exposed with an unsparing exactness of detail which roused the most lethargic. The ensuing national outburst of indignation, against the perpetrators of infamous outrage upon the weak and defenceless, found its strongest expression in a vast demonstration held in Hyde Park, the outcome of which was the formation of the National Vigilance Association. Mr. Coote organized the gathering, and was appropriately chosen as secretary of the new Society.

THE BATTLE FOR PURITY.

From its inception the Association has undertaken multifarious labours. The strenuous opposition of those who attained wealth by the maintenance of aids and incentives to immorality was encountered, and, in spite of either blatant or subtle opposition, the work grew. The public were educated to appreciate the inestimable value of preventive and legislative work; indeed, throughout the world the cause of purity received a remarkable accession of enthusiasm. At the instance of the Association the Indecent Advertisement Act was passed, the circulation of improper literature and pictures restricted, and the Criminal Law Amendment Act rigorously enforced. "It carried on war all along the line against all the innumerable Protean manifestations of evil. It exposed the fraudulent registry offices, it has prosecuted scoundrels who have been rash enough to bring themselves within the lash of the law, and it hunted down and punished the trappers of womankind everywhere it could find them. Its chief efforts, however, have ever been directed to warning the intended victims of the danger to which they are exposed when they accept situations in strange lands."

THE WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC.

During years of arduous toil Mr. Coote had accumulated painful and ungainsayable evidence regarding the international iniquity which is now generally known as the "White Slave Traffic." A typical case was that in which a man, well known as one of the chief offenders, had beguiled a young woman from her home in East London. No stone was left unturned to bring the offender to justice. After many months of searching, he was traced to India, whither, for immoral purposes, he had decoyed his victim. The girl was ultimately restored to her parents, and the man arrested. There were, and are, a great number of such betrayers, going from country to country securing their prey, and, for want of international agreement and law, pursuing their infamous calling with impunity.

The task of remedying such a condition of affairs, first by enlisting the sympathy of foreign governments, was a formidable one; but, in spite of scant encouragement, Mr. Coote set himself to establish influential committees in Continental capitals. He started for Berlin. He could speak no German, and the only person he knew in the German capital was a lady to whom he was referred, and whom he told that he wanted to start an international attack upon this international crime. She advised him to see Pastor Burckhardt, a leading Evangelical clergyman, and so to him he repaired, and requested assistance. Mr. Burckhardt listened attentively, and bade Mr. Coote return to London, and he would see what could be done.

A short time afterwards Mr. Coote received a summons to return to Berlin. He there found that an influential company was assembled to listen to his statement of his case. Among those present were a Minister of State, Count Keller (Court Chamberlain), the Chief of the Police, representatives of other public offices, and persons influential in Court and other circles. Mr. Coote set forth the extent of the evil, illustrating it by cases that had come under his personal observation. Official testimony, which was added, more than confirmed the appeal for international action. Although as many as eighty-four photographs of the chief traffickers were in possession, it was impossible to take legal action against them.

OFFICIAL CO-OPERATION.

In Germany, and later on in Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Belgium and Holland, National Committees were formed, and much care and thought bestowed on existing legislation, with a view to bringing it into line with the proposed international agreement. Next, by the powerful aid of Count Mouravieff, a Russian central organization was formed at St. Petersburg with the earnest support of the Emperor and Empress, and subsequently preventive and rescue branch committees were created in every important town throughout European Russia. France and Italy followed suit, the sympathy of the respective Governments being expressed with great cordiality.

These vigorous efforts had a twofold result. They stimulated local action to deal with local evils, and prepared the way for international agreement. Later, conferences, attended by official representatives of European Governments, have intensified the desire for co-operation, and Mr. Coote looks forward with eager anticipation to the day when the traffic will be suppressed by strong and comprehensive laws, and firm, united action.

"A TALE OF TWO CITIES."

While combating the evil, Mr. Coote and his helpers are frequently able to trace and deliver its victims. An astonishing instance of success in this direction is found in the case of a young Parisian girl deluded, by a Frenchman of notorious character, into leaving her home and coming to London. Her father, a poor cobbler, had read in the Paris papers, just at the time, of the "White Slave Traffic" exposures, and the National Vigilance Association, so that despite apparently satisfactory letters from his daughter and her "husband," his suspicions were aroused. The old man, who was unable to speak a word of English, drew from the bank his entire savings, the equivalent of about £12, and started for London, travelling by the night train. On arrival he proceeded direct to the Association office, and with pathetic eagerness and confidence, shaking with excitement and speaking rapidly through his tears, he proffered all the remainder of his money, saying, "Will that be enough with which to find her?"

Mr. Coote's intimate knowledge of London enabled him to indicate the place where the girl, if fallen into sin, would probably be discovered. Accordingly an officer of the Association guided the heart-broken father in his difficult search, and by five o'clock the same day the erring one was found and rescued. She at once returned to Paris with her parent, who by the help of the Association had thus been successful, in an incredibly short space of time, in the apparently hopeless quest of finding one particular person among the millions of the Metropolis. "He danced for joy."

The labours of the Society in preventive work are manifold; agents at coast stations keep a vigilant eye on arriving steamers; stewardesses are provided with a helpful booklet, entitled "A Friendly Warning" to young women leaving their own country, which, printed in four languages, has been as a moral "life-line" to many a forlorn girl; sub-committees and local secretaries maintain useful operations at many centres; demoralizing publications and entertainments are suppressed; legal information supplied to rescue workers; and at home and abroad the banner of Social Purity is manfully upheld. The entire operations, as the financial statements show, are carried on with rigid economy.

A FORWARD MOVEMENT.

It is felt that the time has come to acquaint the public at large more fully with the accomplishments and hopes of the Association; to this end Rev. James Marchant, a minister of the Presbyterian body, whose marked suitability for pleading the cause, and whose strong sympathy with preventive work have been demonstrated, both on the platform and in the Press, is to devote several months each year, more particularly to the education of public opinion, thus making the way clear for legislation on several points of high importance. It is aimed ultimately—(1) To amend the Criminal Law Amendment Act, abolishing the proviso which renders a charge inoperative unless made within three months from the committal of the offence, and deleting the clause which enables a betrayer to escape scot free if his counsel can persuade a jury that he had "reasonable cause" to believe that his victim was more than sixteen years of age. (2) To have incest constituted an offence against English law. Mr. Coote has often to advise in cases in which ministers and others interested in the defence of wronged innocence are astounded to find that there is no legal remedy.

It will be seen, therefore, that in the maintenance and furtherance of the Purity cause, the Association and its secretary have a profound claim on the sympathy and support of all who love righteousness and hate iniquity, who long that such iniquities as the "White Slave Traffic" shall defile the earth no longer.

Students' Summer Conference. — The arrangements for holding the tenth annual Students' Conference for Great Britain and Ireland, at Matlock Bank, are now complete. The Conference opens on July 22, and continues till the end of the month. A large delegation has been secured, and there is every prospect of a successful and spiritually profitable gathering.

Lewanika and Strong Drink.

TAKING advantage of the presence in this country of King Lewanika, the Committee of the Native Races and Liquor Traffic on Friday last gave a reception in his honour at Livingstone College, Leyton, E.

Before the King arrived, a meeting was held, over which Sir Mark Stewart, M.P., presided. In an interesting address, Rev. ADOLPHE JALLA, of the Paris Missionary Society, working in Barotsiland, spoke of the change which has come over Lewanika during the past fourteen years. When M. Coillard first started the work in Barotsiland, King Lewanika was in exile, having been deposed on account of his great cruelty. His house and harem had been surrounded, and at the risk of his life he had escaped. In 1885, by the wish of the people, he was recalled, the man who had succeeded him proving equally cruel, and in addition was not of royal blood. Coming under the influence of M. Coillard, the King gradually changed, not only in outward manners, but also in character. At that time drunkenness was sadly prevalent in the country, King Lewanika himself being amongst the number who indulged in native beer. Seeing, however, the havoc which strong drink was working amongst his people, he willingly consented to the insertion of a clause, in a concession made to the Chartered Company, for the prevention of the sale of liquor in his dominions.

Finally, he became a total abstainer, and in view of the growth of Gospel influences among his people he was enabled to enforce laws completely forbidding the manufacture or use of intoxicants in the lands under his jurisdiction. Those disobeying were heavily punished, several of the headmen being brought before a pitso or indaba of the people, who deposed them, deprived them of their wives and cattle, reducing them to the condition of slaves, and banishing them from the kingdom. One of the prime ministers caught drinking was also compelled to appear before the people, break his drinking-cup, and promise never to touch strong drink again! King Lewanika has also abolished the slave traffic wherever possible, as well as witch-finding and the poisoning of sorcerers.

This remarkable rehearsal was listened to with profound interest. The next speaker was CAPTAIN BERTRAND, of Geneva, who, from the point of view of an explorer, commented on the splendid work done by M. Coillard and his helpers in Barotsiland. As he travelled, he felt more and more convinced that all civilising effort should be based upon mission work.

Mr. F. S. ARNOT bore additional testimony to the change which has come over King Lewanika and his people. He spoke of the King of the Garenganze country, who has also prohibited the manufacture and use of intoxicants in his dominions. Rum was first brought to him by a Portuguese trader, but it had such a bad effect upon the King personally that he prohibited its further introduction into his country, imprisoning the trader, who barely escaped with his life! Strong drink is, however, in many ways being forced into Africa, the natives being paid in rum for the goods that they bring to the town; moreover, rum is given to them in place of food.

Sir JOHN KENNAWAY, M.P., Vice-President of the Committee, offered the King a hearty welcome, expressing the interest of the English people in his temperance efforts, and the encouragement which his success gave them in dealing with the question in this country. Dr. HARFORD, following, presented King Lewanika with an illuminated address.

In his reply, by interpretation, the KING expressed his great desire that liquor should not be introduced among his people, and his determination to do all in his power to prevent it, as he realized that drink spoils a country. He hoped that the Society would continue and increase its efforts. Colonel HARDING, who accompanied the King, having been acquainted with Barotsiland for eight or nine years, said that he could hardly describe the harm that strong drink did to the natives; it was the aim of the Administration to discourage as much as possible the use of liquor by natives.

Other Lands.

From the Himalayas.

DARJEELING, the nearest health resort of Calcutta, and the summer residence of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, is beautifully situated in the foothills of the Himalayas at an elevation of about 7,000ft., affording a view upon the greatest mountain-giants known to the world. But not always is the passing tourist so fortunate as to see them. On our arrival they were in purdah, hidden from our gaze by a dense curtain of rolling black clouds. A hearty welcome, so cheering to strangers in strange places, was given us by Rev. G. S. Henderson, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, who was then superintending the building of a new school, and is now taking charge of the Indian Witness Press, Calcutta, in the absence of its manager, Rev. J. Culshaw, now home on furlough.

The following day being a Sunday, the streets of the native quarters were thronged with people from the surrounding hill-tribes, who choose the free day for their marketing-purposes. In the picturesque crowd, of Chinese type, God's workers pursue their opportunities. Among them is Miss Bella Ferguson and her little band, who live in a cottage among the natives.

In the course of the week, accompanied by Rev. Rylands Brown, we went down to the Tukvar Tea Estate, where Mr. and Mrs. Claude Bald exercise a truly Christian influence over the coolies (mostly Nepaulese) in their employ. The Sunday-school on the estate gives great credit to the Scotch Mission.

The sun had by this time unveiled the snowy peaks, showing them in all their radiant beauty. As our eyes wandered up and down an altitude of five miles, we sympathized with the lady who, after dwelling for years in the Himalayas, found the English sky low and oppressive.

Climatic conditions favour the growth of tea; but what a contrast between the plant left to itself and that under the planter's care. The first grown into a tree, unfit for any special use; the latter kept low by frequent pruning, and its strength saved for the right purpose by occasional dismemberment—needing thousands of nimble hands to pluck off the little shoots which make our favourite beverage. The larger the surface exposed to the sun, the larger the produce, the more tender the shoots, the more excellent the tea—one of God's instructive parables in nature.

The sun, so hot during the day, even in these mountain-regions, smiles a gentle good-bye, causing Kinchinjanga and other fair ones of the Himalayas faintly to blush. A little later they seem to be in a blaze of fire—an Alpine glow of glorious beauty. As the shadows gather the burning flush fades away; the light flees from peaks and slopes, and violet tints appear in the valleys. Finally the night comes on, and with it the shivering cold.

Apart from the Scotch Mission, which as a permanency does good work, especially among the native population, Darjeeling in the winter time is comparatively empty of missionaries. It is in the month of May that the Union Church has the largest congregations. Its pastor, Rev. Rylands Brown, whom we have previously mentioned in connection with the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society, and who is again in good health, celebrated on May 22 the twenty-seventh anniversary of his pastorate. Bishop Warne, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, presided, and Rev. H. C. Duncan, of the Church of Scotland, known to many by his close identification with the Student Volunteer Movement, said that it had been the means of increasing the number of missionaries in the foreign field, and would have done so even more were it not for the opposition of some parents and friends. The one thing chiefly needed is a real revival of prayer and spiritual life in the home churches.

The largest institutions belong to the High Church and to the Roman Catholics. An imposing house, called "the Presbytery," is the priests' dwelling, and among the most conspicuous buildings is St. Joseph's, a Roman Catholic college. The Clewer Sisters have the charge of the Eden Sanatorium; a good number of pupils attend their school. A Christian lady who kept a private school, having at one time some vacancies to fill, went to the Sister Superior and asked her whether she could not recommend some scholars to her. "Do you attend the Union Chapel?" asked the sister. "Yes," said the lady. "Then I could not think of recommending you," was the reply. Not very long after, a child of Protestant parents was sent by the Clewer Sisters without the mother's knowledge to the convent in order to be under a stricter discipline. The mother was too lax or too ignorant to make any objection. On the other hand, the Roman Catholic mother of a boy whom the same lady took into her school for charity's sake was threatened by the priest with excommunication if she did not remove him. We heard of many such straws on the surface of society in India. Dear reader, are you a Protestant? Then stop to think! Romanism is making its stealthy advance there as here in Britain.

On leaving Darjeeling we called on our way through Ghoom upon two veterans of the Moravian Mission, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Heyde. They have been nearly fifty years in India without re-visiting their homeland once.

Mr. Heyde is a patriarch of seventy-seven years, who has spent the greatest part of his life near the Tibetan border. He has a happy countenance, and is now engaged in revising the Bible in the Tibetan language. Two young missionaries from Ladakh, Mr. and Mrs. Franke, were on a visit with them when we called.

The Scandinavian Alliance Mission has a station at Ghoom, and here we were glad of meeting with Mr. and Mrs. Amundsen, and Mrs. Frederiksen, who not long ago was bereaved of her husband.

A distance of about sixty miles, as the crow flies, separated us from Yatong, where Miss Annie R. Taylor, of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission, holds the fort alone; but the journey over the mountains presented too many difficulties, and involved too much time, for us to undertake it. Not being able to visit her was as great a disappointment as when we were obliged to give up our prospected visit to Mr. and Mrs. Lampard, of the Balaghat Mission, at their station among the Gonds. We hear that Mr. Lampard, stricken in health, has been obliged to return to England for rest. We hope that he may soon recuperate his strength.

W. M.

Starting for Natal.

THE Natal Government have asked the South Africa General Mission to find a Medical Missionary who would be willing to act as District Surgeon, in addition to his ordinary mission work. For this post I have been accepted.

I propose, D.V., to start about the middle of August, to spend six months at the S. A. G. M. headquarters, 410A, Point Road, Durban, learning the Zulu language, and then to go up to my station at Maputa, in the centre of British Amatongaland. The Government will provide me with a house, and I shall receive a small salary from them; this will be supplemented from the S. A. G. M. funds.

A few facts about the place and people may be of interest. The climate is fairly healthy. There are only six white men at present in the district, one missionary, two traders, and three policemen. The natives, who are called Tongas, but speak Zulu, are an industrious people, and apparently willing to listen to the Gospel. The King, who is nominally a Christian, has built a church and some schools, and has asked that teachers may be sent to his people.

I shall be glad if Christian friends will remember me in their prayers, that as I go, my way may open out before me step by step.

The Indian Famine.

STARVING WAIFS OF RUTLAM.

"FAMINE," writes Mr. Gnanamuthu Joseph Israel, of the Orphan Home, Madras, "is getting acute in Gujerat and Central India. Nearly 500,000 people are on famine relief. In Central India there is also a keen water famine. Want of food is felt by all the people, more especially in the native state of Rutlam. A mother handed over her child to me because she could not bear to see it starve. Rutlam is full of orphans, who pick up scraps of food from the streets, markets, and dustbins. Hundreds could be rescued. Mr. Crossette had fifteen orphans ready for me at Indore, and I collected fourteen at Rutlam. Another worker brought nine more in one day. I had intended to take twelve, but seeing the distress was great took thirty. Instead of accepting one hundred this year I must needs take several hundreds."

ACUTE FAMINE.

Rev. J. C. Lawson, of Aligarh (who is now in England), forwards a letter written recently by a native pastor to Mrs. Lawson:—"Sixty or seventy miles north of Jeypore, where I have arrived, there is very acute famine. The people are dying from starvation, and many have forsaken their homes. I have also visited the country districts of Bikeneer and Jodhpore, where the famine is more severe than in the Jeypore territory. Every day many die from famine. Although some of the petty rajahs have to a certain extent opened up poor-houses, nevertheless each person receives but four ounces of food daily, and the people are dying fast. Especially in these two native states of Bikeneer and Jodhpore, there is a multitude of orphan boys and girls. I went to a poor house about six miles from Deesa, where there are 600 famine men, women, and children. From here I am taking ten children. In all these regions we can collect a great many. There are also very many poor widows who have no one to save them from starvation. As it was in the famines of 1897 and 1900, so it is now; so many are in dire distress. Thousands are in rags and without food; they are leaving their homes, and will die by the wayside." Mr. Lawson adds: "We want to gather as many sufferers as we possibly can into our Famine Industrial Homes at Aligarh."

THE MONSOON FAILURE.

The head officer of the Meteorological Department of the Indian Government says of the monsoon: "The head of high pressure, instead of forming almost due south of India, has shifted about a thousand miles to the east. This means that, in order to reach India, the monsoon current has not only a thousand additional miles to travel, which in itself would be a source of considerable comparative exhaustion en route, but that the gradient, the steepness of which governs the force of the monsoon, is much shallower than in normal years, which is a still more uncomfortable feature of the situation. The general conclusion, therefore, is that the rainfall this season will probably be in more or less defect in every part of India. And in the case of Gujarat the worst is to be apprehended for a severe famine.

Commenting on the above, Rev. Albert Norton, of the Boys' Home, Dhond, Poona, writes, under date June 27:—

"From all parts of India, day by day, comes news in exact accordance with this forecast. The Calcutta correspondent of the Times of India, says: 'The heavens are as brass; we look upon glaring, cloudless skies, and the heat is torrid. All over Bengal, except in the extreme east, people are beginning to be anxious. And in many places, within a few days, the price of the more common grains has gone up twenty-five per cent, and the price is sure to go much higher if the rain continues to be withheld. What this means to us, who already have hundreds of orphans from the previous famines to provide for, and are going forward (by His will) to receive still larger numbers of the fatherless, in Christ's name, is fully known to our heavenly Father.'"

Proposed Special Effort in South Africa.

I HAVE read in last week's Christian the appeal of Mr. David A. Hunter, of Lovedale, for a special effort to be made in the early part of 1903 to bring before the people of South Africa the truths of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. It is to be hoped that the matter will be earnestly taken up by an influential committee, comprised of ministers and laymen, who will certainly have the prayers and support of God's people.

If our South African Colonies are to make a fresh start in commerce, as they are sure to do, it is of infinite importance that simultaneously a fresh start should also be made in that righteousness which exalteth a nation. Many of the Boers in all the Colonies have a knowledge of the letter of the Word of God, but know little or nothing of its spirit and power. Multitudes also of those who have gone from this country have left behind them what little they had of spiritual life. I know something of the need of earnest Evangelical effort in South Africa, and we may never have as promising an opportunity as the present for such an effort.

For many years past the Roman Catholic Church and the Romanizing party in the Church of South Africa have been making rapid strides, and will continue to do so unless Evangelicals, and especially Nonconformists, band together for a great campaign. It seems a pity that the work should be delayed until next year, and yet the intervening time may be well spent in preparation and prayer, both in this country and in the Colonies concerned. I would suggest that the deputies should leave this country before the end of March, so as to commence work by the middle of April. Another suggestion I would make is that an equal number of ministers and laymen should be sent—say 20 of each; and possibly it would be an advantage that a minister and a layman should work together.

One could suggest the names of many gentlemen, both in England and Scotland, who have been owned of God in advancing His Kingdom in this country and elsewhere, and to many of whom such a campaign, in a magnificent climate, would, with the sea voyage, prove both physically and spiritually healthful. As to funds, more than half of the expense would probably be raised by thankofferings at the meetings, and the balance would readily be raised in this country. A. C. Smith.

Lebanon Hospital for the Insane.

THE new annual report of this interesting Medical Mission is just ready. It tells of great progress during the last hospital year. One lady has built a new ward in memory of her late husband, which will be used for acute male patients. The need of this was felt almost from the beginning; but lack of funds did not permit it to be done. The secretary, Mr. Francis C. Brading, has just returned from America and Canada, where he has, at the invitation of the American committee of the hospital, been seeking to arouse sympathy and interest in the work. Almost sufficient funds were given to erect another ward for acute female patients, which was absolutely necessary.

Mr. Theophilus Waldmeier, the founder and superintendent, writes that the female building is full. The excited and calm patients being together it makes the work most difficult. There are many cases in now of religious mania which require constant attention. One woman, who will not eat, requires four nurses, the doctor, and the matron every time she has to be fed artificially. They long for the new ward, and hope the London Committee will sanction it soon.

The fact that the patients are contributing, on the average, about a quarter of the necessary funds for the maintenance of the institution speaks for itself, and shows how much the natives appreciate it. The Committee explains in its report that owing to the erection of the new wards the expenses will almost double, and whilst thanking all who have so generously helped in the past, asks others to come forward in the hour of need. The Committee longs to keep out of debt; everything has been paid for until now.

The treasurer is Sir Richard Tangye. Reports can be had from Mr. F. C. Brading, 35, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

The Mission to Lepers.

THAT "the lepers are being cleansed" is evident from the 521 baptisms reported during the past year by the Mission to Lepers in India and the East. The marked blessing accompanying the work of the Mission gives it a strong claim on the sympathies of Christian people. New asylums are being erected, and work is being carried on in as many as sixty-six centres in India, China, and Japan.

Purulia Asylum now shelters an aggregate of nearly 600 lepers and their children; as many as forty baptisms took place on one day recently, and the spiritual work of the institution is, we are thankful to say, prospering under the devoted care of Rev. F. Hahn, who has been appointed as successor to the late Mr. Uffmann.

The appeal for the Uffman Memorial Fund has been well responded to, but we are in urgent need of an additional £500 to complete the sum required to erect the buildings, which are intended to commemorate the devoted service of the late devoted missionary. These buildings are urgently required, as some of the lepers are only sheltered in temporary huts, and, in addition to this, accommodation for the staff is sorely needed.

Chandkuri Asylum, in the Central Provinces, bids fair to rival Purulia. Though only founded as a result of the famine of '97, there are now nearly 400 lepers, who are kindly cared for by Rev. K. W. Nottrott. This number would be still larger if our funds allowed us to admit all who beg for food and shelter. When it is remembered that £5 a year entirely supports one of our leper inmates, it seems pitiable indeed that they should have to be thus turned away to their homeless and hopeless wanderings.

A special misfortune has recently overtaken the Chandkuri Asylum in the shape of a terrific cyclone which broke over the village. Much damage was done to the buildings, the temporary church was destroyed, and the new and partially built one very much injured. Hailstones as large as hens' eggs fell, and not only was Mr. Nottrott himself wounded, but three lepers were killed and many others injured.

At Nasik a large and increasing work has developed during the past three on four years. At present 116 lepers are being provided for, and receiving Christian teaching daily. Owing to lack of funds they are, however, only housed in the temporary huts, into which they crowded in the time of famine. Miss Harvey, the missionary in charge, has secured a site for a permanent asylum, towards which a special gift of £200 has been received from Canada; £300 more would enable us to erect a permanent asylum for these needy souls, who have no earthly home but such as is provided for them by Christian charity.

A Great Conflict.—Satan is the strong man armed; the heart of every unconverted sinner is his garrison. His armour and ordnance and fortifications are—temptations, deceit, prejudice, passion, sensual rage, and carnal interests and worldly allurements. By these he keepeth his garrison in peace till Christ come to besiege him, and then what a storm is made; what trouble and fear is the soul brought into! Christ planteth against it the ordnance of His Word; He dischargeth the terrible threatenings of His wrath. He fitteth His ministers, who are to make this battery, with a holy skill for His work, and giveth them His Spirit, which is as the gunpowder in our battering-pieces, the chiefest cause of all the execution (Eph. vi. 12; 2 Cor. x. 3-6).—Richard Baxter.

Light for South America.

"THE only way at present to reach hundreds of thousands of men and women in towns and places where the Gospel is not preached is by the printed message." So writes a missionary of many years' experience in South America. Another worker, a native pastor in Argentina, says:—"One of the most pressing needs for the work in South America is the printing of leaflets and tracts suited to the moral, spiritual, and intellectual condition of our people. We must print these by hundreds of thousands, and give them away gratis. Of the over 40,000,000 in South America, very few ever hear the Gospel. Some do not hear because they do not care to; some because they are afraid to be seen going into a Protestant church; others (and these are the great majority) because they live in places where there is no preacher of the Gospel, and where the good news of salvation by the blood of Christ is never proclaimed. All these people we ought to provide with Christian literature in the form of Gospel pamphlets and leaflets."

God has already given much blessing on the printed word in South America. The people accept and read eagerly that which is given to them. Scores of instances of conversion and definite blessing through the simple reading of a Gospel tract might be cited.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

One man found a piece of a leaflet on the rubbish heap, read it, noticed that he could procure a Bible upon application to the publishers of the leaflet, wrote for the same, and so began a correspondence. The Bible was sent him, the truth entered into his heart and life, and to-day he is a preacher of the Gospel.

In an experience lasting over eighteen years of preaching and tract distribution in the republics of the River Plate a missionary can only recall one refusal of a Gospel tract, and this was because the man to whom it was offered could not read. On August 9, D.V., there sails from Liverpool a little band of workers whom God has called to this ministry. A good printing machine, with type and other necessary plant, is to be purchased and taken out to Buenos Ayres, and there to be set up as the Victoria Gospel Press. The first work will be in Spanish—the official language of nine of the ten republics of South America.

"Light and Truth" (La Luz y la Verdad) will be printed regularly and frequently, supplied to missionaries and workers of all societies and denominations, and distributed gratis. Its theme will be salvation through Jesus Christ alone. God has called out unto Himself many from among the natives; it is sought to build up these, and to fit them for the testimony of Jesus. An efficient native ministry is needed. A book of "Helps" will be printed, to be called "El Creyente" (The Believer). The children, the work amongst whom God has so richly blessed, also claim attention, and something will be done for them. There will also be printed on the press, in English, Echoes from Argentina and South American News, which will give the latest news from the field, and will be sent direct from Buenos Ayres to subscribers of 1s. 6d. per year, all proceeds to go to the work of spreading the Gospel by the printed page.

It is essential that at the outset there should be a good press and plant. The first cost has been computed at £500, and to complete this sum at least another £100 is needed. The workers are ready, and the party consists of Mr. William Lowson with his wife, Mr. Harry Moon, and Mr. R. L. Hodge. All three men are printers, and missionaries in the full sense of the word. Passages and outfits are still needed for the two latter. The Victoria Gospel Press is not the outcome of a hope that the doors will open for the reception of the product, but of the knowledge that they are open, and that the people wait for it. Mr. Albert A. Head, of Wimbledon, stands as referee for the work. The hon. treasurer is Mr. C. W. Elam, Oakfield, Anfield, Liverpool.

Home Missions.

A Waifs' Festival.

A VISIT to Dr. Barnardo's vast institutions at Stepney Causeway is in itself a liberal education in philanthropy. Surely there can be no more eloquent testimony to the wisdom of the methods and the skill of the direction than the spectacle of so many hundreds of bright and industrious young people, actively engaged in useful labour, who but a short time since were among the flotsam and jetsam of our great cities.

FOUNDER'S DAY.

Founder's Day affords a welcome opportunity for old friends to renew their acquaintance with the Homes, and for new ones to take an admiring survey of the many departments. One outcome of this yearly function, necessarily is an accession of interest, so that it was no wonder to find throngs of cordial supporters at the annual festival, held on Saturday last.

As usual, a large contingent of girls from the Village Homes at Ilford took prominent part in the proceedings.

One contingent, busily engaged in a model cookery school, showed how deftly they could prepare a meal; from boiling new potatoes to preparing a steak-pie or a strawberry jelly, these dexterous little cook-maids fulfilled their duties admirably. Another delightful exhibit was the model laundry, where, under the supervision of kindly matrons, another group of girls toiled at the wringing machine, or wielded the flat-iron, their samples of work being unexceptionable. Some afflicted and physically disqualified girls were occupied in knitting and art embroidery.

Nor were the lads behind hand in skill or devotion. The groups of young tinsmiths, carpenters, brushmakers, hatmakers, printers, tailors and harness makers demonstrated that the time and care expended upon their rescue and instruction had been bestowed by no means in vain. The clang of hammer upon anvil drew many visitors, too, to the business-like smithy, and in the bakery a troop of muscular lads secured admiration by the dexterity with which they made the loaves and filled the monster ovens.

IN BABIES' LAND.

A section of the institutions which possesses unfailing interest is the crèche, where daily provision is made for the "tinies" of the district during their parents' absence at work. Turning from these cooing and chirruping little people to the children's ward of the hospital, we have a sharp contrast. Here are little sufferers, wan and feeble, whose flickering lamp of life burns low, indeed. In their "Palace of Pain," they receive sympathetic and careful tending, which may enable them to survive.

ROYAL SUPPORT.

The public meeting was graced by the presence of H.R.H. the Princess Henry of Battenberg, who followed with sympathetic attention the musical drills and exercises.

The president, Lord Brassey, paid a hearty tribute to the character of the work, speaking of the claims of Dr. Barnardo upon those who have it in their power to help him in rescuing the waifs and strays of the nation, and placing them on the highway to prosperity. The total number of children rescued, trained, and placed out in life during the past thirty-five years, is no fewer than 44,556. The number maintained during the year was 7,887, and the emigrants numbered over 1,000. At present 6,000 waif children are being sheltered and educated. But for such philanthropic labours the country would be involved in far greater expenditure for the maintenance of prisons and workhouses. The children look to Dr. Barnardo with affection, and the passing years bring increased confidence in the institutions and their director.

Dr. Barnardo followed with an outline of the financial needs, and Bishop Taylor Smith (Chaplain-General) added some telling words on the value of Scriptural teaching in fulfilling the Master's command, "Feed My lambs."

"FOR THE FAR WEST."

A notable incident of the gathering was the procession, round the yard in which the friends were assembled, of four hundred young emigrants, bright little lassies and sturdy lads, attired in travelling dress, and ready to sail, as they will in a few days, for the Far West of the Canadian Dominion. The festival concluded, as usual, with a presentation of prizes or certificates earned by former inmates for long service and good conduct in their respective situations.

Mainly About Ex-Prisoners.

THE annual report of the St. Giles's Christian Mission, just issued, gives a number of letters from people who have been helped, and from employers of labour, which constitute a volume of ungainsayable evidence as to the usefulness of the work, and the wisdom with which it is conducted. It is worthy of note that "ever since the prison branch of the mission was inaugurated in 1877, free breakfasts have been given daily at the prison gates to all those prisoners who, on their liberation, care to accept the invitation; and an annual average of 20,000 ex-prisoners now sit down to this meal." Last year no fewer than 5,000 of those welcomed were induced to sign the pledge, while 4,836 were assisted to make a fresh start in life, and 311 convicts were met and helped on their release from penal servitude. In all the operations it is aimed not only to reclaim from vice and crime, but to point the sinner to the Lord Jesus Christ as the one source of hope for time and eternity.

"DISOWNED."

One who was rescued from depths of misery wrote, signing himself "A Grateful One":—

I had no prospects, no friends, and even she who pledged herself "for better, for worse," returned the letter I wrote in captivity, with the word "Disowned!" written on the envelope. This, I think, was enough to drive the stoutest heart into despair; but the news of some one to give help and advice when the time of release should come put new life and vigour into my whole being, and if ever I praised the God of heaven I did then. It came as tidings of great joy, and on my discharge I came to your Mission. I am thankful for good health, and the way in which He has led me, and to-day being in a position whereby I get a comfortable living, and enjoying the confidence of my employers, I felt I must write, as your valuable Christlike services ought to be acknowledged and esteemed.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

Perhaps the most striking results have been obtained among the juvenile offenders. "If the Mission was engaged only in this one department of usefulness it would have a claim, strong and important, upon the sympathy and financial support of all those who are anxious for the creation of honest, hardworking citizens. This claim is admitted and emphasized by large numbers of judges, magistrates, police officials, prison officials, and journalists, and hardly a day passes without the papers containing some reference to this beneficent branch of the Mission's labours." Of one, a lad received in 1892 from a police-court, where he had been charged with sleeping out, his present employer says:—

I am sure for the last six years he has been with me his character cannot be surpassed for honesty. Always willing and obliging, and attends to his business in every way. I may say he never associates with bad company.

The following refers to a boy, quite young, who in 1897 was received from Bow Street Police-court, where he had been charged with sleeping out. He had a drunken mother, a homeless wanderer, who has since died:—

Regarding his character, we cannot speak too highly of him. A more industrious and steady workman we have never had; he is honest and straightforward, and has always been so. We have never had to reprove him for idleness. I do not think I can write anything more in his favour than this.

A lad who, in 1900, had been charged with embezzlement is described in terms of high praise by the firm employing him:—

Replying to your inquiry respecting the lad L., who has been employed here in our printing machine-room since March, 1890, we have pleasure in informing you that the manager of the department reports that A. L. "is one of the most obedient and best boys he ever had in the place."

Every year about 500 such cases are admitted into the Boys' Homes, and thus saved from a career of crime.

A HAVEN OF REST.

The benefits of the Convalescent Home at Maldon are eagerly sought for by overworked and underpaid men and women, and great is their appreciation of the good they receive. Children whose fathers are in prison, and orphans rescued from the slums, also partake of the benefits of this delightful institution. Among needy cases of poor women, Nurse Holmes, who labours assiduously for the sick and suffering in some of the darkest scenes of metropolitan misery, mentions:—

Mrs. A., a dressmaker's assistant—a by no means overpaid class of workers. Long hours and overwork had brought on consumption, and when discharged from Brompton Hospital it was my pleasure to attend to her for many weeks. So, thankful after a fortnight's change in the country, she was able to do light work again.

And the nurse adds:—

I have attended two hundred maternity cases during the past year, most of whom made good progress. For those who did not, owing to their surroundings, a few weeks at our Maldon Home soon enabled them to take up the duties of life again.

Official approval has again been heartily given. Judges, magistrates, and governors of gaols unite in a chorus of appreciation. A typical letter is that from the Governor of Dorchester Prison, who says:—"I have watched for more than twenty years your successful and diligent work among discharged prisoners, which I consider to be worthy of the highest admiration and the most generous support."

The report is informing and animated throughout. Copies may be obtained from Mr. William Wheatley, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C.

The Theatrical Mission.

A PARTICULARLY hopeful sign in the work of the Theatrical Mission, in the view of the Committee, is that all the residents of the Home regularly attend the Tuesday afternoon Gospel service. Indeed, such has been their willingness and desire to do so that on one occasion it was held in the morning at their own request to meet their convenience, and to save any of them the disappointment of missing the service. The annual report, after describing the Mission premises at Charlotte Street, and speaking hopefully of the operations, both social and spiritual, says:—

"We do not work to antagonize the profession, nor do we characterize the members as worse than many in other vocations; but knowing the difficulties of purity of thought and life in connection with the stage, we simply endeavour to help those who are struggling for their daily bread to maintain their self-respect. When young women fail in the profession or weary of its exactions, and express anxiety to leave, we do all we can to aid them to other walks of life, and advise those who come to us before entering on a theatrical career to think well ere they venture on so capricious a career."

There is accommodation in the institution for fifty persons or more. It has been well attended during the year, and its home-like character and skilful direction are rendering the mission increasingly popular among theatrical employées.

Irish Church Missions.—We are requested by the secretaries of the I.C.M. to announce that, following on the rearrangement of the Society's Dublin work, intimated in our columns some weeks ago, and the appointment of Rev. Philip B. Johnson as General Organizing Superintendent, Rev. Henry Fishe, vicar of St. Paul's, Glenageary, co. Dublin, and formerly superintendent of the I.C.M. in Dublin, has acceded to the urgent request of the committee to resume his position in the Dublin Mission, and as incumbent of the Mission Church. Mr. Fishe has, with the consent of the committee, limited his acceptance of the post to a period of two years from the date of his entrance upon the duties on September 1, upon which date Mr. Johnson will also (D.V.) enter upon the duties of his new post.

The Odd Sparrow.

"WHAT an odd subject!" someone may say. "What is it about?" Do you remember in Matt. x. 29, Jesus said, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing?" and again, in Luke xii. 6, "Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings?" It is the fifth or odd sparrow from which we learn our lessons this week.

In Eastern lands to-day, as in our Saviour's time, a purchase is made with a great deal of bargaining. The seller asks more than he is really willing to take, and the buyer offers less than he is ready to give. Sometimes they will dispute about it for an hour, until at last they arrive at a compromise and the bargain is concluded. I don't suppose that would be the case in buying birds like sparrows, which are plentiful and cheap; but you see people could buy more than twice as many for two farthings as they did for one.

Sometimes in a sweet-shop window you may see a ticket or a label which says, "1d. per ounce, 2 ounces for 1½d.," or you may buy seven penny buns for sixpence. This means that you get an extra benefit the more money you spend.

Now, when Jesus was speaking about sparrows, He meant that if God cared for such cheap, insignificant things as they, He cares a great deal more for His children, who "are of more value than many sparrows." And we also learn that He loves to deal very generously with those who come to Him. In Luke vi. 38, His idea of giving is, "good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over," and in Luke xviii. 30 we read that if we give up anything for His sake, He will give us "manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting;" and, again, Paul tells us that God "is able to do exceeding abundantly, above all that we ask or think."

How different this is from an old shopkeeper I used to visit when I was a boy. One day, being the proud possessor of a halfpenny, I went into his shop to buy some sweets; but noticing how very carefully he weighed them out, I said in a coaxing tone, "Give us good weight, guv'nor!" The old man looked at me steadily over his spectacles, and quoted the text, "A false balance is abomination to the Lord!" and added, "It would be as much a false balance if I gave you too much as if I gave you too little!" You may be sure I did not agree with him then, any more than I do now, because I think God is more generous in His dealings than that; so the little odd sparrow teaches us.

Now, young people often think that to be a Christian means giving up a lot of very nice pleasant things. But the message of this little bird is that the more we are willing to give to God the more blessing we shall receive from Him—"manifold more," which means "many times more." So it was with Job.

Money is a nice thing to have; but to be really useful it must be exchanged for something else—food, clothing, &c., for ourselves and for other people. A man who hoards up his money is called a miser, and he who spends it recklessly is a spendthrift. There are many misers and spendthrifts among boys and girls and grown up people, even if they have not got money. The health and strength and talents that they possess, they either keep for their own pleasure or waste in all sorts of evil ways, instead of consecrating them to God, so that He may use them for their blessing and spiritual benefit. He will give us far more than we can possibly give to Him.

A man who has a vine sees one day that the grapes on the bunches are growing very close together, so he gets a pair of scissors and snips out some of the grapes. Our first thought might be, "What a foolish thing to do! Fancy cutting out and wasting grapes, like that!" But he does it so that those that are left upon the bunch may have room to grow, so that they may become large and full and sweet.

Perhaps there are some things in your life which are not necessarily evil—they may be good so far as they go—but they will hinder the growth and development of nobler and more beautiful qualities. If you will give them up to God, He will give you in return such an abundance of His grace that your life will be fuller and more fruitful than it otherwise could ever have been.

Dear young people, do not think you will lose anything by being generous to God. The more you give, the more you will receive, and when some day you learn from your own experience "how gracious the Lord is," perhaps you will in fancy hear the little odd sparrow saying, "Did I not tell you so?"

Cheer by the Way.

FROM time to time I am encouraged by hearing of cases of blessing through the Bible Searcher. The following extract is from a parent's letter received last week:—

"Enclosed please find a thank-offering for the great profit which the Searcher is to my children. You will please use it for the distribution of your most valuable paper, which has been a most fruitful source of blessing to myself individually and to my rising family. The prizes given, too, have been blessed to us, and have directed us along paths of training for the little ones, about which we needed guidance."

Many thanks for flowers received during the week. They gave pleasure to some poor little children and a sick woman.

S. Wycherley, Ethel and Dorothy Essam, Marjorie Bevan, Lionel Pearson.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers," and trust you will enjoy the study.

Norah Glynn.—On looking through the rejected papers of No. 335, I find one without any name attached, the writing on which I think is yours.

Isabel and Gladys Phipps, Evelyn Primrose Pechey.—Thank you for your gift for Hannah. You will find it acknowledged in next week's Donation List.

Mary Orr Ewing.—Please answer your questions by the words of the Bible, giving chapter and verse.

The Protection of Children.—The International Congress for the Welfare and Protection of Children, which is being held in London this week, is divided into three parts—the medical, legislative, and educational and philanthropic. The Congress is attended by delegates from the Colonies, United States, and other countries, and among the subjects with which the various papers deal are the teaching of the deaf and dumb, hygiene and sanitation in the home and school, imbecile and feeble-minded children, and the employment of street children.

The Conditions of Progress (Phil. iii. 7-16).

THERE can be no doubt that the true life is always reaching up to a fuller realization of its possibilities. As the sun draws up the gorgeous twining-plants of the tropical forest, that they may unfurl their blooms in uninterrupted sunshine, so does the grace of Christ tempt us to climb, that we may bask in it, and by it reach our best. Be your very best, young friends. Realize all that is possible to your capacity. Be as ambitious to be, as some are to win the prizes of athleticism, the scholarships of learning, or the credit of passing as a millionaire; and the remarkable thing is that, if you seek this, you will have all that is worth having in other directions also.

There are several conditions to be observed. (1) We must be prepared to count lightly things which men of the world set great store by. Paul enumerates a long list of such things (5-7). Their counterparts in our time might be membership by birth in some ancient historic Church; pride of descent from a noble and aristocratic stock; time-honoured prejudices and traditions; reliance on good character; natural amiability and good temper as a passport to God's favour—all these things have to be treated as the small dust of the balance, to be lightly set aside when they come into collision, as they are almost certain to do sooner or later, with a simple devoted following of Jesus Christ. Are we willing to surrender these things? What a story that is of the conversion of Brownlow North, who not only had to surrender his high aristocratic connections, but was so hard pressed that he had to kneel down in his room, though a servant girl was engaged in blackleading the grate, rather than miss that moment as the acceptable time for seeking pardon. That is the kind of spirit that makes rapid advances in the divine life. Let us be prepared to sacrifice everything that stands in the way of our winning Christ.

(2) We must never count that we have attained. Directly we are satisfied with the progress we have made, we stand still; nay, we begin to decline and deteriorate. We are all familiar with the story of the great artist standing before his masterpiece in tears because he had realized his ideal, and knew that he must now decline. A sense of dissatisfaction must ever haunt the greatest poets, musicians, artists, and saints. Great as the results which they have achieved, they are always conscious of a something beyond, which has smiled at them, but which they have not been able to reproduce. Always ask, What would Jesus do and be? Never rest satisfied with any tolerated failure or shortcoming. Press on towards the goal. Let every step you climb prepare you to climb another.

(3) We must forget the past. That past contains many failures, much shortcoming, things undone, and things done, of which the memory is full of regret. But even these must be forgotton. Yes, and even our successes must be forgotten. To spend one moment in looking back on these things is to lose time and strength. Self-congratulation and the remorseful enumeration of failure are alike to be eschewed.

(4) We must have unity of aim. "This one thing I do." The men of one idea are invincible. To aim at one thing throughout life is to be almost certain of its attainment. The men like Wilberforce, or Howard, or Gough, who aimed at some great reform, are those who have left their permanent mark on the history of their times. And with us it is easily possible to do one thing though we are engaged in an infinite variety of interests. Whatever we may be engaged in may be made to yield an opportunity of gaining a little more likeness to Christ, because whatever we do and wherever we may be we may always ask ourselves, "Am I doing this as my Master would do it, were He here?" Worshipping the Golden Calf (Ex. xxxii. 1-35).

Golden Text (Ex. xx. 3).

THE scene is still at the encampment before Sinai; and the time the close of the forty days during which Moses was absent from among the people. Contrasting events were occurring at the same time. Moses, in the Mount with God, was receiving from Him a revelation of true worship; and the people, in the plain below, were lapsing into positive idolatry.

1. The latter showed themselves in their natural features, a rebellious, stiff-necked, and obstinate people (Neh. ix. 16, 17; Is. xlviii. 4).

2. Moses stood out in the nobleness of his moral character, a very "king among men." Note his refusal of the honour offered to him (v. 10), his intercession for the people in vv. 11, 13, and still more intensely in verses 31 and 32. Self lost in Love. Love to his God shown in loyalty, and jealousy for His honour; and love to his people shown in hatred of their sin, and faithful rebuke for their wickedness.

3. Aaron figures poorly in contrast with his brother. "A man of emergency" can sometimes control a movement towards a wise end when he cannot prevent its taking place, or where resistance would be pain; but if he is weak he will be swept away in the current, and this was the case with Aaron when Moses was not near by to help him. He was guilty of weak cowardly deeds in giving way to the people, no less than in making excuses to Moses.

4. But we feel we are standing "on holy ground" while we read the revelations of Jehovah contained in to-day's lesson (vv. 10, 11, 12, 14); wrath, hot and fierce (v. 35); judgment (Ex. xxxiii. 3). Afterwards in xxxiv. 6-7, "Merciful, gracious, long-suffering, abundant in mercy and truth."

"Who is a pardoning God like Thee?
And who has grace so rich and free?"

Outline of the Lesson.

Awful sin
Awful punishment
Mighty
Merciful
Pleading.
Pardon.

The First Step towards idolatry is the craving for the visible. Counterfeit rather than an invisible Reality. The senses are gratified, and God and His truth are hidden in the background.

The Second Step is to make an idol. Whence did the people get the jewels? (Ex. iii. 22: xii. 35). Generous in a bad cause. What came of the ornaments at last? (Ex. xxxii. 20). The Lord had other plans in reference even to these ornaments (Ex. xxv. 2).

The Third Step—Blasphemy. "These be thy gods, O Israel" (v. 4). Broken vows, for they sacrificed to the molten calf (vv. 6, 8). God had commanded, as in Ex. xx. 4, 5, and the people had promised (Ex. xix. 8; xxiv. 3), and the covenant had been sealed with blood (Ex. xxiv. 7, 8). "The wages of sin is death." "God is a jealous God." He will not give His glory to another. If God's children will mix with the children of this world they will get entangled in snares (Psa. cvi. 35). Dress, amusements, or manner of worship, and God will be forgotten (Psa. cvi. 21). Let not claims of the body stand between the soul and God.

The Divine Displeasure.

Every action and word, even every thought and motive, among the people on the plain had been clear and open before God (Jer. xvii. 10; Psa. cxxxix. 1-24). Their base ingratitude, self-will, unfaith, short memory (v. 8), open sin, until "His wrath was kindled" (Psa. cvi. 40; Ex. xxxii. 9, 10). They were doing "that abominable thing that I hate" (Jer. xliv. 4).

Moses, the Powerful Pleader.

Stood in the breach (Psa. cvi. 23 as in vv. 11, 30), confessed the sin. He hated the sin, but loved the sinners with a love that was utterly unselfish (v. 32, even after v. 1). But the Lord could not accept his terms (note v. 33). Only Christ the Son of God could make atonement for sinners. But Moses may intercede and did prevail, though the Lord punished the people (v. 35) in mercy. The plea Moses used was that God's promise could not fail. God's honour must be upheld. God's enemies must not triumph. God's work must be perfected. There was no merit on the people's part to plead (v. 31). The nation was spared, but the consequences of the sin were still upon them (v. 35).

We are sinners. The atonement Jesus offered for us has been accepted, and we have a great intercessor, even Jesus Christ, the Son of God (Heb, vii. 25). For His sake God will spare us if we will trust in Jesus as our Saviour.

Aaron.—God had planned a holy path for him, but he went in a crooked way (Ex. xxviii. 2 and 38; xxix. 6, 10; xxx. 7, 8). The saints of the Lord are weak in themselves. Jesus said, "Severed from Me ye can do nothing (John xv. 5; 2 Cor. xii. 9; Psa. cvi. 16). Aaron was held responsible (Ex. xxxii. 35), though he made such a shallow excuse. God can make a way for us out of temptation, whatever our circumstances. Don't blame the furnace (v. 24) or other people (v. 22); trials ought to draw us to God for help, not drive us away from Him. Let me take the blame, as I have committed the sin. Confess it to God, and ask forgiveness for Jesus' sake—he says (1 John i. 9).

Open communion with God necessary before entering on His work. Elijah (1 Kings xix. 8), Moses (Ex. xxiv. 18), Jesus (Matt. iv. 2); and the same two prophets met the Lord Jesus on the mount of transfiguration (Mark ix. 4).

"Wait for His whispered directions
E'er on His errands you go."

Lessons.

If the Israelites had been praying to be shown God's will, and for grace to do it, their lives would have been guided according to the plan He had made for them in the Mount.—Note (Ex. xix. 5, 6), People and Priest (Ex. xxviii 38); "I will dwell among the Children of Israel and will be their God" (xxix. 45; xxxiii. 15). Let us pray, "O God give me Thy Holy Spirit this day for Jesus' sake." So shall we do His will here and now as it is done in Heaven, and live to His glory.

"The Lord plagued the people" (v. 35). The Lord may grant pardon, and yet there is a sense in which that verse is true to-day. The drunkard may give up his sin, and yet come to an early grave because of his former evil course. A man who has squandered his money may repent, but his repentance will not bring back the money he has lost. The boy or girl who spend their time foolishly at school instead of gaining knowledge will be the losers all their life. Opportunities which we let slip never return. "As you sow, so shall ye also reap" (v. 26). "Who is on the Lord's side?" Those who trust Jesus as a personal Saviour and consecrate their lives to Him and for Him. It is the happy side, and the safe side, for John x. 28-30, xv. 11.

Illustrations of the Lesson.

A millionaire, who had been born a poor boy, and whose money was now his idol, after showing his grand house and beautiful grounds to a Quaker, said, "And the almighty dollar has done it all! What cannot money do?" "Ah, friend," replied the Quaker, "thou remindest me of the Israelites, who worshipped the golden calf, saying it brought them out of the land of Egypt; when really it hindered them rather than helped them on the journey to the Promised Land; and may be thy dollars may do the same to thee."

A farmer taught his boy to drive a nail into a certain barn door every time he did wrong, and take one out every time he repented. "I have taken out a nail, father; but the hole is left in the door." Sin leaves its mark; cause and effect are inseparable.

City Missionaries' Outing.

ALREADY a liberal supporter of the London City Mission, Louisa, Lady Ashburton gave further expression of her goodwill towards the missionaries a few days ago by entertaining them at her residence near Croydon. The missionaries, the majority of whom are accustomed to busy streets or crowded byeways and slums, found immense pleasure in the beautiful grounds.

The party numbered about 400, and after an enjoyable day an inspiring meeting was held under canvas. Mr. F. A. Bevan explained that the absence of their hostess was owing to the death of her only beloved daughter, the Marchioness of Northampton. A telegram was despatched thanking her ladyship for her kindness. The speaker affirmed once more his belief that God is using the London City Mission daily for his glory. A vigorous address was given by Rev. W. H. Langhorne, who spoke of the immense debt which London owes to its City Mission. What the absence of the Society and its influence would mean to the Metropolis he was afraid to surmise. Rev. J. G. Train also spoke helpful and stimulating words to the party.

An interesting item of the proceedings was the presentation to Mr. Cheesman, a veteran missionary, who has completed fifty years' service. As mementoes of his mission jubilee he received a Bible and banknote, and in reply declared his intention of continuing his labours in Deptford. The distribution of St. John Ambulance Association certificates and medallions gained by missionaries brought the happy proceedings to a close, and the workers, refreshed and reinvigorated, returned to their homes and duties.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

ON Lord's Day morning last Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry preached at the Marylebone Presbyterian Church (Rev. Dr. George Hanson's), taking for his text Ezekiel, vii. 23: "Make a chain: for the land is full of bloody crimes, and the city full of violence."

Dr. Henry's topic was "The Redemption of the City—the paramount problem before the Christian churches and a Christian State." The future of organized Christianity as well as the perpetuity of civil liberty depends upon the salvation of the city. In past civilizations the cities have dragged them down to destruction. The city is not full of violence because the land is full of crimes; but the converse is true, that the land is full of crimes because the city is full of violence. In the redemption of the city Christian citizenship must take a leading and conspicuous part. The great demand is for the unification and earnest co-operation of all moral and religious forces in order to break the power of moral evil upon the lives of the people, and to promote the kingdom of righteousness. There is no substitute for righteousness. In the cities there may be money, culture, militarism, &c., but unless there is righteousness their redemption is impossible. Dr. Henry proceeded to show that the iniquities of the city centre and culminate in the habit and traffic of strong drink; that the second step in the investigation of any specific iniquity found in the life of the modern city cannot but bring one face to face with the terrible curse of intemperance.

On Lord's Day next Dr. Henry will commence a temperance mission at Bromley, Kent. The friends there feel that there is no aspect of truth to be presented to the community more important than that of temperance, in which department Dr. Henry is well known as a specialist.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

July 20-23 and also 27, Bromley, Kent; July 31, Alford, Lincs.; Aug. 1-30, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; Aug. 31, Lincoln; Sept. 4, Louth; 6-9, Taunton; 10, 11, Newport, Mon.; 12-14, Taunton; 15, 16, Llanelly; 18, 19, Dunfermline; 21, Free St. George's, Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Whyte's); 22-24, Dunfermline; Sept. 26-Oct. 3, Alloa; 4-17, Perth; 18-31, Greenock; Nov. 2-Dec. 4, Ireland (Nov. 2-5, Cork; 6-9, Limerick; 24-Dec. 4, Dublin; other announcements later); Dec. 6-16, Worcester; Jan. 9-15, 1903, Motherwell.

"In the King's Highway."

IN the double work of directing the Bible Mission Halls at Tunbridge Wells, and of preaching the Gospel in villages in various parts of England, Pastor John McAuliffe has received much encouragement during the past year. He sets forth his experiences and gives a comprehensive account of the departments of work in the annual report, which bears the title of "In the King's Highway."

Of the home operations, Mr. McAuliffe writes:—"A large and spiritual band of open-air workers, a staff of visitors and some twenty-five Sunday-school teachers have stood by their Master's work. The Sunday preaching of the Gospel has been most fruitful. There are capital attendances at the men's and women's Bible classes.

"In Christian colportage work we have an experienced senior colporteur and a junior helper. During seven months of the year these two brethren visit the homes of working people in our town of Tunbridge Wells, and scatter a great deal of Gospel printed seed. The little Bible cart is a well-known object in our streets and the surrounding villages. Protestant literature, as well as Gospel books, are sold and given away. During the five months of our summer these two brethren follow our Village Tent Mission."

Mr. McAuliffe adds a breezy and interesting description of his evangelistic tours. His booklet, which is tastefully produced, is issued from The Mission House, John Street, Tunbridge Wells.

Day of Intercession, Queen's Hall (June 25).—Mr. Albert Head, the Honorary Treasurer, reports that the expenses, which were very heavy, have been met by the contributions, collections, and by the sale of tickets and programmes; and the conveners are deeply thankful for this result, which, with many other unmistakable tokens, indicates that from the outset the suggestion of these gatherings was from the Lord.

About Books.

GEORGE FOX'S JOURNAL.

A MORE than passing interest attaches to the re-issue of George Fox's Journal.* Not many seventeenth century autobiographies have enjoyed such a circulation as this; that our day should see a new edition, is a good sign. In the past this work has borne a powerful testimony for sincerity of life and simplicity of manners; to-day it will do this and more, for it will remind an unreflecting generation of the great price paid for social rights and civil liberty, and, maybe, provoke some to jealousy in the work of preserving intact and unimpaired the immunities and privileges inherited from past times.

A glance at this Journal impresses one with the marvellous energy and single-hearted devotion of George Fox. A man without the fear of man, not hesitating to denounce oppression and rebuke sin, whether addressing a king or a commoner—this prophet of righteousness seems to have lifted up his voice with strength in almost every county of England, as well as in Scotland, Ireland, America, and in several lands of the European Continent. Bonds and imprisonments attended him, but they neither shut his mouth nor arrested his pen; and the Journal reproduces his wonderful epistles, addressed on the one hand to a hostile world, and on the other to groups of sympathizing Friends in various parts. These letters have a permanent value, and deserve to be read by earnest Christians of all denominations.

Independently of its main purpose, this work has great utility for the light it throws upon the customs of the time—especially upon the way heretics and "irregular" Christians were treated by the authorities in Church and State—whether under the Monarchy or the Commonwealth. The life of a man of purpose and resource is always worth reading. Fox was not only that, but likewise a man of a large heart; and these pages will minister timely instruction and intelligent entertainment to thoughtful readers, whether or not they belong to the Society of Friends.

Some of the most painful lessons of the war, now so happily ended, are taught by Edna Lyall, so that all may understand, in The Hinderers. (2s. 6d. Longmans.)

A stirring story of sea life is told by Rev. H. Francis Gordon in Ocean Heroes (3s. R. Banks & Son), and true spiritual lessons are driven home in a fashion that will have power with young people.

Light for Life's Eventide: Restful Thoughts for Weary Souls. By Rev. R. Tuck, B.A. (2s. Marshall Bros.) A series of short readings—truths for the heart, presented in chaste language.

The case for vegetarianism and total abstinence is powerfully presented, as well as the claims of Christ, in Law and Love (2s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell), a popular story by J. Hartman Oliver.

Pictorial Sermons in Industries, by Rev. George Menzies (3s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell), will prove of special service to workers among the young. It contains twelve addresses, which are quite lavishly illustrated.

A large amount of material such as busy Gospel workers and preachers may be able to adapt to their needs is supplied by Rev. John Mitchell in Stones for Sermon Builders. (2s. A. H. Stockwell.) The topics are simple, attractive, and varied.

A simple and touching narrative of the gracious working of God is told in An Awakening, by H. N. Extracts from diaries and letters are pieced together to tell how a storm-tossed soul found its way into perfect peace. (1s. Marshall Bros.)

Among missionary stories, a prominent place must be given to Surrendered (2s. Church of England Zenana Missionary Society), by Louisa C. Silke, which beautifully illustrates the joy and gladness to be found in the way of obedience to the will of God.

As a sequel to her well-known story, "Odd," Amy le Feuvre has provided a new pleasure for her many readers in Odd Made Even (3s. 6d. R.T.S.), in which the fortunes of the heroine are followed through some of the pains and pleasures of more mature years.

* The Journal of George Fox: Being an Historical Account of His Life, Travels, Sufferings and Christian Experiences. In two volumes. The eighth (bi-centenary) edition, reprinted from stereotype plates, with revised and enlarged indexes. (London: Headley Bros. 5s. net.)

Those who recall, with pleasure, Mr. Sydney Watson's vivid stories of "Wops, the Waif," will welcome Life's Look Out, a bright volume in which, with mingled pathos and humour, Mr. Watson tells the moving story of his career. (2s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Mr C. J. Thynne has issued a Third Series of short forms of morning and evening prayer for four weeks, by Rev. Francis Bourdillon, M.A. The volume is entitled A Help to Family Worship, and it aims to be such, and not to serve as a substitute for personal petition. (1s.).

Instead of the current scientific belief that the primitive earth was fused as the result of intense heat, Mr. George Campbell propounds in A Revolution in the Science of Cosmology (5s. net. Sampson Low) a theory that it never was so, but is gradually undergoing the process of fusion.

The Century Bible: Revelation. Edited by C. Anderson Scott, M.A. (2s. Jack). There have been several volumes of real worth in this series, which will be completed by one more volume, the thirteenth, "Mark," by Principal Salmond. Perhaps no volume has shown more thorough work than this, which is rich in introductory matter, and at once succinct and lucid in annotation.

Great Mottoes with Great Lessons is a volume of talks to children by G. Currie Martin, M.A., B.D. (3s. 6d. Allenson.) For the most part Mr. Martin deals with the mottoes of great families; and the lessons he draws are timely and important. Illustrative allusions and pointed stories abound, making this a specially useful book in the ever-growing class to which it belongs.

With pictures on every page, and a wealth of coloured illustrations, the Midsummer Volume of Little Folks forms a handsome and attractive book. The literary contents, not distinctively religious, are bright and pithy throughout, and young people will assuredly find innocent entertainment and some instruction in this latest volume of a magazine which well deserves its popularity. (3s. 6d. and 5s. Cassell.)

The "Story of the Nations" series has been enriched with a capital volume by Owen M. Edwards—Wales. (5s. T. Fisher Unwin.) A deeply interesting story is here outlined in the language and style of the common people. Whether dealing with early legend or with developments of later days, Mr. Edwards wields a facile pen, and holds the steady attention of his readers. There are many illustrations, some of them reproductions of well-known works of art.

The Sun Children's Budget is more attractive than ever; and the editors, Phœbe Allen and Dr. H. W. Godfrey, have earned the gratitude of many parents for providing such an excellent instructor of the young in botany and natural history. Vol. IV. contains the quarterly parts for the year ended April, 1902. (3s. Wells Gardner, & Co.) The Entomological department is an interesting feature. There are useful illustrations, also an index, which will prove of great service for reference.

The series of Handbooks for Bible Classes and Private Students has been enriched by the addition of—The Pastoral Epistles: A New Translation, with Introduction, Commentary, and Appendix. By Rev. J. P. Lilley, M.A., Arbroath. (2s. 6d. T. & T. Clark). To have so much in such a handy form is cause for congratulation. The pages take account of the most recent contributions to the study of the Epistles. Quite properly, Mr. Lilley remarks in the preface upon the timeliness of special attention being called to this portion of the New Testament; when rightly interpreted, the Pastoral Epistles are one of the strongest bulwarks of Evangelical Protestantism. The author of "The Principles of Protestantism" may be trusted to be awake to opportunities for the enunciation of Protestant and Evangelical views.

A sober book on a subject which has often suffered much at the hands of speculative thinkers is—Life: Its Mysteries Now and After Death. By Rev. Alexander Wright, M.A. (3s. 6d. net. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier). Though outlining profound discussions on sublime themes, the book is simple in style and easy to read. Among other subjects considered are—the Problem of Evil, the Mystery of Pain, Life and Death, Resurrection and Judgment, Man and his Destiny, the State of the Dead, and the Consummation of all Things. The treatment is reverent and suggestive, and the book is likely to minister comfort to many thoughtful readers. The author intended this volume as a parting gift to the congregation over which he presided for twenty-five years at Musselburgh, N.B., but he was suddenly called away, so that, as Dr. David Whitelaw remarks, in a cordial introduction, the volume becomes a bequest. That, in such circumstances, a portrait of the author should appear as frontispiece, is fitting, and assuredly it adds to the interest of the book.

Temperance workers will welcome two new stories by O. B. Cheerful—The Annals of Sloocum, and Thomas Wait-a-Bit (1d. each. W. Clee, 150, High Street, Cheltenham). These publications are sure to have a large circulation.

Devon Evangelistic Mission.

DURING the past month Gospel work has been carried on through the villages of Mid-Devon with a large Bible carriage. Although in many places Ritualism is rampant, the Word of God and the glad tidings of salvation through a crucified Saviour reach the human heart with power. Thus in going from village to village a welcome is found, and with not a few a hearty response to the Gospel message.

The plan adopted is to stay a week in a central village, holding Gospel meetings each night and visiting the outlying farms and hamlets by day. At each place a Gospel book is left for quiet reading and meditation. Last Lord's Day evening, in a small village, 250 persons gathered from the surrounding districts to hear the Word of Life. W. Harry Dawe.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims in Ireland.

Continuing their evangelistic tour through the South-West of Ireland, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims have visited Bandon, after Cork; here meetings were held for three weeks, and, as has been the case all along, the limelight services attracted large audiences, which for this season of the year is quite out of the common. Sunday evening, July 13, saw the closing meeting, and it is very gratifying to record that the Lord has manifestly owned the work of His servants. Many testified to blessing received. To the Lord's people the time was one of spiritual profit and help. The effect of the mission has been felt beyond the immediate localities visited; interest has deepened, many attending from far-away districts, carrying back with them a fuller knowledge of salvation and a desire to live for the Saviour. It is clear that the lantern services attract and draw the people where ordinary means will not; also that people are ready and willing both to hear, and—pleasant to say—ready and willing to accept salvation. To many the offer came as something not heard of before. Skibbereen, Clonakilty, and other places are to be visited.

Temperance Mission at Carrickfergus.

Following up the series of Gospel temperance meetings held in Carrickfergus last winter, a series of united open-air Gospel temperance meetings was held in the same town recently.

All the Protestant Churches of the town took part in the movement, and all the ministers were present night after night, and presided in their turn. Each meeting was opened with the singing of a hymn and prayer. Then the chairman gave a brief address, and called on the appointed speaker for the evening to deliver an address. Each service lasted about an hour, and was very solemn and impressive. The speakers were listened to with deep attention by the large number of working men and others who were present. All the meetings, with the exception of one which was held, on account of the inclemency of the weather, in the Joymount Hall, were held on the Castle Parade, a most suitable place, and will not soon be forgotten. Rev. George Chamberlain, Alex. Cuthbert, Edgar Stuart, R. Cole, and other friends, took part. The utmost harmony prevailed amongst the different denominations, and it is understood that during the coming winter another series of united services will be held.

Messrs. Williams and Maxwell in Edinburgh.

The united mission, conducted in Edinburgh by Messrs. Williams and Maxwell, is to be prolonged for a seventh week.

The past week's meetings were commenced by crowded Sabbath services, both in Carrubbers Close Mission and Haymarket U.F. Church. These were succeeded by a series of week-night meetings of much interest. On all occasions Mr. Williams spoke, and Mr. Maxwell sang, with marked tokens of blessing. Quite a number of ministers in the western district of Edinburgh have heartily co-operated in the work, and taken part in the meetings, including Rev. Dr. George Wilson (St. Michael's Parish Church), Rev. J. Bell Nicol (Church of Scotland), Dr. Hastings (Palmerston Place U.F. Church), W. Kilpatrick (Georgie U.F. Church), and the popular minister of Haymarket U.F. Church, Rev. James Robertson, who combines the double qualification of being both an effective speaker and singer, and has thrown himself into the work with much enthusiasm.

On Friday night last, while the evangelistic service was being held in the Haymarket Church, a largely-attended meeting of young converts was held at Carrubbers Close Mission, where practical addresses were delivered by Mr. Williams and Mr. C. N. B. Muston. At the large Gospel temperance meeting at the same place on Saturday night, Rev. Dinsdale T. Young addressed a large number of the same class, and emphasized, by precept and some striking examples, the importance of intercessory prayer.

An eight days' mission has just been concluded in Hereford, conducted by Messrs. Gray, Pullinger, and other friends of the Open-Air Mission. Great blessing has attended their efforts and many souls have been won for the Saviour. To God be the glory!—Edward J. Bettington.

Rev. H. Powers, D.D., of Leeds, accompanied by Mrs. Powers, is conducting encouraging meetings at Millport (Isle of Cumbrae). Great gatherings come together three times daily. This is the evangelist's eighth year of services on the west coast of Scotland without intermission.

The Free Churches of North Manchester on Monday evening last began a week's open-air mission. The services are held on Albert Croft, off Rochdale Road, and the initial meeting, at which Rev. C. W. Cliffe, of Queen's Park Congregational Church, was the speaker, was fairly well attended. The services are intended to attract those who are not church or chapel-goers.

At Tayport, Fifeshire, on Sabbath, July 6, there was brought to a close a three weeks' mission in a Gospel tent, from the London Evangelization Society. Mr. Chas. Galletly was the evangelist. The meetings were well attended, particularly so on the Sabbath evenings, when the tent was usually packed. The Word was faithfully preached—pardon proclaimed through a once crucified but now risen Christ—and as a result every evening saw some soul brought into liberty and light, while God's children were greatly blessed by fresh illumination. The weeks of this mission are being testified to by many as the happiest and holiest of their experience, while the thoughtless and Christless have been awakened to their need of the Saviour.

Evangelistic Work in India.

By Rev. T. A. Carmichael, C.M.S., Jubalpur.

Knowing the warm interest that the readers of The Christian have in missionary work abroad, I give a few incidents that came within my own experience of evangelistic work in the Aligarh District during last winter.

An Indian "mela."

WITH a few Indian helpers I went to Anupshahr to preach to the Hindus and Mohammedans. The Gangetic "mela" was to be held in the course of the next week. For two whole days the roads were lined with bullock-carts, camel-carts and foot-passengers. It was a sight to see the immense crowd of human beings, arrayed in clothes of various colours. As they streamed into this religious fair, one heard here and there the men shouting enthusiastically, "Ganga ji ki jay" (victory to the Ganges!), and the women singing as they made their way in groups. Thousands of these idolatrous Hindus had come to bathe in this most holy (?) of Indian rivers, with a view to secure remission of their sins! Verily they have a zeal, but not according to knowledge! In various parts of this "melá," and on both sides of the river, did we stand and speak to the people all the words of this life. We sold several Gospels among the large audiences we contrived to collect; and by these we hope the seed may be sown in the hearts of those who read them.

An interesting conversation.

While in Bulandshahr, Mr. Pemberton and I twice visited the house of a Mohammedan gentleman. We found him a very intelligent and civil man, speaking English very well. He asked us, after the preliminary salutations, to discuss with him the subject of our Lord's "filiation." This doctrine, of Jesus Christ being the Son of God, is one of the principal dogmatic differences between Christianity and Islam. No little time was consumed in dealing first with a Hindu who was present, a follower of the "Arya-Samaj," and a pleader by profession. This man believed in the co-eternity of God, the soul, and matter! However, he was prevailed upon to read aloud the creed of St. Athanasius. It was encouraging to hear our Mohammedan friend entreating the Hindu pleader to read the Prayer Book; and he added, "I have read it through from beginning to end!" In the course of discussion, I remarked, "Either Jesus Christ was the Son of God, as He claimed to be, or He was untruthful!" Our host replied, "I would not like to say that Jesus Christ was untruthful, so I must believe what He claimed to be." The conversation was a very profitable one, I think, for all present.

The parable of the wedding garment.

One evening we came across a group of men in a village. They were followers of the "Arya Samaj." After one of my Indian helpers had spoken at length, I began to explain the parable of the wedding garment (Matt. xxii.). When I read out the words, "My oxen and my fatlings are killed," they suddenly stopped me, and with looks of horror requested me to go. On inquiry, I learnt that the reason of their unusual conduct towards me was owing to their bigoted vegetarianism! As we were preparing to go, they invited us to give an address on Christianity in one of their public gatherings to be held a few days later! They had printed notices of this gathering.

Missionary Training Home, Drayton Park, N.—After a suspension of the work for one term, following the unexpected resignation and departure of the resident superintendent, owing to his wife's health, we have been led to believe that our ministry in seeking to train missionaries for the foreign field is come to an end, and that God is needing the houses for other service. They are greatly in need of repair; therefore all donations that are being sent to us above the current expenses of upkeep, office, and closing up of the work, are being devoted to this object. As soon as God has given us light as to the purpose for which He wills the premises to be used, there will be a further notice in Jungle Need. The office of the Kurku and Central India Hill Mission has been transferred from 10, Drayton Park to Beechwood, Highgate, N.—On behalf of the Committee, Elizabeth Basett.

Welsh Notes.

THE annual meetings of the Trevecca Theological College were held on July 1. The report was an encouraging one. The annual address was delivered by Rev. W. M. Jenkins, a missionary at present home on furlough from the Khassia Hills, Assam.

Each of the three leading Nonconformist denominations in Wales has a "Forward Movement," and each is doing excellent evangelistic work. It is, therefore, regrettable to learn that the contributions of the Welsh Baptists towards their Forward Movement show a falling off. A special effort is to be made, however, to ensure a sufficient increase in the contributions to enable the work to be carried on as hitherto.

An earnest appeal with regard to the keeping of the Sabbath has been sent out by the clergy and ministers of Llandudno. Desecration of the Lord's Day is on the increase in this popular Welsh summer resort, and the manifesto is an attempt to prevent this growing evil. Among the signatories are the Bishop of Bangor, the Archdeacons of Bangor and St. Asaph, the vicar of the town, and all the leading Nonconformist ministers.

At the inaugural meeting of the Aberdare Free Church Council on Thursday, July 10, a valuable address on Nonconformist unity was delivered by Rev. H. Elvet Lewis, of London. In his opinion Nonconformist differences are worn away, and only the names remain. The age of separation has done its work, and it is time for Nonconformists to be united. Alluding to the opposition to the Education Bill, the speaker declared that Nonconformists were not fighting the Church of England, but only a section of that Church—a section which was seeking to hand it over to Rome.

Oxford Notes.

THE Wycliffe preachers, under the leadership of Mr. Kensit, jun., are holding a week's mission in Oxford. Most of the gatherings have been held in the open air at the Martyr's Memorial. Questions and discussions have been invited, but interruptions have taken place at the meetings.

Oxford will be represented at the Church Congress by no less than six speakers, including Dr. Sanday, on "The Miracles," the Rector of All Saints, on "Christianity and the Social Question," and the Rector of Exeter College, on the "Supply of Clergy."

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

SEVENTEEN new associations have recently been formed in South Russia, where a new field of activity is opening up to the Y.M.C.A. movement. Six associations have also been organised in Austria, bringing the total number up to 111.

Mr. W. Gordon Sprigg, who, on account of failing health, was obliged recently to relinquish the secretaryship of the flourishing association at Cape Town, has, at the urgent request of the Johannesburg Committee, consented to take oversight for a time of the important work at the latter centre, which promises great developments.

The associations in several district unions, following the example set by those in the counties of Devon and Cornwall, are this summer organizing tent work at the volunteer encampments on Salisbury Plain, at Aldershot, and elsewhere. The Soldiers' Christian Association, auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A., is also displaying much activity in this matter. For many years similar work has been carried on by the associations in Canada, and it is being taken up with much earnestness by workers at different points in Australia. The Belgian associations likewise do excellent work amongst the troops, as does also the splendidly-equipped institution at Copenhagen.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. A. S. Macdiarmid, of Norwood, S.E., an earnest Christian worker, one of the most useful members of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association's Executive Committee, and an old member of the National Temperance League.—Aged eighty-two, Mr. Henry Huntley, of Old Malton, a member of the Society of Friends, and formerly on the committee of Ackworth School. He was a generous philanthropist.—Mr William Fielder, of Southsea, for many years deacon of Elmgrove Baptist Chapel, and for over fifty years teacher, and then superintendent of St. Marie-la-bonne Sunday-school.—Mr. G. Martin Tait, of Highbury, died suddenly on Sunday week. Closely identified with the C.M.S. and all other Evangelical associations, Mr. Tait will long be remembered as a faithful and devoted friend and worker in connection with every good cause that had for its object the extension of the Master's Kingdom.

Church of England.

Rev. Canon M'Cormick, rector of St. James', Piccadilly, is preaching a course of sermons this month dealing with some "Questions for Men."

The congregation of St. Saviour's Protestant Church, Burnley, consists of people who, for conscience sake, have left their parish churches. An effort is being made to clear off a mortgage of £620. Steps are being taken to vest the property in the Church Association. The pastor is Rev. Charles E. Wincott, 10, Admiral Street, Burnley.

Bishop Hoare, of Hong Kong, in a sermon at St. Michael's, Cornhill, said he had spent twenty-seven years in China, during four of which he had been stationed in Hong Kong as bishop. Turning to the question, "Are Foreign Missions any good?" Bishop Hoare remarked: "I come of a business stock, and my name is as well known in Lombard Street as in the Mission field. I am not accustomed to over-state things, but I believe that the progress of Protestant Missions in China during the last fifty years is as great as the spread of Christianity in the first three centuries of our era."

Rev. J. B. Barraclough, vicar of St. Thomas, Lambeth, S.E., writes in his annual report: "Our Short Street Mission Room, together with all the adjoining property, is about to be demolished for the erection of new houses, and we ceased to use it, at the expiration of our six years' lease, some months ago; but much larger premises have been taken at 28, Lower Marsh, where, in addition to the ordinary work of a mission hall, we have opened an Evening Home for Working Girls, with a view to leading some of the hundreds of such girls around us to the Lord Jesus as their Saviour and Friend."

Congregational.

The Thursday noonday services at the City Temple (Rev. Dr. Parker's) are discontinued until further notice.

Rev. J. Williams has commenced the third year of his ministry at Gorton. At the communion service eleven new members were received into fellowship. This makes an increase of 101 during Mr. Williams' ministry.

During the absence of Rev. F. B. Meyer, the pulpit of Christ Church will be occupied during July and August by a number of well-known American preachers. Dr. A. T. Pierson (formally introduced to the congregation by Mr. Meyer) commences his services on the first Sunday in September, continuing for six months, when Mr. Meyer resumes his work.

A call has been given by the church at North End, Port Elizabeth, South Africa, to Rev. J. R. F. Pledger, of Hackney, Cape Colony, and accepted by him. Mr. Pledger will take charge of the church about the middle of August. A new building is in course of erection, which it is hoped will be completed about October, when, under new conditions, a time of spiritual prosperity is eagerly looked forward to by the members.

The church at Shoreham, Sussex, having secured a site of land for a branch church at Southwick, a very rapidly-growing village, are anxious to begin services, and would greatly appreciate the loan of a tent in which to hold meetings on Sundays. The paralysing influences of Ritualism are felt in well nigh every part of the county, and there is no other evangelical place of worship in the immediate vicinity. Address Pastor George Butcher, Shoreham, Sussex.

The condition of the historic Westminster Chapel is again exercising the minds of London Congregationalists. It has been freely suggested in the Press and elsewhere that there is here a fine opening for another great central mission, such as the Congregational Union has just started at Pentonville. No doubt the building and the neighbourhood offer great facilities for such a scheme, and probably the only chance of reviving the ancient glories of the place in another form lies in this direction. The matter is to come before the committee of the London Union.

Rev. G. T. Coster, of Trinity Church, Hessle, Hull, has intimated his intention to resign his pastorate, and to close his forty-three years of ministerial life, at Michaelmas. Mr. Coster has been five years at Hessle, during which time he has gathered a congregation, erected a permanent building (costing £5,000, which is largely paid off), and formed a church which has now nearly 100 members. He mentions his own health and the growing claims of the work as reasons for his retirement. The church has, by resolution, accepted the resignation with "deepest regret," and expressed appreciation of his "most faithful, devoted, and valuable services."

It is proposed to erect, at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, S.E., a memorial to the late Dr. Newman Hall. It will take the form of an alabaster tablet, with suitable inscription, and a medallion bearing the profile of the late pastor. The memorial will cost about £200, and an appeal for funds has been addressed to old members and friends by the officers of the church, who "trust that sufficient money will be subscribed to make the memorial a worthy tribute to the life of him who was for thirty-eight years the minister of Surrey Chapel and Christ Church, and to whose untiring energy we are indebted for the erection of our beautiful church."

Baptist.

The annual thankoffering of the Stratford New Town Tabernacle Church, Edith Road, E., taken last week, realized £38. The work of the church continues with much blessing, under the direction of the pastor, Rev. Hamilton Watts, B.A.

The second anniversary of the settlement of Rev. E. D. de Rusett at Lewisham Road Church was recently celebrated. At the communion service in the evening the attendance was especially large, the body of the chapel being full. During the past twelve months Mr. de Rusett has baptized fifty-six on confession of faith, and during the two years of his ministry nearly 150 have been received into membership.

The annual report of the church at Byrom Hall, Liverpool, records a year of great spiritual blessing. As the result of the Simultaneous Mission, and of a subsequent one conducted by Mr. William Grove, a large number of members have been added to the church. Since Rev. F. G. West became the pastor ten years ago, the church has become self-supporting, and has spent a large sum on renovation and enlargement.

The Founders' Day Festival in connection with the Orphan Homes of the East London Tabernacle, was held in the grounds of Harley House, kindly lent by Dr. H. Guinness, on Thursday, July 3. Over 800 friends were present. Pastor Archibald G. Brown presided, and addresses were given by Rev. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield and J. H. French, Dr. H. Guinness, and the pastor, Rev. Edwin H. Ellis. Twenty-four fatherless girls and boys are now in the Homes.

Methodist.

The Methodist New Connexion Chapel Fund income amounts to £747. Out of this the committee has paid fourteen ordinary grants in sums from £140 downwards. This means an enormous reduction of trust debts, for each grant has been conditional on some great local effort.

At the recent quarterly meeting of the Sunderland (St. John's) Wesleyan Circuit the retirement of the superintendent, Rev. L. Railton, at the end of two years, owing to partial failure of health, was announced. Many expressions of regret and sympathy followed, and of hope also, that by continued rest he may be fitted for renewed active duty in 1903.

Exeter Wesleyan Methodists have recently been giving very earnest attention to the question how to help village Methodism. By a unanimous vote of the quarterly meeting it was decided to engage a home missionary to take charge of three villages situated within an easy distance of one another—Kenford, Exminster and Alphington.

There are to be some re-arrangements of the staff of the West London Mission. It is understood that no minister will succeed Rev. J. Gregory Mantle at the West London Mission after Conference. The morning service in St. James' Hall will be taken by Rev. C. E. Walters, and the evening service by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. From time to time Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, when in London, will preach at the morning service. The place of Rev. W. H. Lax, at Craven Hall will be filled by a probationer.

At the annual Conference of the Independent Methodists the subject of Methodist reunion received some attention. The Connexional editor, Rev. A. Mounfield, remarked that the time has not come for the discussion of the subject as touching themselves, as it is clear that their chief kinship is with the Society of Friends. The denomination has not hitherto attempted any direct foreign missionary work, but at the recent Conference the establishment of a fund for the purpose, and the equipment of medical missionaries, were decided upon.

The Wesleyan Twentieth Century Fund now stands at £894,291 12s. 10d. If all outstanding promises—conditional and unconditional—from circuits and friends were now paid in, administration could begin, and in eighteen months interest would complete the million sterling and go a long way towards paying expenses. The Methodist Recorder says:—"Remembering all the way the Lord our God has led us since 1898—the successes, comparative failures, the hard-plodding toil, the protracted sacrifices of the poor, the unavoidable weariness which befalls communities as well as individuals after prolonged effort, it is cheering to know that the end is within sight."

Presbyterian.

Rev. Principal Forsyth, D.D., of Hackney College, has consented to "supply" Marylebone Church during Rev. Dr. Hanson's summer holidays. Dr. Forsyth will occupy the pulpit in August and the first two Sundays in September. Dr. Hanson hopes to resume work on September 21.

At the close of a recent Sunday evening service at St. James' Church, Bristol, a conference took place of those actively engaged in or interested in the work of the Church. As indicated by the minister (Rev. W. B. Cooper) in his opening remarks, the conference was held in order to stimulate the members to fresh views and ideas. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. Gray and McGregor on the social side of Christianity, by Messrs. Walker and Strange on the missionary side, and by Mr. Corfield on the place of praise in the service of the Church.

The Presbytery of London South recently met at Bermondsey for the purpose of inducting Rev. John Telfer (formerly of Lyon Street F.C., Glasgow) to the pastoral charge of the congregation, rendered vacant by the translation to East Ham of Rev. T. G. Murray. The Moderator, Rev. D. Smith, presided, and there was a capital attendance of the congregation. Rev. J. M. E. Ross, of Redhill, preached, and Mr. Smith gave the charges to minister and people. At the close of the service Mr. and Mrs. Telfer received a cordial welcome from the members of the congregation.

Society of Friends.

A Friends' Meeting is held at Bridlington every Sunday during the summer, in the Y. W. C. A. Rooms, Sewerby Crescent, at 11 a.m.; also an Adult School at the Temperance Hall, at 9 a.m. Visitors are at all times very cordially welcomed.

John Morland and Joshua and Isabella Rowntree are to form the deputation to attend the first of the new General Meetings of Australia. These Friends are also encouraged to any service which may open before them in Australasia, including New Zealand, the Meetings of which do not see their way to join the new organization at present.

William and Susan T. Thompson remained in London for nearly three weeks after Yearly Meeting, attending meetings on First-days at Wandsworth, Isleworth, Acton, Westminster, and Holloway. They also attended Westminster Monthly Meeting, and during the three weeks visited a number of aged and invalid Friends. Later they attended Essex and Suffolk Quarterly Meeting at Colchester, where their presence was much valued and felt to be very helpful. At the request of the Foreign Mission Committee of New England Yearly Meeting they have decided to go at once to Palestine, and further work in the British Isles is in consequence deferred for the present.

Salvation Army.

With the approval of the Local Government Board, the Malling Board of Guardians have arranged to send male paupers from their workhouse to the Army's Land Colony at Hadleigh.

Two new Rescue Homes for white and coloured women respectively are to be opened in Cape Town. The De Beers Mining Company has given a site in Kimberley for the erection of a Rescue Home there

Caxton House, 21, Mount Sion, Tunbridge Wells, has been opened as a Home of Rest by Mr. and Mrs. Huxtable. Services were held in connection with the opening. Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, gave a helpful message in the afternoon, and Dr. J. Morris, of Brighton, and others, took part in a public meeting held in the evening at the Corn Exchange.

The Christian.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

The King's Recovery, The removal of the King to Cowes, and the good progress he has made since, makes his ultimate recovery, humanly speaking, a matter of sure expectation. For this, not only the Royal Family, but the nation at large, have reason for profound gratitude. Under the shadow of this dark cloud, the throne and the people have been drawn together in closest sympathy. The Coronation, which has now been fixed for August 9, will be shorn of much of its scenic splendour; but its religious meaning and impressiveness should be immeasurably deepened for the King and for the nation.

Upon the Plaster of the Wall. In the light of recent events and possibilities, the warning of Daniel iv. 27 impresses itself upon the mind of the thoughtful reader. We are too prone to overlook the moral forces which underlie great political changes and national catastrophes, and to forget the warning that is behind the Divine declaration that "the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever He will." It is well for us, from the highest to the lowest in the State, to remember the fate of the great empires God weighed in the balance and found wanting—a fate which would be mysterious if we had not the Divine revelation of the hidden power which brought it to pass. The sentence which flamed upon the walls of Belshazzar's banquet-house may be uttered in regard to this kingdom, if we, too, are put into the balances of God. No huge army or proud fleet can keep the empire for us, if we, like the men of Babylon, fall down and praise the gods of gold and silver, and of brass, which are being set up.

"A Grain of Mustard Seed." Ninety-five years ago, two or three humble men in Staffordshire commenced a movement which in three years' time resulted in the formation of the first Primitive Methodist "class," with a membership of only ten. This month the society has 1,048 ministers, 5,114 places of worship, and 195,650 members. Paul planted and Apollos watered, but God gave the increase (1 Cor. iii. 6). And is there any reason why many movements of to-day, weak in their commencements, but built upon "the foundation that is laid, which is Jesus Christ," should not be equally blessed of God?

Nonconformists and the Establishment. In supporting one of the most objectionable features of the Education Bill, the Pilot, which is one of the soberest and fairest of the Church papers, says:—

> So long as the Church of England is established, we cannot see that the establishment, in a sense, of her voluntary schools is any additional hardship. It is a part of a larger system, which as yet Nonconformists have not seriously challenged.

If they had been true, these last words would constitute a serious reproach to those churches whose very existence is a protest against the "establishment" of religion in any form, and whose protest has been continuously made for three centuries by consistent, and often suffering, witness. The present educational controversy is, at any rate, calculated to quicken the earnestness of those who believe that religion should be formally dissociated from State patronage and control.

Christians and the Community. Do we always realize the value to a nation of its Christian people? What would England be without them? It is a high and glorious calling—to be children of God—light in the midst of darkness, salt permeating corruption. It is not for them to bow down their heads, or hang their harps on the willows. The world cannot do without them; they have much to live for, and life is only worth living in so far as they call others to share the life which is life indeed.

Christian Philanthropy. At any rate, even the world is forced to realize the value of the Christian from a philanthropic standpoint, as it sees the vans and trains laden with happy children off for a day in the country, or by the seaside, as well as the steady care for the poor and helpless all the year round, in which "the love of Christ constraineth us."

Romish Canonization. One chief reason why present Protestantism cannot oust Romanism, is the Romanism which remains in Protestantism. The rebuke to Sardis applies here—"I have not found thy works complete before my God." Even while we Protestants are loudly protesting, the spirit of ecclesiasticism, which is the essence of Romanism, increases among us. Take one concrete example. Every believer, every regenerate person, is called a saint; we are all saints by calling; "holy brethren, partakers of a heavenly calling"—called of God, redeemed by Christ, canonized by the Holy Spirit. Rome presumes to override this canonization of saints by Divine authority, and to appropriate the title exclusively to men and women of her own selection. How strangely it sounds to read this discrimination between Old and New Testament saints—Jeremiah and Saint John the Baptist; Daniel and Saint John; and even Saint John and Jesus.

Paul. "Our beloved Brother Paul" spoke of himself in his declining years as the chief of sinners. Earlier in his Apostolic days he had described himself and his fellow Apostles as "the offscouring of all things for Christ's sake." How distasteful to him must it be to have the Romish "Saint" with monotonous constancy prefixed to his humble but honoured name!

John. In the Book of the Unveiling, the disciple whom Jesus loved introduced himself to his fellow and suffering saints as their "brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and endurance in Jesus." How incongruous and contradictory to insist upon the Romish elevation above his fellow-saints, as if the term, with a capital S, belonged to him, but not to them!

An Ancient Error Repeated. Twice John fell at the feet of his angelic guide to worship him, but was each time arrested by the rebuke, "See thou do it not. I am thy fellow-servant. Worship God." What would John have thought could he have foreseen his prohibited error re-enacted, in the spirit of it, by the fellow-servants to whom he wrote, and of whom he was inspired to say, "His servants serve Him, and they see His face." Is not our calling John, our brother and companion, "Saint John" an error similar in kind to his falling down to worship his fellow-servant, the Angel-guide?

The Puritans. The Puritans, who were the Evangelicals of their day, avoided the Saint-prefix to the Evangelists or Apostles, or other of their brethren. But the Evangelicals of the present day have become so accustomed to hear and read it, that even those who on principle would avoid it, use the term unconsciously; many of them even defend the practice, and thus accredit the very Romanism against which, and the very Scriptural truth for which, they protest.

A Quack Remedy. Much has been written in regard to the recent striking remarks of Mr. Justice Grantham concerning the prevalence of serious crime in the County of Durham, which the judge attributed to the demoralizing surroundings of the miners. The chief point of the scathing utterance has, however, been largely overlooked, and stress has been laid upon the provision of more amusements for the people as a suggested remedy. The keynote of the unhappy condition of things is, as his lordship asserted, simply drink, to which the four murder cases, and a large proportion of the other crimes, were traceable. It is folly to suggest more amusements (with drinking-bars!) as a set-off against the beerhouse which, as Lord Randolph Churchill once said, "besets every man, woman, and, we may almost say, every child, of the working-classes of England."

Health and Efficiency. The interesting gatherings of the third International Congress for the Welfare and Protection of Women and Children, just held, have brought to light some important facts as to the conditions of physical efficiency in childhood. There is little doubt that the stamina of our people is decreasing. Recent statistics prove that the efficiency of the working-classes, especially in our large towns, is being gradually lowered, the predominating cause being insufficient feeding in infancy and childhood. Child and woman labour in factories also contribute toward the same deterioration. Sir James Crichton Browne, who presided, was, however, hopeful in his tone, and said that the spread of knowledge as to the true conditions of health, wholesome dwellings, fresh air, pure water, exercise and repose, with the increased facilities of rapid travel, and the consequent rise of healthy working-class suburbs, would help greatly to modify, and possibly to remove, the causes of this alarming state of things. Mens sana in corpore sano, is an old motto that demands all possible recognition.

The Government and the Rand. We hope it is true that the Government is about to take steps to control the liquor traffic in the Transvaal. The picture given by Reuter of the state of certain towns resembles that of some "wild west" settlement. Drunkenness, accompanied by violence and robbery, is so prevalent that some of the suburbs are quite unsafe at night; and a number of would-be saloon-keepers are waiting their opportnnity to step in and add to the general confusion immediately a licence is granted to them. Lord Milner's committee of inquiry has strongly advised that the Government shall at once step in and act at this "unique opportunity for radical changes." We have to remember that many emigrants are going out to South Africa —among them being a large number of young men—and it would be simple madness for the authorities to allow the saloon-keepers to seize the situation, and to demoralize the incoming residents. There must be no "wild west" methods permitted under the English flag. The Transvaal has been won at too dear a price to allow it to become the hunting-ground of men who pollute everything they touch.

The Shifting Theatre of Evil. The stern action taken by Belgium with regard to the suppression of gaming-houses in that country is, apparently, to be exploited by an unscrupulous gang, who, taking advantage of the situation, are about to establish gaming-houses in some of the fairest parts of France, which at present are frequented by persons in search of health. The most impudent advertisement appears in some of the French papers, openly declaring that the action of Belgium will be to the profit of the gamblers, and offering land and houses, and a beautiful situation, for the purposes of "high-class" gambling. Thus, while the evil is chased from Belgium, the same abomination is to be played in another arena. The only alternative is for all civilized Governments to act in concert in this matter, and to follow Belgium's lead. If, throughout Europe, this were done, it would be to the general advantage. The question is really an international one, and of the most vital importance, for these plague spots, established in the head of any country, infect persons belonging to every land. Let France take action, and no doubt Germany and Italy would follow suit.

President Roosevelt and the Trusts. The President of the United States is a brave man, otherwise he would never have taken up the line which he has with reference to the Trusts. That these may be—to use the President's words—a "serious menace" to the liberty and well-being of the country, is very generally felt. Seeing that the Government, of which President Roosevelt is the head, was virtually put into power by the great financial magnates who engineer these trusts, the task of seeking to put restraint upon their operations is rendered the more difficult; but he is approaching it with sagacity and sound judgment, and European nations will watch developments with much interest, for the tendency towards monopoly has begun to be apparent here as well as there.

"Do it Now." "Say not, To-morrow I will give—when thou hast it by thee" (Proverbs iii. 28). Do it now. Promptness in accomplishing our duty brings with it a distinct beatitude, whether in giving, or in the path of daily duty.

The Priest in the Philippines. The immorality and corruption of the priestly orders which have ruled so long in the Philippines have impelled the American Government to urge the Pope to withdraw them from those islands, since they are a standing menace to public morality and order. The Vatican refuses to do this, urging the plea, amongst others, that the accusations against the friars are partly false, partly exaggerated, and partly inexact. This evasion of indisputable facts does small credit to an authority that professes to be the only repository of Christian faith and morality. Many of these friars are notorious evil-livers, and a serious hindrance to religion in their midst. The strong stand taken by the American Government shows that it realizes that the one chance for a progressive and moral life there, is the expulsion of the curse of the celibate priesthood. Wherever this order has penetrated and held power, it has tended to lower the standard of social purity and spiritual living among the population.

The Bible in Italy. The attitude of the Vatican towards the popular use of the Bible is curiously vacillating. There is, on the one hand, a deep distrust of the Scriptures as an independent source of religious authority; and there is, on the other hand, an irresistible sense of its vital importance to the religious life. The leaders of the Vatican conference on Biblical studies deplore the dense ignorance of the Bible on the part of Italian Papists. Even the Gospels and the Acts are unknown in the homes and the schools. A new version of these books has just been published in modern Italian by the Vatican Press, copies of which are sold for 2d. A preface emphasizes the benefits of family reading of the Bible, and there are notes on practical personal religion in distinction to the prevalent formalism. The Pope has given his blessing to this movement! All lovers of the truth will wish it a great success and a wide reading. But the result in the minds and hearts of the people is assuredly likely to prove disappointing to the Pope!

The Followers of Loyola. The correspondence in regard to the actions and principles of the Jesuits, to which considerable attention of late has been given in the Press, will, at any rate, direct attention to the literature of the subject, if it does no more. Whatever doubt there may be as to the ethics of that body, its history is only too notorious, and the fact that Jesuits have been expelled from most Roman Catholic countries of Europe, and that in the days when England had the courage of her religious convictions their visits to, or residence in, these islands, was made illegal, is a striking commentary upon their specious claim to be the most devoted subjects of each country into which they intrude.

Resurgent Mohammedanism. One of the disquieting facts that meet us as regards the religious condition of India is the enormous increase of Mohammedanism during the last ten years. This religion shares with Christianity the distinction of being the only missionary faith in the world. Its advocates are awakening to the opportunities of the hour in our Indian Empire, and are straining every nerve to improve the position. While Brahminic Hindoos have decreased by more than half a million since 1891 (largely, it is said, through deaths by famine), Mussulmans have increased by nine per cent., or an aggregate of over 5,000,000. It is with this religion, which is still full of vitality, that the Christian Faith will come to a death-grip in the East. All other faiths are dying of inanition in the dawning light of education and Western culture; but the fanatical forces of Mohammed have a strong fascination and power over his adherents, who are particularly hostile to the Christian appeal. We must evangelise India before this movement blocks the way; in the proportion of its success it will vastly increase the difficulties in the path of our missionaries.

"To Every Creature!"

So ran the Lord's command. So the Lord intended. He never said what He did not mean. He only requires that which He will make possible, if there is honest and unquestioning obedience. Yet even in these days of steam and electricity—in these days when the whole wide world nearly is opened up to the scientist or the man of commerce—how many millions of our race are still in heathen darkness, slaves of sin and Satan, and knowing nothing yet of the Deliverer who is mighty to save! We know that God willeth not the death of sinners. The mouth of the Lord has clearly declared the facts. To doubt this, is to doubt the Word on which we rest for our own souls' eternal salvation.

We know that it is the Lord's desire that all should hear His message of Good Tidings. He has so commanded. The only conclusion to which we can come is, that as the Lord has left this important work in the hands of His Church, there has been failure somewhere. Considering the tremendous needs, the wide areas still practically untouched, the proper position for the people of God in every place is to be in the dust before Him confessing this failure, and pleading, as never before, that the Lord of the harvest will still, in great mercy, send forth labourers into his harvest.

In view of the facts of the case, we may well confess the sins of those who are holding back from service to which the Lord must be calling them. For that someone, somewhere, is not doing the Lord's will must be evident. We pray—do we pray?—for the heathen, that they may get the light. May we not, with equal propriety, plead that the Lord's people may be more deeply moved to do far more to show the love they have for their Lord, by seeing that nothing that can be done by them is left undone, that the Saviour's command may be fulfilled?

Travelling between two mission stations in this province of Yunnan some time since, the writer journeyed for thirteen days without passing one place where the Gospel was being preached. We thank God for the two stations opened. Twenty-four years ago there were no places in the whole province where the Gospel was made known. Still, between these two points, the people that may remain, and those who in the meantime have come upon the scene, are as far from God, and nearly as hopeless, as they were twenty-four years ago.

Yet how practicable it would be for many of the Lord's people to live in a climate like many parts of Switzerland, and be the medium of bringing life and salvation to very many, and thus hasten the return of our blessed Lord and Master for whom we are waiting!

There never was a time in the history of China when there was a better opening for, and more need of, those who would know nothing among men but Jesus Christ and Him crucified. Will not the Church of Christ take advantage of these openings, for her own sake, as well as for the sake of the heathen?

Coming to Christ.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

THE closing interview between our Lord and the Apostle whom Satan had so cruelly "sifted," but whom the gracious Master had saved from the utter and complete shipwreck of faith, furnishes a lesson which is sorely needed, not only by numbers of religious inquirers, but even by the Church itself to-day. The question which Peter addressed to the Lord was one of a curiosity so natural that, as we read, we feel as if it were ready to spring unbidden to our own lips. The future of Peter himself had been outlined; many feelings, some noble and others selfish, led him to inquire about his old friend and comrade, John. For the sake of the little company, the Church, which had not yet learned to attach any mystic meaning to the society or its name, but which must have had a peculiar sanctity for all its members, he might reasonably wonder what part John would play (John xxi. 21).

But the Lord does not shed a solitary ray of light upon that future, except one which makes clear the practical duty of each and all. "What is John's destiny to thee? Follow thou Me."

So is it everywhere in the Lord's teachings. He does not satisfy even what might be regarded as a proper anxiety about the coming of the heavenly Kingdom. He would not even gratify their human desire to know whether His salvation would be enjoyed by the multitude of men, or only by the few. From all their speculations, or wishes, or hopes, He sends them back to the lines of personal faith and obedience. "Strive to enter in at the strait gate." "Follow thou Me." "Him that cometh to Me, I will in no wise cast out."

WHAT IS COMING TO CHRIST?

It is superfluous to say that this question is one of tremendous and far-reaching significance. The Christian life is all wrapped up in the one distinctive act. It is surely of importance that there be a clear understanding of what it involves. And it is all the more important that we examine it, because it is so familiar and apparently so simple a parable that the way-faring man, though a fool, cannot err in it. Yet even the story of the Gospel may lead into doubt as to this very comfortable persuasion. One example alone will I quote. The young ruler who approached Jesus with such external deference certainly thought that he had come to Him. But the Lord, on the contrary, reveals him to himself, and bids him first go and cast away his idol, and then come and follow Him.

The difference is thus indicated between the mere excitement of the moment, even though it might seem to have in it a glow of enthusiasm, and the absolute faith in the love and power of the Son of Man, which would constrain to the obedience both of the heart and the life. The event showed that difference. When the Lord entered into Jerusalem, the multitude rent the welkin with their shouts of adoration, and there were those who dreamed that He had come to take possession of His Kingdom. That He had produced a deep impression on the people everywhere, is evident on the face of the record. Take that wonderfully graphic picture drawn by Mark, "And when they were come out of the boat, straightway the people knew Him, and ran round about the whole region, and began to carry about on their beds those that were sick, when they heard where He was. And wherever He entered, into villages, or into cities, or into the country, they laid the sick in the market place, and besought Him that they might touch if it were but the border of His garment; and as many as touched Him were made whole."

There is a popularity which compelled the enemy to say, "The world hath gone after Him!" But when the time of trial came, it was seen how few had really come to Him. Multitudes had been interested, filled with wonder, perhaps quickened with hope of the great things He would do for them; but they did not believe in Him. And so when the disciples met together after the Ascension the number of them was only 120. The question of the Master on a memorable occasion might well have been put with still more emphasis: "Were there not ten cleansed; where are the nine?" His blessing like a line of light marked all the path He trod, and men who rejoiced in it flocked to Him, feeling the charm of His personality and the wisdom of His teaching, and rejoicing in the gifts of healing He bestowed. But the crowds melted away and the true believers who remained were the little company that met in the upper room.

The successors of both these classes are with us to-day. It is not popular to pass contempt on the name of Christ. A limited circle reject His claims altogether, but the more fashionable course is to honour Him with the lips, but to keep Him outside the door of the heart and the rule of the life. It is assumed that those who insist on the virtue of His sacrifice and the supremacy of His rule, who worship Him as God and trust Him as Saviour, are men of fossilized intellect and narrow head, slaves of tradition, worshippers of the past. We are in the midst of what it may be hoped is only a passing phase of thought—an idle tendency of the hour—but while it lasts it seems to be sufficient to brand principles supposed to be the most accepted and venerated, as worn-out shibboleths—fly-blown phylacteries—which should at once be cast aside. That is the ruling element in the political world, and the same holds good in relation to spiritual truths. The cry in many quarters is for something new. It is forgotten that the quality of truth never changes. Especially is this true in relation to Him who is the very pillar and ground-work of the truth. Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. What He did in the remote past He is doing still, and He will do in the limitless future. His appeal to men to-day is the old one, "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

The story of the Master's ministry on earth then teaches us to define "Coming to Christ" as something very different from any outward expression or service.

AMONG THE TWELVE

disciples was one who had never come to Christ. The opportunities granted to the others were enjoyed also by him, and those who had any knowledge of the Apostolic band knew him as one of its members; but yet he certainly had not the character of a disciple, nor did he enjoy a disciple's blessings. It is not necessary to assume, nor indeed is there any warrant for the supposition, that he joined the little company as a traitor. But his at best was merely an outward sympathy and an outward service. In some way the charm of Jesus may have fallen upon him. His fellowship with the Master and his fellow disciples may not have been one unbroken lie. There must have been some influence which attracted him to the company. We may even conceive it possible that there were hours when the crust of hard selfishness which was round his heart seemed ready to dissolve. But these times of visitation passed by, and he remained impenetrable and selfish, while the falsehood in which his spirit was wrapped became colder and harder than ever. He began a superficial disciple, he ended a perjured traitor. Judas and Peter were members of the same band, but a whole eternity separates the traitor from him who uttered the exultant confession, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

Not till a man has learned this, and is able from the heart to confess it, has he come to Christ. This is not a dogma which the intellect examines and then receives or rejects. It would be trifling with great realities were we to pretend that the intellect has no place in the great revolution through which the soul has to pass before it submits itself to Christ. A man will not yield himself to Christ as His servant to obey, unless he believes that there is a Christ, and that there are reasons why He should be trusted, loved, obeyed. But if this belief be a mere act of the intellect by which neither heart nor life is touched, there has been no coming to Christ.

Before that crucial event in the soul's history

THERE MUST BE A VERITABLE TURNING.

It is just this inward change which so many are unwilling to contemplate. They may be students, and really interested students of Christianity, and of the Lord Himself. They will spend hours in investigating the records of the Divine life, and, it may be, in starting new theories of interpretation which are characterized by ingenuity, though possibly lacking in sobriety of judgment. But of the Christ Himself, as He makes Himself known to the humble penitent and the rejoicing believer, they are profoundly ignorant. The birth of this faith is the true start of spiritual life.

A very gratifying statement made to me by a Christian friend, relative to a young believer whom it was my privilege to receive into the church of which I was the pastor, affords an impressive illustration. "You have no idea," said my friend to me, "of the change there has been in —— since her decision for Christ. All in the house notice it, and it is the more remarkable because it was so unexpected. She was always so gentle and amiable that we had hardly anticipated the possibility of any visible change; but we see it everywhere." It was a remarkable testimony of what conversion may be, even in the case of one whose instincts and feelings seem to be religious. Yet there was a distinct change of influence, motive, and aim, when once she had felt the preciousness of Christ, and yielded herself to Him. And this change was a revolution, and not an evolution.

Gospel Paper for Jews.—From time to time our attention has been called to the efforts of Mr. M. Gilbert, of Bristol, in evangelistic work among the Jews. The lines are not ordinary; the worker has a remarkable facility for writing in Hebrew, as well as in Judeo-German. His ministry lies here, and his paper—a thirty-two page magazine—called Kol Shophar ("The Voice of a Trumpet") is being read with avidity by Jews in many lands. In a letter to us, Rev. J. O. West, of St. Philip's Rectory, Bristol, speaks very highly of the worker, who has received from Jewish colleges in Central Europe appeals for more copies of his very attractive writings, of which, in effect, the Jews say, "they bring strange things to our ears." The paper is published by Rev. J. M. Eppstein, of the Wanderers' Home, 5, King Square, Bristol, from whom a specimen copy may be had for a penny stamp. It is hoped that friends of efforts for the enlightenment of the Jews will make it possible for larger editions of Kol Shophar to be circulated through the post among the perishing millions of Israel in Russia and elsewhere.

Conversion that Cost £3,000.

By Rev. C. H. YATMAN.

PREACHING is ofttimes very expensive for the listeners! But likewise very profitable. It cost one man who heard me 14,750dol. for a single discourse; and yet I was none the richer, save in gladness of heart and joy of mind.

Those who think the Gospel of our risen Lord has lost its power to produce great upheavals in human life should read the unwritten records of missionaries, whose truth must of necessity be like fire against the secret iniquity of those before them, if any change come to their character by Christ. It is truth that makes men free. What prison is worse or what slavery more galling than that of a man locked in the cell of knowledge of his own foul deed, or chained to habit of wrong, the thought of which, day and night, is like unto the flesh-tearing lash of the Arab slave-trader?

The unheard groans and unmeasured pains of men in secret sin, if put in form of weight, would sink a world. The preacher knows this only too well, if he be a true preacher, and has knowledge of God, and of the Bible, and of men. Furthermore, he knows that here or hereafter there can be that there is no use in trying to heal the wound until the splinter is pulled out—and genuine repentance includes restitution, where it can be made.

Amid scenes of men engaged in making money—making it by means fair or foul—I stood in a crowded hall, facing an immense throng. Two out of every three of the company were men. By some good power of God, Jew and Gentile, rich and poor, good and bad, were there alike. The hymns were poorly sung; the people were in no humour to praise, and scarcely in any mood for prayer. Few bowed their heads when devotions came. The moment arrived for my message, which was "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper." That is a truth which God Almighty has written by history so plainly, that no one but a fool would pass it by unread.

For full forty minutes I affirmed the truth of the old Bible; history, experience, and conscience alike were with me in proof. They knew it was wicked to do wrong, that it was sinful to do evil, that it was criminal to break the laws of God. Little remains in memory of the immediate after-results in the hall, save that scores asked for prayer, and many bowed and wept when I gave the other truth that "Whoso confesseth and forsaketh his sins shall obtain mercy."

A MEMORABLE INTERVIEW.

The startling thing happened when I got back to my hotel. I was tired. It had taken life, real life out of me to preach that sermon. I laid my hat on a chair and flung myself on the bed, overcoat and all, completely exhausted. There was a knock at the door, but I was too much worn out to answer. It opened, and in walked a great, tall, fine-looking fellow, fully six feet, dressed as a cowboy, but good stuff; a large sombrero hat, which he kept on, and a big six-shooter stuck in his belt. For a moment he looked at me, and never said a word; then he turned, and locked the door, throwing the key on the floor.

What it all meant I did not know. The fact was I did not care. I had done my duty. I had "warned the wicked" in a faithful way; and if I was to die now, "with my boots on," as they very frequently do in that part of the world—why, I was ready.

The man pulled a chair up near the bed, sat down, elbows on his knees, hands to his cheeks, his great big brown eyes burning with fire, and looked straight through to my soul. That look lasted fully five minutes. He never spoke a word. I was too tired to utter a syllable. Suddenly he broke out:

"You hit me hard to-night!"

I made no answer.

"Say, can you help a man that lives in hell, and wants to get out?"

I leaned up a little, propped my head with my hand, and asked:

"Who is the man?"

"I, great heavens—I am the one!"

"Tell me about it—let all out, and if I can help you I will. If I cannot, I know One who can."

"Who is that?"

"God."

I sat up on the edge of the bed, and out of the broken heart of my rough visitor came a sad tale of sin. He was at the head of a great ranch, whose cattle, and cotton, and wool made its English owner rich. As trusted agent and manager, he had stolen over thirteen thousand dollars. Stealing makes a man a thief, and the truth of the sermon in the hall had shown him his real self. It was not so much the money that he had stolen, as the thought of what the stealing had made him—a thief! I can hear him repeating it now.

"I'm a thief! I'm a thief! What shall I do?"

I told him. It needs no lawyer to give advice in such a case.

"Repent; restore the money; ask God for mercy. Let Him give you a new heart and a good life. Let Him make you good, and keep you so."

He was well able to pay back all he had taken. It was his own proposition to add the interest. We figured it all out at six per cent. —fourteen thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars in round figures.

There is one Englishman who should love America to that amount; at least, he is £3,000 sterling in pocket. The Gospel did it.

My tiredness somehow had left me. When we arose from our knees, where both had prayed, I said:

"Isn't it good to be made good?"

"Yes, better than gold," said he.

And if any would like to know why one branch of the Christian Church is making such headway in the South-west, I can tell, by pointing out a great-hearted, brown-eyed, six-foot Christian gentleman, whose tireless energy is given to the extension of a Gospel that has real power. This he knows full well.

"Do We Know Our Bibles?"

DEAR SIR,—To my mind, the want of the knowledge of the Bible is the cause of weak Christianity. Peter said to new-born babes (Christians) that they should "desire the sincere milk of the Word, that they might grow thereby." Well-meaning Martha asked the Lord Jesus to set Mary to work, but He would have her sit and feed on his Word; and what a delightful Christian she became!

What impressed me in 1875, when listening to D. L. Moody, was that it was all in the "Book." There was life, light, and joy to be found there, and, thank God, I found it to my delight, and cannot in any way separate the incarnate and written Word, and do not wish to. Dear Moody said before he died that he expected the preaching of the twentieth century would be that men would stand up with an open Bible and teach it to the people, like Nehemiah did of old. Most people, even so-called Christians, look upon the Bible as a task book, instead of God's love-letter to us, and the greatest delight.

Of old there was great joy because they "understood the words" of the Book. It was compared to great spoil; it was their delight day and night, sweeter than honey and the honeycomb. Ministers seem to take it for granted that the people know their Bibles, instead of the reverse; it should be their business to take every opportunity of teaching them what the Book says, instead of giving people's opinion upon it. The "common people" heard Christ gladly, and "pressed upon Him to hear the Word of God"; and I believe they are as ready to listen as ever, but often only get a stone instead of bread.

The error is still "not knowing the Scriptures, neither the power of God." I have been trying to get as much of the Word of God into as many as I can for many years, and find it answers. I was pleased the other Sunday evening to find, when I asked for texts chiefly with the word "know" in them, that for nearly three quarters of an hour text after text was repeated without opening their Bibles. "If a man love Me, he will keep My words." "He that loveth Me not keepeth not My sayings."

Yours faithfully,

S. T. H.

The Ministry of Prayer.

I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, that shall never hold their peace day nor night; ye that make mention of the Lord* keep not silence and give Him no rest† till He establish, and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth (Isaiah lxii. 6, 7).

"Keep not silence"—ye whose service is a hidden life of prayer,
Yours—a ministry of blessing—reaching, touching everywhere—
Linking hearts (else widely severed) with the golden chain of love,
Binding them by unseen fetters to the Mercy-seat above.
Eph. iii. 14-19. Col. iv. 12.

"Keep not silence"—watch and labour, live a life of constant prayer,
For each friend still unconverted—whose salvation is your care.
"Day and night"—for years it may be—have you agonized and cried
To the God so "rich in mercy," yet the answer seems denied?
Gal. iv. 19. Gen. xviii. 23-33.

"Keep not silence"—for He treasures all your prayers, and sighs, and tears;
Precious is the faith that trusts Him, though no sign as yet appears.
"Day and night" before His footstool, make your earnest, "deep" request;
Till He grant your heart's petition give Him not a moment's rest.
1 Pet. i. 7. Isa. vii. 11 (marg.).

"Keep not silence"—praying mother! Are some prayers unanswered yet?
Though thy wayward child still wanders, God will not thy cry forget.
"He is working" and will surely all thy heart's desire fulfil;
Meanwhile let thy life bear witness, acquiescent in His will.
1 John v. 15. Isa. lxiv. 4 (R.V.).

"Keep not silence"—for He loves thee, loves thy pleading voice to hear;
Though He may delay the answer—'tis sweet music in His ear.
He, too, "earnestly remembers"—and at last "thine eyes shall see"
That "a praise" to their Redeemer all thy children's lives shall be.
Jer. xxxi. 20. Isa. lxii. 7.

"Keep not silence"—Vineyard toilers, here, and in far distant lands,
Need God's praying ones to aid them, strengthening their feeble hands.
"His remembrancers" He names you, and for prayer unceasing calls
Till His Kingdom is established, and the power of Satan falls.
St. Matt. ix. 37, 38. Eph. vi. 18, 19.

"Keep not silence"—Intercession is the incense God demands;
Fragrant are the prayers and praises "lifted up by holy hands"—
In the name of Jesus offered, not one earnest cry can fail,
"Fervent and effectual" pleadings of the righteous "much avail."
1 Tim. ii. 8. James v. 16.

"Keep not silence."—Ye are watchmen heralding the dawning day,
Soon "the King of Glory" cometh—soon "Earth's shadows flee away."
When with those, won through your pleading, you His song of triumph share,
You will praise Him that your service was "the Ministry of Prayer."
Isa. lii. 8. 1 Thess. ii. 19, 20.

Holidays for the Poor.—The workers of the West London Mission are desirous of providing a brief holiday for many of the poor among whom they work, and who are unable themselves to get away from the baking streets and pavements, and the stifling atmosphere of their one small room. One of the Sisters knows of a frail, delicate girl, deserted by a worthless father, suffering from spinal trouble, and living in an underground kitchen, where light and air can hardly penetrate. Her one hope of health and happiness is a change to sunshine and fresh country air. Another case is that of an honest, hard-working man in delicate health, who has a wife and three children to support, and who has not slept out of London for twenty years. These are but two instances of hundreds of equally pathetic cases. Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes may be addressed, 8, Taviton Street, Gordon Square, W.C.

By Mr. CHARLES COOK.

THE ground was private, and the text was plain. No one could misunderstand it; it was intended as a warning, and there was no doubt that the proprietor meant business, for one or two stout-looking men in velveteens might have been observed on the estate, capable of dealing either with trespassers or poachers.

There is a legend that Satan had taken away a young monk, and that when an elder brother of the monastery charged the devil with the theft, he replied, "He came upon my premises and I took him." The younger man on the night of his disappearance had been seen to enter a theatre.

"Trespassers will be prosecuted." I have known many a young girl act in contradiction to the Word, and become "unequally yoked with unbelievers," in the vain and foolish hope of winning her husband to Christ. I have never known one case where this result was obtained; it has always and invariably brought calamity and distress, which in many cases were lifelong. We cannot put "old heads on young shoulders;" but, my sister, have a care. "Only in the Lord" is safe advice.

Parents who have sent their children to convent schools, mistresses who have engaged Roman Catholic servants, young men who have been influenced to engage in gambling or horse-racing, the youth of both sexes who have been tempted to spend Sunday in cycling, and otherwise to neglect the House of God, have found out to their cost that "Trespassers will be prosecuted."

Our text, however, principally applies to those of us who acknowledge the Bible as the law of our life; and in the light of the fact that there was never a time in the history of the Church of God when so much backsliding was seen, we do well to warn Christians who are in danger of stepping aside that it is "an evil thing, and a bitter, to forsake the Lord your God." We neglect the reading of His Word, prayer becomes a duty, the prayer-meeting is irregularly or never attended, and then heart backsliding gives place to open backsliding.

A celebrated pianist once said, "If I am away from my instrument for one day only, I am myself conscious that I have lost something; but if I happen through business to be absent from the keyboard two days consecutively, my relations can tell I have lost touch, and am not myself. And on one occasion, through sickness, I was unable to be in my usual seat, and when I essayed to play in public, there was a visible murmur in the disappointed assembly—they knew that something was wrong."

O brother-believer, does not this touch our consciences? Are we not sometimes out of communion, and we know it? Our gracious Lord may not permit the world always to discern it, but those nearest to us are aware we are not "in touch" with Him.

When Christian and Hopeful made their escape from Giant Despair, and got out of By-path Meadow, they erected a pillar, and put on it the words, "Over this stile is the way to Doubting Castle," and then they sang:

> Out of the way we went, and then we found
> What 'twas to tread upon forbidden ground.
> Let them that after come now have a care,
> Lest heedlessness make them as we to fare;
> Lest they for trespassing his prisoners are,
> Whose Castle's Doubting, and his name Despair.

Our God has said, "Return unto Me, ye backsliding children, for I am married unto you." And again, "I will heal their backslidings; I will love them freely."

I looked at the text—that is, the advertisement—and then at the lantern slides, and to an expert's eye there was something unusual about them. They were supposed to represent "The Pilgrim's Progress." But they were not like Bunyan's pilgrims, and presently I discovered why! They were life models, but bad at that. They were men-made pilgrims, and in costume favouring the æsthetic rather than the Puritanic, and I rejected them as utterly unworthy of their magnificent creator.

One of the most serious objections the unconverted raise is, that we who profess to be "pilgrims and strangers" live as worldlings live, and that we so little resemble the Lord who "was despised and rejected." They complain, "You are often seen enjoying the world's amusements, accepting the friendship of the world, who hated and put to death the Lord; and not infrequently stand charged with actual wrong-doing before the world's tribunals." If this be so, what wonder if the world stumble over our failures? God makes no mistakes. He sees us as we are, whether we be "imitators of God," or followers of Satan; and when He draws our character in His Word, we may be sure the text, "Taken from life," is correct in every detail.

Was it not the Great Protector who, when the artist inquired if he should paint him with or without the well-known mole on his face, replied, "Paint me as I am, sir, paint me as I am."

"Have your likeness taken, sir?" said the photographer's tout, as we passed along the Edgware Road.

"Had it taken once." "Yes, sir; where?"

"Third of Romans. Listen: 'Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips; whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness; their feet are swift to shed blood,'" &c. But the man had disappeared!

Entering the dining-room of a friend at Ramsgate, I noticed an enlargement of a photo hanging on the wall which amused me. A little boy had climbed up to the second shelf of the cupboard; with one hand he was holding on, and with the other clasping a pot of jam, and was about to enjoy a stolen feast; but his eyes are turned towards the door. My friend is a splendid amateur photographer, and had been out after specimens. Coming in with his Kodak, in which was an unused dry-plate, at the very moment his boy was at the cupboard, he could not resist a "snap-shot"; the click of the opening shutter caused the boy to turn his head, and the unerring light had done the rest. Result: An enlargement which is almost "as large as life, and quite as natural."

"Heaven has countless eyes to scan men's acts"; and our Father sometimes permits our faults, and even our sins, to be seen and known to others.

> Christian, walk carefully, danger is near,
> On in thy journey, with trembling and fear.

Evening Prayer.

> Holy Saviour, go before us
> In life's journey, dark or bright;
> Spread Thy tabernacle o'er us
> Ere we close our eyes to-night.

Christians at the Seaside.

MANY Christians who are now gathering at the seaside for their annual holiday are active workers in their own neighbourhoods. While away from home, they may effectually do good in the Master's name. During visits from time to time to places of popular resort, I have on several occasions joined parties of Christian friends, who have met at the head of a pier or jetty, on the beach or on the sands, and have there in the evening united in the singing of well-known hymns. Many have crowded round to listen to what has proved to them, indeed, the Gospel of the grace of God. It is possible in this way to reach those of all classes of society, who will not put themselves within the reach of more regular means of grace.

This is a kind of work that is purely unsectarian. All Christians can engage in it, and townspeople and visitors alike may lend it their aid. Great care, however, must be exercised if a spoken address is attempted. The speaker should be a wise and educated man, and even he should confine himself to a short and pointed Gospel address, which must contain in it nothing of a controversial character. A meeting can be very easily called at any named spot, and at short notice. A few small bills posted about the town during the day never fail of securing a good attendance, a large number of whom are sure to be active Christians. Before commencing, a selection should have been made of suitable pieces for singing. And there are many well-known and beautiful hymns and solos that are specially suited for singing at the sea-side. One good voice starting off will find ready support from bystanders.

I shall never forget an afternoon which I once spent in

THE OLD CASTLE AT CARISBROOKE.

A lovely morning had drawn a very large number of visitors to the familiar ruins. At about two o'clock a very severe storm came on, which lasted till about five. The rain poured down so fast that hardly any of the party thought it wise to leave. I was standing with many others in the large hall when my attention was arrested by a small group of ladies and gentlemen, all members of one party. From their air and carriage it was easy to see that they were of superior social standing. The gentlemen seemed to be urging one of the ladies in the company to do something special. I overheard one of them say to her: "You begin, we will support you, and many here will soon help us. Do this for Jesus' sake." This was enough. Presently the lady commenced to sing in a most commanding and beautiful voice, "Rock of Ages cleft for Me." The effect was magical, the attention of all was arrested, a full chorus of musical voices soon swelled the hymn of praise, and for about an hour and a half we had a glorious service of sacred song.

It was plain to see who were Christians and who were not in that gathering. Those who were Christians drew closely round the singer, the others seemed to slink away. But the good that was done that afternoon was doubtless great. From the pathos and deep feeling in many voices it was evident how much it was to them a service of heart worship. I mention this incident only to show what good may be done in a very simple way. Besides this, I remember many blessed times at Ramsgate and elsewhere. I shall have secured my object in recalling these incidents if I lead some of our friends now in the country, and those who are leaving for the seaside, to act upon the suggestion.

One word of caution, however. Previous experience leads me to advise friends to be careful not to allow any begging musician to make this a profitable opportunity for carrying on his avocation. An instrument is an advantage, but it had better be dispensed with, unless a gentleman, or church, in the neighbourhood should volunteer the free use of one. Of course no manner of money collection should be permitted on such occasions.

SUNDAY, July 27. Deuteronomy xxx.

THIS chapter is as full of comfort as the previous one is terrible in its denunciations, and in its description of the far country into which the people would be driven on account of their disobedience. But in the opening verses, which invite our heed, sweet and comforting words are said about return. "If thou shalt return . . . then the Lord thy God will have compassion on thee, and will return, and gather thee." If any backslider shall read these words, who is conscious that things were better with him once than they are now, who in his far country longs after restoration and renewal, who is willing to put away the evil thing which has been his downfall, let him be of good cheer; God is even now returning to him, full of compassion, and is about to gather him to His arms of love, as the father did the prodigal son.

But there is something better even than this: forgiveness for the past, and for the future the heart set free from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, and taught to love and live; then plenteousness of success in the work which the hands do for God; then life spent in the joy of the Lord (9); then repossession of the land of rest and peace (5).

The following paragraphs are full of life (15, 16, 19, 20). But life is the present tense of love. Life without love is existence only; existence with love becomes life. Hence they are also full of love (16, 20); and of obedience, which is the gauge and measure of love (14, 16, 20). But the Apostle, quoting the notable paragraph 11-14, applies it to our Lord Jesus (Rom. x. 6-8). How near He is to us, and how accessible! We need not go to heaven to bring Him down, or to the vault of the grave to bring Him hither. He is nigh—"in thine heart." Seek Him there!

MONDAY, July 28. Deuteronomy xxxi.

The life of Moses seemed incomplete: "Thou shalt not go over this Jordan." This incompleteness has often befallen men. They have died in mid-career, when so many of their plans were only half-fulfilled. What can we say of this? Can God view with equanimity broken columns, unfinished pictures, paths that lead out on the moorland and lose themselves? Ah, but remember; first, that the work is not left undone—Joshua completes the unfinished task, and causes the people to inherit the land; and secondly, that the worker goes forth to other labours. Centuries after, we read that heaven is singing the song of Moses, the servant of God, from which we assuredly gather that God had found some high service for him, and that other Red Seas were being crossed beneath His up-lifted rod, and other Egyptians being overthrown. Moreover, was he not chosen as one of the heavenly embassy to speak with Christ on the Transfiguration Mount?

Then also we can see why his majestic presence was withdrawn. Evidently it obscured the vision of God's almighty help. This is doubtless the reason why Moses draws such repeated attention to the fact that God would go before His people. "The Lord hath said to me, Thou shall not go over this Jordan; the Lord thy God, He will go before thee." (See also verses 6, 8.)

Notice the double provision made to keep Israel in mind of their part of the covenant. First, the law was to be read before the entire congregation of Israel; and secondly, the song of the following chapter was to be taught, to be a witness against the rebellions and provocations of the people. What a word is that, "I know their imagination . . . even now, before I have brought them into the land" (21); yet God did bring them in. May we not believe that, though God knows as much against us and more, yet He will not fail us? Ah, Father, before Thou didst set Thy love on us, Thou knewest the worst against us! Yet didst Thou not withhold it from us.

This is Moses' swan-song. It demands very careful reading. It underlies so much of the after-scriptures. Throughout the centuries it has still been dropping as the rain, and distilling as the dew.

NOTICE HIS NAMES FOR GOD. The Rock (4, 15, 18, 30, 31); Jehovah (6); the Most High (8); God (El, the strong). The permanence and eternity of God seem to fill the heart of the great Lawgiver. What the everlasting rocks of Sinai are to the shifting sands of the desert, such is God amid the changes of this mortal life.

THE METAPHORS APPLIED TO HIM. That He keeps His people as the strong frontal bones and the delicate fringes of the eye-lash protect the eye; that He urges them sometimes from the nest, where they cower as unfledged eaglets, into the dizzy heights of air, not for their destruction, but to develop their powers of flight, ever swooping beneath when they are in danger; that He is a man of war, who whets His glittering sword, and makes His arrows drunk with blood (verses 10, 11, 41-43).

MOREOVER, NOTE THE DESCRIPTION GIVEN OF THE PRIVILEGES OF OBEDIENCE. Led (12); plentifully fed (13, 14); made to possess the choicest lands (8); compassed about, cared for, and kept (10). Ah, how much do these words imply of spiritual help and comfort for us who believe! Let us possess our possessions.

LEARN, ALSO, THE TERRORS THAT FOLLOW HARD ON REBELLION. When men wax fat and kick like a well-fed heifer, when they lightly esteem the Rock of their salvation and provoke God to jealousy, they incur terrible penalties (15, 16). They set themselves against the nature of things and the course of the universe. They become outlaws and rebels. Then the penalties pronounced in verses 21-35 befall to bring them to a better mind (36). Then He makes expiation for their sins, and receives them back to Himself (43).

WEDNESDAY, July 30. Deuteronomy xxxiii.

These exquisite beatitudes, pronounced by the dying Lawgiver on the tribes of Israel, should be compared with the last words of Jacob in Genesis xlix. The comparison will show how in some cases the experiences of the desert march had availed to reverse the sad and dark forebodings with which Jacob regarded their future. This is especially the case with Levi and Benjamin. And with what added depths and heights of blessing are other tribes mentioned, as in the case of Naphtali and Asher. It may be that you who began life under the ban of strong disadvantages may live to reverse them, and to turn the adverse current to flow in your favour; whilst others who had but two or five talents at the outset of their career will find them increased to four and ten. Each of the tribes comes in for special blessing, which may be appropriated by those of us who by faith are the children of the faithful Abraham.

But what an exquisite promise is contained in those closing words! That God rides through the heavens to our help; that His eternity is our home; that His everlasting arms are beneath our faltering steps; that He will precede us in our pilgrim way, and war, thrusting out our foes; that He is the shield of our help, and the sword of our excellency; that He is the fountain of our fertility in a thirsty land.

THURSDAY, July 31. Deuteronomy xxxiv.

The death of Moses was lonely, as indeed all death is:—

> Why should we faint, and fear to live alone,
> Since all alone, so Heaven hath willed, we die?

It was death with a vision, "The Lord showed him all the land . . ." Dr. Payson, when he was dying, said, "The city is full in my view; its breezes fan my face." Dying saints often reach out their hands towards sights and voices that are concealed from all beside themselves.

It was death in the Divine embrace. The words "according to the word of the Lord" (5) are explained by the Rabbins as signifying "by the kiss of God"—as though he were a tired child, over which God bent with parental tenderness, putting him to sleep with a kiss that drew out his life, so that he sweetly slept, to awake in Paradise. "So let me die, O my Father, when the day of labour is past and over; so give Thy beloved sleep!"

And the Lord buried him. His body must not be left to rot away in dishonour. And Satan must not steal it away to make it the centre of pilgrimage from all parts of the world, so that the valleys of Moab should become as roads to Mecca. Therefore God buried it with His own hand, and hid the secret of his sepulchre in His own heart. God buries His workers, and carries on their work. He hides their bodies, but establishes their handiwork (Psa. xc. 16, 17).

FRIDAY, August 1. Joshua i.

The Book of Joshua in the Old Testament resembles the Epistle to the Ephesians in the New. It tells of life in the heavenlies, when the believer has crossed the river of death with Christ unto sin, and has entered upon the rest of faith, in which the conflict is no longer with flesh and blood, but with principalities and powers, with the wicked spirits which rule the darkness of the world.

We have been blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ, but we must avail ourselves of, and claim, our privileges. In other words, the sole of our foot must tread upon, and so appropriate, all the blessings which are ours by covenant grace. The frontier of Israel extended as far as the river Euphrates on the one hand and the wilderness on the other, but except in the days of Solomon this magnificent stretch of territory was never covered. So the lengths and breadths of our land of promise exceed what most of us have attained. Let us survey our inheritance, and then by faith claim it for our daily sustenance and enjoyment.

Obedience is the correlative of faith. They are two sides of the same attitude of soul. We must be strong and very courageous to do, turning neither to the right hand nor to the left (7). The chapter rings with the words, Be strong. It is as though everything depended on strength of purpose. But this strength can only come when one is conscious of a Divine mission, rests on a Divine presence, and feeds on a Divine word.

SATURDAY, August 2. Joshua ii,

The New Testament credits Rahab with faith, and shows that she was taken into the families of Israel, and became one of the ancestors of our Lord, as to his human body. This is much for one of Gentile origin, and once of a nefarious trade. But her story proves how eagerly God seeks for those who love and fear Him, and how He is able to find the lost piece of money however far it may have rolled, and however defaced his image and superscription may have become.

Her creed was a very limited one. These were its clauses: that Jehovah had given Israel the land; that He also had dried up the Red Sea before their hosts; that He was God in earth beneath and heaven above; and that He would certainly bestow on them the city of Jericho, which was the key to the land. But though the articles of her creed were few, she held them with the same tenacious faith as that with which Abraham held the promises of the land and seed. Therefore, she stands for ever with him and others in the long corridor of faithful souls whom God delights to honour (Heb. xi. 31).

The Apostle James points out, beneath the impulse of the Divine Spirit, that she proved her faith by her works (James ii. 25). That she spoke deceitfully to those who inquired of her, was not approved by God, who is light, and in whom is no darkness at all; but we must remember the twilight of her religious knowledge, and be thankful that God deals with men according to the light they have, and not according to what they have not.

Notes From Madras.—I.

SPREAD over twenty-seven square miles, with about half a million of population, Madras City may rightly be called the "city of magnificent distances." It ranks third among the cities of India; and besides being a centre of learning and of missionary enterprise, and possessing the finest and largest hospital in India, and splendid institutions in the Christian College and Y.M.C.A. Buildings, it also has the doubtful privilege of being the headquarters of Theosophy. The leader, Colonel Olcott, is next door neighbour to Rev. and Mrs. R. J. Ward, who have for Anglo-Indian and Eurasian Young Women, the object of which is to train, irrespective of denomination, such as feel that they are called of God to devote themselves to mission work in India; and who, in view of this, are desirous of a period of systematic study of the Bible and of an Indian vernacular, spiritual training and help, with some preparatory experience in teaching, house-to-house visitation, and other evangelistic work.

Candidates must possess a good general education, and must be able to say conscientiously that they know they have been born again, and that they have fully yielded themselves to the will of God.

The story of how the Home came into existence is most fascinating, especially as told by Mrs. Longhurst Ward herself. For many years she had been working in the Y.W.C.A., and from the very first her heart went out towards the race which she considered so much sinned against.

The character given to Eurasians, even by some missionaries, is not of a confidence-creating kind. Said a Christian worker to me, who, no doubt, had legitimate cause for complaint: "They are proud, irritable, and unreliable; and while they lack the endurance of the Hindus, they have not the backbone of the Europeans." While this may frequently be true, instances can be shown which do not admit the generalizing of such a stern statement. The Gospel at any rate has not yet lost its power of transforming character, and some of the most efficient workers in the mission-field, both men and women, are Eurasians. But supposing the argument of their having inherited the weaknesses of their parentage on both sides to be true in its widest sense and largest application, this would only increase their claims upon us and our duties towards them.

Like the founder of the Anglo-Indian Orphanage at Poona, Mrs. Longhurst Ward thinks, with many others, that in the very nature of things, instead of being outside our sympathy, should be fit instruments for the conversion of others, and mighty factors in the spreading of God's kingdom among the Hindus. It was laid on her heart to open a training home for converted young women born in India. She did not know when and how, but she continued to pray, nothing wavering, and the Lord gave her the key to the future in the precious promise: "And they lodged round about the house of God, because the charge was upon them, and the opening thereof every morning pertained unto them" (1 Chron. ix. 27). Another verse answering the inquiring gaze of faith was: "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" (John xi. 40).

A number of missionaries, on being asked to express their opinions, agreed as to the necessity of such a training-home, and, with two single exceptions, they all thought it expedient that it should be conducted on undenominational lines.

In 1898 and 1899, while in England, Mrs. Ward became known by her requests for drawing-room meetings. Without taking any collections, she was able to arouse interest in her scheme, so that cheerful givers were not wanting.

UNDER THE BANYAN TREE.

In due time a beautiful house was purchased near the sea, marvellously cheap, considering the size, site, and extent of the place. While in Madras we had the pleasure of being the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ward. In order to facilitate our seeing the missionaries, they kindly arranged a meeting, which was held in the shade of a large banyan tree. This spacious and unusual drawing-room added much to the charm of handshakes and friendly chats among fifty or more Christian workers of Hindu, American, and British nationality. Such gatherings always have a stimulating effect upon the spirits of men, for union is strength, especially if it is in the bonds of Jesus Christ.

Eight young ladies are already receiving their training at West Hatch, Adyar. They alternate their studies with practical work, such as helping in the house and attending to the wants of little famine orphans, of whom there were twenty at the time of our visit. The number has increased since, and Mrs. Ward writes that they hope to bring it up to fifty. If the Lord opens the way they also hope to have some day a training-home for young men. An empty house not far from West Hatch, answers the conditions required. Our friends are waiting upon the Lord to manifest His will.

Rev. R. J. Ward, who is an honorary worker in the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society, spares himself as little as his wife does, giving Bible-readings, speaking at conventions, and holding missions wherever he is called. His work among the Boers, jointly with Mr. Mallis, was very successful. He has the joy of seeing his daughter following in his steps by taking up work for the Master in the training-home.

The Indian Famine.

POOR CHRISTIANS AIDED.

ON May 8 last, a plea was made in this column for poor Christian weavers in Rajputana, in the hope that each might be supplied with seed corn, and so saved from the hands of the money-lenders. In acknowledging a communication which we were subsequently enabled to send, Rev. J. Traill, of Jaipur, writes: "The gift of your readers was most opportune. The poor people were much in need. This will keep them out of the extortionate money-lenders' hands, and enable them to obtain seed corn. We have had seven years of scarcity. The people, among whom we have been having baptisms of late, since they came out on the Lord's side, are not allowed to take their drinking water from the village well. Their women and girls have been insulted, and their water-pots broken. I see in your kind remembrance of us a way to give them a well of their own, to which, at some future day, they will invite those who persecute them without a cause."

Writing on June 28, Mrs. Horne, wife of the esteemed editor of The Bombay Guardian, says: "No rain has fallen in poor Gujarat, and very little in the Deccan and Central Provinces. There are grave fears that a terrible famine will ensue. The official monsoon forecast was so terrible that Government tried to suppress it, and they now say that, as the forecasts in past years have been incorrect, there is 'no official forecast' this year. We are afraid that even Christian people are growing tired of the famines in poor India, and that the needed help may not be forthcoming."

Hidden Glory.

THE darkest shadows oft are cast
By brightest light,
And every cloud is said to have
A lining bright.
If, then, some shadows cross your pathway here,
Look right beyond them—there is glory there,
Tho' hid from sight.

To Get Lumber.

IN a letter from St. Peter's Mission, Lesser Slave Lake, Athabasca, N.W. Canada, light is thrown upon the missionary methods of the Roman Catholics. The writer is Archdeacon George Holmes (C.M.S.):—

"Three years ago, when we were about to prepare for building our Indian Boys' Home, we tried to arrange with the Roman Catholic Mission, who have a good saw-mill, either to saw our logs or sell us the lumber we required; but they blankly refused to have any dealings with us, on the ground that we were aggressive heretics. In the providence of God we found a man at the Athabasca Landing, the owner of a portable saw-mill, who was willing, at a great risk, to move it to Lesser Slave Lake, a distance of 200 miles; and being a very obliging man, and reasonable in his charges, he soon drew the custom of the place.

"Now, I am sorry to say that, through a change in his private circumstances, he is obliged to sell the mill. The priests, who belong to an exceedingly wealthy Order, and see an opportunity of gaining an advantage over us, and putting us to a great inconvenience, are trying to negotiate for the mill. The owner, however, is desirous of doing us a favour, even at a sacrifice to himself, and he offers it to us, as it stands, for £160. This is very reasonable, considering that it would cost £400 to import a new one of its kind.

"I have asked our friend to allow us six months in which to raise the funds to purchase it, to which proposal he has agreed. If we lose the mill, the priests will have gained a victory, because they not only refuse to sell lumber to us, as English missionaries, but also use it as a means of inducing our people to join them for worldly gain. If we are able to purchase the saw-mill, it will supply a long-felt need by way of starting a kind of industry for our Indians, for I am convinced that healthy employment is the next necessary thing to the Gospel."

The Gospel in France.

MANY who have followed with prayerful interest the mission work among Roman Catholics at Evian-les-Bains will learn with regret of the protracted illness of Miss Wellington. In consequence it has been found necessary to hand over the work to others. After much thought, prayer, and counsel with faithful friends and helpers, it was decided that the Society of Evangelization for France at Geneva should take the direction of the mission station. The Society has placed there a suitable evangelist-colporteur, who will work among the people, to continue and strengthen what has been already accomplished, and also extend and establish the work on a sure foundation.

In spite of the opposition from the priests, the workers have held on their way. The time from November to March is particularly difficult for the poor in this fashionable-season town, when everything seems to go to sleep. Two knitting meetings for the mothers are held each week, and more than one woman during the winter was heard to say: "The money I get for the knitting is my all; it buys me fire, light, and bread." To bring these poor ones into touch with the love of Him who cares for their souls and bodies has been the happy privilege of those responsible for carrying on the Mission. The Thursday and Sunday schools have been continued, and although the children have had to suffer persecution they have attended in goodly numbers.

The efforts of the evangelist during the year have been spent in visiting the villages even as far as twenty miles away, these journeys lasting four to six days. Thousands of Gospel tracts and books were given in these journeys, and thus the good seed has been scattered for future reaping. In handing over the mission to others, the Misses Wellington ask that the prayerful and practical sympathy extended to them in the past may be shown towards the Evangelization Society of Geneva in its efforts in Savoie.

The Late Mr. George Pearse,

FOUNDER OF THE NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

THIS remarkable mission worker, whose death we recently announced, was born on June 5, 1815, and finished his earthly pilgrimage at Hastings on June 30 this year. Hence he had completed his eighty-seventh year. He was a man of noteworthy enthusiasm and initiative; few servants of Christ have had the honour of being associated with so many efforts for the furtherance of evangelical and evangelistic Christianity as he.

In early life Mr. Pearse was troubled with sceptical thoughts; so he had in later years a tender consideration for such as were similarly perplexed. He was led to decide for Christ about the age of seventeen, and was a Christian worker from that time till his death—a noble record of service. As a stockbroker in the City of London he came into contact with the rush of City life, and was a general favourite amongst other members of the Stock Exchange. His heart, however, was far more occupied with the advancement of Christ's Kingdom than with worldly concerns. Content with earning a moderate living, he devoted the bulk of his time to the promotion of Christian enterprises, returning to resume his business when financial necessities required it.

Mr. Pearse was associated in church fellowship with the Open Brethren; but he was more open than even most of them, and delighted to take part in all efforts that were being put forth for the furtherance of the Gospel by true-hearted servants of Christ. It is, however, in connection with foreign missionary work that his name is particularly associated. Among the men whose influence specially affected Mr. Pearse was the zealous Mr. John Whitmore, also a stockbroker. He was an elder in the Baptist Church in John Street, Bedford Row, of which the celebrated James Harington Evans was pastor. Mr. Whitmore was one who was specially used in helping to lead the saintly Robert Chapman to a knowledge of Christ.

It is interesting to recall the fact that Robert Chapman was in the office of Messrs. Freshfield, solicitors of the Bank of England, and visited Mr. Whitmore's office on business. Mr. Whitmore spoke to him about his soul, lending him Doddridge's "Rise and Progress," and also bringing him under the influence of the faithful and earnest preaching of Harington Evans. Mr. Chapman was twelve years older than Mr. Pearse, but they were friends, so that Mr. Chapman was another of those who powerfully influenced him. Pastor Gossner, the missionary enthusiast, of Berlin, was another whose example and devotedness greatly affected our friend, and he used to say that Gossner's faith was such that he prayed missionaries into the field, and money out of people's pockets.

About 1850, Mr. Pearse took a leading part with Messrs. John and Robert Howard, of Tottenham, and others, in the formation of the Chinese Evangelization Society. Some ten or more missionaries were sent by this undenominational organization, and among them Mr. Hudson Taylor, who went out in 1853, he being then a young man of about twenty-one. The Chinese Evangelization Society encountered various difficulties, which resulted in its being dissolved; but several of the missionaries still continued their labours, and in 1865, Mr. Hudson Taylor, who had in the meantime returned to England, founded the China Inland Mission. In the following year the celebrated Lammermuir party sailed for China. Though, therefore, it cannot be said that Mr. Pearse had anything to do with the foundation of the C.I.M., which now has over 700 missionaries, yet the fact that he had been helpful in sending Mr. Taylor to China some years previously was to him always a cause of thankful interest. Like Robert Chapman, he was deeply concerned in the evangelization of Spain, and a letter which he wrote and published had a good deal of influence in leading to the taking up of missionary work on a more extensive scale in that dark Roman Catholic land.

Mr. Pearse married an accomplished widow lady who had two young daughters. Our friend was an exceedingly kind father to the two girls, who were much attached to him, but they died early. Mr. Pearse himself had two children, a girl named Dora (who died when about a year old) and a son, Whitmore, who lived to manhood, but was lost at sea, with all on board the ship, on his way to Canada. Previous to the death of his son, which greatly affected him, his wife had been taken to be with Christ, and he himself had rather a serious illness.

AMONG FRENCH SOLDIERS.

Mr. Pearse was married a second time to Miss Jane Bonnycastle, who had been led to Christ through the preaching of Dr. Grattan Guinness in Paris. She was an enthusiastic worker in France, and both he and his first wife had been deeply interested in her labours. Soon after this, Mr. Pearse decided to give up his business on the Stock Exchange, and with his wife to devote himself entirely to direct evangelistic work. They applied themselves specially to efforts among French soldiers, until their work was interrupted by the Franco-German war. Then they took in hand the visiting of such soldiers as were imprisoned in Germany, distributing Scriptures amongst them, and speaking to them of the Saviour. At the close of the war, they continued to labour among the soldiers throughout France, but the priestly power, which had been largely broken by the war, soon began to reassert itself in the French Army, with the result that the work was first hindered and ultimately stopped. Mr. and Mrs. Pearse thought that possibly there might still be opportunities amongst the French soldiers in Algeria, so in 1876 they visited that colony. There, however, they found obstacles similar to those encountered in France.

It was while staying in Algeria that the sympathies of our friends were drawn out for the Kabyles, the aboriginal race, who while Mohammedans yet seemed more open to the Gospel than most Mohammedans are. It was a time of drought and famine, and not a few were dying of starvation. Though greatly stirred, Mr. and Mrs. Pearse did not at this time take any definite steps for the evangelisation of the Kabyles; but, returning to France, sought for new doors through which they might get amongst the French people. The work of Miss de Broen and Dr. McAll had in some measure benefited by the exertions of Mr. and Mrs. Pearse before the war, and it occurred to Mr. Pearse that there was a great need of a better supply of religious literature for the use of the various missions in the country. He consequently arranged for the opening of a shop in the very heart of Paris, and took over the French tracts of the Dublin Tract Depot. The Depot Centrale, No. 4, Place du Theatre Français, thus became a centre from which streams of Christian truth flowed all over France. L'Ami de la Maison and Le Rayon de Soleil were issued from this depot, which became a meeting place for Christians interested in the welfare of France.

In 1880, Mr. Pearse handed this work over to a committee, by whom it is still carried on, and he and his wife determined to seek a new sphere for their energies. After consulting with Dr. Grattan Guinness, they decided to return to Algeria, to see if it were possible to inaugurate in whom they had previously been interested. The winter of 1880 and the spring of 1881 were spent in a tour of investigation, and in the following summer Mr. Pearse (assisted by Mrs. Grattan Guinness) published a small pamphlet, entitled "Mission to the Kabyles." In addition to this pamphlet, he wrote hundreds of letters to his friends. As a result, a small committee was formed, consisting of Mr. Pearse, Dr. Grattan Guinness, and Mr. E. H. Glenny. A few hundred pounds having been given to inaugurate the work, Mr. Pearse and Mr. Glenny went out to Algeria in the autumn of 1881, taking with them two brethren, one a Swiss and the other a Syrian, and established a small Mission at the village of Djemaa Sahridj, about eighty miles to the east of Algiers, and in the very heart of the mountainous country inhabited by the Kabyles.

At this time Mr. Pearse was over sixty-six years of age, and might very well have judged it wise to take things rather more quietly; but his energy and enterprise were unabated, and by letters to The Christian and private correspondence he still continued to stir up interest in the work, while he and his wife devoted themselves to labouring amongst the Kabyle, French, and other people in the neighbourhood of the city of Algiers. With others he put before the British and Foreign Bible Society the desirability of having a depot and agent in Algiers, with the result that Mr.

Lowitz, formerly of the British Jews Society, was appointed to the post. Mr. Pearse felt the great importance of having the Scriptures translated into the Kabyle tongue, and with the help of natives a commencement was made. Ultimately the Bible Society sent out Dr. Sauerwein, and the Gospel of John was translated and published. Since then M. Cuendet, of the North Africa Mission, has continued this work; and Mr. Pearse lived to see the remainder of the New Testament translated and published, also the Gospel of John revised —in other words, to see the whole New Testament translated and published in the Kabyle tongue in Roman characters.

In 1883, Mr. Pearse gave the direction of the work into the hands of a small council in England, with the design of devoting himself to independent efforts in fellowship with the mission he had founded. With his wife, he travelled extensively through various parts of Algeria, distributing Scriptures and tracts, and telling to small and great, as opportunity offered, the glad tidings of God's salvation. It is interesting to note that among the first donors who assisted Mr. Pearse in founding what is now the North Africa Mission was the late Canon Battersby, of Keswick, with whose name the Keswick Convention is so closely connected. Other helpers, either as referees or donors, included Lord Polwarth, Lord Radstock, Sir Arthur Blackwood, Messrs. R. C. L. Bevan, Donald Matheson, James E. Mathieson, T. B. Smithies, John Cory, and Rev. William Arthur.

HIS LATER YEARS.

During the last few years the infirmities of old age prevented Mr. Pearse from taking a very active part in Christian work, and he humbly described himself to a friend as "a broken-down evangelist." His heart, however, still burned with love to Christ, and with ardent desire for the salvation of the lost. A good deal of his time was accordingly given to intercession for Gospel work, and for persons whom he was now unable, through age, to help in an active manner, as in times gone by. The health of his beloved wife also made it desirable for Mr. Pearse to maintain more retirement during his later years. A few days before his death he inquired most affectionately after Mr. Hudson Taylor, in whom he ever took the deepest interest. Practically his last message, written on June 23, to the Secretary of the North Africa Mission (Mr. Glenny), was "See that Kabylia is cared for;" and in a letter dated June 25, he wrote of his old friend, Robert Chapman, of Barnstaple; "And so he sleeps in Jesus, and we will ere long follow him."

The North Africa Mission is hoping to send out two young men, Mr. Daniel Ross and Mr. Alfred Shorey, to help forward the work in Kabylia which Mr. Pearse began, and which is most encouraging and greatly in need of being strengthened. It is proposed to look upon them as "Pearse Memorial Missionaries," and a fund of about £250 a year will be needed for their support. What better memorial could this devoted servant of Christ have than that his work should be thus perpetuated?

Mr. Pearse was buried in the Borough Cemetery, Hastings, from whence on a clear day the coast of France, the land of so many of his labours, can be seen. A Christian nobleman writes of him: "His life was often a help to me, and his warm Christian love was most refreshing." Should not the consideration of his life and devoted service provoke us all to love and to good works?

MESSRS.

Williams and Maxwell,

EVANGELISTS.

DURING recent weeks Messrs. Williams and Maxwell, evangelists from the United States, have been conducting meetings in Edinburgh. The proceedings have been described in successive issues of The

MR. E. L. WILLIAMS.

Christian. Some particulars of these workers will be welcome to our readers. Mr. Williams is the preacher, Mr. Maxwell the singer. First as to the preacher:—

Edgar La Mar Williams is a Presbyterian minister and evangelist, and was born in Busyrus, Ohio. There is Scottish blood in his veins. When he was four years old his parents moved to Indianapolis. He was blessed with a

MR. H. L. MAXWELL.

Christian home, where, both by precept and example, he was taught the truths of the Gospel; yet he had reached the age of seventeen before he yielded his heart and life to God. Having taken this step, he united with the Third Presbyterian Church of Indianapolis, a decision which not only added another name to the membership of the church, but changed the entire trend and purpose of the young man's life.

An interesting incident in early years gave promise of future evangelistic usefulness. When Mr. Williams was but a boy-preacher in Indianapolis, a Scotch elder, Mr. McCutcheon, was asked to take him out to the Georgetown country church to speak in the protracted meetings. There had developed very little interest, and few, if any, conversions up to that night. When, after driving many miles, they arrived at the dimly-lighted little country church, they found it well filled with people, who listened to the lad's earnest Gospel appeal. One old farmer, touched by the charm of voice and the eloquent pathos of the truth presented, said to the elder, "Why, he talks like a bird!" About fifteen persons responded to the call, standing in this meeting to accept Christ, much to the surprise of the minister and the Scotch elder, who afterwards became a fast friend of the boy who was now proving his Divine call to preach the Gospel.

Often had young Williams read and heard the words, "The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few," yet their true significance was not understood until he saw the harvest of souls ripe for the gathering, with so few willing hands to thrust in the Gospel sickle. Under the Divine influence he determined to be one of the messengers of hope and joy, and with this object in view he entered upon a collegiate course, first at Hanover College, afterwards at Butler University. He then studied in the McCormick Theological Seminary at Chicago, where he remained two years, and in 1876 graduated from the Union Theological Seminary, New York City. During succeeding years he had charge of churches in Indiana, Iowa, and Illinois; also undertaking work of an evangelistic character.

After many years of toil and experience Mr. Williams felt himself prepared to enter upon a wider ministry that had opened to him. The work of an evangelist lay before him. For some time he moved about in the Western and Middle States, and his services met with acceptance on all hands. As a pastor, Mr. Williams' affable address, genial manner, and sympathetic nature won the respect and love of his people. As a preacher he is strong, clear, and attractive, adding to the earnest message the graces of oratory and the emphasis of illustration. He is ever loyal to the truth, and his hearers are never led by tricks of sophistry into paths of doubt or speculation. He preaches an entire Gospel; he does not hesitate to proclaim "the terrors of the law that he might persuade some," but magnifies the glories of the Cross with its full and free salvation, so that the most abandoned need not despair.

During his busy life as pastor and evangelist, Mr. Williams has found time to publish many of his sermons. He has in preparation a volume of carefully-revised sermons and addresses, which will be elaborately illustrated. Mr. Williams was married in 1878 to Miss Matilda J. Woerner, of Indianapolis. To his devoted and faithful wife he owes much of his success in the Christian ministry.

The companion worker, Harry L. Maxwell, is a cultured singer. He was born at Crawfordsville, Indiana, in 1866. When nineteen years of age he became a Christian, and in 1886 went to De Pauw University, Greencastle, where he remained until 1892. Having studied music in Chicago, he took up Gospel work with Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, and has ever since been associated as musical director with well-known American evangelists. During 1898-99 he was under the direction of Mr. Moody, the summer of 1898 being spent at Chickamauga Park with the soldiers, among whom the lamented Major Whittle prosecuted such an interesting Gospel campaign. Mr. Maxwell's voice is a tenor of high range and considerable power. He has had many calls for his services in connection with State conventions, camp meetings, and conferences.

Messrs. Williams and Maxwell have invitations for September and part of October from pastors in Aberdeen and Londonderry. Communications may be addressed to Mr. Williams, until August 1, at 193, Bruntsfield Place, Edinburgh; after that, care of Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

The Revival in Melbourne.

FOLLOWING up the report contained in our last issue of the soul-stirring scenes enacted during the great Simultaneous Mission in Melbourne, conducted by Dr. Torrey and his helpers, we append further interesting particulars of this widespread and remarkable awakening.

AMONG RAILWAY-MEN.

The Victorian Government Railway workshops are spread over some acres of land at Newport, and 1,500 men are employed there building new trains or repairing damaged ones. It was considered "unwise" to allow a Mission service to be held in the ground surrounding the workshops, but the Commissioner had no objection to the men assembling in the yards, and listening to an address delivered from a temporary platform outside.

When the great siren shrieked the noon hour, round the corner of a heap of rusted rails came the first of the congregation. He was in dungarees, and wore a linen cap pushed to the back of his head. A smoking billycan of tea swung on his forefinger, and in his left hand he carried a parcel of "tucker." After surveying the singers and acknowledging a cheery nod from Mr. Edgar Geil, the missioner, he sat astride a carriage axle, and began his lunch. As the first hymn proceeded a few more men arrived, and finally they came with a rush, till almost every man employed in the workshops had joined the gathering. Few had delayed long enough to swallow their lunch—none had stayed to wash. Many brought their sandwiches and pannikins with them.

Mr. Geil gave a powerful address on Conviction and Conversion, and closed with prayer. There was still a minute or two of the lunch hour left, and the men demanded a solo from Mr. Virgo. The closing bars had hardly been sounded when the siren blew forth its summons, and the men ran for the workshops, applauding as they went.

INDIVIDUAL EFFORT.

"The churches," said Mr. Geil, at Geelong, "have a great responsibility laid upon them. You must go out and seek to bring sinners to Christ, or you will be failing in your duty, and shirking the responsibility God has laid upon you. I remember conducting a mission in a town in America. After three days, I said, 'See here, friends, I have wasted enough time, and I am going to move out.' 'Oh, but,' they said, 'you are advertised to stay ten days.' 'I don't care,' I said, 'I am not going to waste ten days like this.' 'Why are you going?' they said. 'What is the matter?' 'Why,' I said, 'you are so dreadfully lazy. You won't go and talk and pray with sinners in your homes. You believe in "job-lot" religion. You want me to bunch people altogether and fetch them into the kingdom of God wholesale. I am done with such people. Unless you are willing to go out and seek to win souls, I will leave.

"Then a lady rose and said, 'I never spoke in a meeting before in my life, but I think it would be a dreadful thing to have these meetings closed down because we folks are not willing to do the work.' I said, 'Madam, this first speech of yours is a mighty good one.' Next day she drove round with her carriage, and took me off with her to pay a visit. I noticed she had a bead-work concern, worth about 25dols, with her, and I said, 'What's that for?' 'Oh,' she said, 'the person we are going to see is very fond of bead-work, and I am going to give her this.' 'But,' I said, 'it is quite expensive, is it not?' 'Twenty-five dollars,' she said; 'but what is that if I get the chance of speaking about Jesus Christ?' Well, the result was that that lady, who had never before made a speech in a meeting, was responsible for leading no fewer than twelve men and women—some of them the most prominent people in the town—to Christ, by personal work, before that mission closed.

THE MEETING OF CONVERTS.

"The supreme interest of the meeting of converts," says the Southern Cross, "was reached at the moment when Dr. Torrey called upon all those who had begun Christian life, as a result of the various services of the Simultaneous Mission, to stand up. In response, the vast mass of people occupying the floor of the building rose to their feet, and the people in the galleries on either side rose too. Here were at least 6,000 people—men and women, boys and girls, of all ages and social positions—rising to proclaim the fact that they had broken with sin and surrendered their lives to Christ.

"A cynic, perhaps, might sneer at the spectacle, and regard it as a mere proof of untaught and undisciplined enthusiasm. A pessimist would probably have sighed to think how many of those who stood up would soon forget their vows. But a wise Christian faith would find in it an argument of measureless hope and of a thankfulness to God too deep for speech to utter. Here were some 6,000 lives brought consciously under the empire of the purest, the noblest, and the mightiest force that can touch human character. God's great and loving purpose was in them attaining its end. It is easy to count up the secondary and purely human impulses of this movement, and see that they are all inadequate to effect such a miracle. It is not the power of singing, the contagion of numbers, the logic or the eloquence of the discourses, the stir of a little shallow emotion in the feelings, the flame of a transitory excitement in the senses. It is the power of God—of God the Holy Ghost, convincing of sin, revealing Christ, and shedding abroad in the human heart the forgiving love of God."

Rev. Payson Hammond.

IT is most refreshing to recognize the continued vigour of Rev. Edward Payson Hammond. There are many in this country who remember his labours of past years, and who, with others, will read with interest some particulars of recent missions in America. Since March 31 Mr. Hammond has been conducting services for children in the Wickcliffe Presbyterian Church and in the Bethany Presbyterian Church, Newark. Referring to this mission, the Newark Daily Advertiser says:—

A great number of children have been brought to Christ through his instrumentality. Mr. Hammond is known world wide as a most successful evangelist among the children. He is pre-eminently a man of God. His one aim and object is so to present the truth concerning Jesus of Nazareth, as the One who has suffered in our room and stead, as to call out the love of those who hear him to this same Jesus.

Although getting on in years, he is a most zealous and indefatigable worker in the cause of Christ. The result of his labour in London with the late Charles H. Spurgeon and in this country with the late D. L. Moody, and in many other places, has been remarkable for the ingathering of multitudes of children into the church.

AN IMPRESSIVE SERVICE.

Sunday evening last Mr. Hammond spoke to about 400 children in the Bethany Church. As far as possible, at the end of each pew sat a Christian. After Mr. Hammond had finished talking to them, and had given the invitation, all of the workers spoke to the children, and the result was that 135 signed the slips accepting Jesus as their Saviour. The children were told if they would take the slips to Mr. Hammond he would exchange them for a covenant card, which they were to sign if they really felt that they had received Jesus in their hearts. They came forward to the platform, and the sight was one long to be remembered by those who witnessed it, as they eagerly presented their slips and received the covenant card. The covenant with name and date is this: I believe that Christ hath loved us and given Himself for us (Eph. v. 2), and that I can truly say

> Jesus, take this heart of mine,
> Make it pure and wholly Thine.
> Thou hast bled and died for me,
> I will henceforth live for Thee.

In following up the covenant cards, Mr. Hammond finds that in the majority of cases the children remain faithful. Not children only have been brought to Christ, but older people also, while Christians have been stimulated to more earnest zeal in the Master's service.

The Blind Poor.

THE annual meeting of the National Blind Relief Society was, by the kind permission of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, held at Stafford House, St. James's, on Tuesday, July 15. The Hon. Viscount Chelsea, M.P., who presided, spoke of the advance made by the Society during the past fifteen years. All that time Rev. J. Pullein Thompson had been hon. secretary; and the annual revenue had grown from £139 to something like £4,000. At present there are 672 persons on the books; out of these 320 receive a pension of 5s. a month. This, mere pittance though it is, is eagerly welcomed by the recipients. The Society is most anxious, however, to raise a sum large enough to enable them to increase the pension to 10s. a month. To do this £5,000 must be subscribed.

The Bishop of Kensington referred to the amazing ignorance of Londoners regarding the condition of life around them. Few people, he said, realized that there are between 3,000 and 4,000 blind poor in London, who live in darkness, and also with the dread of the workhouse before them. Even when these facts are grasped, it is hard to make people see their responsibility in taking at least a small share in relieving the terrible burden that falls on these poor people. Surely there is no class which appeals more to humanity than the blind poor. The Bishop referred to the way in which these people were willing to help themselves if only suitable work could be given to them; the thorough manner in which they carried out all that was entrusted to them, and on the whole their great cheerfulness. He enjoined his hearers to go home and talk about the needs of these people, and of the Society existing for their help; in this way it would become better known and supported, for if people talked to advantage they could reach the hearts and the pockets of their listeners.

Major Evans Gordon, M.P., urged those present to go among the blind poor, and see for themselves the terrible calamity which the loss of sight means to such as are already threatened with poverty. Sickness to many people means extra care and attention, but to these people it brings starvation.

Rev. H. R. Gamble, succeeding, gave from his own observation instances of the terror which comes over the blind poor, almost reaching the verge of madness, when they think they will be compelled to enter the workhouse. Five shillings a month is not sufficient to relieve this dread.

Rev. Nevison Loraine brought before the audience in vivid language the privations suffered by the blind. The glory of sea and country, hill and valley, all these were lost or unknown. Christ had peculiar pity for the blind; we never read that He sent a blind person away; His ear was always open to their cry. Surely He who is the creator of this wonderful universe would have a special care and compassion for those deprived of the power to see Him in creation. Not only does Christ ask His people to carry help to these blind poor, but also to carry to their darkened lives the Light of Life.

During the meeting Rev. J. Pullein Thompson was presented by the parishioners of Christ Church, Chelsea, and the subscribers to the Society, with an illuminated address and a purse containing 200 guineas, on the occasion of his silver wedding, in recognition of his faithful work and a token of the esteem in which he is held.

A Missionary Trial.—It seems that in all, thirteen of the boys in the C.I.M. School at Shanghai died from ptomaine poisoning, six of them being children of mission workers. The statement in our last issue that young Fishe's father was "among the martyrs" was incorrect; Mr. Fishe is at Kwei-yang, in the West of China; and, like the other bereaved parents, is the subject of earnest and sympathetic prayer by Christians in the homeland.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 21 TO 26.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONERS.)

EXPECTATION is written on the faces of the large company which flocks to Keswick year by year for the Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life; and testimonies abound to the marvellous degree in which, in past years, spiritual anticipations have been realised. No list of names is issued as an inducement to people to come; no programme of speakers is available, even if asked for; those who only care to hear favourite preachers will find little or no encouragement of such desires at Keswick. An opportunity is afforded to all who yearn for a fuller Christian life to come together, that they may hear what God the Lord will say unto His people in the great congregation. The Father meets the need in many ways. Once and again, Christians who have received such a spiritual impetus that they looked back on the occasion with deepest gratitude in later days, have even assured us that the uplifting was not mainly felt at any special gatherings, nor received through any particular addresses, but was the outcome of a growing sense of the presence of God, realized as the days passed, with an appreciation of living day by day in the midst of such a large number of the Lord's praying ones.

The absence from the chair last year of the familiar form of Mr. Robert Wilson was felt by not a few to be a personal sorrow, and awakened memories of bygone times of blessing and refreshment. The fact that his name did not even appear on the letter of invitation to the present gathering, was a cause of additional disappointment. Yet mingling with the prayers which had been offered in homes all over the land on behalf of this aged and honoured servant of the Lord, there has been a note of thanksgiving that He is always prepared with successors for any of the bearers of the Ark whom He calls aside.

THE PURPOSE OF THE GATHERING.

For the benefit, among others, of those who were coming for the first time, the trustees summed up the purpose of the Convention in the following searching sentences, which, we are assured, will echo far and wide in the hearts of our readers:—

The Convention is emphatically a meeting of God's children, whose first object is to draw nigh unto Him unitedly in spirit and in truth. We meet together before Him as those who have been redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, not from the penalty of sin merely, but from its power—"from all iniquity"; who have been redeemed unto God, that we "might serve Him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before Him, all the days of our life." As we look back upon the Conventions that have been already held, we rejoice to know that many of God's children have been brought to realize here at Keswick the inestimable privileges of an experienced deliverance from the dominion of sin, and the joy and liberty of a Spirit-filled life. It is this we would set forth as the great purpose of our coming together in Christ's Name at this Convention. Conversion to God, we need continually to be reminded, is only the starting-point—not the goal. We are redeemed that we may be "conformed to the image of His Son"—we are saved to serve—and "that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love."

BLESSINGS CANNOT BE SAVED UP.

Emphasis was then laid on the close connection which must ever exist between the gifts of God and the obligations which such privileges involve. It is not desirable that the same audiences should come up time after time; indeed, if this did take place, it would only prove that to some extent the meetings had failed in their object. The rarest blessings cannot be saved up for our own benefit. Freely we have received, and unless we give forth as freely, these possessions will only become moth-eaten and cankered. They will only grow upon us as we impart them to others. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." This is true in the fullest sense of spiritual gifts. So in many a life the obtaining of definite blessing on a first visit to Keswick has prevented a repetition of the visit, by sending the receiver down into the trenches of home mission work, or far hence among the heathen. Such brethren come back in after years to tell with joy the story of what God hath wrought in them and through them—that the promises have been Yea and Amen in Christ. The scattering results of this year's gathering are not yet; but the duty was faithfully pressed forward.

There are the claims that come upon us from the unsaved—at home and abroad; there are the claims which belong to us as members of Christ's Church; and above all there are the claims which God has upon us—the claims of Him who has given Himself for us. It is good that we should be aroused to a deep sense of all of these. But this alone is not enough. Let us see the Divine way of meeting these responsibilities. It is where God reveals to us His provision to meet all our weakness, inability, and deficiencies, as well as our unworthiness, that we may face our responsibilities without anxiety, without despondency, and without fear of disappointment.

"MORE THAN WE ASK OR THINK."

Following such a letter, it was natural that, from the preparatory services onward there should find utterance, in prayers and addresses, a deep cry that God might search all hearts, and that His people might be made willing to obey. In the past, the fact has been noted that even those who had prayed much and long for the gatherings, were taken by surprise at unexpected developments. As we go to press, it is too soon to point or even to learn the lessons of this Convention; but we may be assured that the Lord will again do for His own beyond all that they ask or think, if only they be able to receive. The Christian life is deepened by prayer and communion, but the Lord is ready and waiting to take advantage of all our capacity. We have not because we ask not; again, we ask and receive not because we ask amiss; yet the great limitation of God in the leading of His people into the full knowledge of the truth is their persistent inability to receive or bear the revelation. May this be a week, a year, of growth in capacity to receive, that God may be no longer hindered by His people from carrying out His gracious purposes in themselves.

PRELIMINARY MEETINGS.

The preliminary gatherings included prayer meetings on Friday and Saturday mornings in the Skiddaw Street tent. For the meeting in Eskin Street tent on Saturday evening a vast concourse assembled. In spite of threatening weather, the entire auditorium was filled, and a goodly number of friends had to be content with standing-room. A solemn and prayerful spirit attended the proceedings throughout.

Mr. ALBERT A. HEAD, who presided, read Isaiah lxiv., using the Revised Version. Petitions followed from several brethren that the Lord would be pleased to still all hearts, and to draw out all aspirations to Himself alone, to give a fresh realisation of the cost of salvation, and to revive the sense of His abiding presence. The tent was, indeed, as an audience chamber of the King, and great things were sought, not only for the Convention and for individuals, but for the Kingdom of God upon the earth. The Holy Spirit was manifestly present, enlightening and searching; the true keynote of prayer was struck at the outset, and there came a glowing sense of freedom in intercession. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."

THE CHURCHES AND REVIVAL.

The address, which was given by Rev. S. A. SELWYN, was founded on 1 Sam. vii. 3. The speaker showed that Samuel made this solemn utterance at a time of national crisis. The two outstanding sins which faced the Israelites on the defeat with which they had met were:—(1) They forgot God their Saviour, and went for help to the symbol of His presence, rather than to the covenant God Himself. "Let us fetch the ark of the covenant of the Lord from Shiloh that . . . . it may save us" (iv. 3). They had sunk into formalism. (2) Open disobedience and irreverence were manifested in the presence of the two ungodly sons of Eli, guarding the ark. "Hophni and Phinehas were there with the ark of the covenant of God."

This Keswick Convention, too, comes at a time of national crisis, when God is speaking warningly to the people. The empire has endured war, famine, and pestilence; then, the Lord all but took away the King at the most solemn stage of his career. In answer, doubtless, to prayer, God spared the sovereign. Nevertheless, the nation, in spite of benefits and blessings, forgets God in a mad rush after business or pleasure.

WEAKNESS AND ITS CAUSES.

There has been, we admit, lamentable failure on the part of the Church of God. Those who have eyes to see the prevalent apathy and indifference with regard to holy things, are stricken with sadness. We look across the sea, and wonder how missionary gaps are to be filled. We look around at home, and see deficits not merely of money, but of candidates. At this juncture happily comes "Keswick," and earnest people are prayerfully and expectantly considering what the Lord is going to do to revive His work. Oh, for a great revival in the Church of God!

The Israelites, we see, were guilty of empty formalism, and of setting up unconsecrated men as workers for the Lord. Are not these sins among us to-day? What right have we in our churches, our Sunday-schools, our choirs, to have unconsecrated leaders, preachers, workers? How can we have them and countenance them, without grieving the Holy Ghost? Is it not also true, alas! that congregations are often grievously apathetic and unconcerned about the vital affairs of true religion? Is there not a misusing of the beautiful words of hymns, singing them only as so many words, simply because other people are doing so? We are apt to sing, "Come, Holy Ghost," and not expect Him to come at all. Words of confession are sung, but they do not spring from the heart.

A PLEA FOR SOUL-WINNING.

As to soul-winning, it is wonderful that the Church gets even as much blessing as it does. There is much labour, much organization, much begging, but comparatively few souls are won. One outstanding reason is that, to use a common phrase, "we leave it in the Master's hand." A farmer does not act on any such principle. He would both sow and plough and weed, never speaking of "leaving" the results as though they were in no sense any concern of his. If he leaves his fields to "go anyhow," he suffers the bitter consequences. No, we are to expect great things from God. Fling the net in the sea and leave it there? No. Yet we pray for souls, but win none. In order then to right what was wrong, what were these Israelites to do? Let us follow their three steps and obtain guidance, for we, too, must be cleansed and filled, not going back from Keswick unclean. (1) They were to put away strange gods. (2) They were to prepare their hearts. (3) They were to serve God only. "Then He will deliver," said the prophet.

Taking these lessons home for the needs of to-day, the Church must put away all gods but the great God whom we love. Let us put away that revolting god, "Indifference." We sometimes try to conjecture what would happen if there came a great revival. No more should we have to plead with people to pray, for there would come a great "spreading out" of blessing, and no minister would have to confess, "I cannot get my people to a prayer meeting." If, as a minister or leader, you have to go alone to a prayer meeting, at any rate go. Revival, again, would fill the churches, and would not that fact alone drive workers to their knees for wisdom to help and direct the people?

Another outcome would be, the regular holding of an "after-meeting." What an ingathering of souls there would be! No putting on the coat and going home without giving an opportunity for making the great decision. Do ministers say, "I am not an evangelist; all that is out of my line"? Then it should be in their line, for, seeking unto God for direction, the Holy Ghost would teach them, they should be filled with holy fire, and so win many for Christ.

THE GREAT DELIVERER.

Then, let us put away the unconverted workers. Be not unwise or unloving, but, still more, be not unfaithful. We might, probably, gather them in by praying for and with them, but in any case we must be obedient unto God. "Spiritual men for spiritual work." "Put away the strange gods." Ah, but there are idols in individual hearts, as well as in nations or churches. The Church of God grows feeble and powerless when the individuals in it are indolent, or full of pride, or enslaved, it may be, by some secret sin. Oh, the entanglements of Satan are strong, but if we are willing to be disentangled, God will absolutely deliver—from false gods, false loves, from apathy and neglect. We must get right in these matters of first importance, or

WE DOOM OURSELVES TO PERPETUAL FAILURE.

Preparation of heart followed. The people (v. 6) gathered together to Mizpeh, and drew water, and poured it out before the Lord, and fasted on that day, and said there: "We have sinned against the Lord." This is the true preparation of heart—confession of sin. The King's business requireth haste, but this matter is of the greatest urgency, for, until we are cleansed, we cannot even touch the King's business. We have, then, our National, our Church, our Individual sins to confess. Unless we do this, there can only be but a slight healing of the wound. The faithful surgeon deals thoroughly. Let us bow before God, and let this emptying of the heart take place. Let God cleanse us as we come before Him. Yea, let us obtain His cleansing and filling grace.

GOD ONLY.

The last point is, to serve "Him only." There is to be an end of "some of self and some of Thee." Henceforth, it is to be "none of self, and all of Thee." That is the service God requires of us. It is marvellous that He will use human beings who struggle against Him even in the using. Let us put ourselves into His hands. He is loving and gentle, as well as pure and holy, and He longs to use us. Here is a godless world, and a Church largely powerless. If there is to come blessing, it must begin in the Church. And where better should it begin than here, where people are gathered together from all parts of the world? "This very night, in this solemn hour, let us go down before Him, and settle the question, that we will do whatsoever the King shall appoint."

At the conclusion of Mr. Selwyn's searching and impressive address, Rev. John McNeill led in prayer. Then came a few moments of silent waiting upon God, and the meeting concluded with further prayer, voiced by Dr. Harry Guinness.

Lord's Day Meetings.

Lord's Day morning was bright and fresh, and a large company assembled in the Eskin Street tent for the early prayer meeting. The verses of Psalm ciii. were read alternately by the chairman (Mr. Head) and the audience; and, led by Dr. Harford, a large number gave utterance to the desires of their hearts in supplication. Directing attention to the paying by the Lord of the tribute money for Himself and Peter, and to the words, "I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me," Rev. C. G. Moore pointed out how God entrusts His glory on earth to hearts that have been moved, and won, and broken, and thrilled by a personal deliverance; and how the Lord Jesus, having humbled Himself in the eyes of Peter, wrought this double miracle of deliverance to re-establish His glory in the eyes of the child He loved.

A KEY-NOTE.

On Sunday morning, in the old tent, General Hatt-Noble presided, and read parts of Joshua xxiv. and of John xiii.

Dr. A. T. Pierson then gave an address, remarkable for the largeness of its grasp and the fulness of its detail. He wished to give a key-note for the whole Convention. His text was 2 Pet. i. 4, "He hath given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that through these ye may become partakers of the Divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." A parallel passage is 2 Cor. vii. 1. Both Peter and Paul give the negative and the positive aspect of the subject. "Become partakers of the Divine nature," is the positive; "having escaped the corruption," &c., is the negative. "Let us cleanse ourselves" is the negative; "perfecting holiness" is the positive. Both apostles speak the same thing.

I. A promise is a prophecy, but promise differs from prophecy, in that it is always of goodness and mercy; prophecy is often of judgment. It is not unconditional; but it never fails to him in whom the conditions are fulfilled. It is addressed to the individual as well as to the nation.

"Precious" is one of the key words to both the Epistles of Peter. It occurs seven times in them. In 1 Pet. i. 7, precious faith. In 19, the precious blood. In ii. 4, a living stone, chosen of God and precious. In 6, a chief corner stone, elect, precious. In 7, unto you which believe He is the precious One, or preciousness. In 2 Pet. i. 1, precious faith. In verse 4, precious promises. When the Lord is spoken of, the substantive is used—

HE IS PRECIOUSNESS—THE PRECIOUS ONE.

The promises are exceeding great, as well as precious—great in multitude and in magnitude. There are 3,000 promises in the Psalms alone. There are over 30,000 direct promises in the whole Bible. If we take the indirect promises (for every command, injunction, precept is an indirect promise of grace and ability to fulfil it), there must be 300,000.

Their magnitude covers every possible emergency of sinner or saint, from the first conviction of sin to final and perfected salvation.

Each of the letters to the churches in Rev. ii., iii., closes with a characteristic promise. Observe their chronological order. To him that overcometh at Ephesus—to eat of the tree of life in Paradise. At Smyrna—not to be hurt of the second death. At Pergamos—to eat of the hidden manna. At Thyatira—power over the nations. At Sardis—to be clothed in white raiment. At Philadelphia—to be a pillar in the temple of God. At Laodicea—to sit with Me on My throne.

We are reminded of (1) Eden; (2) the Fall; (3) the manna; (4) Moses' prayer subduing Amalek; (5) Moses' intercession with God, and God's reply; (6) Jachin and Boaz the pillars of Solomon's temple; (7) Solomon on his own throne, as before he had sat on the throne of his father, David. Thus these exceeding great and precious promises to the seven churches suggest the from the moment when at conversion we enter our new Eden, in our regeneration, to the day when we sit down with our Lord on His throne.

Of all the sciences, Astronomy is that of the immeasurable. In three passages we have the heavens referred to as illustrations of the immeasurable. We have one dimension only in Isa. lv. 9, height. In Psa. ciii. three dimensions, height, length, and breadth. In Eph. iii. 18, 19, all four dimensions—the breadth, and length, and depth, and height. Consider the breadth of God's purpose: it reaches even to me. How long is it? From eternity to eternity. How deep? "If I make my bed in hell Thou art there." How high is it? "As the heaven is high above the earth, so great is His mercy toward them that fear Him."

As God draws on the science of the immeasurable for illustrations of His eternal purpose, so He uses universal terms—whosoever, wheresoever, whensoever, whatsoever, all, every. "All" is the collective universal word, and "every" is the distributive universal word.

The meaning of all this is that the exceeding great and precious promises are to be enjoyed to the full.

II. The purpose of God in these precious promises is "that we may become partakers of the Divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."

The tenth commandment should read, "Thou shalt not lust." The Apostle says, "I had not known lust except the law had said, Thou shalt not lust" (Rom. vii. 7). For this word covers far more than coveting. It includes every possible unholy desire. There is a temptation in our fallen nature to overstep the limits which God has set. As soon as we do this, we become unrestrained and unsatisfied. As long as we keep within God's limits, we are pleased and satisfied. When we overstep them we become

UNGOVERNABLE, SENSUAL, TYRANNICAL.

We become like those things which we worship. He who worships gold becomes hard, cold, metallic. The woman who worships fashion becomes herself like a wax lay figure; becomes stiff and starched, a walking doll, the lifeless imitation of a woman. Reason and conscience are in the dust. God is dishonoured and degraded, so that the Omnipotent Governor is trampled underfoot, as the man's passions trample upon the man himself. So when we believe in God and worship Him, we receive His nature into our being. It is the implanting of a new principle of life. It takes the little children of God's family, and makes them into full-grown men in Christ.

There are two aspects of faith. (1) It is surrender. If this Convention stands for anything, it is surrender to serve the Saviour as Master and Lord. (2) Faith makes it possible to take the impress of His mind—as the iron-worker puts the passive iron into the fire, and beats it with the hammer into the fashion of his own will. Or as the potter moulds the clay; or as the sculptor takes the marble, and with hammer and chisel brings out the angel as it was in his own mind. Yes, God does more than that—He makes the yielded soul

PARTAKE OF THE DIVINE NATURE.

What is nature? It is the dominating thought, affection, purpose. The nature of God is His all-engrossing thought, love, purpose. When you receive His nature, you receive His thought, His love, His purpose.

The greatest promise ever made was this:—"He that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father; and I will love him, and will manifest Myself unto him. . . . If a man love Me, he will keep My word; and My Father will love him, and We will come unto him and make Our abode with him" (John xiv. 21, 23).

Already Christ had said, the Comforter "dwelleth with you and shall be in you." Now the Son of God says that He and the Father "will make Our abode" with the loving and obedient soul.

OH, MYSTERY OF MYSTERIES!

that the Triune God can dwell in you and me! The dominating character of God is holiness; of Jesus, self-sacrifice; of the Spirit, love. The emblem of the Spirit is the dove. The dove has no gall, no bitterness.

The strongest word in the Old Testament is that "They rebelled and vexed His Holy Spirit"; and in the New, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God." You cannot receive such a promise as that the Father, the Son, and the Spirit shall make Their abode with you and in you, without the characteristics of the Triune God—holiness, self-sacrifice, and love—appearing in you. If this is not so with us at this Convention, it will be our own fault. None need go away without this greatest of all blessings. And we shall get no blessing if we do not get the blessed One. "For all the promises of God in Him are Yea, and in Him Amen, to the glory of God by us."

CANON AITKEN AT ST. JOHN'S CHURCH.

St. John's Church was crowded at the morning service, when the preacher was Canon HAY AITKEN. Dealing with the story of Bartimæus, he concentrated attention on the question of our Lord, "What wilt thou that I should do unto thee?"

Here is a scene that appeals to all the tenderest sensibilities of the Christian heart. We see standing before us Him who is the Light of the world, veiling in His flesh all the glories of Godhead. There in front of Him is one who, not even favoured with the enjoyment of that outward life which is so dear to the eye and to the heart, and whose loss in this respect was perhaps symbolic of another loss of which His own inward nature was more or less unconscious. Doubly blind, there he stands; and doubly glorious in His illuminating capacity there also stands the Christ—glorious in His Divine power, glorious in His human reflection of God.

He asks the question as if He, the Christ, were putting Himself altogether at the beggar's disposal. The loftiest conception of God is that which presents Him, not so much as Lord and Master of all, but as the Universal Servant of all the creatures He has made. Glorious He is as He sways the sceptre of universal power, but still more glorious as He lays aside the insignia of royalty, and is ready to say to every one of us, "What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee?" It is the will of the beggar that is to direct and formulate the conduct and action of God.

OMNIPOTENCE AT OUR DISPOSAL.

To-day He stands in our midst in all the glory of His love, and what He said to Bartimæus, that He says surely to each of us. Reading at a glance our inmost need, realizing where His help is most called for, understanding all the unspeakable yearnings of the human consciousness, there He stands, and still the same question is on His lips. He puts Himself at our disposal, and with Himself all that belongs to Him—His omnipotent capacity, His wondrous skill, His human tenderness, His Divine power. What may we not hope for and expect when God thus draws nigh and places Himself at the disposal of His creatures?

But we shall miss the lesson of all others which the words contain unless we pass on to inquire why our Lord uttered them. It was almost like a mockery, was it not? There stood the beggar, his own marred countenance eloquent with the story of his need. Why should Jesus Christ have asked the question? Surely that great need required no articulate expression. But our Lord did ask the question, and had a purpose in asking it for our sakes.

A GROWING EVIL.

Evangelists will understand all too well why the words were spoken. We who give ourselves to evangelisation know how difficult it is to get people to understand their need, and how many are kept back from seeking and finding the blessing which God designs them to enjoy, because they do not know what their need actually is. The skilful diagnosis of the practical evangelist is not infrequently baffled by the subtle indefiniteness of those whom he would seek to benefit; and this is, perhaps, becoming more common than ever it has been.

We are living in a day when, among the middle classes at least, there is less of vice and more of general goodness than there used to be. Many forms of vice which used to prevail, are not now apparent among the respectable people who fill our churches and chapels. We do not like to call them "good," and yet they seem to have such claims that we have had to invent a phrase. We do not say, "goodish," but "good sort of people." Are they in touch with Christ, or are they not? Sometimes we think they are, and sometimes we think they are not. So the physician finds himself confused in his diagnosis.

WHERE DO THEY STAND?

What about the people themselves? Do they know where they stand? Are they at peace, or not yet at peace? Are they under the curse of the law, or under the blessing of God? If I say they are uncertain of their relations with God, what can I add but that such persons will surely fail to appropriate the blessings that belong to the children, and feel themselves no better than hired servants—sometimes not even that—when they are entitled to a place at the Father's board?

That which we found to be a difficulty in our earliest attempts to reach human souls still continues to be a difficulty with many who bear the Christian name, and who know something of Christian experience along every line of that experience. To this the defects of that experience are to a large extent due. How many are there who fail to realize the blessings of the Christian life because (1) they do not definitely feel their need of them, and (2) they do not definitely lay claim to them. In one great gift God has given us all, because of what Christ is and what He has done. But while it is all ours the gift is to be claimed and appropriated, and only in so far as we do so are we spiritually the wealthier.

WHAT IS A BLESSING?

We have all come to seek a blessing. What do we mean by a blessing? A genial influence, a happy, holy emotion, the starting tear; nay, verily, these may be part of the blessing, but the blessing they are not. A blessing is a direct Divine intervention, specially adapted to the need of the subject affected. When did God give His first blessing? Far away back in the history of animal life, back when He blessed the swarming creatures in the sea. They were not conscious of the blessing, but it was a blessing appropriate to their condition and capacity. When man was blessed, the same was repeated, but something added. He was in a world of which He was to be sovereign, and therefore there was the power of exercising authority.

On God's side we have a benediction; on man's side we have to consider the receiving of the benediction. The means by which the blessing is appropriated is simple, trustful faith, that faith which does indeed "work miracles." Only it is not strictly the faith, but the power which faith is the means of liberating which works the miracles.

THE ORIGIN OF KESWICK.

The movement with which the name of this place has become associated, and which has rendered that name familiar as a household word among Christian people, owes its existence to the insistence by earnest souls on this obvious consideration, that the redemption having been wrought we have a right to all its consequences, and that that right is to be asserted in the simplicity of a childlike faith. There never was a time when Christian teachers did not insist that their people should be holy, and we try, and try, and try to be better. We get weary of trying, and we ask if this trying will never produce anything. The fly that climbs a pane of glass, and falls, and climbs again, and falls again and again—is that the picture of Christian experience? Is it the best Christ died to bring us? To ask the question would seem to be to answer it; and yet, how slow we are to answer it.

The voice of this movement said: "There is something better than this for you. God regards you as justified, because He can make you just. He accepts you as sanctified because He can make you holy, and redemption has liberated His power to do it. If so, you have a right to expect that that power will be exercised; and according to your faith will it be unto you. It is not a legal fiction, but truth of truth that Jesus Christ intends you to be free, and that faith has a right to claim its liberties."

DEFINITE SURRENDER.

Side by side with that came the teaching of definite surrender; for it was felt that if God was to save us from our sins, He must do so by bringing us into proper relations with Himself. Sin has cut us off: the removal of the barrier must bring us into His bosom; and if there is a readiness to be received, there must also be a readiness to surrender to Him from whom the redemption comes.

Then there came a further thought. If we are thus restored to the proprietorship of God, and really belong to Him; if we are given over into His hands, and He is Lord and Master—He can be trusted with what He has acquired; and if we are entrusted to Him, surely He can do what He will with His own.

Each of these was a definite step, taken by a definite act of faith, with the result that a very large number of happy souls entered into a new experience. But God is always teaching fresh lessons. There came a great discussion about the extent of the process of purification. The phrase, "a clean heart," presented itself to many. We want not only our lives, but our hearts to be clean; not only our actions, but the source of our actions to be so purified. I do not presume to speak as an oracle, but I think the controversy has been a matter of names and words. We all of us believe that where sin abounded there grace must much more abound; and if grace abounds it abounds at the spring of our actions.

THE MESSAGE OF PENTECOST.

Amid the misunderstandings that for a time disturbed the minds of those who were eager for Gospel holiness, another thought began to loom up; and I entertain the hope that this will weld us all into unity of hope and experience. We turned our yearning gaze back to the Pentecostal hour. We thought of that baptism of power which rested upon the newborn Church. We noted the change between the feeble and frail disciples who had deserted the person of their Lord, and the bold and stalwart men who stood before the rulers of their country without quailing. We said to ourselves, "To what is all this due? Why were they so heroic and so successful?" Then we heard the clear voice of Paul asking the question of his contemporaries—and it occurred to us that it might be for us also—"Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" What did he imply? First of all, we gathered that this was an inquiry that he was in the habit of making. Then the question suggested that Paul would never have asked the question if this had been inevitable. He was anxious to know whether it had occurred in these cases. People had believed with their hearts to the saving of their souls, so that the Holy Ghost must have wrought his own work for regeneration; and yet Paul contemplates the possibility of their having failed to receive the Holy Ghost personally, as a living power dwelling in their hearts, consecrating the whole temple of their humanity.

Paul could not be satisfied until that point was made quite sure; and God is teaching us at this time that we are not to be satisfied until it has been made sure in our experience. What Paul believed possible then, is more than ever a possibility to-day. We cannot say we have not so much as heard whether there be a Holy Ghost; but some of us wonder what it was that caused this strange revolution, this wonderful change. Some have got a little further, and are asking if the same phenomena may not happen to-day, or, if not precisely the same, phenomena of an analogous character.

MISUNDERSTANDINGS ABOUT GIFTS.

We get into a way of forgetting that the gifts of the Holy Spirit are gifts. Do we think it is necessary to have a Divine gift in order that we may be "helps"? It does not seem necessary that God should work a miracle for this, and yet when I look at the various activities of the Holy Ghost in that day, I find there is among them that of being "helps"—the ability to "play second fiddle," the readiness to take a back seat.

How apt we are to get into a way of thinking that we can do a great many of our Christian works without any direct endowment. Our work may not be the gift of the Holy Ghost. It may be the product of an energetic disposition, or of an eloquent tongue; and we mistake these for the definitely bestowed unction.

"Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" You are not quite sure. Then have you received Him since? You cannot do without Him. Spiritual work can only be done by the Spirit of God, and to attempt it without Him is to lay ourselves out for failure. Is He the same to-day that He was yesterday? Then He can still produce miracles of love and power, He can still raise us from our mortal weakness, and make the man of God the man of power.

There stands He who has burst heaven for us, and has brought the Spirit down. He is turning His gaze from one to another, and saying, What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee? It is all here. I come to bring you what you need." Let faith be bold. Let the outstretched hand dare to claim the consummate benediction, "Lord, that I may be filled with the Holy Ghost. Filled! Filled! Filled!

THE GOD OF THE HORNET.

The preacher at the Congregational Church on Lord's Day morning was Dr. Harry Guinness, who founded a telling address on the words of Deut. vii. 20: "Moreover, the Lord thy God will send the hornet among them." The preceding verses set forth the service to be undertaken by the children of Israel to destroy the seven nations "greater and mightier" than themselves. As our service, to-day, is one of mercy, their duties were those of justice and punishment.

Though the command given to them is obsolete, the principles involved remain for our encouragement. In v. 17, we see how God anticipated that the people would grow discouraged in the survey of the difficulties to be encountered: "If thou shalt say in thine heart, 'These nations are more than I; how can I dispossess them?'"

We, too, have our command. It is, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature;" but too many of us are apt to repeat the heart reply of those Israelites of old, "These nations are more than I." The discouragements of God's people are many. We need, then, the reassuring, inspiring antidotes to fear given in this chapter, as we face the question, "How are we to cope with the difficulties that confront us?" We have, then, the antidote to fear—"Thou shalt not be afraid" (v. 18). Now, there is no paralysis like that of fear, but God's clear and emphatic word is, "Thou shalt not be afraid." Come what may, then, we will not fear complexities and perplexities, for God will find the means of escape. We are not adequate to meet our enemies, but God is absolutely adequate to overcome, and this God, He will be our guide.

Morning and evening the Wesleyan Methodist Chapel was well filled, and on each occasion Rev. John Brash preached with much acceptance. In the evening he spoke with cogency and earnestness on Pilate's words, recorded in Matt. xxvii. 22, "What shall I do then with Jesus, which is called the Christ?"

OVERFLOW MEETINGS.

The Eskin Street tent was the scene of remarkable gatherings on Lord's Day. In the afternoon, Mr. Albert A. Head, who presided, read Ps. li.; Miss Frost then sang with tenderness and conviction, "Oh, the love that sought me," following which came a striking evangelistic address from Rev. John McNeill on Mark v. 25-34. He traced the needs and miseries of the woman "with an issue of blood twelve years," and with intensity, and vividness of description, pictured the wonderful scene, as the poor sufferer "touched his garment," and was straightway healed.

Mr. McNeill put the truth plainly and convincingly, while his happy gift of sanctified humour feathered many a sharp Gospel arrow. There were fire and force from beginning to end, and the closing words of pathetic appeal told with effect upon the attentive and responsive audience.

In the evening the tent was crowded with an overflow and evangelistic meeting, when Mr. W. H. Wilson presided, and a second address was given by Rev. John McNeill on "The Story of the Axe-head that Swam" (2 Kings vi.). Many lessons were drawn from the story, on which appeals to the backslider and the unsaved were based with telling effect. What is it to be a Christian? It is this. As the axe handle is let into the head, until the handle and head, in themselves utterly different, become one instrument, so I, "in myself a bit of stick, a faggot for the burning—am by faith lifted out of self, out of impotence, and become one with Jesus: He the head, He the power, He the strength, He everything, and I who am nothing, everything also in Him."

"TO THE JEW FIRST."

In the afternoon a meeting of the friends of Israel was held at the Pavilion, under the presidency of Rev. F. W. Paynter. A highly-encouraging account was given by Canon Kelk of the progress of Christian work in Jerusalem, especially along the lines of medical missions and schools. Rev. John Wilkinson stirred many hearts as he told how the Lord had owned the faith of the Mildmay Mission, sending £170,000 in twenty-six years, and enabling over 1,100,000 New Testaments and Gospels to be circulated. As a Hebrew Christian, Rev. Isaac Levinson was able to speak from personal experience of the results of the work of the British Society.

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

The early prayer-meeting on Monday morning was devoted, in pursuance of custom, to intercession for Ireland, Captain Tottenham presiding. After prayer and praise, the chairman dwelt helpfully on Acts iv. 29-31, and v. 12 and 14, 15, and besought the prayers of the assembly for the Sister Isle. Proceeding, he described some aspects of the far-reaching and comprehensive efforts of Rome to capture the designation "Catholic," stigmatizing Protestants as non-Christian, to hinder and suppress liberty of speech, and to secure all posts of influence for Papists. Nuns are being posted in hospitals as nurses, though untrained and unfitted. Even shopkeepers are warned to employ none but Roman Catholics. Emissaries work assiduously to influence the Press both in Ireland and in Great Britain. Where Bibles and Gospel literature are sold, the so-called "Catholic Truth Society" spreads Romish publications. Indeed, a little at a time, ever with something new, Rome is striving strenuously to drive out Protestantism. And what is the remedy? The Gospel of Christ in all its fulness, preached in the churches and in the open air, while the Word of God is put into the hands of the people. "Let us pray for every branch of the Church of God in Ireland, for every Christian agency, and that God will thrust forth more labourers into that part of the great harvest field."

Among other friends who led in prayer was Dr. Long, of Limerick, who petitioned the Lord that his Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen may be led into the true light, and that the zeal of the priests may be thrown upon the Lord's side. Prayer was also offered for the awakening of apathetic Protestants, and for those earnest labourers who, in various parts of the country, are endeavouring to win souls for the Lord Jesus Christ.

Opening of the Convention.

It was an eager and expectant audience that came together on Monday night in Eskin Street tent. Hushed and solemn, as in the presence of the Lord, the great assembly waited with prayerful hope for renewed tokens in spiritual blessing of His unfailing strength and love. The commencing hymn, "Stand still and see," by the beloved and lamented Charles A. Fox, was taken up with earnestness, and deep feeling, especially the concluding lines:—

Sweep through, thou wind of God,
Sweep through once more.
Cleanse, consecrate, renew.

Rev. Dr. J. Elder Cumming led in prayer. He offered praise for national and personal mercies, for present opportunities of heart-searching, of confession, of sin, failure, and wilfulness, and of fresh consecration. Rev. E. L. Hamilton followed, expressing the longing desire of many for a mighty revival in these days of much organization but comparatively meagre results, and praying that while lying low in the dust before the Most High, the people might graciously be led to seek and obtain wondrous blessing.

"More about Jesus would I know" having been sung, Captain Tottenham, who presided, took as the basis of introductory words the question of our Lord given in Matt. xxvi. 50, "Friend, wherefore art thou come?" After analysing various motives for attending the Convention, such as curiosity, criticism, honest inquiry, for the obtaining of suggestive notes for use in the preparation of addresses, or "to know more about Jesus," the speaker directed the thoughts of all hearts to the Lord Jesus Christ as the source of light, instruction and power.

After a brief season of silent prayer, Rev. Evan H. Hopkins led vocally, and subsequently gave an address on the words in 1 Sam. iii. 9, "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth."

GOD HAS A DISTINCTIVE MESSAGE

for each person. He puts a new emphasis upon old truth, so that it tells with the force and freshness of new truth. Men know of the Keswick message in its doctrinal teaching, but it is more than a doctrine to be held, it is a life to be lived. God's power being manifested in transfiguring the experience, this message must be hearkened to, not received at second hand. A true and powerful witness is one who speaks, not from hearsay, but from the present tense knowledge in his soul. Those who hearken perpetually can continually speak forth what they hear and know, and so be fruitful in His service.

What, then, is the message? It is a call to holiness. Be occupied, not with the process—that is only the effect; but with the Holy One, who is the cause. And the call is to full equipment for evangelizing the world. But first, in God's workshop the tools must be prepared and fitted for their work, to be placed in the Master's hand, "meet for the Master's use."

The Skiddaw Street tent was also crowded with a most appreciative audience. Mr. Albert A. Head, who presided, expressed, in the warmest terms, the welcome of the trustees to new comers and old, whether from near or far; and from in Isa. xliii. 19, pointed out the blessed possibilities if every life and heart were so surrendered to the will of God as to make it possible for Him to do His own will in them. Dr. A. T. Pierson spoke from 1 Cor. xi. 30-32, showing that, first, there may come upon disciples a condition of weakness, sickliness, and deadness, from a perversion of truth or of practice; second, this three-fold condition is to be recognised as a Divine visitation of judgment, not retributive, but punitive and corrective; third, this Divine judgment is avoidable if we would judge ourselves; fourth, the remedy or preventive is an honest and resolute self-scrutiny as in the presence of God. The evidence of the evil was shown to be that so many Christians remain simply grown-up babes, requiring to be spiritually nursed and helped when they ought to be feeding, leading, and carrying others. The incompetence was found manifesting itself specially in incapacity—first, to resist evil, life being a perpetual succession of sinning, repenting, and sinning again; always meeting the sin as prepared to be again defeated, with no consciousness of increasing victory over the power of evil; second, to bear the burdens which the Church always has to bear. The two means provided to help growth are the Word of God and prayer, the former feeding the spiritual digestion and the atmosphere of the closet feeding the spiritual respiration.

The four miracles of healing in Matt. viii. were treated as typical—leprosy standing as a walking parable of guilt and destructive uncleanness, palsy representing helplessness, fever, the heat of passion, and demoniacal possession, perversity of will. Very striking medical testimony was quoted to show that in proportion as rebellious wills are subjected to God, insanity might be expected to decrease.

A scathing indictment was made of the prevailing apathy in the Church with regard to doubt and Ritualism, which are steadily producing spiritual atrophy. We hope to deal more fully with this part of the address in our next issue.

King Lewanika.

DOUBTLESS some of Uncle Tom's "Searchers" have heard their parents talking lately about the King of the Barotsi people—Lewanika. If you look on your maps you will see that Barotsiland is situated in British Central Africa, and Lewanika, as representing that portion of our British dominions, is now in England as King Edward's guest.

If you could see this king you would find him in manners and dress just like a European, except for his black skin. But he was not always the civilized gentleman he is to-day. When King Lewanika was a child, the reigning monarch, Sepopo, was a very cruel man. One of his favourite amusements was to go round the villages, seize the poor little babies from their mothers, and then throw them to the crocodiles! At last his people were unable to stand his cruelty any longer, so they rose in rebellion and put him to death, and chose Lewanika as their king. He, in his turn, proved very cruel, and was deposed and driven from the land. But this did not mend matters, for no sooner did the next man come to the throne than he became as wicked as any of them; in addition to this, he was not of royal blood. At last the people, in despair, invited Lewanika back again, and after a great deal of fighting and bloodshed he once more ascended the throne. Lewanika was, however, still very cruel, and only partly civilized.

To show you this, let me tell you a story. Mr. F. S. Arnot, who was the first Englishman Lewanika saw, found the king having his dinner sitting cross-legged on a mat; pulling the meat apart with his fingers, he selected the best parts for himself, and handed the remainder to his guests! Mr. Arnot taught the king to use a knife and fork. When, to his astonishment, he saw the prongs of the fork disappear into Mr. Arnot's mouth, he cried out, "He is swallowing a bunch of needles!"

While King Lewanika had been in exile, M. Coillard, of the Paris Missionary Society, had arrived in Barotsiland, and was endeavouring to start missionary work amongst the natives; but he found it very difficult owing to the disturbed condition of the country. On King Lewanika's return, matters settled down a little, and the king coming under M. Coillard's influence began to improve in manners and change in character. It was pointed out to Lewanika what a great deal of harm many of the evil practices in his country were doing to the people, and as he was an intelligent and thoughtful man he saw the force of this, and began to make good laws, and what is better still, kept them himself, and helped others to keep them.

It sounds rather strange that the king of a country should be unable to read, doesn't it? But this was the case with Lewanika until the missionaries settled in his land; then they had a king as one of their pupils! Now the king insists that all the people in his land shall learn to read as far as possible, because he knows what a civilizing effect education has on them. He has done several very good things for his country, having put down the slave traffic, the poisoning of witches, and burning of sorcerers, while theft and other crimes are severely punished.

King Lewanika has also become a total abstainer, and refuses to allow anyone in his dominions to make, sell, or drink intoxicants. Once he caught his Prime Minister drinking secretly, and the king called all the people together, and made the Prime Minister bring his wine-cup and break it in pieces before them, promising that he would never touch strong drink again. I think that must have been a very good lesson for that Prime Minister, don't you?

When M. Coillard first met King Lewanika, he found him engaged in the heathen rite of making offerings at the graves of his ancestors; but now if you visited Barotsiland one Sunday morning you would find the king in church, singing hymns, and apparently deeply interested in the proceedings. He encourages his children, chiefs, and people to become Christians, and he constantly reads the Bible, both to himself and aloud to his chiefs and family. But his influence in this direction is not so great as it might be, as he is not a decided Christian himself. He still indulges in certain heathen customs which he is afraid to give up lest the people should depose him. I fear, in this respect, he is like some boys and girls who want to be called Christians, but who can't make up their minds to yield their lives wholly to Jesus Christ, because it would mean, perhaps, persecution and scorn, and giving up their own way. But King Lewanika is very different from what he was years ago, and, after all, he has not had the advantage of civilization and training that we have. Perhaps if we had been born in his circumstances we should not have turned out so well. He has made immense personal sacrifices, both of money and self-indulgences, for the benefit of his people, and has sent his son and nephew to school in England, so let us pray that when they return to their country they will be Christians, not only in name, but in spirit too.

Don't you think this story of King Lewanika teaches us how great is the power of influence, and how the Spirit of God can work in a black man's heart quite as much as in ours? We hope that while King Lewanika is in England he will see all that is best in Christianity, so that he may return to his own land determined to do all he can for the uplifting of his people, physically and morally. K. H.

A French Cripple.

ONE of my "Searchers" who is studying the language in France writes:—

"Since I have been here I have come across a very sad case. M. L., twenty-eight years of age, is a little deformed woman, only three feet high. She is an orphan, but has a step-mother. She is paralyzed in both her legs. Two years ago she was a Roman Catholic, but since has become a Protestant, though she is not yet a Christian. When well enough, she is carried to the Protestant place of worship by an old lady, also a converted Catholic. The Sisters of Mercy have refused to give her any help whatever as long as she visits the pastor's house, where I am living. The curés menace her in every way possible, even to stopping her remittance of bread and wood, which the "Bureau de Bienfaisance" accords her. But M. L. continues in spite of all obstacles to visit the Protestant meetings."

PREACH—HEAL.

MEDICAL MISSIONS (Matt. x. 7, 8).

MEDICAL missions in their present form are just sixty years old; but their true beginning was not in that first medical mission, established in China by the American Board, but in these words of our Lord, who in the same breath bade his disciples Preach and Heal. If any of my younger friends are thinking of devoting themselves entirely to the service of men for God's sake, let them very seriously consider whether it may not be possible, either in this or some other country, to combine these two great functions of preaching and healing.

The combination of these two functions proceeds on the supposition that there is a close connection between sin and sickness. And this is most certainly the case. As our first parents came from the Creator's hand, there was no iniquity in the heart and no disease in the body. The pure uncontaminated blood flowed through their perfectly healthy frames. The conditions, also, of their existence were perfectly healthy. They never breathed the heavy air of an over-crowded tenement nor drank of brooks which were polluted with death nor ate of poisonous food. The fountains of their vitality were fresh and pure. But when sin entered, the conditions of life altered. The germs of disease were planted in the nature, partly because they were no longer resisted by the unimpaired wholeness of the nature, partly because man began to seek his own pleasure instead of the Divine Glory, and partly because the soul came beneath the control of the lower passions, which it was meant to rule. Ever since then the soul has exercised an evil effect on the body and the body on the soul, and it is necessary that any system which should perfectly cure the soul should be able also to deal with and heal the body. Therefore the Gospel is the Power of God unto salvation, because it is preached as a message of life, and it has a message of health and healing, of benediction and final resurrection to the body.

The healing of the body prepares the way for the healing of the soul. In what way can the poor heathen be so easily impressed and touched as by knowing that the missionary can relieve his sufferings, and restore his ebbing life. This awakens his trust and confidence. If the stranger will take so much trouble for the one, why should he not be equally skilful for the other?

Then, also, the period, which is often spent in the hospital, surrounded by Christian influences, is generally one of great usefulness in accustoming the patient to the hymns, prayers, services of the mission-station. Surely, also, the very qualities which suffering induces, such as the sense of helpless weakness, of trust, of obedience, of hope, are all more or less akin to the disposition which Christ requires and begets.

How often, therefore, it has happened that the heathen man or woman, who has been driven to the missionary by the stress of sore pain, has been detained before the Lord for blessing to soul as well as body, has been healed every whit!

The compassion of Christianity should move us to care for body as for soul. Mrs. Bishop said this year at Exeter Hall, that all sickness in the East is regarded as the work of demons, and is treated as such. When sickness enters the house, the priest and sorcerer are sent for, and by barbarous methods the demon-spirit is supposed to be driven forth. English audiences could not endure to be told of the awful barbarities practised on the sick. I remember that I could not go on reading a book which described them; they were as bad as vivisection. In the name of mercy we may plead for medical missions.

Mercy for the tortured body, mercy for the agonized spirit, which looks forward to æons of transmigration or hells of pain. Oh, what beautiful and blessed work it is to go with the Gospel to such, and tell them of Him whose Name is Love, and who came that ultimately there should be no more pain, nor crying, nor death, but holiness and joy. C.E. NOTES.

One of the numerous signs of the advance of Christian Endeavour in the Established Church is the appearance of a monthly paper, entitled: "The Church of England Endeavourer." The first number contains a letter from the president, Rev. F. J. Horsefield, and a brief sketch of his life.

After a brief stay in Scotland, during which he addressed enthusiastic meetings in U. F. St. George's, Edinburgh, and The Christian Institute, Glasgow, Dr. Clark has left for Iceland. Here he hopes to inaugurate at least one C.E. Society, and to stir up the faith and energy of Christian communities in that remote island. Dr. and Mrs. Clark have consented to visit London on Tuesday, September 2, and a great meeting of Metropolitan Christian Endeavourers is being arranged for that date.

International S.S. Lesson.

Sunday, August 3, 1902.

THE TABERNACLE (Ex. xl. 1-38).

GOLDEN TEXT—Psa. c. 4.

THE events of to-day's lesson occurred at the encampment before Sinai, on the "first day of the first month;" i.e., on the first day of the new year, which came next after the departure from Egypt, and within a few days of the first anniversary of the memorable night whereon the first passover was eaten in the land of Egypt.

FORETOLD.—While Moses was keeping the flock of Jethro (Ex. iii. 1), he turned eastward from the desert, and came to Mount Horeb; there, at the bush that burned with fire, he received his commission to "bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt," with the promises, "Certainly I will be with thee," and

"YE SHALL SERVE GOD UPON THIS MOUNTAIN"

(Ex. xxiv. 18). Moses was shown, while on the mount with God, the pattern of the Tabernacle which the Lord designed, and purposed to have built as a meeting-place between Himself and His people (xix. 4-6); and there, also, he received His command to build (read Ex. xxv. 8 and xxx. 36—"There will I meet with thee"). Thus did Jehovah plan to fulfil the promise given in Ex. iii. 12, and accomplished in Ex. xl. 34-38).

PREPARATION.—During the forty days thus occupied by Moses on the Mount, the people fell into wilful idolatry; then followed a time of severe chastisement. Moses "stood in the breach," and after their forgiveness and restoration to Divine favour, the command was renewed to him that he should proceed with the preparation of the structural portions of the Tabernacle and its furniture. This took six to seven months, under the direction of Bezaleel and Aholiab, his helper.

Both had been called and taught of the Lord to design and execute (xxxv. 30-35); and when the parts were finished and complete, they were submitted to Moses for inspection, and, when he had seen that "they had done it as the Lord had commanded . . . Moses blessed them" (xxxix. 33, 43).

STRUCTURE.—"Tent of meeting" (R.V.). The place where God met those who sought Him, but not a place of assembly for the people; it was quite too small. 1. Tabernacle. 2. Tent. 3. Cover. 4. Court. 5. Curtains. 6. Furniture. (1) A structure of boards of shittim wood, overlaid with gold, which when set up were joined by tenons into sockets, and divided into two compartments by a vail. (2) Embroidered hangings for ceiling and sides, of goats' hair, covered the tabernacle. (3) Covering of rams' and badgers' skins. (4) Pillars hung with linen. (5) Needlework wrought in colours. (6) Ark of testimony, placed alone in the inner compartment. "The holiest of all," a cube of fifteen feet screened by a veil. The table of shew bread, candlestick, and altar of incense were placed in the outer compartment, the holy place (Heb. ix. 2). In the court stood the Laver and the altar for burnt offering. The whole was constructed from the freewill offerings of the people (xxv. 2; xxxv. 5), and the work of their hands (xxxv. 10). The precious stones and costly spices from the rulers, the shittim wood and brass, the silks and bracelets, jewels and tablets, from the women. The Laver was made of their mirrors (xxxviii. 8); sockets were made of the ransom money of the men (xxx. 14, with Matt. xx. 28). The people had to be "restrained from bringing," for they gave sufficient, and "too much" (xxxvi. 5-7).

SYMBOLS.—It is significant that the mercy-seat was made first, and before the law was written and broken. So 1 Peter i. 20 sprinkled with the blood of atonement (Lev. xvi. 15). The contents of the ark of testimony symbolized Christ as the perfect Law Fulfiller, the Bread of Heaven, the Resurrection Life The cloud of incense (Lev. xvi. 13) which "covered the mercy-seat" foreshadows (Rev. viii. 4, with Heb. vii. 25) the altar of burnt-offering and the Laver.

Let the water and the blood,
From Thy riven side which flowed,
Be of sin the double cure,
Cleanse me from its guilt and power.

LESSONS.—Jehovah was the Designer and Architect of the Tabernacle, and He alone could inspire the workers to carry out His designs. He alone can give us wisdom to do the work He designs for us to do on earth (Ex. xxv. 40). As designers, engravers, workers in metal or wood, precious stone setters, or silk spinners, weavers in goats' hair, or the cunning work of the embroiderer, we may each pray, "Establish Thou the work of our hands" (Psa. xc. 17). The Lord Jesus worked in wood. The Creator of our brain, if we seek His help, will surely direct us how to use it.

Women and men helped in the work of the Tabernacle; the only needful qualification was a "willing heart" (xxxv. 22). If a little child helped to card the silk, she was doing the Lord's work as truly as the women of the clever fingers who worked the "curious girdle" for the High Priest.

What are our places of worship to us? (Ex. xix. 17). (1) God has promised to meet with us there, "Where two or three" (Matt. xviii. 20; Heb. x. 25). (2) To pray (prayer covered the mercy seat), praise; to get light and teaching on God's truth, the anointing of the Holy Ghost, and guidance and counsel.

What lesson may we learn from Ex. xl. 36, 38? To be always "ready to do whatsoever my Lord the King shall appoint."

"Where wilt Thou have me to go, Lord?
"Show me the path for to-day."

Is there a treasure I am holding back as too precious to give to the Lord? Or am I giving my best powers to the world? Ask the Lord to show you the design He would wish you to carry out in your life.

Oxford Notes.

AT the annual festival of the Oxford Branch of the Girls' Friendly Society, Mrs. Hutchings, the president, gave an interesting report. There are forty branches in the diocese.

In connection with the much-expected visit of Mr. Kensit and the Wickliffe Preachers, open-air meetings were held at the Martyrs' Memorial, and a demonstration in the Town Hall.

The Examiners' List in the Honour School of Theology, published this week, reveals the fact that two candidates are placed in the first class, ten in the second class, fourteen in the third class, and six in the fourth.

A special meeting of the Oxford Church Army Labour Home was held during the week to present the energetic master, Captain Wellbridge, with a testimonial. Rev. the University Censor (Dr. Pope) took the opportunity of bringing the work of the Home before the Christian public. The Home was founded in 1892, and opened by the late Bishop Stubbs. During the ten years of its existence, 1,200 wayfarers have found refuge, employment, health and character. Many of these, fallen from honourable positions, have been enabled to make a fresh start in life, and to-day are Christian citizens. The industry of the Home makes it self-supporting.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

THE Lawyers' Prayer Union, which is in affiliation with the National Council of the Y.M.C.A., has just celebrated its jubilee. A successful meeting was held at the residence of the Hon. Mr. Justice Jelf, at Putney Hill.

With a view to revive interest in the work of the Hastings Association, a successful garden-party was held at the residence of Mrs. Robert Slade, Belfield, Hollington Park. The Association at Worthing has made considerable progress in recent months.

The work in the two Welsh districts gives promise of much growth in the immediate future. In the south, several kindred institutions, with large membership, have been recently affiliated as auxiliaries; and steps are now being taken to organize, in suitable buildings, a number of Associations in the Rhondda Valley.

In connection with the great Simultaneous Mission in Melbourne, a special meeting was called at the Exhibition Building, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. It was attended by 8,000 men, to whom the evangelist, Mr. E. Geil, made an earnest appeal for a collection to enable the foundation-stone of a new Y.M.C.A. building to be laid in the city. The result was that, together with promises previously obtained, the handsome sum of £2,800, apart from a conditional offer of £1,000, was realized.

The White Slave Traffic.

CONFERENCE IN PARIS.

AN official Conference for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic was held last week at the French Foreign Office. The Press of Paris has been anticipating the Conference by calling attention to the serious character of the evil, as it exists in France and other countries. For several weeks one of the most widely circulated dailies—Le Matin—had been giving its readers graphic and painful descriptions of the practice of the traffickers, so many of whom have their home in Paris. These articles created much excitement in Parisian circles, and the question was the topic of the day outside as well as inside the Conference.

The French Government invited all the European countries to send three delegates; in response, thirty-six were present, representing the following countries:—Germany, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, France, Great Britain, Hungary, Italy, Norway, Portugal, Russia, Sweden, and Switzerland.

While Germany, France, Hungary, Italy, Russia, and Switzerland sent three delegates, England, much to everyone's surprise, sent only one. Brazil was also represented. Among the members of the Conference and those in Paris interested in the question, a very strong feeling exists as to the conduct of England in this matter, as it is well known throughout Europe that the movement had its origin in London, and is conducted from the offices of the National Vigilance Association.

The Conference met at eleven o'clock on Tuesday morning, July 15, when the delegates were received by M. Delcassé, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, whose welcoming speech left no uncertainty as to the earnestness of his Government in calling the Conference. He referred to the Congress held in London three years ago, and paid a high tribute to those who promoted it. He trusted that the outcome of the present Conference would be a solution, if not full, yet a partial one, of this important question. Business having been commenced, the delegates elected Senator Bérenger as Chairman of the Conference, and M. Lardy, Swiss Minister in Paris, as Deputy Chairman.

OFFICIAL REPRESENTATIONS.

Nearly the whole of the day was taken up in receiving reports from the various Governments represented, as to the laws in their respective countries dealing with those who procure women for immoral purposes. It was then determined to resolve the members of the Conference into three sub-committees to consider and report on: 1. What legislation, if any, is necessary for more clearly defining the crime involved in the White Slave Traffic. 2. New administrative measures necessary. 3. Judicial procedure. These three committees having met, and threshed out these respective questions, have reported to the Conference their various decisions.

These were fully discussed by the Conference, and certain recommendations have been made, which are, of course, confidential, and will be transmitted to the various Governments interested. Amongst the points considered are the two following, which were formulated by the English International Bureau:—(1) When a man or woman is found in the possession of young women professedly for the purpose of taking them to a foreign country, with a view to place them in employment, the police of the country where they may be found should have power to compel the man or woman to give some account of his or her antecedents, and to throw upon them the onus of legally proving that they are engaged in the conduct of a respectable business. (2) Any woman pursuing the trade of prostitution in any nation other than that to which she belongs should be repatriated.

On Wednesday evening a soirée was held in honour of the delegates, by the French National Committee and the English National Committee combined. The reception was given at the Gallery of the Champs Elysées, and was a most interesting gathering of the official delegates and a number of leading French ladies and gentlemen interested in the question. M. Bérenger spoke in high praise of those in England who had originated the movement. The delegates were received in audienc one Thursday afternoon by President Loubet, at the Champs Elysées. On Friday evening a great public meeting was held at the French Geographical Society. M. Picot, a member of the Institute, occupied the chair, and spoke warmly of the united efforts being put forth to suppress this horrible traffic.

A paper, by Mr. Percy Wm. Bunting, was read, in which reference was made to the fact that England and France had always been in the forefront of the campaign against the slave trade, which had now almost ceased to exist. The present movement brought them face to face with a new form of slavery in the white slave traffic, which quite as effectually menaces the actual as well as the moral liberty of young women. This form of slavery Europe, led by France, has resolved to attack. Liberty has to be defended, not only against force, but fraud and undue pressure, especially in the case of the young and inexperienced. The profits are so large that the people engaged in this nefarious enterprise are prepared, if necessary, to run much risk. Up to the present this has not been great, owing to the difficulty of legal procedure, in consequence of the crime being commenced in one country, continued in a second, and completed in a third. The Conference inaugurated by the French Government gives hope that this state of things will soon be altered—that some means, national and international, will be devised to bring swift and certain punishment on such persons wherever and whenever found.

The Late Mr. B. F. Jacobs.

JUST as the great International Convention was assembling in Denver, U.S.A., the honoured president of the World's Executive Committee—Mr. Benjamin Franklin Jacobs—closed his earthly career. He had for a considerable time been in poor health, and his friends knew that his working days were few, but his death came to many as a painful surprise.

While being a successful business man of Chicago, a preacher of no mean parts, a Scripture expositor of considerable ability, a platform speaker of ready and magnetic utterance, our departed friend stood pre-eminent as the exponent of ideal Sunday-school attainment, and the promoter of its agency as an aggressive power for widespread evangelism. His was, indeed, a distinctive life. Born of pious parents in Paterson, New Jersey, in 1834, the first nineteen years were spent under their loving care and Christian training. Proceeding to Chicago to seek his fortune, he immediately identified himself with its pioneer Sunday-school work. Shortly afterwards Mr. Moody came into notice as the leader of an independent Sunday-school and mission. Thus these earnest Eastern men were drawn together.

As the originator and promoter of the International Sunday-School Lesson, now world-wide in its uniformity, Mr. Jacobs was perhaps best known. It was the steady growth of years, but behind it was one unyielding man whose prayers, tears, and midnight wrestlings were finally and fully answered.

One of the distinctive characteristics of Mr. Jacobs' life was his intimate knowledge of the Bible. Few, indeed, are the men who know the Word as he knew it, and this knowledge was gained through patient, persistent, faithful study. During all the years of an active business life, the first hour after rising from slumber was utilized for Bible reading, study, and meditation, and this habit may easily account for his devout spirit and extensive knowledge of the Scriptures. On street car or train, in home and in church, his Bible was always with him. In office and business matters it was within reach, while in conventions and classes all his lessons were given from the open Book. When waiting for appointed meetings or committee work, when delayed by trains or making railroad connections, he filled in the time with Bible-reading and research.

About Books.

REV. F. B. MEYER'S NEW BOOK.

MR. MEYER'S series of Scripture Biographies has been enriched by a deeply interesting work, entitled Samuel the Prophet. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) Though occupying a noble place among Bible characters, the great prophet who bridged the time of the Judges and the Kingdom of Israel has not been studied so much as his place and deeds deserve. Of necessity, Mr. Meyer's pages also narrate the story of King Saul. The words spoken and things enacted in the far-off days when God gave the first king to Israel have lessons for all time, and they are admirably unfolded in this very attractive book.

In a brief preface Mr. Meyer says:—"The study of Samuel the prophet is specially helpful to those who are called to live amid Time's 'loud stunning tide.' He was no recluse, dwelling apart in dreamy mysticism. Both as statesman and politician in the best sense, he was called upon to play a great part in his people's history. He was a king-maker and a king-breaker. What Bernard of Clairvaux was to the Middle Ages, that, but without his faults, Samuel was in early Hebrew history." These words afford some indication of the scope of the work. From time to time we have given extracts from chapters as the book has come from the author's pen. It is sufficient now to commend very heartily the volume to the attention of our readers.

A VALUABLE RE-ISSUE.

STUDENTS of theology as it relates to the Person of Christ will recall the widespread interest and fame which gathered round the name of Professor Carl Ullmann, on account of his great work which, a full generation ago, was translated into English, with the title The Sinlessness of Jesus: an Evidence for Christianity. Rarely has a sublime subject been treated with such power, and unfolded to so practical a purpose. Editions followed one another in steady succession in Germany, and the author took a principal place in the roll of Evangelical leaders. It was the seventh and enlarged edition that was turned into English, by Sophia Taylor; and after having been out of print for some years, Messrs. T. & J. Clark, in response to numerous urgent requests, have re-issued it in an improved form (5s.).

In a marvellously compact argument, we have here an apology for the Christian faith. It is shown in a striking manner that such a Saviour as Jesus was demanded by human need, and to be expected from a holy God. The book is a valuable outline of Biblical theology as regards Salvation; and ethical and religious theories are discussed in its pages in a manner that cannot but be helpful to the inquirer, while likely also to prove of great service to such as are called upon to instruct others in the things of God.

A new serial is—China: A Quarterly Record—Religious, Philanthropic, Political. The contents of the first number are varied and interesting. (3d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

Looking unto Jesus: Some Aspects of His Life and Work. By Rev. W. Milne, M.A. (Montreux). (2s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) Splendid in theme, sterling in matter, spiritual in tone. Quiet workers, looking for assistance in talks about "Jesus only," will find saving truth simply expressed in these pages.

The Great Eastern Railway Company's Tourist Guide to the Continent (6d. Office: 30, Fleet Street, E.C.) is a capital publication. This year's issue has some new features, including particulars of new tours in the Tyrol, express services to Norway, Denmark, and Sweden, also excursions in the Luther country, and Thuringian and Hartz Mountains. There are interesting illustrations and continental maps.

The Spiritual Mind. By Robert Henry Roberts, B.A., formerly Principal of Regent's Park College, London. Edited by his Son. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) This memorial volume will have peculiar interest for those who knew its author, who was called away while bringing it to completion. The first part of the book consists of an exposition of 1 Cor. ii., in which Evangelical positions are powerfully maintained. Then come a series of historical chapters "in search of the infallibility of the spiritual one." The claims of men and churches, parties and councils, are here examined, and Nonconformity is vindicated in terms of charity and an uncontroversial spirit. The treatment is free, and the book should prove of service to those who cannot, or will not, study more distinctly at first hand the many and large subjects that are outlined or sketched in its pages.

Tent Work at Carlisle.

In connection with St. James' Church, Carlisle, a fruitful tent mission has been conducted by Rev. S. Levermore. The attendances have been unique, every night the tent being full. Bible lectures in the afternoon for Christians, services for children, and gatherings outside the large printing mill at mid-day, have contributed in making the mission a memorable one for the conviction of sin following the preaching of the Word. Rev. Chas. Askwith and his two curates have had the joy of pointing numbers of anxious souls to Christ at meetings after the Gospel service every evening.

Messrs. Williams and Maxwell.

CLOSE OF THE EDINBURGH MISSION.

The seven-weeks' campaign of these two evangelists has at last come to an end, and the interest which has been manifested throughout the mission, has continued to the close. The concluding meetings at which the evangelists spoke at Carrubbers Close Mission on Saturday night, and the Haymarket U.F. Church on Sabbath evening, were as soul-stirring as any of the series. What adds to the surprise of having such great attendances on Saturday and Sabbath is the fact that the meetings were held in the midst of the "Trades Holidays," when crowds of people go from home as on no other occasion in the year.

At some of the week-night services, and again on Sabbath evening in Haymarket Church, thrilling testimonies were given by those who, in recent or more distant dates, God's power had reached and saved from direct degradation.

This mission will long be remembered, and it can be said for the evangelists that they have not spared themselves. Mr. Williams takes a needed rest—going to Keswick, and thence for a trip to the Continent; while Mr. Maxwell, after a brief rest, will, before he and Mr. Williams resume work together in Aberdeen in September, be available for Gospel singing during the month of August. No one who has listened to the pathos and heartiness of his singing will feel otherwise than that the opportunity of securing his services is full of promise of rich blessing.

G. H. B.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Cardiff.

It does not appear that the Cardiff Christians and others are tired of hearing the Gospel from Jewish lips. This was Mrs. BAEYERTZ'S fourth visit to the town, and the mission was certainly the most remarkable in many respects. The hand of God has been very visible through the meetings, in conversions, in the fruit of consecrated lives, and in the uplift of weakened souls.

It has been both interesting and pleasant to meet with so many who testified to blessing received in former meetings conducted by our sister. One Christian lady witnessed to having received blessing some years ago in one of Mrs. Baeyertz's services, and rejoiced to add that the blessed life of absolute surrender was now the experience of all the members of her church. Surely this is abiding fruit.

On the first night of the mission there were many seekers, and this was maintained throughout the whole series of services. The flesh, with its manifold activities, was out of sight. The hush, the solemn awe, and the silence in the meetings were unmistakable signs that the great moving power was the Divine presence.

The closing meetings were memorable times. On the Friday night (July 11) it was estimated that one thousand people were present, and very many found their way into the after-meeting. On Sunday the large building was packed, and from the opening prayer to the close of the meeting one could feel God was indeed working mightily, and hard hearts were melted to tears.

Mrs. Baeyertz told the people that after much prayer she had been led that day to ask the Lord very definitely in faith for fifty souls for Christ from that meeting. Ultimately forty-nine only professed to trust, but on leaving the Hall a young man stopped us to say that he had decided for Christ, after a tremendous struggle, that night. What a Saviour!

Many things have touched us deeply in the mission; one instance shall be given. A man had been converted one night, and the following evening, when the invitation was given for anxious ones to go into the after-meeting, he rose from the back of the Hall and came down to where his wife was sitting. Taking the little baby out of her arms, he took her place while she went into the after-meeting.

For Monday night, the last meeting of the mission had been announced under the heading of "Holiness." It was a never-to-be-forgotten time. Mrs. Baeyertz, with burning words and tender pathos, pleaded for absolute surrender to her Lord and Master, and in the silence when every head was bowed in prayer we felt God was moving the vast audience, and that from that night scores would go out to live the blessed life in a power that would be felt in the home, in the church, and in the town.

From hundreds of hearts in Cardiff the prayer will go up, "God bless Mrs. Baeyertz!"

SETH JOSHUA, Pastor.

The fortnight of coast services at Milport conducted by Rev. H. POWERS, D.D., were brought to a close on Monday, July 14. Dr. Powers was ably assisted in his work by Mrs., Miss and Master Powers, and also by a good band of workers. Every day the services grew in numbers, interest and power. Many testified to blessing received.

Mr. WILLIAM COLLARD, "the Sailor Evangelist," addressed well-attended meetings in the Corn Exchange, Lincoln, on Sunday, July 13, in connection with the P.S.A. movement. A deep impression for good prevailed, and several persons promised, with the help of God, to give up the drink. In the evening Mr. Collard addressed a large crowd of working men in the Cornhill, and although he spoke for fifty minutes, the attention was maintained to the end of the meeting.

Personalia.

MR. JOHN GIRLING, fifty years a voluntary lay-worker, who started in 1869 the Hackney Road Mission, and conducted it for thirty years as honorary superintendent, pastor, &c., is now (with his wife) over seventy years of age, and through deafness, lameness, and lack of memory, cannot obtain employment. His present address is 6, Balfour Road, Wimbledon, S.W.

Rev. F. B. MEYER leaves for the United States on Saturday, July 26, with Mrs. Meyer, by the Etruria. He hopes to deliver daily addresses at the Northfield Convention in August, also to labour in New York. His itinerary notes his departure from the United States by the Lucania on August 30, in order to be present with Dr. Pierson at service in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, on Sunday, September 7. During the latter part of September he will address meetings in Scandinavia.

Mr. HENRY VARLEY writes: "The principal intentions of my brief visit to London being fulfiled, I return to Boston, Mass., by the ss. Saxonia, sailing from Liverpool on July 22. Mrs. Varley is there, and our intention is to visit the Conference at Northfield in the early part of August, and then carry on our missionary campaigns in other cities of the States during the ensuing autumn and winter. Past months have been marked with much success in the large centres visited, and the outlook is full of promise."

The Churches.

Church of England.

A long and honourable career in the mission-field is closed by the appointment of Rev. Rowland Bateman to the vicarage of Fawley. Mr. Bateman went out to India under the C.M.S. in 1868.

The jubilee of fifty years' ministry in the parish of Lymington, Hants, by Rev. B. Maturin, Vicar and Rural Dean, has been celebrated with great enthusiasm throughout the parish. Mr. Maturin is in the eighty-seventh year of his age, and performs all his duties with the same earnestness as ever, preaching without notes.

A Parish room has been opened in Walton, Suffolk, as a Queen Victoria Memorial. The room has been erected at a cost of £2,000, on a site opposite the church, given by the vicar, Rev. E. Symonds. The vicar presided, and he was supported by the Dean of Norwich, Canon Aitken, a Baptist minister, and the Captain of the local Salvation Army Corps. The building is to be used primarily as a Sunday-school.

The Bishop of Manchester recently consecrated the Church of St. Werburgh, Chorlton-cum-Hardy. The Bishop spoke in his sermon of the selfishness of people. There is, he said, the selfishness of the unchaste and the intemperate people; the selfishness which comes of wealth; the selfishness also of the gambler. These are great evils, and it may yet be that our country may be sternly punished for them by the will of God, Whose law is universal.

Rev. W. H. Stables, vicar of St. Chad's, Over, near Winsford, Cheshire, writes in his Parish Magazine: "Being a bachelor, with all the attendant disadvantages, or otherwise, with a commodious house, situated in the highest and most bracing part of this large parish, I propose during the summer months to entertain children recently recovered from sickness, or others from less favourably situated portions of the parish, to whom a change of air and diet would do good."

Congregational.

By the will of the late Miss Hannah Buckley, of Droylsden, £5,000 is bequeathed to the Congregational Pastors' Retiring Fund, London, and £5,000 to the Lancashire Congregational Pastors' Retiring Fund.

Rev. Hugh S. Griffiths, of the John Robinson Memorial Church, Gainsborough, has accepted a post as special missioner for the South Wales English Congregational Union, and will enter on his new work in October.

The accounts concerning the health of Rev. Dr. Caleb Scott, the chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, are distinctly encouraging. Principal Scott is manifesting a vigour which has surprised his friends.

The opening services of an iron church at Seven Kings, Essex, took place on Sunday week, when Revs. R. D. Thomas and C. H. Vine took part. The congregations filled the chapel to its utmost capacity. Land has been secured for a permanent church in this rapidly developing locality.

Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon has commenced the fifteenth year of his pastorate of the church at Stamford Hill, N. Now that the block of buildings has been completed by the enlargement of the lecture hall and the addition of a number of vestries, &c., the various organizations of the church are getting into full swing again.

The church at Beccles, in Suffolk, recently celebrated its 250th anniversary. Its origin can be traced back to 1600, when the then Bishop of Norwich deposed William Fleming, who was rector of Beccles. The deprived rector went to Yarmouth, where his labours led in 1640 to the establishment of the Independent (now Congregational Church), which, in its turn, founded a mission church at Beccles.

Prior to setting out on his preaching tour through Great Britain, United States, and the Continent, Rev. F. B. Meyer preached a farewell sermon on Sunday evening at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, completing a ten years' ministry. The service was attended by a full congregation, which included the mayor, aldermen, and councillors of Lambeth Borough. The sermon was a lucid and vigorous setting forth of the mission and work of the Church generally. Mr. Meyer leaves for America on Saturday, but hopes to be back for the first Sunday in September to introduce Dr. Pierson, who will be in charge until April 1, 1903.

Baptist.

Rev. James Mursell is about to visit the United States. From August 3 to 30 he expects to be speaking every day at Summer Schools at Chautauquas.

The Bristol Association, which held its sessions recently at Bristol, is the oldest in England, having been formed in the year 1640. There are fifty-two churches affiliated, some of them among the most prosperous in the country.

Rev. H. Thomas, late of Kingsgate Street Church, Holborn, W.C., has accepted a unanimous invitation to become pastor of Albemarle Church, Taunton, so well known in connection with the labours of the late Rev. Levi Palmer. Mr. Thomas is to commence his ministry in August.

The Baptist Missionary Society have successfully appealed to Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington, to devote the next twelve months to a personal canvas of the churches. His aim will not be to secure large donations, but to induce the members of the Baptist churches to contribute systematically. He will commence his campaign as soon as the holiday season is over.

The anniversary flower services of Arthur Street (King's Cross) Sunday School have been held. Special sermons were preached on Sunday, and on Monday evening the annual meeting was addressed by Revs. D. H. Moore, Alex. Collie (pastor), and others. Efforts are being made to renovate the historic church, and, in furtherance of the project, the Vicar of Hoxton will preach, and conduct a communion service on Sunday, August 14.

Rev. A. Grant Gibb, M.A., has accepted a unanimous invitation to the pastorate of Gilcomston Park Church, Aberdeen. He was for over eight years pastor of Limerick Church, and was President of the Baptist Union of Ireland in 1898. During a period of rest, necessitated by a breakdown of voice, he visited Egypt and the Holy Land, and since his return has held many missions among the Scottish Churches, which have been very fruitful.

Methodist.

At the annual assembly of the Free Methodist body at Leeds a striking address on Methodist reunion was delivered by Alderman Bird, who expressed the hope that in the near future union would be realized between the Methodist New Connexion, the Bible Christians, and the Free Methodists.

Rev. George E. Butt, who has been superintendent of the Aliwal North Primitive Methodist Mission Station, South Africa, for the past fourteen years, is proposing to bring his missionary service to a close, and in the course of a few months will return to England. Mr. Butt has spent forty years in the active ministry.

Rev. W. Mincher has celebrated his ninth anniversary at Camden Town Primitive Methodist Church, N.W. During his term the debt has been reduced by £2,000, and steps are being taken to pay off the remaining £1,000. All the institutions of the church are flourishing, and the open-air services prove most effective.

The Wesleyan General Chapel Committee last week sanctioned the erection of twelve new chapels, at an estimated cost of £56,000, the sitting accommodation being for 5,300. One of these is at King's Road, Chelsea, S.W., and another at Finchley, N. The amount of expenditure sanctioned by the General Chapel Committee during the year, to be reported next week to the Wesleyan Conference in Manchester, is £626,000.

Presbyterian.

Mr. J. R. Paterson Solater, M.A., has accepted the unanimous call to Derby. His ordination and induction will take place on Tuesday, September 16.

After being closed for painting and cleaning, the church at Bedlington has been reopened with encouraging services, in which Rev. A. H. Drysdale, M.A., Moderator of Synod, took part.

To the satisfaction of his entire congregation at Crouch Hill, N., Rev. Dr. Meharry announced, on Sunday morning, that he had resolved to decline the invitation to become pastor of the Woolaharra Church, Sydney, N.S.W.

The new church at College Road, Newcastle-on-Tyne, has been opened. It is to take the place of the Blackett Street church, and will seat between 700 and 800. A large hall and class-rooms have been provided, and altogether the accommodation is most ample.

The congregations of Cavendish Road and St. Columba, Leeds, will hold their first meeting as a united congregation on September 14. Rev. Granville Ramage, minister of St. Columba, resigns, and Cavendish Road pulpit is vacant, so that the united congregations will now be free to call a minister.

The attention of intending visitors to Brussels is called to the Presbyterian Church there, which is a charge of the United Free Church of Scotland. The meeting place at present is in a hall at 3, Rue Bodenbroeck, behind Sablon Church. The minister, Rev. G. R. S. Reid, M.A., is engaged in raising funds for the erection of a new church, which will cost about £4,000.

Society of Friends.

An esteemed correspondent thinks it wise to inform the Christian public that the Friends' Summer School is not an official gathering, and therefore it must not be assumed that the views propounded regarding Holy Scripture are those of the Friends' Church as a body. He says: "We have not accepted the preposterous and oft-refuted theories of German and Scotch rationalists."

Salvation Army.

The governor of the Army's Industrial Land Colony at Hadleigh has received a further letter from an official connected with the Home Office, which states:—

"I am directed by the Secretary of State to thank you for your letter in the case of ——, and to say that he much appreciates the help rendered by the authorities of the Salvation Army in this and similar cases."

Commissioner Cosandey, the officer in charge of the Army's work in Holland, has conducted special meetings in a beer garden at Rotterdam, one thousand people attending the evening service.

In addition to the Army's efforts on behalf of male ex-prisoners, women officers now regularly attend at Pentonville and Wormwood Scrubbs Prisons to receive and assist women prisoners upon their discharge from gaol.

In charging the Grand Jury at the West Kent Quarter Sessions, the Right Hon J. G Talbot, M.P., who presided, spoke highly of the work of the Church Army Labour Home at Maidstone. The work of assisting and reforming the ex-prisoner was one that must appeal to all magistrates and recorders.

The Church Army Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society for convict prisons has just issued a report of its operations from January 1, 1901, to March 31, 1902. During the fifteen months 186 men were discharged through the Society from the convict prisons. Of these eighty-four were found employment, twenty-nine were assisted with tools, stock, loans, fares, food, clothing, &c., twenty-two returned to friends, five were emigrated, three were sent to hospital, one died, eight were sent to labour homes, and thirty-four refused help or proved otherwise satisfactory. Gratuities to the amount of £710 11s. were expended on these cases. During the period under notice 212 men from local prisons were assisted. Quarterly visits are paid to the convict establishments, and over 1,000 men have been interviewed by the Church Army representative in two years. The families of 102 prisoners and convicts have been visited and assisted, and a laundry and needlework-room has been started in London to provide work for the women. The report is issued from the Church Army Headquarters at 130, Edgware Road, London, W.

Fallen Asleep.

The Presbyterian church at Penrith has sustained a severe loss in the death of Mr. ANTHONY MULR, one of its esteemed elders.—By the death of Rev. SAMUEL POLLARD the Bible Christian Connexion loses one of its ablest and most beloved ministers. His personal holiness of character and life were the secret of his power. He was mighty in prayer. He died at Liskeard, at the age of seventy-six years, over fifty of which were spent in the ministry.—The Baptist cause has lost a faithful adherent by the death of Mr. SAMUEL MATHER, of Leicester. He was a staunch friend to Charles Street Chapel, and an earnest, generous worker.—By the death of Rev. WALTER MACFARLANE, English Presbyterianism has lost a devoted minister. For twenty six years he faithfully discharged the duties of pastor of Shaw Street Church, Liverpool—his only charge.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

LAST Lord's Day at Bromley, Kent, Dr. HENRY commenced a series of meetings, which were held in a very fine tent capable of seating about 1,500 people. In the morning he took for his subject, "The True Spirit of Temperance Reform." In the afternoon there was a children's meeting, when Dr. Henry availed himself of the opportunity of speaking on the subject of "Total Abstinence" to his youthful audience. The meeting in the evening was very largely attended, the subject chosen indicating the lines along which this noble campaign must be prosecuted. During the day there were more than 150 new total abstinence pledges secured.

On Monday evening a very large audience assembled, presided over by Mr. MATTHEW HODDER, and the meeting was one of a most enthusiastic character. The CHAIRMAN called attention to the fact that he had learned the doctrine of total abstinence in America, and had come to the conclusion that if it was good for Brother Jonathan, it was equally good for John Bull, and so he decided to abstain. Abstinence had been a great benefit to him physically, mentally, and spiritually, in his effort to do work for the Lord; and he had found himself in many circumstances where he was permitted to do certain things for Christ and His Church, which he would never have been able to accomplish had it not been for the fact that he was a total abstainer. Dr. HENRY spoke very powerfully on "partnership with the publican," emphasizing the personal responsibility of the individual Christian for the repression and suppression of the drink traffic. He took for his text 2 Chron. xix. 2: "Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? For therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord." Dr. Henry asserted that the liquor business was an ungodly business, that it was created in a spirit of ungodliness, that it fostered ungodliness, and that everybody who had anything to do with it was helping the ungodly.

Next Lord's Day Dr. Henry will (D. V.) speak in the large tent upon the various meanings of the word "Wine" in Scripture.

Notes & Comments

The Heart and the Opportunity. The question has been raised more than once how it is that the practical results flowing from great movements for Christian consecration are comparatively so small. The number of conventions for the deepening of spiritual life increases year by year, and Keswick itself, the mother of them all, becomes ever greater still. It is safe to say that annually, very many thousands of Christians solemnly and publicly "yield their all" to the Saviour. And for many of them, doubtless, a new life commences from that moment; but is the result all that we might reasonably expect? One thing may be pointed out, which goes to the root of the matter for a number of people; i.e., that they are content with the movement of their hearts, but they do not follow that up by seeking the opportunities for more heroic service. For every heart truly moved of God, there is an opportunity somewhere, which has to be discovered and seized. It is of no use to idly await its coming. We are to "seek peace and pursue it." Of what avail is it to be touched at the heart by the thought of men's miseries and sins, if we do not seek an opportunity for banishing these from their lives? Service without a touched heart is empty, as is also the moved heart which does not seek its opportunity for service.

The Education Crisis. The passing of the Amendment to "Clause Seven" of the Education Bill has brought the conflict between Anglicans and Free Churchmen to a crisis. There now seem to be only two alternatives before the opponents of undenominational teaching in our elementary schools. Either they must altogether banish religious teaching from them—a course which only a small minority are prepared to adopt, and which others heartily repudiate—or a strenuous attempt must be made to make an opportunity for religious teachers appointed and paid by the churches whom they represent, and not by the State. This latter scheme would not only partially remove the grievance under which 8,000 parishes suffer in having only Church schools within reach, but it would help to quicken in all the churches that sense of responsibility for the religious instruction of their children which at least is but inadequately fulfilled, even in the best Sunday-schools. An earnest attempt to throw open the denominational schools for this plan will probably be made.

Teaching and Study. The following extract from a contemporary points an obvious moral for all whose business it is to train the young in the knowledge of Scripture:—

> It seems a commonplace to say that nobody should take part in Sabbath-school instruction who is not himself a constant student of the Bible; but the reminder is required. We assume too quickly and easily that we are familiar with God's Book; we fancy often that we know its contents with more accuracy than we really do; we forget how absolutely essential is the daily, patient, systematic, loving scrutiny of the Word of truth and life. But are there not some of us who think ourselves quite ready to enlighten the children, when our own acquaintance with God's many-coloured revelation is shallow and superficial? This state of things must end if the school is to grow in usefulness and power, and if, indeed, it is to vindicate its continued existence.

There is reason to fear that many teachers neglect the personal prayerful study of the Word which they profess to teach others, and so miss two things:—The personal soul-discipline, which is inseparable from devout pondering over the words of Scripture; and the power to awaken a similar spirit in their scholars.

True Social Progress. What men call "progress" is often no progress at all in the real sense of the word, but rather its contrary. Progress is, strictly speaking, an honest moving forward to that goal which is the legitimate coronation of human life. All movement, therefore, is not progress; nor, indeed, is any movement which causes men and women to deviate from their proper route. A seer of our time has recently said:—

> Instead of an immense amount of life of low type, I would far sooner see half the amount of life of a high type. Increase in the swarms of people whose existence is subordinated to material development is rather to be lamented than to be rejoiced over.

If the aim of a people is limited to increase of population, growth of wealth, and spread of commerce, without reference to moral principles, and without obedience to the Master of all things, then, however successful they may be in the realizing of their lower ambitions, they are off the route of true progress. When men are absorbed with material notions, they quickly lose the taste for God. A breaking-up of human supports is often the first step towards bringing men back to Him.

Inexcusable Excuses. In the course of an able article on "Religious Indifference," a writer in a contemporary tells of an experiment he made last winter with some working-men in order to elicit their reasons for not attending a place of worship. Some of these reasons are sad enough, and as they are offered everywhere, the Church must needs face them, frankly and prayerfully. On the other hand, some of these reasons are shabby and stupidly thin—in particular that which complains of the sermon as being too remote from common life. One man, for example, complained of a sermon on the Conversion of St. Paul, on the ground that whilst the preacher knew his theme well enough, he evidently knew nothing of the life of a man in a modern shipyard—the critic being employed there, presumably. An excuse of this order is inexcusable, albeit it is exceedingly common. A man has just as much reason to complain of a discourse upon the value of foods and upon the same grounds. The truth is that vast numbers of men are unable to appreciate anything beyond these material goods, which they are compelled to handle day by day; and criticism from such is of little value. It is very significant that in the same town where this experiment was made, out of a population of 21,000 in one district, only 300 persons took out books from the free library in one year. That one fact explains the other. The Gospel calls upon men to think and to reason; but many of them will not do this in the lower sphere—how then can they be interested in higher things?

A Touching Scene. The other Sunday evening at an open-air service conducted by the minister and helpers of the Victoria Docks Union Congregational Church, there gathered in the crowd in front of the church two drink-besodden women, whose faces bore sad evidence to the rough and godless life they were leading. The pastor, Rev. A. H. Hills, took them inside for conversation, when a young lady also entered, and looking at the pitiable objects before her addressed them, with tears in her eyes, saying, "Oh, do sign the pledge and give your hearts to God. For Jesus' sake, do!" Then stooping down she kissed them both. That "touch of nature," inspired of the Holy Spirit of God, broke them down; falling on their knees, they exclaimed, weeping, "You are an angel!" They signed the pledge, and those who have seen them since, say there is good evidence that they have given their hearts to God. Thus it is that souls are won. Mr. Hills and his devoted workers are labouring in a hard district and with much to discourage, but such experiences as the above are great reward.

The Immigration of Aliens. No one would wish to see this country, generally speaking, less free and generous in its reception of strangers from abroad than it is at present. And yet it is becoming a serious question as to whether there should not be some line drawn at the undesirables who pour into England from all parts of the world. America, alive to the danger of receiving with open arms all who seek the hospitality of her shores, has instituted an inquiry of all incoming passengers, as to their position and condition in life. The assassination of the late President has probably precipitated this action, so that persons of the Anarchist class shall not find asylum in the country. With us, the reception of all and sundry, rejected for the most part by their own countries, adds to the problem of overcrowding, whilst it menaces us with disease and crime. The houses of East London are becoming gradually absorbed by foreigners, who sublet them in tenements to aliens, to the serious displacement of our own people. We know of a case in which seven distinct families of Polish Jews were recently occupying six rooms in the same house. Thus, the problem of housing our population is rendered the more complicated and difficult. A country's first care should be for its own people, and in their interests we may yet be compelled to do what America has done.

To face Changing Conditions. Arising also from this, comes a state of things that is causing some Christian workers serious concern. Churches and mission-halls, once the centre of spiritual activity, are becoming gradually depleted of their English-speaking congregations, their audiences—where they still command any—being drawn from districts further afield, in which, perhaps, their former converts have been forced to reside; while, in some cases, the halls have had to be closed. The only alternative seems to be, that Christians qualified to work among foreigners should migrate to these neighbourhoods. Unfortunately, such labourers are not easy to find, but the scope for them is undoubtedly great. Experience proves that, while a sprinkling of foreigners in a city may be stimulating to trade, colonies of them are by no means desirable, either from a social, moral, or spiritual point of view. But if, under the circumstances, such colonies are inevitable, the Church of God should face the problem, and devise some methods for their evangelization. Here is a fruitful field both for returned and intending missionaries. The experience of the former would be invaluable, while the latter would find near home a priceless opportunity for gaining experience, before exchanging their native land for foreign spheres.

The New Wesleyan Church House. The secularization of sacred sites has often given pain to those who have witnessed the transformation of an old historic church into a warehouse or place of amusement. This process is to be reversed in the case of the Wesleyans, who have bought the site of the Royal Aquarium, Westminster, for the erection of a Methodist Church House, with a great hall, and all needful appendages. The history of this place of entertainment in the past will form a fine background of contrast to the uses and purposes to which the ground will be put in future. There is something stimulating to the religious imagination in this dramatic change of venue.

The Danger of Great Halls. At the same time we cannot help sympathizing somewhat with the contention of Sir W. H. Stephenson that ten halls costing £25,000 each are more desirable than one costing £250,000. The experience of the past tends to corroborate this. A man of outstanding power in one generation may fill a great hall, which, when he passes away, becomes "a white elephant." Instance, Westminster Chapel, in proof of this. Besides (as we have noted above), the character of the neighbourhoods change as the years pass, and the conditions entirely alter. Therefore, a number of lesser halls, scattered judiciously throughout our great cities, are of far more permanent and practical use, at least for the purpose of evangelization. The Church House, erected with Jubilee money, of which this Wesleyan scheme is an emulation, has not proved a conspicuous success. With all respect, we think that in both cases the money might have been more wisely spent.

Our Sober Army. From many sides testimony has been produced that, on the whole, our soldiers in South Africa have been signally abstemious during the long campaign, and that not only when away from temptation, but on occasions when, usually, there would have been gross excess. This is largely due to the Evangelical Soldiers' Homes, and the Army Temperance Association, which latter has just received the right to the prefix "Royal," through the patronage of the King. This Society began in 1862 with a membership of 1,015, and now numbers 40,000 soldiers in its ranks, together with 10,000 honorary members or "unpledged sober men." Considering what a soldier's temptations were half a century ago, and that the work of the Society affects not only the actual army, but the community at large through the numbers of time-expired men who are constantly leaving the service, the nation owes a deep debt of gratitude to those who are thus working for the moral well-being of our soldiers. Especially should the effort to provide more regimental institutes, and add to their attractiveness, receive the support of the public.

The Waste of Life. The striking diversity of human life is painfully shown by the statement that while the average age at death among the nobility, gentry, and professional classes in England is 55 years, that of the artizan class in Lambeth is only 29; and that while the infantile death rate in the first year of life is only 8 per 100 among the children of the well-to-do classes, it is 30 per cent. among those of the poor in our large cities. So, too, under five years of age, 36 per 100 of the children of the tradesman class die, but the working-classes lose 55. Add to these figures the striking fact that in London alone there are 99,830 persons in workhouses, hospitals, prisons, and industrial schools, and that one person in every four of the population of the Metropolis dies in workhouse, hospital, or lunatic asylum—and there is sufficient ground for apprehension as to the use made of our so-called "national wealth" and modern civilization.

The Minister as a Missionary Advocate. A well-known missionary, who has been doing deputation work extensively, brings a severe indictment against ministers for their lack of effective advocacy among their people of the cause of Christian missions. Writing in The Examiner, he says:—

> One minister "does not mention the missionary question from one year's end to another." In another case I was told, "The minister does not encourage giving to anything outside our immediate chapel work." It is to be feared that not a few ministers are just a little jealous if the L.M.S. secures liberal contributions, lest home work should suffer. At one place visited, the minister seemed to have absolutely nothing to say as chairman of the meeting, either for or against missions; the "annual meeting," was compressed into the hour, and from a meeting of some fifty people the offertory was nearer 10s. than £1. Everything about the place betokened a fairly large and comfortably-off congregation. I was surprised to be told at another place that the congregation was not so large because it was "Missionary Sunday"! Want of sympathy was alleged as the cause; and this "want of sympathy" in the pew was heard of quite often.

What can such ministers be thinking about? It seems incredible that they should actively disbelieve in the evangelization of the world; their indifference, therefore, must be due to another and scarcely less culpable cause. The reaction of such an attitude on church and pastor is always disastrous.

Conciliating Boer Sentiment. It is to be hoped that the unwise plan of choosing some of the "Burgher Corps" (Boers who latterly fought on our side against their own countrymen) as members of the South African Constabulary will be abandoned by the authorities, in view of the deep resentment not unnaturally felt towards them by the Boers who fought to the end. There are other ways of rewarding these men for their services besides putting them in authority over compatriots who look upon them as traitors. Our South African policy in the past has suffered greatly from a lack of tact. Racial antipathies and national sentiment may have no place in an ideal code of morals, but the existence of these feelings should never be forgotten by those who have to conciliate defeated foes and turn them into friends and fellow-subjects. Our future stability and progress in South Africa will largely depend on how far this priceless quality of tact will be shown by our rulers and administrators.

Kitchener on Gordon. Viscount Kitchener's eulogium on Gordon, on the occasion of the unveiling of the statue which is presently to be transferred to Khartoum, was laconic, but there was one sentence which was remarkable both for its pithiness, and for its omission of an all-important point:—

> I shall be pleased to see this statue placed on the banks of the Nile at Khartoum, where I am sure it will be an object-lesson both to natives and Europeans of the man who led a blameless life, who put duty before himself, and who died happily for his country.

One more touch would have completed this picture of the most devout soldier of our times—a recognition that all that Gordon did was done from a single eye for the glory of God. It is a curious feature of the day that public reference to the foundation of a good man's life in his religion is seldom openly made. This is unjust to him and misleading to the hearer. Derivative virtues find their true quality in the root of true piety out of which they grow.

'Ware the Sultan! There are signs that the Sultan is meditating another attack upon the Armenians. Ominous rumours of future troubles and massacres in the district of Sassoun are beginning to circulate, and the Khurds in the neighbourhood are growing restless and insolent. Already the Armenian village of Norschen, near Mush, has been plundered and burned, with the usual accompaniment of outrage and murder. There is small probability of any active interference from outside; but there is one remedy that is at least possible. There is nothing which the Sultan and his myrmidons are more afraid of (short of force) than a healthy publicity. Those who love the darkness "because their deeds are evil" hate the searchlight of knowledge turned on them. Therefore should every effort be made by the Christian Press to forestall any attempt to renew the old horrors, by ringing the alarm bell right through Europe, and letting the Porte know that its sinister designs are being widely recognised and carefully watched.

A Wise Monarch. The sympathy with Evangelical work, which the late murdered king of Italy expressed in so many practical ways, is being extended by the present monarch. In a recent letter from Dr. Prochet, which is quoted in the Mission World, a noteworthy instance is given. Some little time ago, at Carunchio, an attack was made upon the hall where an evangelist was holding a service. Thirty-five of the assailants were arrested and sentenced to fine and imprisonment, but on appeal, twenty-six were discharged. The remainder petitioned for the Royal pardon, but this the King refused to give, until the evangelist had first done so, and this being given, the King's at once followed. The effect which this action will have is incalculable. On the evangelist holding another service at the place, several of the offenders were in the congregation, and went up and kissed his hand. Since then the King gave an audience to Dr. Prochet, who explained the grounds and objects of the movement in Italy. Truly the door has been opened wide in Italy for the dissemination of the truth as it is in Jesus.

☞ We are very desirous of communicating with a donor who only gave initials B.N., and shall be glad if that friend will send us name and address.

28th Keswick Convention.

VIEWS similar to those expressed by Dr. Woods Smyth in our issue of the 17th inst. have evidently been working in the minds of others besides himself. It is always so. When God moves a man to a call to His people, in writing or in speech, it is at once evident that the same Spirit has been moving in the hearts of others in the same direction, and there is an immediate response.

Some on their way to Keswick, who were reading Dr. Woods Smyth's appeal, at once recognised it as giving voice to their own convictions; it is now evident that the same Spirit had already occupied the minds and commanded the utterances of speakers on the platforms of the Convention.

The article referred to had asked: "Are we awake and alive to the character and circumstance of present-day life—religious, social, national? Or does the blindness and condemnation of former ages apply in force to us to-day?"

It had affirmed that—

> Our present religious measures are conspicuously failing. A fundamental change has arisen in most minds as to the Gospel. It is no longer a message of glad tidings and the power of God, but rather a burden requiring heroic qualities to accept its requirements. It is no longer—
> but we "must pay the price." It is no longer "the God of peace Himself sanctify you wholly," but it is the legal command, "Consecrate yourself," "Make the surrender," "Put your all on the altar." . . . For about a quarter of a century we have been upon these lines of over-much consecration. The Godward side of salvation and sanctification does not receive adequate recognition. . . . "It is time to seek the Lord," that His own power may appear among us, for herein alone is the remedy for declining faith, for failing churches, for multiplying social evils, for hastening national decay.

Warnings and counsels such as these had evidently been spoken loudly by the Spirit into the inward ears of many, if not all, of the speakers. At the early prayer-meeting for Ireland on Monday morning, the Chairman, Captain Tottenham, summed up the causes of the troubles of our sister island in one word, Roman Catholicism, and marvelled at the apathy of the Evangelical people. Many wished that there had been an adequate contingent of Protestant, Evangelical, and evangelistic enthusiasts on the platform to give effect by their presence to this appeal for prayer for priest-ridden Ireland.

None present will ever forget the thoughts that breathed through words that burned in the utterances of Dr. A. T. Pierson on the same evening, in an address of over an hour, during which the audience was held spellbound as he spoke of the many who are weak and sickly, and the many who are in deadly sleep; of the boneless weakness, the sickly apathy, the deathlike atrophy, of the unworthy descendants of the fathers, mighty through God, who left us a heritage which we are too indifferent to hold fast.

The lament over the dead formalities of Ritualism led on to a scathing denunciation of the fallacious teachings in theological schools, colleges, and universities, where the Word of Life is depleted of its living power, the edge is taken off the sharp two-edged sword, and men who enter in order to be trained as evangelists, pastors, and teachers, are ably taught by their professors how not to do it.

Nor was there only denunciation. The Bible-readings on the two following mornings, on 2 Peter i. 16-21, held forth the Word of Life, the doctrine of the Incarnate, the Crucified, the Risen Son of God, by whom alone we have fellowship with God. "The present truth" was shown to be that special form of sound words which is to be always held fast, and is to be held forth at any special time, according to the special need.

The present truth for the present day was said to be the prophetic Word, verified and made more assured by the vision of the transfigured Lord, vouchsafed to the three eye-witnesses of His transcendent Majesty on the Holy Mount, in opposition to the cunningly-devised fables of the present day, the outrageous perversions of the Scriptures of truth, the infidel teachings from inside the professing Church.

It was shown that all subsequent Messianic promise and prophecy were enfolded in the primeval promise contained in the judicial sentence on the ancient serpent—"And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her Seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise His heel." The meditation on the Transfiguration was a revelation of some of the highest and deepest ways of God.

Nor was this study wholly objective. The subjective effect of objective truth, the inward result of taking heed to the prophetic Word, which converges and concentrates itself on Jesus, the Son of God, enlightens the eyes of our understanding, and causes day to dawn, and the Day-Star to arise in our hearts. For "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." And not only is the coming of the Son of Man in His humiliation experienced in the soul, but the day-dawn of His appearing is anticipated, and the Bright and Morning Star already arises in our hearts. And Jesus makes Himself to be a "living bright reality."

Souls reduced to self-despair by their own barrenness, and to bitter disappointment by the failure of their own schemes of fruitfulness, have been made to laugh for joy, as Sarah laughed at the promise of Isaac, when they have been told of a Christ who dwells in the heart by faith; and they have rejoiced in the liberty of the sons of God, as Sarah rejoiced when, at her behest, Abraham cast out the bondwoman and her son.

The two Bible-readings of the Bishop of Durham in the same tent were an admirably appropriate confirmation of those of Dr. A. T. Pierson, under the leading of the same Spirit. The first was on Philippians iv. 4-7: (1) The Christian Life; (3) The Secret of it; (3) How to Live it. We shall never be someone else. The Gospel is given to make us in a deep and blessed sense ourselves. The Bishop's second reading was on Mark xii. 24, Psa. cxviii. 22, Rom. xvi. 25, the essential importance of prayer, and meditation on the Word of God. A valuable quotation was, "Never let what you know be disturbed by what you do not know."

Prebendary Webb-Peploe's four Bible-readings on the Galatians, the Ephesians, the Philippians, and the Colossians gave a consecutive and bird's-eye view of these Epistles, which, if studied at home with the luminous suggestions given, cannot but form a solid basis of ascertained Scripture truth.

Two of the evening meetings were specially noticeable—one addressed by Canon H. M. Hay Aitken and Dr. Pierson, the other by Revs. Gregory Mantle and F. B. Meyer. At these and others many young men and women, full of promise for future usefulness, were added to the army of the Lord.

Faith grows by what it feeds on. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." Food for the soul was freely, faithfully, and wisely ministered, and the deepening of the spiritual life was sought by directing the hearers away from themselves to God—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

The evangelistic addresses of Rev. J. McNeill and Mr. W. R. Lane in the market-place were effective and effectual, and Mr. McNeill's services last Sunday in the tent were highly enjoyed; and we cannot doubt were used of God in arousing sinners and encouraging those who had believed through grace.

Intolerant Education.

SIR,—In 8,000 parishes the only school is the Church school, and many of these are in the hands of the clerical party. Permit me to lay before you a few samples of "Catholic" teaching. Before me lies the Rev. Frederic Aubert Gace's booklet, "Some Questions of the Church Catechism," for the use of families and schools. Mr. Gace is vicar of Barling Magna, Essex. Needless to say that he is a Ritualist. In what light does he look upon his Dissenting fellow-countrymen? He seriously tells us (p. 15) that they are "heretics; and that in the Litany we expressly pray to be delivered from the sins of 'false doctrine, heresy, and schism.'" He then asks whether the worship of Nonconformists is a "laudable service." Christians would readily give the answer in a most emphatic affirmative. Not this narrow-minded cleric. His reply is, "No; because they worship God according to their own evil and corrupt imaginations, and not according to His revealed will, and therefore their worship is idolatrous!" This in the year of grace 1902!

"Is Dissent a great sin?" A.: "Yes; it is in direct opposition to our duty towards God." Mr. Gace would have made a capital inquisitor. He goes so far as to ask—"Why have not Dissenters been excommunicated?" A.: "Because the law of the land does not allow the wholesome law of the Church to be acted upon," &c.

"Is it wicked . . . . to enter a meeting-house at all?" is a further innocent question. "Most assuredly," young Anglicans are taught.

I turn to "A Book for the Children of God," issued by W. Knott, London, 1891, and this is what I am told (p. 77):—"The Catholic Church is the home of the Holy Ghost. It is His only earthly home. He does not make His home in any Dissenting sect. Sometimes people quarrel with the Church, and break away from her, and make little sham churches of their own. We call these people Dissenters and their sham churches, sects. The Holy Ghost does not abide—does not dwell—with them. He goes and visits them, perhaps, but only as a stranger."

In "The Congregation in Church," new and revised edition (p. 202), I learn that "although not actual schism, it is schismatical to attend dissenting (sic) meeting-houses, or to subscribe to, or assist the sectarian objects of dissenters in any way. The same cannot be said of Roman Catholic churches and their objects, because the Roman Catholics are a branch of the true Church"!

With a knowledge that such intolerant doctrine is held and taught by Anglican clergymen, is it any wonder that Nonconformists have closed their ranks and are fighting the present Education Bill all over the country?—I am, &c.,

SIR,—The need for some effective protection of individual parishioners, especially among the dependent classes, such as is now given by the Cowper-Temple clause, is shown by the present condition of affairs in the public elementary schools of Dorchester, Oxon.

The infants are taught to say the "Hail Mary" every morning at the beginning of school; the "Hail Mary" forms part of the prayers used daily at the opening both of the boys' and girls' schools; the children say it all together; it seems difficult to find a child who does not know it. All the children are required to make the sign of the cross at the opening prayers in the school. The girls are taught that they ought to say the "Hail Mary" in their private prayers in the evening. Some of the parents have been astonished at hearing their children saying the "Hail Mary" at home.

There is a crucifix in each school. In the girls' school, on the left of the crucifix, a picture of the Sacred Heart of Jesus; on the right the Sacred Heart of Mary. The children are expected to bow to the crucifix. The infants are taught to do so before beginning morning prayer. The children are expected to attend a children's "Mass" on saints' days. This service is called "Mass" by the vicar, his wife, the teachers, and the children. This "Mass" is a substitute for the "religious" instruction. One little girl, Frances Williams, came home crying repeatedly from the Lenten service (held at 9.30 on Wednesday mornings instead of religious teaching) because she had been told that unless she brought a penny or half-penny to the collection God would not love her, and that she would not go to the treat! When she said her mother would not give her any money for the object in question, the child was told that her mother did not love God and would not go to heaven.

The children are all carefully instructed to bow to the "altar" at these "Masses." If they forget, the vicar's wife is in attendance to see that the children bow to the "altar" on entering the church. Several girls who refused to bow to the "altar" were caned on their return to the school from the "Mass," and the reason for their being caned was publicly announced to the school.

The children have a treat given them at Christmas time; but only those who have attended "Mass" on saints' days are eligible; hence those children whose parents object to their going to the "Mass," cannot partake of the treat in question. But the marks for attendance at "Mass" are registered at the same time that the school register is called. If any child has not attended "Mass," she loses a mark towards the treat. The May Queen and her maids of honour are chosen from the children who attend "Mass." It seems impossible for a girl who does not do so to occupy the coveted positions just mentioned. The May Queen and maids attend the "Sung Mass" before going in procession through the village.

The parents do not appear to know anything of the "Conscience Clause." On hearing of it, some thirty-four applied to the teachers to have their children withdrawn from the "religious instruction." This was on July 14, but the children of these parents, although sent home for the first hour in the morning, were detained for prayers at the close of the school on Wednesday afternoon, July 16, at which the "Hail Mary" was said, which constituted a gross violation of the Conscience Clause of the Education Act, 1870.

One candidate for Confirmation was refused presentation to the Bishop because he would not go to confession.

The vicar is a member of the English Church Union and of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament.—Your obedient servant,

The Relief of Distressed Widows.—Amid the varied sufferings in the Metropolis there is little that can awaken deeper commiseration than the poor widow of a working-man, with her fatherless children, struggling for bare subsistence. A large amount of sympathy continues to be evinced in the work of the Society for the Relief of Distressed Widows, which comprises in the highest sense the true principles of charity and usefulness. Some 289 poor widows were last year given relief, the amount expended being over £622. It is a source of gratification to the committee that the cases relieved continue to be satisfactory on the whole. The examples of fortitude and energy under the severest of trials are often most praiseworthy. Parcels of left-off wearing apparel are valuable adjuncts to the money given, and are appreciated by the recipients. The secretary is Mr. S. Rayson, 32, Sackville Street, W.

"Oh, that Ishmael——."

VERY pathetic is the picture of the aged patriarch pleading with God on behalf of his fine lad of thirteen. The finishing sentence of that interview is touching with its earnest petition—"Oh, that Ishmael might live before Thee!" For years the tent life of Abraham and Sarah had gone on quietly and happily, being enlivened by the presence and youthful doings of their only boy, Ishmael, with whom no doubt they were both proud and satisfied. But as into every home-circle come surprises, so it was in the tent of Abraham, when suddenly he received the message, to him startling, alarming, and heart-touching: "As for Sarah, I will bless her, and give thee a son by her; yea, I will bless her, and she shall become nations."

The announcement made Abraham anxious about Ishmael, concerning whom many and mighty promises had been given and were to be repeated, and so he pours out his soul to God in the short yet earnest petition, "Oh, that Ishmael might live before Thee!" The answer was a substantiation of what had been promised, with some additions. What had been promised concerning the son of the bond-woman? To Hagar (Gen. xvi. 10), before the birth had taken place, it was said: "I will multiply thy seed exceedingly, that it shall not be numbered for multitude." Again in Gen. xvii. 20 to Abraham: "I will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly, and I will make him a great nation." Then in Gen. xxi. 13, when Abraham was sending away the son of the flesh, he was comforted by a repetition of the promise—"and also of the son of the bondwoman will I make a nation." Lastly, to the despondent mother, who every moment expected to see her lad pass away in spite of thrice-repeated promises: we read in Gen. xxi. 18 thatshe is told, "Arise, lift up the lad, for I will make him a great nation."

The fulfilment of these promises, however, was for the far future, and to-day is verified by the more than dwelling in their villages and encampments. (Gen. xxv. 16, R.V.) Yet another promise, given in answer to the father's request for his son, viz., "twelve princes (chiefs) shall he beget," finds fulfilment in Gen. xxv. 13-15, and from these came the great nation of Arabs dwelling in the Peninsula of Arabia.

It is interesting to note that the two eldest sons of Ishmael, viz., Nebaioth and Kedar, were the originators of the two modes of living among their descendants. Nebaioth took up his abode originally in caves and excavated chambers in the rocks and mountains, as is proved by the innumerable Nebathean inscriptions that are found in these ancient dwellings, afterwards superseded by stone houses. Kedar, however, being of a roving disposition, made tents and founded the race of "nomads." Here again Scripture becomes plain, "Sing unto the Lord a new song . . . let the desert, and the encampments that Kedar doth inhabit—let the inhabitants of the rock sing, let them shout from the top of the mountain" (Isa. xlii. 11). Note, also, "Black as the tents of Kedar" (S. Sol. i. 5); and see Jer. xlix. 28, 29, 31. Yet another promise about this much-misunderstood son of the bondwoman (Gen. xvi. 12): "He shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren," meaning that although nations might rise, flourish, and pass away, Ishmael as a nation should continue, a fact that is proved by his isolated existence to-day before all nations.

Jeremiah speaks of the "wealthy nation, that dwelleth without care, which have neither gates nor bars, dwelling alone" (xlix. 31). How literally true, especially the last clause, so much alone are the sons of Ishmael that up to the present time even missionary societies have been content to leave them alone. When will one or more of these, with mighty faith in the Living God, arise to evangelize these desert dwellers and rangers? When will they send forth witnesses of the risen Saviour, able to save even these millions of the desert, and free them from the bondage of Islam? Alas, for the reply to the writer from so many of the existing societies that "lack of means prevents us from extension." Such a state of things makes one wonder if the followers of Christ have forgotten the Lord's last command to His disciples to "go and teach all nations," not excluding the descendants of even Ishmael. Oh for a fuller obedience to the "Pray ye," "Give ye," "Go ye," of the Founder of all missionary work, whether home or foreign.

But some may ask, What encouragement is there to take up this work among these apparently outcast and exiled people? Let us return to the Word and see. Ishmael partook of his share in the blessing that was to come into the world by the covenant of circumcision (Gen. xvii. 25), and by that one act was not excluded from the promises to be fulfilled through Isaac. Turn again to the Messianic Psalm, lxxii. 9, 10: "They that dwell in the desert shall bow before him," "the Kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts," fulfilled in a small way in Matt. ii. 11, when the wise men from the Eastern desert came and worshipped the infant Christ, offering their treasures and gifts. And now, two thousand years after, there awaits a when God's people shall rise to their responsibilities. Again, we remember with joy that, among others that partook of the blessing of Pentecost (Acts ii. 11), Arabians (Ishmaelites) are named.

But to-day the nation is far from God and the salvation realised through faith in the Son of God. Who is to blame? Let all answer for themselves, and commence to pray, "Oh, that Ishmael might live before Thee!" and then let each see what he or she can do to bring about the answer, either by "going," "let going," or "help going." What has been attempted in a small way in one direction can be gathered from a volume* just published, which may interest and encourage some on behalf of Ishmael. Much remains to be done, however; the harvest is great, but the labourers are few. The work may be discouraging, hard, and apparently fruitless, but let each remember that it is "not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord," and "Lo, I am with you alway." "Who then offereth willingly to consecrate himself this day unto the Lord" (1 Chron. xxix. 5, R.V.) on behalf of Ishmael? If taken up in earnest, and acted upon, it will not be long ere—

Arabia's desert ranger
To him shall bend the knee.

To-morrow.

Oh, the hurtful fret and worry
Which we sometimes feel!
In the world's great press and hurry
Comfort we may steal.
When the heart is wrung with sorrow,
Trust to-day! Heed not to-morrow!

We our circumstances are blaming
When affairs go wrong;
But our Father doubt is shaming—
"Trust Me all along"—
Bidding us His comfort borrow:
"Be not anxious for the morrow!"

When the way is growing dreary,
And the soul is sad;
Think of Him who, often weary,
Made all others glad—
Think of Him and comfort borrow.
Trust to-day! Heed not to-morrow!

When we reach the darkling river,
And our feet shall press
On the borders of "For Ever,"
Past the wilderness,
Banish grief, away with sorrow!
Soon will dawn the great to-morrow!

When in glory thou art resting,
Strike thy harp of gold,
Foes no more thy peace molesting,
Life's short story told—
Then no pain, and there no sorrow,
But the great, the grand to-morrow!

Notes From Madras.—II.

THE Madras Tamil Mission is of a unique character, as being the only organized native mission in South India which is conducted on absolute faith lines, neither asking for help nor reminding its subscribers of their contributions. It was established in 1884 by Mr. Gnanamuthu Joseph Israel. He held the first school in a stable. This Hindu brother of ours, after spending much time in prayer, was led to visit England, Russia, and Norway, and to lay the need of a permanent Home for his orphans before Christian friends. God so blessed his efforts that on his return to Madras he was able to purchase a suitable property far below its real value.

The Orphan Home at Tondiarpett, four and a-half miles to the north of Madras, is worth seeing. On the occasion of our visit we were informed that it contained 135 famine and Tamil orphans, who receive education up to the seventh standard. From recent news we infer that owing to the fresh outbreak of famine in India the number of inmates must increase considerably.

Next to the work among orphans, the waifs and ragged children receive much attention. The Mission has five ragged-school centres in and around the city, with 450 pupils. Twenty-one workers, all natives, are employed, and the Gospel is carried among lepers and others.

About 2,000 tracts are distributed monthly among the heathen population of Madras.

A Free Reading Room in connection with the Mission was opened in North Black Town on March 16, 1900, and many of the Madras English and Tamil dailies, as well as periodicals from India, Europe, and America, are placed on the table. The room is opened from six to eight a.m., and from 4.30 to eight p.m. It is well attended, and is exercising an influence for good.

Mr. Israel has all the accounts audited by a public accountant, and balance-sheets are issued for the sake of those who invest their gifts in the work. The Home has a small press, and, besides other work, the boys are taught embroidery. In order to insure the future of the orphans as far as human provision goes, and make them independent and self-reliant, Rev. A. W. Rudisill, D.D., Manager of the M.E. Publishing House, Madras, has arranged to teach some of them type-making, printing, book-binding, &c.

After giving us some of the foregoing statements, Mr. Israel said to us: "You will see that the work of God has prospered not only in the hands of missionaries, but also of those Indians who received the Gospel from you, and are now in their turn proclaiming the same to their countrymen, looking to God alone for help. The work is only in its beginning. There are great possibilities before it if we continue to be faithful.

"If India is to be wholly evangelized, it must be done eventually by her own consecrated sons and daughters. The work of this Mission is only a sample of what God is prepared to do for India in the future. Will you then, on your return to England, do your best to enlist the prayers of God's children for a mighty work of God's Holy Spirit among the native Christian community of India?"

Speaking from experience, we may assure mission and missionary friends who may be contemplating a trip to India during the next cool season that they will meet with an enthusiastic welcome at the Tondiarpett Orphan Home. The pretty Hindu custom of greeting welcome guests with flower garlands was lavishly exercised upon us and the friends accompanying us. We were, so to speak, embraced by flowers, feeling on this as on other similar occasions, that in our persons were honoured all the kind readers of The Christian who are shareholders in God's work.

Morals in South Africa.

By Mrs. JOSEPHINE BUTLER.

OUR eyes have been especially directed to South Africa. War is a horrible thing, and always gives rise to confusion and disintegration, including much moral evil. But God's hand has been shown so clearly in this case that I do not take so serious a view of the evils likely to follow the war just closed as many of my friends do.

An ex-soldier said to me: "I can tell you between ourselves of things which would not be believed in a public meeting. Many poor fellows come out here from home, ignorant, careless, sometimes vicious, and are simply swept by hundreds into the kingdom of Heaven."

I have seen recently a gentleman who has resided for many years in South Africa, to whom I spoke of the tenderness of our God in sending

BLESSING AMONG THE TROOPS.

He smiled, and said, "Mrs. Butler, it is a revolution, a glorious revolution." I scarcely understood, and I asked, "You mean a revolution in the moral character of the army, the rank and file?" He replied, "Yes, it is that; but it is more than that." I could not quite fathom his meaning; but he gave me to understand that it has been a revelation to the Christian workers on that great battle-field which has produced nothing short of a revolution in their thoughts of God, and in their whole attitude towards Him and His redeemed ones. There has been a great number of Christian workers, men and women, in South Africa with the troops ministering and taking part in spiritual work, with multitudes looking on, there and from a distance. He says that upon these hath "a great Light shined." They have learned and seen the presence, the power, the love of God, as never before.

Another of these workers said: "It is not only that a great number of our soldiers and others, Boers and British, are drawn into the kingdom through the word spoken and prayers offered in the midst of the camps; but God is pleased to speak direct, it seems, to the hearts of men, without human agency. The suffering is great, unimaginable to many who are at home, not only from wounds, sickness, and death, but from the direst hardships and straits, continued month by month and year by year, thoughts of home which make strong men weep, and sorrow of tender, manly hearts. In the midst of it all the Holy Spirit has been breathing, working, converting, and the Lord has taken to Himself a host of humble believers."

MORAL QUESTIONS.

The Act for the regulation of the social evil was passed in Cape Colony in 1868. Mr. Saul Solomon, who was then Premier, observed the immoral tendency of it, and instituted a commission of inquiry, the result of which was that, after much labour on his part and that of Bishop Grey and others, the Act was repealed in 1872. Another friend of the abolitionist principles was Sir Bartle Frere. During his term of governorship many insidious but unsuccessful attempts were made to revise the system. In 1885, however, after Sir Bartle Frere's recall, the Act was again passed—the very year in which Queen Victoria signed the Bill for repeal at home.

It is possible that the Act has fallen into abeyance during the war, but it is still law; and one serious aspect of it is the power of extension to the Transvaal and Orange River Colony and other places—a terrible prospect. The presence of troops has always been one of the excuses for imposing the system; but its evil influence is always immensely wider. We want the best men and women to the front, and we need the power of the Holy Spirit. When we realize the enormous preponderance of the native races in South Africa over the whites, we can realize that the Act, as in India, would fall most heavily on the native women; and that it would be, as it has been in other Colonies, a curse to the conquered races, and a serious hindrance to their acceptance of the Christian faith.

Perishing Little Ones.

REV. J. C. LAWSON, of Aligarh, who is now in this country, sends us the following extract from a letter received from his devoted wife:—

"Our native pastor has brought in thirty-one more famine children, making ninety-three in all. For these we have no support. The little ones hunt in the sand for ants to eat, and the starving young men he has to drive away, and refuse them food, for he can help only the little ones, and the widows and their children all have to be refused.

Mrs. Matthews has her hands full, and feels that she can take only young women—not those with children. We really must have a separate department for such. We need a building for 100 women to begin with, and also pay for some one to care for them.

Oh! my heart is breaking, because now the widows and children are calling for help, and we have no money to take in more than a few. We ought to have a man there daily to gather them in. Then we need to build new barracks for them. What will we do with the children—and no room! If we overcrowd, it means sickness and death. Do ask the dear people of England if they are willing these little ones should perish!"

The above sad news (writes Mr. Lawson) has come to me right in the midst of the Keswick Convention, where so many have claimed to reach the top of the Mount of Transfiguration. This may be proved now. Now is the time to bring it to a practical test, for at the foot of the mount is something for the disciples of Jesus to do. Away out yonder, on India's burning sands, people are DYING DAILY FROM STARVATION!

Shall the "transfigured" children of God let them die? The Keswick preacher cried, "Ho! every one that thirsteth!" Out yonder they are dying from thirst. "Ho! every one!" but there is no one out there among the starving multitude to shout out that proclamation, and to lead them to the Water of Life. The preacher at Keswick declared, in the words of Scripture, "He satisfieth the hungry soul!" but how about those hungry ones away out yonder in India? The preacher prayed, "O God, let us see what Thou wouldst have us see, be what Thou wouldst have us be, do what Thou wouldst have us do." He stopped short there. If our dear people in England indeed have the "transfigured" life, they will not only see, be, and do, but they will also "go" to the rescue of these perishing multitudes. Now is the time to see, be, do, and go!

Oh! men and women of God, hear the wailing cry of the widow and orphan away out in India under the brazen skies! Friends have given nobly, and others now, I am sure, will be glad to help. The Lord has sent me from various sources since June 18 over £300, but I want £600 more before I leave England on August 23.

More buildings are needed. Machinery is needed to be used in teaching various industries to over 1,000 famine people at Aligarh. £120 a year is required for the support of a master workman—lay missionary—from England. And then a lady worker is ready to go—anxious to go, but there is nothing for her support.

Dunkerque Sailors' Rest.—In looking on the events of the past twelve months, the workers at the Dunkerque Sailors' Rest are more than ever impressed with the importance of seizing every opportunity of speaking to those met on board ship concerning the things of Christ, as many sad instances of the peculiar dangers which beset a seafaring life have occurred. Mr. and Mrs. Mackenzie and their helpers have been cheered by some striking cases of conversion, and encouraged by receiving good reports from those who have been blessed through the mission in previous years. Nearly 3,000 seamen used the Rest last year, while vessels and the hospital were repeatedly visited, and bags and parcels of Gospel literature were placed on outward-bound ships. No effort is spared in meeting the needs of seamen of every nationality visiting the port. Miss Watson, 16, Woodhall Terrace, Juniper Green, Midlothian, will be pleased to communicate with friends interested in this work.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, August 3. Joshua iii.

A THREE-DAYS' pause was called for ere the host crossed the Jordan. Three days is the recognised period of death and resurrection. "As Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the sea-monster (R.V. marg.), so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." "On the third day He will raise us up, and we shall live before Him." It was fitting, therefore, that this period should pass ere the people could pass through symbolic death, as set forth in the Jordan, to reach the resurrection ground, of which Canaan is the Old Testament type.

Just imagine what the people must have felt as they halted there. Before them the rushing waters of the river, its turbid waters being swollen by the melting snows of Hermon, and beyond them Jericho, embosomed in palms and tamarisks, and surrounded by high walls. What could the men of Israel do in face of such difficulties, except look away to the promise of God, and fix their eyes on the movements of the ark, which was always a symbol of the Covenant into which God had entered with their fathers? We all have, at different times in our lives, to face these great and insuperable difficulties. Happy is it if we can look away from them to the promise of God (Rom. iv. 19, 20, R.V.).

At the close of the three days of preparation the camp was removed from Shittim to a spot within a mile of the boisterous rush of the swollen floods. As the dawn broke, the officers again passed through the host, bidding the people watch the movements of the ark. Then the priests, bearing their precious burden, stepped down into the waters, and they turned back. Far up the river, at Adam, the flow of the river stayed, and over the dry bed the multitude passed. So the Great High Priest has passed through the river of death and judgment that we may go over it dryshod. "He goeth before His sheep, and they follow Him" through death into resurrection.

MONDAY, August 4. Joshua iv.

The first camp in Western Canaan was at Gilgal, five miles from the river; and probably the women and children remained there, whilst their fathers, husbands, and brothers went forward to the conquest of the land (ix. 6; x. 6). There were two sets of stones raised in commemoration of the passage of the Jordan.

I. THOSE ON THE BANK.—From the place where the priests' feet had stood in Jordan, twelve chosen men took each one a stone; and these were piled together in a heap before the eyes of all men. As they stood there, with the certainty to all men that they had once been in the river bed, they were a proof to the senses of what otherwise might have been disputed, that the river had actually been dried up. But there is a deeper lesson for us. As in the passage of the Jordan, all Israel stood in the river, and then came up on to the river's bank, so in the death and resurrection of our Lord, the whole Church lay with Him in His grave, all rose with Him on the Easter morning, all passed with Him in the Divine intention to His throne. Those twelve stones represented the entire people, and commemorated their marvellous transportation from the one side of Jordan to the other. So each recurring Lord's Day and Eastertide should remind us that the river of death rolls between us and the world, and that we have been raised together with Christ, and made to sit together with Him in the heavenlies.

II. THOSE IN THE BED OF THE STREAM.—Not content with pitching a cairn of stones on the river's bank, Joshua set up twelve stones in the midst of Jordan, where the feet of the priests had stood. It was to remind Israel from whence they had come, and the hole of the pit from which they had been digged. Ah, it is well to remember what the grace of God has done for us. "Such were some of you . . ."

TUESDAY, August 5. Joshua v.

The first thing that had to be attended to on the plains of Jericho, was not the overthrow of that grand city, which obstructed the onward march, but circumcision, which represents the cleansed soul, as it was also the original seal of the covenant (Gen. xvii. 8-10). On more than one occasion they had heard Moses speak of the circumcision of the heart, and they must have felt that beneath the outward rite there lay a deep significance, and that the land of Canaan could only be theirs, so far as certain moral conditions were realized. They must be clean; they must be separate from the nations around; they must put away all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. Self and the energy of the flesh must be set aside, that the glory of coming victory might be of God, and not of man.

After Circumcision the Passover. This was the due order, which could not have been reversed. We may not feast on Christ, the Paschal Lamb, incorporating into ourselves His flesh and blood, so long as we are living impure and unseparate lives. Under such conditions, He has no beauty that we should desire Him. The holy soul is alone able to eat of that bread and drink of that cup. There must be a Gilgal before there can be a passover. Then also we have the right to feed on the corn of the land. On resurrection ground we feed on resurrection truths.

We cannot doubt who this mysterious personage was, since, in accepting Joshua's homage, he proved himself equal with God. But what a noble title! He is the true Leader and Commander of His people! And He is also the Captain of another, an invisible host, which always waits to succour the faithful, who fight God's battles. Our victories, after all, are not due to our arms, but to the co-operation of those unseen legions that ride on the winds to our help. Only we must be holy.

WEDNESDAY, August 6. Joshua vi.

What a profound lesson of patient waiting on God was taught in that remarkable command that Israel was only to perambulate the city! The men of war, confident in their might, were eager to match themselves against the inhabitants of the land, and show what they could do. Surely it was time, they would say, for the priests to stand aside and let them approve themselves. But they had to learn that the land was a gift, to be received by faith, not won by effort. God required of them only to obey, and wait, and trust, whilst the Divine Captain led his celestial hosts to the assault, and achieved the victory. Each time that host went round the city, their own strength and self-confidence must have been more and more diminished, and their whole soul must have gone out towards God in living confidence and hope. "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him (Psa. lxii. 5)."

Are you standing face to face with some Jericho? Listen to the Captain's word: "See I have given into thine hand Jericho, and the king thereof, and the mighty men of valour."

Be still! This is the hardest of all. It is only in quietness and confidence that we are really strong. As long as we are able to help ourselves, God leaves us to do so; but when we are like David's dumb dove amid strangers, and are silent to Him, He awakens on our behalf.

Obey! Only God can remove the difficulties that stand in the way of an entirely consecrated life, but there are certain duties and commands which it is incumbent on us to obey.

Have faith! Look away from your preparations and obediences to God Himself, and as you do so your difficulties will melt away. "By faith the walls of Jericho fell down."

THURSDAY, August 7. Joshua vii.

There were three causes in the defeat at Ai. 1. Israel was self-confident because Ai was small (3). The recommendation of the spies proceeded on the supposition that Jericho had been overthrown by the hosts of Israel. But that had not been the case at all. They had walked round and shouted—that was all. There is no single experience of Christian life so perilous as the hour when we are flushed with victory. It is then that we are tempted to magnify ourselves and minify our foes. There is nothing small in Christian life—nothing so small that we can combat it in our own strength.

2. They failed to wait on God. Is it doubtful that, if Joshua had been in abiding fellowship with God, the Spirit of God would have indicated the presence of evil in the host, so that Achan and his sin would have been discovered before the march to Ai? At least it was so in the case of Peter with Ananias and Sapphira. The fifth chapter of the Acts would have recorded a great disaster if it had not contained the story of Peter's discernment of the accursed thing.

3. They had committed a trespass in the devoted thing. Only one Israelite had sinned, but it is written, "The children of Israel committed a trespass in the devoted thing." Not one of us stands alone. We cannot sin without influencing adversely all those who are with or around us. "None of us liveth or dieth to himself."

We must be very definite in discovering and putting away all that God reveals to us as wrong. Achan and his family must have participated in stealing, or at least in concealing the wedge of gold, and all must be rigorously put away.

FRIDAY, August 8. Joshua viii.

Never flinch before your Ais. If you have failed once, you may yet succeed by more watchfulness, circumspection, heart searching, or faith. Indeed, I have often found in my life that God brings us back again and again to some place of earlier failure, as though He does not wish to let our souls sit down baffled before any fortress that arrests our steps. He knows that no temptation has betaken us but what man can bear, and that His grace is sufficient; so, again and again He brings us back to the old battlefield, saying, "Child, on this spot that witnessed your failure, I want you to be more than conqueror."

Most solemn were the rites at Ebal and Gerizim for the reading of the Law. Remember that even when we reach the land of rest we do not get away from the holy Law—nay, the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit (Rom. viii. 1-4). It is quite true that, by our union with Him who died, we have passed out of the sphere in which we were married to our first husband, the Law, and have left that legal relationship behind us; but it is also true that our love for the blessed Man of our choice weans us from all that He hates, and weds us to all that He loves. In other words, we come again to Ebal and Gerizim of cursing and blessing.

SATURDAY, August 9. Joshua ix.

Israel was more injured by Gibeon than by Jericho! We may dread the wiles of Satan more than his assaults. The deceitfulness of sin is worse than its open war. It is better to meet Caiaphas than Judas. A black devil is less to be dreaded than a white one. As soon as the early church passed from the open hatred of the world into alliance with the empire, under Constantine, it began to become corrupt. "Beloved, believe not every spirit; but prove the spirits, whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world."

"They asked not counsel of the Lord." If only the Urim and Thummim had been consulted, the dimming light in the sacred stone would have betrayed the fatal secret, and arrested the formation of this crafty league. Oh for that discernment of which the Apostle spoke, that we may distinguish between things that differ! (Phil. i. 10, R.V.)

The Gibeonites were condemned to be hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation and the altar. This position they retained, and in after years heavy disasters befell Israel, because Saul, in his mad zeal, broke the solemn league and covenant into which Joshua and the princes entered with them (2 Sam. xxi. 2). Have you entered into alliance with Gibeon? Be of good cheer. Do not always let your life be overshadowed by your mistake. Turn to God in faith and repentance, and He will teach how these very hindrances may hew the wood of your burnt-offering, and draw the water for your thirst.

The Wesleyan Conference.

[BY OUR OWN REPRESENTATIVE.]

THE 159th Wesleyan Conference opened in the Central Hall, Manchester, on Tuesday, July 22, amid many signs of public interest. According to the new order, the Representative Session met first, and many subjects of great importance to the welfare of the Methodist Church, and of deep interest to many beyond the borders of Methodism, were dealt with in the course of the week. All that is possible within the space allotted to me is very briefly to refer to a few of the matters of universal interest to Christian believers.

GREAT PROBLEMS.

And, first, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN would have been delighted to hear the deeply spiritual address of the new President, Rev. Professor J. SHAW BANKS, when he was inducted into the chair. Theologian and scholar as he is, he chose as the subject of his deliverance a question of vital and paramount importance to all the churches, namely, the need of a great increase in the Evangelistic or Missionary Spirit in our day. He knew there had never been a time when there was more of this spirit in all the churches, but he was oppressed with the thought of how the demands of the work, both at home and abroad, outstripped the present supply. The immense growth of the population within great centres of the country created terrible problems for the economist, the legislator, and the philanthropist, but the problem presented to the Christian Church was more serious still. They had seen in recent months some most disquieting phenomena in the large centres of population, and if those people who were guilty of acts of violence and wrong were to learn, as other classes had already learned, the power of combination and organization, the prospect not only for the Church but for the country would be serious indeed.

How were they to overtake and cope with these great problems? First, he thought there was the necessity for greater elasticity of administration. But the greater necessity was for an order of

HIGH-CLASS CHRISTIAN EVANGELISTS.

They were thankful for those they had, but they were not nearly enough. The greatest blessing which God could give to His Church and to England at the present moment would be a great number of such evangelists. They were an Evangelistic Church. Evangelism was the very breath of their life. John Wesley was the prince of evangelists, and they had many who were not unworthy followers of him. But he could not believe that the present number of Christian workers of this class amongst them represented the amount of this high gift which God Almighty in His grace had actually bestowed upon their Church. He could only explain the discrepancy by thinking there were some of them who were suppressing and hindering the gift which God had bestowed. The President pleaded with his brethren not to restrain or quench the forces of God's Spirit that were kindling in their souls.

Professor Banks went on to say that a greater boon still would be the re-baptism of all, from the youngest to the oldest, with this zeal for God and for souls. He referred to the power of appeal of the old Methodist preachers, and then, in a touching passage from his own experience, said, "I remember one of those irresistible appeals on a Sunday evening I heard more than fifty years ago, made by the father of our secretary, and it smote my heart." From that day to this he had never been troubled with temptations to pride or self-seeking.

EVERY MINISTER OUGHT TO BE AN EVANGELIST.

He could not get away from it, and he ought not to try.

Turning to the work abroad, the President said it was just as true that the demands far outstripped their means of overtaking the work. If they allowed their missionary enthusiasm to languish it showed they did not realize the unique greatness of the work. They ought not to allow the foreign missionary work of the Church to take its place only as one of the many subordinate agencies of the Church. God's work in foreign lands stands equally on a level with all their work at home. The only means by which they could meet these great demands was by close and constant fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ Himself.

THE EDUCATION BILL.

An animated discussion took place on the Government Education Bill, in which both sides of the question were represented. Dr. WALLER and Dr. ALLEN gave a general approval of the Bill, but desired further amendments. Rev. H. PRICE HUGHES, Mr. R. W. PERKS, M.P., Mr. LEWIS WILLIAMS (Chairman of the Cardiff School Board), and Mr. TUDOR WALTERS, of Leicester, strongly denounced the Bill, and by an immense majority (471 to 66) the Conference supported them. The resolution declared that the "irreducible minimum" of the rights of conscience and public justice demanded at least that the majority on the local educational authority, and on the governing committee of every school, should consist of publicly elected persons.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY FUND.

The report presented by the Committee of the Twentieth Century Fund showed that this great effort was almost completed. £900,000 were already paid in, and when the outstanding additional promises were fulfilled, only £26,000 remained to complete the million pounds which had been allocated to various departments of the Church's activities. The committee suggested that the balance needed should be automatically raised by the end of the year through the accumulation of interest on the sum already in hand. Rev. H. PRICE HUGHES urged the rich men of the Conference to bring the great enterprise to a more heroic conclusion, and to raise the balance at once. In response, some £5,000 were promised by members of the Conference. It must be remembered that, in addition to the sums named above, the Irish Conference has raised £52,000, and the foreign missionary districts have contributed £20,000, which will be expended on the extension of the work within their own areas. So that more than the original aim of a million guineas will be attained in all probability by the end of the year.

The most interesting statement in Mr. PERKS' speech was to the effect that the Committee had entered into negotiations for the purchase of the "Royal Aquarium," in Westminster, as the site of the proposed Methodist Church House and Great Central Hall for evangelistic purposes in the West End of London. This site, within a stone's throw of the Houses of Parliament, and almost at the doors of Westminster Abbey, was regarded as a splendid position for a great Connexional Hall, which will be the centre and headquarters of world-wide Methodism, as well as the home of aggressive evangelism. The building will contain a large hall to hold 3,000 persons, a smaller hall to seat 1,000, with numerous committee rooms and other accessories.

"FORWARD MOVEMENT" IN FOREIGN MISSIONS.

An interesting session was devoted to Foreign Missions. The call to a "Forward Movement" was sounded in earnest speeches by Revs. MARSHALL HARTLEY and W. H. FINDLAY, secretaries of the Missionary Society. Their plea was supported by Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES, and the venerable leaders, Dr. E. E. JENKINS and Dr. RIGG; and a resolution was unanimously agreed to, declaring that the hour had come for the Wesleyan Church to adopt solemnly in the faith and fear of God a more energetic and aggressive policy with regard to foreign missionary work. Such advance the Committee was convinced was only possible by such an increase in the spirit of devotion to Christ and of loyalty to His commands as would secure year by year an adequate supply of workers and funds. A series of missionary conventions on a large scale will therefore be held during the coming year at selected centres throughout the country. Sir GEORGE SMITH, a Cornish layman, condemned the policy of retrenchment adopted some years ago. He said well that while they must work on business lines they must remember it was "the King's business."

FRATERNAL COURTESIES.

The reception of a Nonconformist deputation gave an opportunity for the interchange of fraternal courtesies. The absence through illness of Dr. Maclaren was deeply regretted, but Dr. MACKENNAL ably represented the deputation and Dr. STEPHENSON fittingly replied for the Conference. The President also said there were many signs that the desire for unity of spirit and, as far as possible, unity of action, permeated the churches of Christ. He reminded them that the very ground of their existence as Nonconformist churches, however, was the maintenance, and the experience, and the defence of inward religion. The tendency in all ages was to substitute the formal and the ceremonial for that which gave soul and value to all forms and rites of worship.

THE CASE OF DR. BEET.

The peace of the Connexion is threatened by doctrinal controversy. Rev. Dr. Agar Beet, widely known as an expositor and theologian, has raised questions as to man's natural immortality and the eternity of the conscious suffering of the lost. Next year his term as theological tutor at Richmond College closes, and it was necessary to nominate three ministers for the post. A long discussion took place as to whether Dr. Beet's name should be included in the nominations, and eventually Rev. T. F. Lockyer, B.A., a theological writer of considerable repute, was placed first, Dr. Beet second, and Rev. F. Platt, M.A., third. The Pastoral Session this week must choose one of these three for the office. Rev. H. PRICE HUGHES said that Dr. Beet was neither a Universalist nor a believer in Conditional Immortality. He believed in eternal punishment, but he did not dogmatically assert that that necessarily involved eternal conscious suffering. No one used stronger language than Dr. Beet both with regard to the sinfulness of sin, and its punishment. He urged that Dr. Beet should be re-appointed. On the other hand, Rev. W. L. WATKINSON, Dr. RIGG, Dr. RANDLES, and others urged that Dr. Beet's views unfitted him for the post of tutor in theology. The final decision will rest with the Pastoral Session.

Many impressive public gatherings have been held in the Free Trade Hall, which has been crowded night after night. At an open session in the Central Hall, representatives from the Conferences of other lands were received, including ministers and laymen from Ireland, France, the West Indies, West Australia, Victoria and Tasmania, South Africa, and the Methodist Episcopal Church of America.

From Mr. Henry Varley.

JUST before starting for the United States last week Mr. Varley wrote to us:—

"During my stay of six weeks in England I have seen many tokens of encouragement; and but for the widely-opened door in the great Republic I should have liked to stay for some months of service in Old England. On Sunday, July 20, I was with Mr. Charles Cook, and had an interesting time with his goodly band of workers in Hyde Park; what a famous battle-ground it is for wielding the sword of the Spirit and for exalting Christ!

"Attracted by the service of praise, the people gather in hundreds to hear the Word of life. It was a joy to hear Mr. Cook tell how, thirty-five years since, he came to the Tabernacle at Notting Hill, where I then laboured, and how God permitted me to help him in his early spiritual experience. Such was his kindly testimony as he introduced me to the people. The Apostle's stirring words before Agrippa, 'I would to God that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were almost and altogether such as I am, except these bonds,' gave my text. We had a good time.

"I could but thank God for the steady continuance in this work shown by our enthusiastic brother. Through all sorts of weather and every kind of difficulty, for thirty-one years Mr. Cook has held the fort with remarkable success."

Professor J. Shaw Banks.

PRESIDENT OF THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

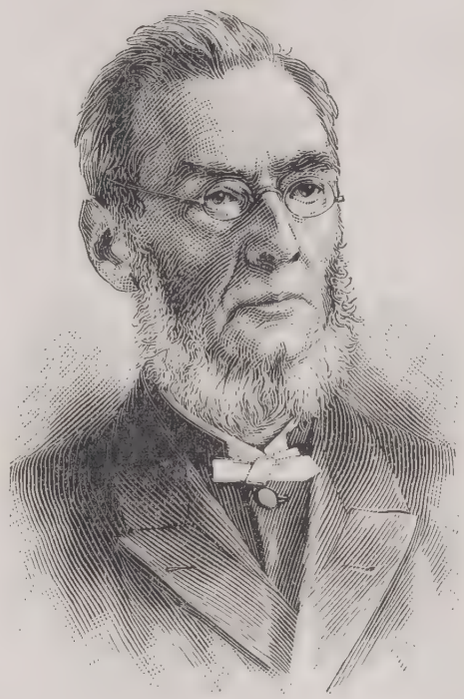
FOR the third year in succession a Professor from one of the Theological Institutions in which young men are trained for the work of the ministry has been called to the Presidency of the Wesleyan Conference. This is a tribute to the fact that Methodism has not grudged the appointment of some of her most gifted sons to the important work of ministerial training, as well as an assurance that the college tutors are not mere bookworms or scholars, but ministers in deepest sympathy with the religious life and activities of the Church to which they belong.

Rev. JOHN SHAW BANKS, who on Tuesday, July 22, was inducted into the chair of the 159th Conference of "the people called Methodists," assembled in the Central Hall, Manchester, has for twenty-two years with conspicuous ability filled the chair of Theology in the Headingley College, Leeds. He has thus moulded the thought of successive generations of students, who have passed under his influence at the most impressionable period of their mental development. Well is it for Methodism that so many of the rising ministry have been brought under the influence of a teacher of such strength of character, wide theological knowledge, and intense loyalty to Evangelical truth.

Professor Banks was born in Sheffield in 1835, but his early life and school days were spent in Birmingham. It was under the ministry of Rev. John Hartley, the revered father of Rev. Marshall Hartley, the secretary of the Conference, that the future President was converted in his youth, and while yet in his teens he began to preach, under the superintendency of Rev. John Bedford, in the Belmont Row Circuit, Birmingham. The claims of the heathen were pressed upon the heart of the young preacher, and he offered himself for the work of a missionary abroad. He was accepted by the Conference, and in 1856 was sent to the Mysore District, in India. The voyage to our great Eastern dependency nearly half a century ago was not subject to the pleasant conditions of modern travel. It was an old tub of a vessel called the Windsor Castle in which the young missionary sailed. It was a long and tedious voyage round the Cape, and not without peril, for the boat was unseaworthy, and on its next voyage was lost.

It was a time of crisis when Mr. Banks landed in India. The smouldering fire of discontent was soon to be fanned into a blaze, and the very continuance of the British rule over India threatened by that fearful outbreak of fanaticism and cruelty known as the "Indian Mutiny." The circumstances of the time must have been unfavourable, indeed, to missionary effort. Mr. Banks remained nine years in India, returning to England in 1865 owing to the death of his wife by cholera. He has testified that those nine years were memorable to him. With characteristic modesty, last year, at a gathering of missionaries, presided over by the venerable ex-President, Dr. Ebenezer E. Jenkins (himself an old Indian missionary), he declared that he did very little for India, but India did everything for him. His association with the university there sent him on tracks of thought that he had tried to pursue. India found him and left him a missionary, and he had been an Indian missionary in mind and heart ever since. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that missionary enterprise has a warm friend and supporter in the new President, and it is an appropriate thing that the year which it is hoped will be marked by a great forward movement in Methodist foreign missions is the year of the presidency of a former Indian missionary.

On his return from India, Mr. Banks spent fifteen years in the home ministry, stationed successively in the following circuits:—Plymouth, Dewsbury, London (Bayswater), Manchester (Oxford Road), Manchester (Radnor Street), and Glasgow (John Street). These are important circuits, fairly representative of varying types of Methodist work, so that the President, in spite of his long residence in "halls of learning," has not been without experience of the duties and difficulties of circuit life. In 1880, Mr. Banks was chosen to fill the vacancy in the chair of Theology at Headingley College, caused by the death of Rev. Samuel Coley; eight years later he was elected to the Chairmanship of the Leeds



District, in succession to Rev. Benjamin Hellier. The duties of both of these responsible offices the President has continued to discharge with conspicuous ability up to the present time.

Professor Banks has given many proofs of his ripe scholarship and wide theological knowledge. The students who have been privileged to receive instruction from him in the class-room cherish admiration for his gifts and profound respect for his character. It is said that the Professor is one of the best-read men in theology in England. His acquaintance with foreign theologians is extensive, and he has translated into English quite a number of important works by German writers of repute, including Philippi's "Commentary on Romans" (two vols.), Goebel's "Parables of Christ," Orelli's "Isaiah," "Jeremiah," and "Minor Prophets;" Dorner's "System of Christian Doctrine" (four vols., in part), and others. Professor Banks' "Manual of Christian Doctrine," of which the eighth edition has just been published, is an established text-book among Methodist students. Amongst his other works are "Tendencies of Modern Theology," "Scripture and its Witnesses" (outlines of Christian evidence), "The Development of Doctrine" (in two closely-packed volumes dealing with the doctrine of the early Church, and that of the early Middle Ages to the Reformation), and "Christianity and the Science of Religion," being one of the series of the Fernley Lectures.

Professor Banks, though a scholar, is no recluse. Ancient Church history has a charm for him, but he lives in the busy present, and has contributed not a little to the making of modern Church history in Methodism. He belongs to the "Forward Movement" school, and by his judicious counsel, far-sighted vision, and weighty advocacy, has done much to make Methodism a power among the masses in the Leeds of to-day. The great Central Missions in Leeds, of which Rev. Samuel Chadwick is the gifted superintendent, have had no warmer friend than the Chairman of the District. Indeed, it was through Professor Banks' suggestion that Mr. Chadwick entered upon his most successful work in the busy Yorkshire city.

As the president of the Leeds Methodist Council, Professor Banks has also promoted circuit enterprise, and influenced the public opinion of the city on matters of social well-being. His sympathies and energies have not been restricted to Methodist lines of work. He is a warm friend of the Free Church Council movement, a bold advocate of temperance, and never afraid of speaking out on the religious aspect of public questions. During the past few months he has strongly denounced the Education Bill now before Parliament, and a pamphlet on the subject, of which he is the author, has been printed and circulated by the National Council of the Free Churches.

With intense loyalty to his principles as a Free Churchman and as a Methodist the President unites a broad catholicity. At the last Conference he was chosen to respond on behalf of his brethren to a deputation representing the "Northern Christian Union," and composed of both Churchmen and Nonconformists. He then remarked that the growth of the spirit of unity and co-operation among the churches was the best evidence of the growth of the spirit of Jesus Christ, and he declared his belief that the unity characteristic of these days would be permanent and growing. This he thought, because they were coming to understand and believe that what was best in their separate churches was the basis of belief which they held in common with the whole Church. And their rallying point was nothing else than the Person of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The British Chautauqua.—The eighth annual summer gathering will be held at Aberystwyth, July 30 to August 27. Alexandra Hall, or Ladies' Hostel, has been secured—a magnificent building on the Parade, immediately facing the sea. The conditions are, therefore, of an ideal character, the living and all the appointments being equal to those of a first-rate boarding-house. A delightful programme of excursions, embracing visits to some of the most charming scenery in Wales, has been arranged. It is hoped that the following, among others, will take part in the gatherings:—Rev. G. C. Lorimer, D.D., formerly of Tremont Temple, Boston, now of New York; Mr. J. Lewis Paton, M.A., Headmaster of University College School; Rev. J. Agar Beet, D.D., of Richmond College; Miss Hearn ("Marianne Farningham"); Dr. Clifford, of Westbourne Park; Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, of Philadelphia; Rev. Nehemiah Curnock, Editor of the Methodist Recorder; Mr. G. Andrew Hutchison, Editor of the Boys' Own Paper; Rev. G. Howard James, of Derby. Further particulars from Miss B. M. Webb, Hon. Sec., Wildwood Lodge, North End, Hampstead, N.W.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONERS.)

WEAK: SICKLY: ASLEEP.*

By Rev. Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

WHETHER the three terms which are here used—weak, and sickly, and sleep—refer to physical ills which God visited upon the Corinthians, and to literal death which actually followed in some cases, attentive students of Holy Scripture are not quite unanimous. The fact that the expression "sleep" is, I believe, frequently used of death in the New Testament, seems to indicate that these were physical forms of disease and debility, and that the judgment actually reached in some cases to absolute death.

The words grow in emphasis. Sickliness is stronger than weakness, indicating disease as well as debility, and deadness is stronger than sickliness, for it indicates at least a condition of practical death, cessation of action, suspension of all the vital functions except the automatic. How these terms describe the spiritual state. It seems as though the Apostle Paul referred to the spiritual state here, and the secret of the weakness is to be found in the third chapter of this Epistle. The weakness was that of prolonged infancy, abnormal, unnatural babyhood. We are all proud of our babes while they ought to be babes; but when they ought to be something bigger, and continue to be babes, we are ashamed of them, and we get them out of the way as far as possible. God loves babes in Christ, but He is ashamed of overgrown babes.

CONTINUOUS BABYHOOD.

He sees our lamentable condition, if we are people who ought to be feeding others and yet require to be fed ourselves, if we ought to be leading and yet require to be led, if we ought to be carrying others and yet are still carried as infants in arms, nursed, taken care of, a constant burden of anxiety. Such people must for ever be helped because they can help nobody. They are babes to be carried to and fro, tossed up and down by every wind of doctrine, the silly dupes of those who by sleight of men and cunning craftiness lie in wait to deceive. Paul was perpetually burdened with people who were weak, easily made to offend, and with regard to whom there had to be excessive caution and care all the time.

This constant infancy broaches on spiritual imbecility. They are infants in intelligence. It is well to continue children in malice, but in understanding we should become men, speaking the truth in love. He was exposing the idea of the children remaining ignorant of God and of His Word, and perpetually needing to be taught, "when by lapse of time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that some teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God." They had need to be taught again the A B C, the alphabet of the Christian life, because they had never gone on to the higher stages of education and learning—ever learning, but never able to come to the full knowledge of the truth of God. How common in the Church of God are these overgrown babes!

SPIRITUAL REMEDY FOR INSANITY.

It is quite a remarkable fact that in all forms of insanity the great characteristic seems to be a perverse will—stubborn, obstinate, uncontrollable. In intellectual insanity it is the perverse will with the degraded reason. In spiritual things it is the perverse will alongside of a religious profession; and I am afraid that a good many are not quite sane spiritually. The soul has never been surrendered to God. There are many who call Jesus Saviour who do not understand what it means to call Him Lord, to give Him the keys of the whole building, without a reserved room or two, or even a cupboard.

In the insane the will is almost always stubbornly, obstinately, and irretrievably contrary. I remarked to a physician not long ago that I had noticed this fact, and asked the question, "Doctor, if it is the case that in almost all the forms of insanity the will is perverse, may there not be a truth in this, that if the will is thoroughly broken to God insanity becomes proportionately impossible." After a few moments of thought, he said, "My dear sir, I have never thought of it before, but it strikes me it is so." May it not be that in many cases insanity is the result of never having laid the will down absolutely at the Master's feet, so that when ill-health comes the will asserts itself? I suggest to you the permanent need for mental balance—spiritually, morally, and physically—of a will that is entirely given up to the only Will that has a right to rule.

DEADLINESS OF APATHY.

"For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep." I think it is a strange thing that the word "sleep" should be used here if spiritual truth is not desired to be taught typically. Sleep is an unconscious state, and generally painless. The most fatal forms of spiritual disease are the painless ones. You are never in a worse state spiritually than when your condition gives you no disturbance. While you weep and mourn there is hope, but when you become dead to your own condition nothing but the power of God can rouse you; and often there is nothing but a tremendous exhibition of that power that can startle the sleeper.

There is nothing I am so much afraid of as apathy, and lethargy, and indifference. That is the worst form of spiritual disease, and I am almost afraid it is the commonest—to learn to hear the story of salvation, to read of the sacrifices of the Lamb of God; to hear of the spiritual destitution and desolation of 850,000,000 of people who never saw a missionary or heard the first proclamation of the love of God, and stay at home quietly at ease. It is a terrible state of things to be indifferent to the call of God to duty, deaf to the voice of God as to spiritual things. That is an awful, a fatal state, and there is nothing that needs to cause us more alarm than the fact that we have no alarm.

SPIRITUAL ATROPHY.

"Thou knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." That is not only apathy, but atrophy. You know what atrophy is—a shrinking of the vital organs until stomach, lungs, or digestive system become incapable of performing their functions. There is an alarming amount of atrophy among the children of God. In this connection our Lord says awful words of warning: "Whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that he hath." God's thundered word from the skies to us is, "Use or lose, use or lose." An unused faculty shrinks till it disappears. An unused member atrophies till it becomes incapable of performing its functions. Unused opportunities even God cannot give you back. If you barter your birthright for a mess of pottage, you shall find no place for repentance in God, though you seek it carefully with tears. When God gives us a power, and it is unused, it is like a maimed member, that only a miracle can restore. There is an amazing amount of atrophy as well as apathy in the Christian Church.

Think how many people are almost insensible to the fact that they are in the bonds of habit, have no power to resist the evil thing, have no power to lay hold of the mighty power of God for believers, and just let themselves drift, drift as though there were no help for it.

RITUALISM AND DOUBT.

What is ritualism but the body without the Spirit, which the Apostle James tells us is dead—the externals without the internals. It is to magnify the importance of the golden censer though there is no incense in it. God would rather have a pewter vessel with incense in it. It is to depend upon external prostration when there is no real humility of soul. Look at the formalism which so easily passes into hypocrisy.

There is no more awful apathy than that which exists with regard to doubt. I was born in 1837, and I have seen grow up a most amazing and colossal fabric of infidelity in the Church of God; and it almost seems as though the people are apathetic and lethargic with regard to it. Christ outlined the whole history of modern criticism when He said: "If ye had believed Moses, ye would have believed Me; but if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe My sayings?" They began by assaulting the authenticity of the writings of Moses; then they assaulted the words of the Prophets; and then they assaulted those of Jesus Christ. Now they are not persuaded that He rose from the dead. You have the whole history of all this opposition unveiled in the warnings of Jesus Christ. In my youth a man would not have been tolerated in the Church as a layman who held doctrines now taught by professors in theological seminaries. Apathy about doubt is one of the most awful signs of decadence in the Church of God. I may never speak at another Keswick Convention, and if so I record this as my dying testimony against the awful destructive criticism of the Word of God.

FOOLING WITH DOUBT.

Horace Bushnell said, "You cannot help doubt, but you can help fooling with it. If, when you are surrounded by a pall of stygian darkness, you disregard the doubt, and act, and live, and pray as if there were no doubt, you will emerge from the doubt into the light of

* Additional Notes of Address on 1 Cor. xi. 30, given in the Old Tent on Monday evening, July 21.

God. But if you treat your doubt as real, you will go into the night of perpetual darkness."

I pass on to you this word from Northfield: "Young men believe your beliefs, and doubt your doubts. Never make the fatal mistake of believing your doubts and doubting your beliefs." This was the utterance of a dying man.

It seems to me as though all our Christian literature were a great query. People seem to think that it is only silly women and half imbecile men who believe. Yet Goethe cried out, from the same Germany from which this rationalistic criticism has come, "For God's sake give us your convictions if you have any. As for doubts, we have got enough of our own already." It is a crime for any man who is a teacher to proclaim his doubts, and make doubt respectable because he introduces it.

THE EPISTLE OF LIBERTY.

By Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

On four consecutive mornings I propose to offer you a brief summary of four Epistles by St. Paul, which seem to have reference to the spiritual life—the Epistles to the Galatians, the Ephesians, the Philippians, and the Colossians. These I understand to be the special teachings of the Holy Ghost for spiritual men and women, whereby they may be inducted into all the privileges and possibilities of the Christian life. In the Epistle to the Romans we have the Pauline Gospel in its special magnificence of the breadth, length, depth, and height of a free and full salvation provided in the Lord Jesus Christ as before God and in the sight of our enemies. From the twelfth chapter he passes on to give the details of the new life that is to be lived. In the Epistle to the Corinthians we are shown the terrible evils to be met with, and the manner in which they are to be dealt with one by one, much as Paul regrets to find them in the Christian Church. We pass on to the apprehending of the grace of God in the second Epistle, where we have more of the grace of God than in any other Epistle.

THE LIFE WE OUGHT TO LIVE.

Now he turns, in Galatians and onwards, to deal with the lives of spiritual men as they ought to live in the power of that Gospel already displayed in Romans and Corinthians. We have four different representations of that which is so precious to every Christian, the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. I will quote the words of Luther, in the preface to his Commentary on the Galatians: "In my heart this one article reigneth, even the faith of Christ, from whom, by whom, and unto whom all my Divine studies day and night have recourse to and fro continually." I desire to set before you nothing but the magnificent person of my Lord and Master, my Saviour and Friend; and to make known the unsearchable riches of Christ—in the words of John Bradford: "Christ, Christ, nothing but Christ."

Taking the four Epistles and summarizing them, they present Christ Jesus the Lord in different aspects. (1) In Galatians, He is the Deliverer from law in all its hurtful forms. (2) In Ephesians, He is our Leader to God. (3) In Philippians, He is our life. (4) In Colossians, He is our Head, to whom the members gladly submit themselves. As the result of these, in Galatians we are led into liberty, in Ephesians into peace, in Philippians into joy, and in Colossians into obedience.

When we read Galatians i. 1-5, it will be observed that the aspiration of Paul is that they should have grace and peace from God the Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ. This is the aspiration in all the four Epistles. He has but the one prayer, the one desire on behalf of his children in the faith. This summarizes each Epistle, and I understand that Paul is seeking to exhibit the magnificence of God's provision, when he offers us grace and peace in our Lord Jesus Christ.

PROVISION FOR EVERY NEED.

These two words are all comprehensive. Grace means the free, unmerited favour of God offered to and presented to man, in and by His Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Peace is the apprehending of all the spiritual blessings that can be enjoyed by man either here or in the heavenlies. In these two comprehensive words there are wonderful branches or sections. Hence, when we find the Apostle dealing with distinctly consecutive subjects, we are looking upon sections of the grace of God and of the peace that results therefrom. As we feel different needs under particular trials or circumstances, we shall find that the Epistle brings out from these two expressions all the different provisions that are made by God for our needs in His sight—grace being all that we require there, and peace being that which God offers to us for all our needs here.

We shall deal with the four Epistles simply and wholly on spiritual lines. We gather as those who have no question in their minds as to the absolute inspiration of the Word of God in this Book as a whole; who are prepared to receive these four writings as given by the Holy Ghost through the Apostle Paul for our benefit, and to take them as God's message for us.

The Apostle considers what they have already attained to, and on that he makes certain demands.

KEY-WORDS—"RECEIVED."

There are certain key-words to the book—of which the first is "receive" or "received." The Apostle takes pains to show that they had received everything that really is required to make them participators in grace and peace. If any attempt were made to offer to them another Gospel than that which they had "received," the man who preaches it is to be "accursed" (i. 9). The Gospel is the first thing they had "received"—Paul's own Gospel as summed up in the Romans. They had been taught the doctrine of man's absolute fall and ruin; of man's helplessness in that condition; of God's provision of righteousness, peace, and love in Christ Jesus; of man's position in Christ when he has accepted the Gospel; and of the power that results therefrom, so that man may live to the glory of God. This is a summary of the Pauline Gospel, which they had "received." Have not you and I received this Gospel? The word used for "receive" means from the side of the giver. The offer has been made to anyone who has need of a gift, and it lies at his door to receive or reject.

They had not only received the Pauline Gospel, they had (iii. 2) "received" the Spirit. It is idle of men to think they do service to God when they kneel down and plead that He will send the Spirit from heaven. That Holy Spirit has been given once for all, as Christ was given to be the Saviour, and it is vain for men to imagine that they can shirk their responsibility in this way. He has done His part; let man do his.

THE PROMISE OF THE COVENANT.

You will find that "the blessing of Abraham" (iii. 14)—"that we might 'receive' the promise of the Spirit through faith"—is (iii. 15) the covenant of God. The Galatians had received through the Spirit the covenant of promise, or the promise of the covenant, namely, the unspeakable, certain assurance of God that He will bestow upon Abraham, through his seed—which is Christ—all the blessings God can pour out from heaven; and that there is nothing to be found in God which He would not communicate to man, where man could receive it from his Maker. So man has received in the covenant of promise everything the great high God can bestow, if only He be Abraham's seed; and we are Abraham's seed (iii. 29) if we believe.

Further, we have (iv. 5) "received" the adoption of sons. We have passed into the position of the sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty, and may claim whatsoever we desire. It is not often children plead for what they need. The parents love to make provision for their needs. But the children come with their own little desires, and wants, and wishes, which are almost irrespective of needs; and the parents love to give them what they ask. So the great high God loves to give to those who say, "Abba, Father."

Is it any wonder that when the Apostle came to a heathen people and told them of all these wonderful privileges of the children of God, they should "receive" him (iv. 14)? This is a different word, meaning the receiving from the side of the taker, the yearning of the heart towards the giver.

"LIBERTY."

Now he passes to say that the result of this was "liberty"—which becomes another key-word. There were certain people who had come in (ii. 4) to trouble the Galatians, to spy out their liberty, and to bring them into bondage (v. 1, the key-text of the Epistle), and he reminds them that they have been called unto liberty (v. 13). "Bondage" is another key-word (iv. 3, 9, 24, 25), and he challenges them (v. 1) with one of the marvellous "therefores" which are the turning points of all these Epistles.

What could have brought men who had once been in such a glorious position of "liberty" into any condition of "bondage"? Some had come among them and taught them that they must not claim perfect liberty by faith. They must not flatter themselves that the righteousness of God which was in Christ Jesus was so completely imparted to them as to set them free from law. Though they might claim liberty from the penalty, they must not think they were free from the requirements of law in order to please God in their Christian life. So the Apostle is teaching that when they went under the law to please God, they were losing the true liberty which Christ had given them.

The "false brethren" were not outsiders, nor people with a totally different creed; but men claiming to be under the ægis of Christ Jesus — they are "brethren," but "false brethren." We, too, are being sorely troubled to-day by those who are enforcing upon us ceremonial law, ritual enactments, compulsory services. Were there not days when you rejoiced in the liberty which is in Christ Jesus with unspeakable delight? But gradually there came a dullness and coldness you could not understand. Then you were bewitched by those who said, "Go oftener to the Sacrament, go through a certain performance in Lent, carry out certain deeds, and rites, and ceremonies; and that will bring you back into peace." The liberty passed painfully and sadly from your existence, and you came into bondage.

HOW TO FIND THE LIVING POWER.

You are Christians, you are believers, you have got the righteousness at the Cross once; but the living power of the righteousness that comes out of the Cross through the Resurrection is not any longer known by you. With a heartache you have gathered here to cry, "O my God! what be done? How can I get the true liberty wherewith Christ can make me free?" We must do what the Apostle Paul bids the Galatians do. We must come back to the Cross of Christ, which is the key thought of the Epistle.

Will you mark how he gives the Cross a place as nowhere else (ii. 20)? Is that your faith in Christ, that He did love you, gave Himself for you, took you to the cross, has put you there without the old ceremonial law, has been crucified so that you are dead to the law in this sense—that you may live in and by Christ Jesus? You are set free that you not only be justified judicially but experimentally, to walk in the righteousness of Christ.

The second part of man's being is the emotions of the flesh that are within (v. 24). They must be put upon the cross, and this must be done by the man himself deliberately. "Liberty" by crucifixion, that is "liberty" indeed for any man who is finding himself under the curse of desire.

"God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross" (vi. 14). O men and women, with diverse ambitions, stand face to face with them all at Calvary; beneath the cross of Jesus let a grave be dug, and there be done with them all. Who hath done this for us that we should desire anything instead of the great privilege provided for us in Him (iii. 1), that we should not obey the truth in Him before whose eyes Christ Jesus should be held up?

PRAYER IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE

By THE BISHOP OF DURHAM.

(Phil. iv. 4-7).

This is a favourite passage, which we shall almost inevitably expect to be taken for a Keswick address, a passage which has spoken to many, so that they have gone away into the realities of life carrying its very essence with them; but it is ever fresh when we come to it again. I hope first to point you to its brief sketch of the Christian life, and then to the supreme secret of that life, and to the way in which it may be realized and used.

The brief sketch of the Christian life is given in two parts. There is the view from without and that from within—the circumference of view and operation, and the pulse of the machine beating in the Christian's own soul. "Let your moderation be known to all men." The Apostle's Greek does not suggest the moderation that is always afraid of extremes (it has been pointedly said, "Let us go to the extremes of truth if only we will go to both"); it has not to do necessarily with a golden mean, but with the elimination of that tone and behaviour of our life, which we call self-will, self-love, the life of self. By "self," we mean, not the undying personality of the individual which never gets merged into another's, but the self-spirit that produces the thorns and weeds of character.

The Apostle shows that this is to be negatived, done away, in the Christian life; not that we may go about, saying "It is done," but that all may see plainly that "it is done." A wise minister, after a mission in his church, announced a testimony meeting for converts; but, said he, it shall be one "not of yourselves, but of your wives." There is a far-reaching lesson in that announcement which comes home to us indeed.

"KNOWN OF ALL MEN."

Now, it is perfectly easy for people to bring the Convention into discredit, to go about posing as something remarkable and unusual, as those who possess a right to look down upon others—even at the altitude of one inch. It is possible to do this under the veil of Keswick, and not to live the life Paul means when he says, "Let your moderation be known." Rather, show that a new Power has come into your life that may be "known of all men." May we humbly manifest, the life lived by men who recognize what belongs to Jesus Christ by conquest, purchase, and possession.

Philippi, the Philippi of Acts xvi., was not an easy place in which to be a thorough Christian; indeed, it was impossible to make an impression upon it, except by living in "the secret of God." But in Him it was possible to show, amid unutterable surroundings, life that was made wonderfully fragrant, by the power that had come in and revolutionized the soul.

"THE PEACE OF GOD."

The pulse of the machine is given in verse 7. "The peace of God" is to keep guard around the hearts and the thoughts—those vagrant things that are so ready to fly out at a tangent—"through Christ Jesus." Now, there are many Philippis represented in this tent, since there are no places but have their difficulties for us in this world of sin. There is no place where there is not fierce resistance to the will of God, and, to those who seek to live it out, no place where there is not daily the world, the flesh, and the devil. And as there were peculiar difficulties at Philippi, we should be thankful that the Holy Ghost directed Paul to write to the saints who were there in the city—and "in Christ Jesus."

Notice more generally the Divine secret of this holy life:—(1) They were to rejoice—and "in the Lord." (2) Their moderation was to be made known to all men, and the magic talisman for it was—"The Lord is at hand." (3) They were to be in touch with God through Christ in prayer. His peace would then guard their hearts and thoughts.

1. The secret is not their influence as persons. They are not to excogitate from themselves the secrets of God. They are to go to the Source and find it there. When the Apostle says, "Rejoice in the Lord," he does not mean "will to be happy," but that they are to take in more of Him and what He is. They will not think so much, "What joy I have," as "What a wonderful Master is given to me." Open the window to the sun, and the room is soon bright. We are not to be anti-natural but super-natural—glad because of Him.

THE NEARNESS OF GOD.

2. Again, their moderation was to be made known to all out and about. That is how they were to please God, but not of or by themselves—"The Lord is at hand." I cannot think that just here the reference is first to the "Blessed hope." I seem rather to see a verbatim reference to Psa. cxix. 151, where the psalmist says:—"They draw nigh that follow after mischief; they are far from Thy law. But Thou art near, O Lord!" In the Greek of the Old Testament translation and of Paul's letter, the words are practically verbatim: "The Lord is near." All men are to know these Philippians by their self-less spirit. The world will be full of the selfish, but you are to meet them in the secret of the presence of the Great Companion, who can take care of your circumstances and of you; for it is you plus Him; or, rather, it is you getting behind Him, and He facing that which you are unable to meet.

3. Verse 6 is practically entirely a precept upon prayer. Paul lays down the seemingly impossible precept, "Be full of care for nothing." Impossible that is to the man who recognizes that if he is to succeed in life he cannot be "anxious about nothing." Looking at life from this point of view, a man says he cannot help perplexity. "Being what I am, how can I meet this?" Now, God forbid that we should be "light-heartedly" Christian in life and heart, but let us have, rather, a keener insight of what it means to do right. The Apostle, however, tells us of a condition by which the peace of God may be literally ours. It did not wait for the Keswick Tent to be discovered, for all truths taught here are as old as the Apostles—none would be a truth for our souls otherwise.

CONTACT WITH GOD.

This condition is constant contact with God, who is the Secret of a holy life. It is put in the simplest form. Saints have written and preached mysteries about prayer, but Paul talks with the simplicity of a wise teacher, and speaks with child-dialect to child-life. Can anything be more simple? "In every thing"—do not limit the "every," it includes greatest things and smallest trifles—"in every thing pray." In the remarkable life of "Rabbi" Duncan, of Edinburgh, who climbed out of atheism through pantheism, first into dim light, and then into the light of God, we learn that one instantaneous effect of receiving the certainty of the knowledge of God was that he was irresistibly inclined to tell Him everything. And in humble measure I have experienced that, in a curious way small things mentioned to Him get righted in the mind or life, for He has almighty strength for our greatest need and is exquisitely tender for our least.

"In everything by prayer" includes adoration. May our reverence grow as do our faith and simplicity. We remember the seraphim with their six wings, that wondrous equipment of which Charles Simeon says: "Twain covered the face, and twain the feet, and twain were for flying; thus, four-sixths were used for reverence, and the remainder for action, more perfect because filled with a sense of the greatness and holiness of Jehovah." Again, we have a disturbing piece of news about one dear to us, afar off; we write to a friend, saying, "Can you do this or that for one dear to me that I cannot reach?" How simple to do this—it is equally simple if spoken to God.

PAUL'S SIMPLICITY AND CLEARNESS.

"Always with thanks." In the joy of having Him to speak to, we shall make the more use of Him the more we grow in Him. And if there is nothing to frame a petition for at a particular moment, we can always give thanks that He is there and bids us pray.

Then—and the dialect of childhood gets simpler from lips where Divine wisdom is moving—"make known your requests unto God." We are not to philosophize while we pray. Tell Him the desire, as if He needed to be impressed. From His point of view, He wants you to tell Him. Abraham's servant, of old, by that well in Mesopotamia, prayed about his camels, and Isaac, and Isaac's wife, telling Jehovah with the same simplicity with which he would have told Abraham. We have God's word that such prayer shall surely bring "the peace of God." That is a guaranteed answer to reverent, thankful, humble talking to Him. In prayer, blessing comes much in the form of power and calm, through setting ourselves in the presence of the Unseen One. But that is not all. We pray to a person, to a will, to a skill, and He will put forth His power with the infinite manipulation and skill of God, for our blessing. Whether the problem that exercises us be solved immediately or not, if the missing paper we desire to recover be found at once or not, prayer will in any case issue in this—"the peace of God."

ALL BLESSING IN CHRIST.

His peace "shall keep your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus." He is the sphere of all God's blessings. The Holy Spirit is given in Christ Jesus; the blessings of eternal salvation are inspired in the Son of God, and if we would find this peace we must seek it, in one point of view at His feet, in another in our hearts and lives.

Let us determine this simple thing—To be reverent and regular in the public service of the church of God, to realize the inspiration and importance of normal as well as abnormal gatherings of God's people; but also may we be men and women whom the Master knows to labour in prayer. Oh, to echo the message of one never far from my thoughts, and who was, to my unworthy heart, a line of light pointing upward, I mean George Macgregor! He pleaded for the tremendous importance of prayer to our lives—in the home circle, in neighbourhoods where we are "fatally well-known," in our own spiritual experience.

Paul says, "Here is the path of peace within, here is the path of peace without;" and, above all, the path to the power which comes of the shining of the Lord Jesus Christ in the lovableness of the life of love—"Your moderation unto all men."

THE KESWICK MISSION.

The annual meeting of the Keswick Mission was held on Wednesday afternoon in the Eskin Street Tent, when a large assembly came together to hear tidings of what the Lord has been doing abroad by means of His servants, the missionaries of the Keswick Council.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe led in prayer, praising God for the enduement of man with the gift of the Holy Ghost, so that souls may be won, the Church of God perfected, and the Lord Jesus Christ satisfied, seeing of the travail of His soul. The Lord's blessing was besought upon all missionary efforts.

Speaking from the chair, General W. Hatt-Noble reminded his hearers of the double aim of the Council—both to reach the heathen with the Gospel, and to lead Christians abroad to deeper consecration.

A FRUITFUL RECORD.

Ways and means were dealt with by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, Mr. Wilson, and Mr. Albert A. Head, while the report of the operations was given by the secretary, Rev. J Battersby Harford. After expressing regret that none of the missionaries were present to testify for themselves and their work, Mr. Harford went on to tell of encouraging news from the field. In India, China, Japan, South Africa, and Egypt the glad tidings of God's full salvation have been proclaimed during the past year by the little handful of workers—eleven in number. They labour in connection with three well-known societies, and in addition one lady is at work among Roman Catholics in Dublin. In Japan, Rev. Barclay Buxton (an honorary worker) has found open doors in all parts of that interesting land. Mr. Walker, of Tinnevelly, has conducted glorious revival services at Travancore, where thousands heard the Gospel proclaimed, and were deeply impressed. Miss Hugill's ministry to the Japanese has also a notable record; some who for years had been receiving instruction in Christian verities have come forth into realization of the saving power of the Lord Jesus. At Omdurman, too, in Egypt, Dr. Hall labours with devotion that is bound to exercise a wide influence for good.

In carrying out the methods adopted by the Council for stimulating the Christian churches in other lands, speakers have been despatched to attend conventions in various parts of the world. In Germany conventions at Wandsbek and Blankenburg were visited by Rev. F. S. Webster and Mr. Walter Sloan, and much encouragement was met with in Canada.

A season of prayer followed, in which Dr. Pierson led, seeking that the signal for a new advance in aggressive warfare against the powers of evil might be sounded; that holy multiplication of converts might not be hindered by any attempt to restrict the blessing of God only to the individual; that greed and selfishness might be burned out of Christian hearts; and that a fresh view of the Lord might kindle holy emulation and missionary spirit.

A Presbyterian minister from Montreal, Rev. F. M. Dewey, spoke in hearty terms of the Keswick deputation to the Dominion. At first there was some fear abroad lest sinless perfection might be taught, but this soon gave place to confidence and a general welcome. The Convention at Montreal was particularly fruitful; attendances were large, and at one meeting, especially, the influence was very gracious. Benefits resulting from these deputations are (1) to the ministers of the country accepting the faithfully-proclaimed news as to Christ the all-sufficient Saviour. (2) In the demand created for holding conventions in large centres. For years past, in some cities, these have been maintained with or without deputations from England; and, in compliance with requests from various parts, gatherings have been organized and carried through with encouraging results.

One of the deputation to Canada, Rev. John Brash, also gave a warm and sympathetic account of the welcome in the Dominion. In five weeks of work, nine conventions were held. In some instances two were conducted simultaneously. The most suitable churches were open to the deputation; the message was heartily received, and many entered into the knowledge and enjoyment of deeper spiritual life.

"IS IT WORTH WHILE?"

A vivid account of proceedings at Wandsbek Convention was given by the next speaker, Rev. F. S. Webster, who spoke heartily of Pastor Paul, "the Canon Aitken of Germany," who, taking up evangelistic work and associating with it teaching of full blessing in Christ, is doing a noble work. The subject at Wandsbek was 1 Cor. i. 30, "Christ made unto us righteousness, sanctification, redemption," and the audiences, both in numbers and attention, showed a great advance on the previous year. Many nationalities were represented; ministers were present from Holland and Denmark, and in the praise meeting, with which the Convention concluded, touching and cheering testimonies were given. Mr. Webster touched upon one especial difficulty; the Luther Bible is "good German but poor Bible," and the new Elberfeld version is "good Bible but poor German." Answering the question, "Is it worth while?" Mr. Webster urged that there is no greater need than to teach the fulness of blessing through obedience and faith, and illustrated his contention by a story of a lady who, after a struggle, yielded herself to Christ, and became a missionary in Japan. There she won a Japanese lady to the faith, and found the way clear to open a Home where young ladies, receiving high secular instruction, could live and come under Christian influence. Hundreds were thus led to Christ. Health failed, and, all but a skeleton, she was carried on board a steamer bound for the homeland. It was said to her at the ship that her position was discouraging; but she eagerly replied: "If I had ten lives, Jesus should have them all." Yes, it is worth anything to go round the world and say, "You may be filled with the fulness of God."

A Jamaican representative, Rev. Dr. Turner, spoke of the work growing throughout the island whence he comes, and said that in the town of Mandeville deep interest has been aroused. Revs. F. B. Meyer and H. B. Macartney are to lead a convention there next month.

The brethren referred to by Dr. Turner were next commended to the gracious care of the Almighty by Rev. Dr. J. Elder Cumming, who prayed that they might be led forth in safety and to the right assemblies, returning with the blessings of the people to whom they go.

FOR SIERRA LEONE.

As readers of The Christian are aware, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wilson are proceeding to Sierra Leone, as missionaries of the C.M.S., representing members of the former congregation at Eaton Square Chapel, S.W., of the late Charles A. Fox. These two friends were also commended in prayer by Rev. Francis Paynter, and the gathering now proceeded to take leave of Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, who is departing on a missionary tour to India and the East. Rev. S. A. Selwyn led in prayer that the missioner might prove helpful both to European and native, and the meeting concluded with a brief word of farewell from Rev. F. B. Meyer, who also proposed that a message of tender affection should be despatched to Mr. Robert Wilson. The suggestion was cordially approved, and promptly carried out.

GENERAL MISSIONARY MEETING

On Saturday morning the new tent was crowded for the General Missionary Meeting, presided over by General Hatt-Noble (and later by Mr. Walter B. Sloan). At the outset Rev. Dr. Pierson read a few passages presenting a continuous lesson on missionary service. "The first mention of any subject in the Word of God determines the relation of it to the remainder of Holy Scripture." Reading Gen. i. 11, the same law was found to be repeated in the department of redemption in Gen. xii. 1-3—"blessing in order to imparting blessing." The next great crisis and lesson was in Gen. xxii. 15-18: "We must surrender the best we have to God if it is to be used in service: the sand represents the terrestrial, the stars the celestial." These three points are all gathered up in the New Testament by our Lord Jesus Christ (John xii. 23-26).

SEVEN PRINCIPLES OF SERVICE.

"There are seven great principles of service: (1) That the Lord alone can create life; (2) that the Lord alone can nourish life into proper growth; (3) that the perfection of growth is found in the capacity for self-propagation; (4) that service can only be obtained by our surrender for God and man; (5) that such surrender always involves a dying process; (6) that the dying process is not a permanent loss, but a preparation for eternal gain; (7) that that gain is to be found in indefinite and even infinite multiplication, as the seed finds its multiplication in the crop.

"Matthew xxviii. 20 is one of the sweetest things I have found in this blessed Word. That is the great Jehovah promise. It is found at every great crisis of history, from the calling of Abraham to the end; but in this place the words have a unique and peculiar order in the Greek—'Lo I with you am,' as though the pronoun and the verb had been purposely separated far enough to let in the believer between them, so that the promise of God is literally around us when we go forth to proclaim His Word."

On behalf of the Keswick Convention mission, Mr. Albert A. Head referred to the nine missionaries who are now at work in various parts of the world. Deputations were sent last year to Canada and the Continent; and for the current year it is hoped that delegates will visit Jamaica and Blankenburg. For these and other purposes a sum of £1,450 was asked for.

THE POWER OF GOD EVEN TO THE JEW.

Preserving the Apostolic order, work among the Jews was represented by Rev. J. M. Eppstein (London Society), who declared, after long experience in the missionary field and in travel, that the Gospel is the power of God even to the Jew. "We cannot label our believers, but wherever I have preached the Gospel, God has given me souls for my hire." The story of the remarkable chain of circumstances leading up to his own conversion, awakened the deepest interest among his hearers.

After describing the success which has attended the educational work in which he is engaged in Asia Minor, Dr. C. C. Tracey (Marsovan) added, "What is it all for? It is for Jesus Christ; all for the salvation of souls. Every day every class has its separate Bible lesson, the first of the day and the most important. The motto is 'The Kingdom of God first.' More than half of all the graduates who have gone out from our schools are engaged in direct Christian work.

"I cannot understand what some people mean when they talk about their lives having been fruitless. If you will go into the mission field, you will not find your life fruitless. The Gospel is self-propagating everywhere." With reference to the Kurdish massacres it was mentioned that not a missionary of the American Board left his post in the hour of danger; and after the storm that work was four times as prosperous as ever before.

The cause of the children of Ishmael was eloquently pleaded by Mr. Archibald Forder (Jerusalem). God's message had come to him eleven years ago, and sent him to Ishmael when he wanted to go to China. Five years were spent east of the Jordan among a wild people, where good fruit has been gathered in. Then a second call came to go into the centre of Arabia. Neighbouring Christians said it could not be done because the land was closed; but after three unsuccessful attempts, he succeeded in establishing himself.

"Can God save Mohammedans in Egypt? I say yes, emphatically yes." These were the opening words of Mr. Martin Cleaver (of the Egypt Mission Band). Thereafter he related two striking instances of the working of the Holy Spirit.

MEN LIKE THE BOOK.

China was represented by two speakers. Rev. C. Campbell Brown (English Presbyterian Mission) testified to a very real sense of the immediate contact of the home church with the missionaries. "I know you are praying for us; and I want to come back and tell you that, so far as you are concerned, your prayers during the Boxer movement were abundantly answered. So far as we could see, not one single Christian recanted or left the place. When we were withdrawn from Chinchew by the consul, a message was sent by the officials to the native helpers, 'Do not open the great churches on Sunday, because we cannot answer for the people.' The answer was, 'We will open the churches as usual, because we must obey our God.' The result was larger congregations than ever. There is an answering current coming back upon the Church of Christ, and that is the hope of the Church to-day. There is an answer to your prayers going with the Word of God."

Coming from Tientsin, Mrs. Thomas Bryson sought to enlist more living sympathy in the native Christians of China, where she has laboured in the Gospel for twenty-seven years. She bore witness of the manner in which God has been answering the prayers of His people by making the Chinese Christians living epistles, known and read of all men. Of one of the pastors the testimony of the literati had been, "There is no difference between him and the holy Book."

From personal experience at Ta-chen-lu—a border mountain town—and up-to-date intelligence from the field, Mr. C. Polhill pointed out the encouragements and hopeful outlook of Gospel effort among the Tibetans.

15,000 INQUIRERS.

A wonderful story of revival and blessing in Japan was told by Rev. W. P. Buncombe. A united mission was in progress throughout the country, but the great bursting forth of blessing did not take place till 12th May in one of the districts of Tokyo. During the first three weeks in that division 1,200 names were given in of persons anxious to become Christians. The movement spread throughout the city, and the fortnight's mission grew to fifty days, and even in the autumn 750 additional names were received at Mr. Buncombe's station in connection with another mission. The features of the movement were—(1) great united expectant prayer; (2) simple Gospel preaching; (3) after-meetings, with the call to immediate decision; (4) individual effort, every Christian helping; (5) open-air work, thirty-six bands in different places; (6) no single name was identified with the movement; (7) for the time the saving of souls was looked on by all as the most important work in the world. It is believed that between 15,000 and 20,000 names of inquirers were registered throughout the country.

The great need of Africa was introduced by Mr. J. Kirk, who described in enthusiastic terms the measure of blessing being outpoured in connection with the Qua Iboe Mission, and then referred to the great untouched territory stretching into the interior of the continent. Deep satisfaction for what has been accomplished in the Congo-Balolo region was the note of an address by Mr. J. Gamman. "We have the droppings, and are looking for the showers." The Word of God is being rapidly placed in the hands of the people, and believers are being added to the Church.

"Our great need on the West Coast of Africa," said Bishop Tugwell, "is the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon the churches. We have not as yet evidence of the convicting power of the Holy Ghost. People come and profess faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and we believe they have been under the conviction of sin, although not able to express all they have passed through; but, even granting that, manifestly the Holy Ghost is not doing in the lives of our Christians the work we so much desire to see done."

"WE BELIEVE IN THE HOLY GHOST."

A passionate appeal on behalf of the famine-stricken regions of India was made by Rev. J. C. Lawson (Aligarh). The great fearful fact is that there is famine in India. "Tell the people of England that the people here are dying as they died in 1896 and 1900. The power of the Holy Ghost has fallen upon the people among whom I labour. They are coming in at the rate of twenty a day. We believe with all our powers in the Holy Ghost, and that Jesus saves as thoroughly and as certainly as in England." The case of high-caste girls in boarding-schools was presented by Miss Edge (Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, Bombay); and from Rev. Robert Henderson (Irish Presbyterian Mission) came the word, "Work at home for Jesus Christ is grand, but work in other lands is grander still."

The lessons of the gathering were earnestly pressed home by Rev. William Dalgetty; and among others who took part were Rev. G. C. Grubb, the Bishop of Durham, and Rev. G. K. Baskerville.

Cumbered About Much Serving.

Christ never asks of us such busy labour
As leaves no time for resting at His feet;
The waiting attitute of expectation
He ofttimes counts a service most complete.

He sometimes wants our ear, our rapt attention,
That He some sweetest secret may impart:
'Tis often in the time of deepest silence
That heart finds deepest fellowship with heart.

We sometimes wonder why our Lord doth place us
Within a sphere so narrow, so obscure,
Where nothing we call work can find an entrance—
But only room to suffer, to endure.

And yet He does love service where 'tis given
By grateful love that clothes itself in deed;
But work that's done beneath the scourge of duty—
Be sure He gives to such but little heed.

Then seek to please Him, whatsoe'er He bids thee,
Whether to do, to suffer, or lie still—
'Twill matter little by what path He led us
If in it all we sought to do His will.

Anon.

CONVENTION NOTES.

The Saturday evening of Convention week is for those who remain at Keswick a quiet time of reflection and of counting over the blessings of the past days. For yet another year it may be truly said that there was deep satisfaction on every hand. During the week the old truths had been reaffirmed by those who spoke out of a rich personal experience of the goodness of the Lord. No subject was more prominent than that of loyalty to the Word of God. Every day there was rung out clearly and unmistakeably the great central truth for which Keswick stands—"Sanctification, as well as justification, by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ."

It was a happy thought by which a meeting was held on Saturday evening in the New Tent to give thanks for the restoration of peace in South Africa. That the opening address should be given by Dr. Pierson was a fortunate arrangement, and as he proceeded to show something of the extent of the task before the Christian people of our land, with illustrations from the experienced of the United States after the Civil War, a deep solemnity spread over his hearers. His suggestion that as soon as possible a Keswick deputation should be sent out to the newly-acquired territories was hailed with satisfaction by all the speakers who followed, including a number of missionaries from the Cape.

As the outcome of the special meetings for young men, for ladies, and for girls, there is every indication that the messages from God have not only been heard, but received and appropriated. Personal inquiry showed that the Convention becomes year by year increasingly a gathering point for home and foreign mission-workers, as well as those who are seeking to know the mind of the Lord for themselves in this respect. For none is the provision of such a place of green pastures and still waters of more importance, and none are more grateful for the privilege they enjoy.

The closing Lord's Day was a time of yet further enforcement of the truths already taught. Among the preachers in the town were the Bishop of Durham, Rev. John McNeill, Dr. Pierson, Rev. G. C. Grubb, and Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, and some at least who had intended to leave earlier were induced by the grace they had experienced to remain for a final benediction. A special feature of the day was a gathering for the consideration of the Second Coming of the Lord, at which the principal address was given by Pastor Fuller Gooch.

The ministers' meetings, held at the Drill Hall, again proved highly profitable to many who gathered from all parts of the country. On Monday Canon Hay Aitken and Rev. W. Houghton were the speakers; on Tuesday Revs. F. B. Meyer and Dr. Elder Cumming; on Wednesday Dr. Pierson and Rev. F. S. Webster. On Thursday, when Bishop Tugwell presided, Rev. G. Wilson, of Edinburgh, gave a sympathetic address on "The Possibility of a Life of Ministerial Victory." Mr. Wilson dwelt on such snares as the fear of man, and the hunger for praise. "The Secret of Ministerial Power" was dealt with by Rev. E. W. Moore, whose message set forth the transforming power of the Holy Spirit, permeating the soul and mind, imparting both spiritual energy to the preacher's words and new light and force to the intellectual powers. "I do not contend," said Mr. Moore, "that God will make a third-rate man a first-rate one, but He will so empower him as to secure the utmost fruit of what abilities he has."

As on former occasions, careful thought had been devoted to the work of evangelization in the town of Keswick. Rev. John McNeill undertook the task of preaching twice on each of the two Lord's Days of the Convention, and the large and attentive audiences showed how well his pithy and pungent words of warning and appeal were appreciated.

At the open-air services held nightly in the Market Square, Mr. W. R. Lane led with unflagging energy, and the gatherings quickly attained a remarkable popularity. The open space beside the Town Hall was so thronged that Mr. Lane had to request the crowd to "come closer." Tradespeople were at their first floor windows; regular amusements were suspended, and all sorts and conditions of men drew near to hear. One saw bent and weary sons of the plough, rough-looking hawkers, and swarthy gipsies with their families, Colonial soldiers in khaki, and, amid all, Christian workers from the foreign field or home centres, and a large number of ministers of various denominations who encouraged the speakers by their presence and prayers. Gospel solos were effectively given by Miss Ball, a niece of Gipsy Smith, from the temporary platform which had been erected on a trolley, and Rev. John McNeill added to his other labours by giving addresses. There was no difficulty in securing attention; the crowds listened eagerly, and seemed regretful when the lateness of the hour compelled the closing of the meetings.

"They have praises who have prayers." During these Convention days many prayers have been made for spiritual awakening, and for Divine help in overcoming obstacles to a consecrated life: it was no wonder, therefore, to find the old tent in Eskin Street was well filled for the praise meeting on Saturday at 7 a.m., in spite of a heavy storm of rain.

At an early stage Mr. Albert A. Head, who presided, announced that, as one outcome of the Convention, a prayer circle is to be formed to intercede for widespread revival.

The requests for praise that had been sent in included many touching thanksgivings. There was praise for strength to make reparation for wrongs done; for the realization, "'Thou art loosed,' Jesus said it;" for "the greatest blessing of my life;" while there were sheaves of others penned in the joy of spiritual liberty, and breathing heartfelt gratitude to the "Giver of every good and perfect gift."

Following the custom of former years, the brethren on the platform gave parting messages in Scripture texts. Among others, Dr. Pierson gave Psa. cxlii. 7; Rev. E. H. Hopkins, 2 Chron. xxvi. (last clause of v. 15 and first of v. 16), also first clause of 2 Cor. xii. 9; Rev. F. Paynter, John xiv. 27; Rev. F. S. Webster, parts of Isa. xxxiii. 17, Isa. vi. 5, and Rev. i. 17, "Thine eyes shall see the King," "Mine eyes have seen the King," and "When I saw Him," &c.; Rev. C. G. Moore, Psa. lxxxi, 10; Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming, 2 Cor. iii. 5; Rev. E. W. Moore, Psa. xxiii. 3; Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, Matt. xvii., last clause of v. 27; Mr. W. R. Lane, Luke xxii. 31; Rev. S. A. McCracken, John xv. 20; Mr. T. B. Miller, Psa. xc. 16, 17; Captain F. L. Tottenham, 2 Chron. xv. 2.

Finally, Dr. Pierson led in prayer and praise, blessing God for the riches of grace manifested on Calvary, and for the riches of glory shown at the resurrection, and the ascension, at Pentecost, and likewise in the hearts of all in whose hearts the day has dawned and the Day-star arisen. The Divine blessing was besought for the venerable and beloved Mr. Robert Wilson, and the loyal co-operation of his son in the duties of arrangement. The stewards were held in remembrance; the lodging-house keepers of the town, in the heavy household duties of the week; all visitors from foreign lands; and the last word of petition was that rivers of living water might flow forth from the Convention to the dry places of the earth. The meeting concluded with a burst of united song in "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

The usual Christian Endeavour Rally took place on July 24 in the Congregational Church, which was crowded. Rev. F. B. Meyer presided. After singing "Praise Him," sentence prayers were voiced all over the audience. Responses were then called for from foreign missionaries and members from various parts of the world. Rev. J. Mursell and Rev. E. R. Hasse addressed the meeting. Mr. Meyer spoke forcibly from Matt. xvii. 24, "For me and for thee." He urged the Christian Endeavourers to take as well as ask, and said that in the vestibule of the Heavenly Father's house is, as it were, a pile of gold for us to take that we may give. God's gifts are "kept on a low shelf," so that even the babes may reach them. It is easy to give when all is given to us.

A meeting in connection with the Lord's work in Ireland was held on Saturday at Friar's Crag. The afternoon turned out exceedingly inclement. Notwithstanding, a great number of persons, under the protection of umbrellas and mackintoshes, assembled to hear the interesting story of the progress of the Gospel in the Emerald Isle. Captain R. Wade Thompson, J.P., who presided, gave a short summary of the work attempted by various societies, and emphasized especially the successes of open-air preaching. Rev. J. O. Gage Dougherty drew attention to the fact that Ireland's difficulty may be summed up in one word—"Popery." Mention was made of the work accomplished by the faithful workers of the Scripture Readers Society for Ireland. Mr. Alston, of the Irish Church Missions, told of labours in fairs and markets. Mr. C. Butler Stoney gave a most interesting and encouraging account of the results attending the proclamation of the Gospel in the lonely district in the west from which he comes. Mr. Figgis spoke of medical missions; Mr. Rippingal, of open air services; Mr. Hind, of the work among soldiers; and Mr. Griffin added an encouraging account of the evangelization of the Jews in Dublin.

The late Mr. Leonard K. Shaw.—In a letter written in 1892, the late Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, superintendent of the Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges and Homes, expressed the hope that should he be removed Mrs. Shaw might be able to carry on the supervision of the Cheetham Hill group of institutions. Mrs. Shaw has fallen in with the suggestion, and, with Mr. Robert Shaw, will join the Committee of Management, Mr. T. R. Ackroyd serving as hon. secretary. It is felt that no more fitting memorial to the useful life just closed could be conceived than to accomplish the last two projects on which Mr. Shaw had set his heart—the purchase of a suitable recreation ground for the boys of the Institution, and the addition of a new wing to enlarge the Cripples' Home.

A Great Collapse.

By Rev. Alex. Robertson, D.D., Venice.

ALL the world has heard of the fall of the great Campanile, or bell-tower, of St. Mark's Church, Venice. It really did not fall. It was felled, just as woodmen might fell an old giant of the forest. Nothing was wrong with the foundations. They were perfect, and I am sure that when the site has been cleared it will be found that they are uninjured. They consist of twelve tiers of stone—marble above ground and granite beneath—resting on two platforms of oak, which again rest on the tops of poplar piles driven into a bed of clay, the top layer of which is 20ft below the pavement of St. Mark's Square.

There was no fatal malady in the Campanile itself. It was old. It was founded in 888, though only completed to its utmost height and splendour in 1489. Its walls, four square, were each 6ft thick, tapering to 4ft at the top. It had borne well the strain and stress of time and of weather and of accidents. Its wooden top was burned three times in the early years of the fourteenth century. It was shaken by earthquake. It was struck by lightning in 1417, 1548, 1565, 1653, 1667, and lastly in 1745, which was the most serious of all, when several people were killed. A lightning conductor was only put up in 1776.

The damage of 1745 was mainly in the eastern wall—that next St. Mark's Church and the Doge's Palace; but so grave was it that the Republic rebuilt that wall, or, rather, built a new wall against it, from bottom to top, uniting the old and the new as best could be done.

The Cause of its Fall.

And now as to how it was "felled." Against this new eastern wall was built the marble hall of Sansovino, as a clubhouse for the nobility, where they could meet and chat in proximity to the Doge's Palace. Latterly it was where that disgraceful institution, the National Lottery, was drawn every Saturday.

It was noticed that rain percolated into this marble hall where the roof joined the Campanile wall. To remedy this, it was resolved to remove the old dripstones and put in zinc, a useless work. If, however, it was to be done, they ought to have taken out one stone at a time, and, after building up the place, taken out another. Instead, they removed all of them at once, making a trench, a cut, in the Campanile one and a-half feet deep, and one and a-half feet high. They cut right through the new eastern wall of 1745, which, instead of supporting longer the old one to which it was attached, became a dead weight, dragging it down. Thus the structure was undermined and "felled."

And now for the bells of the Campanile. These were five. The biggest one was called Maragon (the Venetian for a carpenter). When it rang, the arsenal workers in their thousands knew that it was time to go to their work, or to leave off working. The three medium ones were called Trotiera, and when they rang, the red-robed senators knew that it was time to trot their white mules, or they would be late for the Grand Council. The smallest was called Preghiera, and it called the Venetians morning and night to their devotions. All are broken but the Maragon, which is lying entire, "sound as a bell," on the heap of débris.

which has a lesson for us. There was one man in Venice who knew all, the aged Luigi Vendrasco. He had never ceased during these last ten years to beg the Government to allow him to put the Campanile in better order. But his warnings were unheeded. Indeed, he was told that his persistence was annoying, and at last he was dismissed from his Government post, pensioned, and set aside.

Old Vendrasco, he is eighty-four, went with his son to see the Campanile on Sunday morning the 13th inst. at 5 o'clock. He showed his son the crack in it. His son said what many said, "That is nothing. A small crack like that can really do no harm to such a building." The father said, "Son, it is not the crack. It is that of which the crack is the effect and symbol. They have cut our Campanile through, and it is doomed. It will fall within twenty-four or thirty hours." And it did. It fell at 9.50 the next morning.

And so none of us are perfect. We have all our faults and failings, our liabilities to fall into error and evil. These may seem small in themselves—slight cracks, blemishes. And they may be. Jesus said, "He that is bathed needeth not save to wash his feet." A real Christian does not need to be reconverted—he has bathed, he has gone down once into the fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness. But he needs daily feet-washing, daily forgiveness.

The Danger of Little Sins.

Very different, however, is it if those apparently small faults and sins are like the small crack in the Campanile—the symbol of a heart at fault, of a radical wrongness in the centre of our being. It is this which is to be feared and watched and prayed against.

Worldliness. 1 John ii. 1-17.

IT is impossible in these few lines to explore all the glorious meaning of these paragraphs. What shall we say of that gracious provision for our daily sinfulness, whether the sins be secret or overt, in the intercessions of the Advocate with the Father; of the width and breadth of His propitiation, for the whole world; of the eternal union between love and truth; of the demand for a holy walk! What shall we say of the Divine optimism which even in those days beheld that the darkness was passing away, or of the closely compacted union of love and truth, of hatred and falsehood!

These things must yield to the present inquiry into the nature and evil of worldliness. I never knew what worldliness really was until I went to India, and, in my conversations with Hindoos, heard frequent mention of the word maya. This phrase means vanity, deceitfulness, the promise which disappoints, the hope which is proved vain, the will-o'-the-wisp hovering over the marsh and mistaken for the lights of home, the mirage of the desert, which allures the caravan from its track to its destruction. Alas, how many hearts have been broken, how many lives wrecked, by the unsubstantial promises of the world! So much is promised, as young men and women stand on the threshold of life, and so little is performed.

How well I remember what life seemed when I stood on its threshold! All through my life I had been sheltered and comforted. Strong and loving arms had screened me, supplied my want, and ministered to my happiness; and as I looked out on the world it seemed impossible that it could mean anything but prosperity and happiness. Then it was that one stood on the mountain, and saw all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time, and they seemed within reach. How little one knew then of the storms, perils, and disappointments that lay under the smile of life's young morning, and which would have been intolerable had not Christ been revealed, saying: "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

The world is described by its contents—the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. There we have the strong craving of appetite, the love of admiration and show, and the spirit of proud ostentation and rivalry. How evidently these fill the thought of men of the world, and how clearly such are devoid of the love of the Father. It is impossible that two strong contradictory passions should fill the heart at the same moment; and when the lusts of earthly things are predominant and possess the soul, the eternal and Divine fade. Where the sturdy thorns stand thick, the slender wheat resigns its life and fades.

The world cannot satisfy. It is ever passing away, like the scenes of a stage. Men are grasping at phantoms which evade their hands. The objects of worldly ambition do not remain in the possession of those who have sold all their goods, and their souls to boot, to purchase them. But besides this, "the lust of the world" passeth away. The very power of enjoyment becomes palled and satiated. Like tired children, who have spent the day in sight-seeing, and who have no power to enjoy anything more, so with those who find their treasure in this world.

How shall we overcome the world, as the young men did to whom the Apostle wrote? There is but one way. Let us fix our minds and hearts on God; let us set our love on His love; let us, above all, open our hearts to receive into them Him who has overcome the world, and who is greater than he is who is in the world (1 John iv. 4). Factory-Helpers' Union.

FOR fourteen years this Union has put forth efforts in the interest of factory-girls. It has organized visits in the factories for short services during the meal hours, temperance effort, holiday homes, and (among other things) clubs where they can spend their evenings away from the temptations of the streets and music-halls. The greater number of the girls have no home life; and the aim of the clubs is to teach them to be useful women, and to lead them to know the Lord Jesus as their Saviour.

At present there are many openings for work amongst them in all parts of England, but the work is hampered, firstly, by the want of funds, and secondly, by the lack of workers. Many new centres can be opened if ladies, capable, trained for the special work, and full of the love of Christ, will come forward to help.

To meet this need, the Factory-Helpers' Union has opened a training-home in connection with an established club, where ladies can gain experience in the various departments of the work. All information can be had on application to the Secretary of the Union, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W. The Committee is prepared to offer a free training to those who cannot afford the necessary expense.

International S.S. Lesson.

Sunday, August 10, 1902.

Nadab and Abihu (Lev. x. 1-11).

Golden Text—1 Thess. v. 6.

THE Tabernacle had been erected, and every minute particular carried out according to the commands of Jehovah by His servant Moses (Ex. xl. 17). The services of dedication had been solemnly performed during the seven days of separation, and the Tabernacle, with the vessels, Aaron and his sons, consecrated to the service of the worship of God (Lev. viii. 36). On the eighth day of the consecration services, Aaron and his sons were called by Moses to take up the duties of their offices as high-priest and priests (ix. 1); then "all the congregation drew near and stood before the Lord;" and when the appointed sacrifices had been offered, and Moses and Aaron came out from the tabernacle "and blessed the people," the glory of the Lord appeared, "and there came a fire out from before the Lord and consumed upon the altar the burnt-offering" (Lev. ix. 24) according to His word (Ex. xxix. 43). Then "the people shouted and fell on their faces." Note—

I. The judgment of God on Nadab and Abihu for offering strange fire before Him.

II. The submission of Aaron, Eleazar, and Ithamar to the will and word of God.

III. The Lord's ban on the use of strong drink by those who draw near to Him (Ez. xliv. 21).

The Lord has pleasure in the worship of His people; but He is a Holy God, and will be approached only in the way He has appointed.

Nadab and Abihu. Their special privileges made their responsibilities greater. They had been purified (Lev. viii. 6-36), confessed sin, clothed in holy garments, sprinkled with the blood of atonement and the Holy Oil of anointing. Had eaten of the bread and flesh of consecration, received plain teaching concerning the commands of God during the seven days of consecration; yet sinned heedlessly or deliberately, but wilfully and knowingly (v. 1).

God's Command Disobeyed.

The Lord had sent the fire on the altar whence the coals for the altar of incense had to be taken, and none other would be accepted by Him (Lev. xvi. 12). Nadab and Abihu presumed to approach God with strange fire. Whatever their motive, their sin was revealed (Num. xxxii. 23). (a) They may have attempted to enter the Most Holy Place, (b) or been so full of their own glory and pride of heart that they forgot their chief concern in worship should be (as ours) the glory of God, and the honour of His Name; (c) or heedless, and forgot God's commands; (d) or had been drinking too much wine, and was too excited to know what they were doing; (e) or so conceited that "they thought" their plan was best, and sought their own glory.

"The wages of sin" came sure, swift, and terrible, but not without warning (Lev. xvi. 13). "The Lord Thy God is a consuming fire" (Deut. iv. 24). Note two other instances of like judgment—Num. xi. 1; 2 Kings i. 10-12.

Verse 5. The sacred coats became their shrouds. Holy garments on the body are no shield from the wrath of God against sin on the soul. The only safe refuge is Christ (John iii. 36, compared with Rom. viii. 1 and Heb. vi. 18-20).

Verse 3. Moses understood God's mysterious providences by living much with Him in prayer (Ex. xxxiii. 11).

Verse 6. To mourn the Lord's judgments would look like rebellion. Human claims must not interfere between the soul and the worship of God. The Lord Jesus taught submission to God's will (Luke xxii. 42; John iv. 34; Heb. x. 7).

God Claims our Worship.

God claims our worship, but how may we draw near to the Holy God with acceptance?

As the sweet incense (the type of prayer) was put upon "the coals of fire taken from off the altar before the Lord, that the cloud of incense may cover the mercy-seat" (Lev. xvi. 13), so our prayer must be offered on the merits of Christ's atonement (John xiv. 6), and in His Name (John xv. 16; xvi. 23).

"I stand upon His merit,
I know no other stand,
Not e'en where glory dwelleth
In Emmanuel's Land."

"By His own blood He entered in, once, into the Holy Place, having obtained eternal redemption for us" (Heb. ix. 12, 22-28), "now to appear in the presence of God for us," "seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for us" (Heb. vii. 25). "Let us come boldly (in His Name) to the Throne of Grace," and the promise is sure (Heb. iv. 16; read, too, Rev. viii. 4). There is nothing too small to pray about. "Beaten small" (Lev. xvi. 12).

It is only God's Holy Spirit that can kindle His own fire of prayer in any heart (Rom. viii. 26, 27; Jude 20). Even little children can say, "Lord, teach me to pray."

Strong Drink.

Strong drink was forbidden to those who drew near God in the service of His Tabernacle. They needed a clear head, a single eye, a calm mind, and clean lips to give forth the statutes and praises of Jehovah; and a steady hand to hold the vessels of the Lord, and to wave the thanksgiving offerings behold His altar.

"YE also . . . a holy priesthood, to offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. ii. 5). "Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God" (Eccles. v. 1).

Illustrations of the Lesson.

GOD AND HIS WORD.

A MISSIONARY, now on furlough from North Africa, states that when an Arab of Morocco wishes to take a very solemn oath, he swears by the word of an Englishman, the man of this country being regarded as essentially truthful, and his word law. Though the Arabs may not be always justified in their estimate of an Englishman, it is at least a high compliment to our nation. The law of the Lord to Nadab and Abihu had not been obeyed by the two priests, and God, whose word is inviolable in His justice, visited them for their iniquity. "And there went out fire from the Lord, and devoured them, and they died before the Lord" (v. 2).

REVERENCE FOR GOD'S WORD.

One of the companions of the young King Edward of olden times offered to aid him in his efforts to get something just beyond his reach, and to do so, placed a large Bible on the ground for him to step upon. "No," said the young King, "I will never tread on God's Holy Word." Reverence for God's word is the first step to keeping His Commandments. Contrast the conduct of Nadab and Abihu.

AN OUT-AND-OUT SERVICE.

During the American war and after the capture of Richmond, the Confederate leaders conferred with President Lincoln as to the terms of peace. Jefferson Davis, with a map spread before him, offered to surrender, if this place and that place could be retained by the South. "Gentlemen," replied President Lincoln, "the Government of the North must have all;" and on that condition alone was peace secured. The priests, dedicated to the service of God, were to be wholly consecrated. Their duties were not to be of a partial character, but full and complete was to be the surrender. The Lord must have all, and the world, with its allurements, must be put aside. "Do not drink wine, nor strong drink, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation. It shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations" (v. 9).

SEARCH ME, O GOD.

On the diamond fields of South Africa, all the men employed are thoroughly searched, day by day, before they are permitted to leave their compounds. This precaution has been found necessary by reason of the extensive pilferings formerly carried on by the natives, and even to-day diamonds are occasionally concealed and stolen by the men employed. Nadab and Abihu may have successfully concealed their sin from the camp of Israel; but the Lord's eye witnessed their misdeeds, and He punished them as a warning to others. Let your prayer be "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts." Then, and only then, shall we put a difference between holy and unholy and between unclean and clean (v. 10).

LEARNING A LESSON.

Khama, the Christian Chief of Bechuanaland, is to-day a staunch abstainer from strong drink. He is so because of a lesson he learnt when quite a lad. His father was not abstemious, and during one of his drinking bouts he was outwitted altogether in a bargain by a crafty Boer. Young Khama, noticing his father's weakness and its evil consequences, determined, at any rate, he would abstain from that which muddled the brain and blunted the senses. The son took warning from the foolishness of his parent, and in like manner God determined that the children of Israel should have in remembrance the wickedness of the sons of Aaron. By their death the people were taught the statutes which the Lord had spoken unto them by the hand of Moses (v. 11).

Bible Flower Mission.—Mrs. W. W. Turton writes from 110, Cannon Street, E.C.:—Assistance is again much needed at the depôt as well as for visiting. A good many of our regular workers have either left or are about to leave on their usual holiday. Will absent friends kindly remember our wants, as they have done in former years, by sending heather and other country treasures? A pressing request for lavender bags for the hop-pickers has already come to hand. The demand for these gifts increases, and the good they do is more and more appreciated.

The Student Movement.

CONFERENCE AT MATLOCK.

A MOVEMENT, whose rapid growth and increasing influence have been so exceptional as is the case with the British College Christian Union, finds naturally the climax of its activity in an annual gathering such as the one just held at Matlock Bank; and when it is remembered that the attractions of holiday life are added to the purely religious side of the Conference, it is not to be wondered at that the ten days' summer camp takes a prominent place in the organisation, and has become an important instrument in the development of its work. Each successive Conference has seen an increase in numbers, both of individuals and of colleges represented, on those preceding. At this year's gathering, the third which has been held on the admirably-adapted site provided at Matlock, there were 370 delegates, of whom 170 were men, and 200 women, and who, together, represent no fewer than ninety universities and colleges. The men are accommodated in tents, formed around a large square, whilst at a little distance stands the large marquee where the meetings of the Conference are held.

It is rarely that the time for a summer Conference comes round without a gathering together of several of those, by whose endeavours, in past years, the Student Movement began to get a hold and make progress in British colleges. This year, however, has been singularly fortunate, for, although the former leaders of the movement are now, almost without exception, engaged in foreign mission or in church work, many of them have found it possible to be present at and to take part in the proceedings of the Conference. Amongst these it is interesting to note Rev. W. H. T. Gairdner, of the Church Missionary Society in Cairo, Rev. G. T. Manley, of Cambridge, Mr. J. H. Oldham, formerly a missionary in Lahore, and Rev. D. M. Thornton, also working at Cairo for the C.M.S.

ARRIVAL OF DELEGATES.

The Conference commenced on the evening of July 22. Throughout the day preparations had been going on in camp, with the putting up of tents, the arrangement of the commissariat, and the final decisions concerning the week's meetings. Each train brought batches of delegates from their various colleges, so far apart as the Universities of Dublin and Edinburgh, or the colleges of Wales or the Midlands. It must be remembered that among the delegates are students of all kinds and faculties, for the Student Movement is cosmopolitan in its nature and universal in its application. Medicine, art, science, theology—all have their representatives, and during the progress of the Conference it is these students who meet in social intercourse and exchange views on the vital questions of faith and work, and discuss the methods of propagating the Gospel of Jesus Christ in our colleges and centres of education.

The introductory meeting was addressed by Mr. C. W. G. Taylor, of Edinburgh University, and Mr. Stephen Band, of Westminster College, Cambridge, two of the present leaders of the Movement. It was emphasized by both speakers that the purpose of the Conference was both social and religious, that an exceptional opportunity was provided for meeting students of different colleges, whose interests were so largely the same, and whose final aim in the spiritual life was identical. Mr. Frank Lenwood, of Mansfield College, presided.

The following day the real commencement of the Conference was placed in the hands of Miss Lilian Stevenson, of London, who has long figured prominently in the active administration of the Student Movement. Her subject, the question of faith in its larger aspect and in its application to life, was well fitted to provide the fundamental lines of thought along which the entire gathering should run. The intellectual attitude of the believer, whose faith stood definition, and was applied in practice—such was to be the central idea Miss Stevenson initiated, which was developed during the following days.

THE STUDY OF MISSIONS.

Mr. Tissington Tatlow, whose work on the lines of Education in Missions has proved in the highest degree valuable to the Movement during the past two or three years, spoke later on "Missionary Study." His address was eminently practical, recommending earnestly that the subject of foreign missions should be studied systematically, and in a thoroughly business-like manner—geography, history, languages, religion, government, all the sides of each nation of the foreign field being taken up in succession, in order that in the end a clear grasp of the people might be obtained, to act as a foundation for a further study of their needs and religious problems. The same spirit should be brought on to this further stage of the question:—The needs of a heathen people, as exemplified in religious and social evils, the mission work in all its branches at present being carried on among them, the attitude of people at home towards that work. All these questions come in to Mr. Tatlow's system of missionary education, which was designed to cover the whole subject, and act as foundation to the missionary study of the British College Christian Union during next winter.

The meeting in the evening was in the hands of Rev. A. B. Lillingston, of St. Margaret's, Ipswich, whose subject was the "Students' Attitude towards Sin." The speaker emphasized the fact of sin, inevitable and omnipresent; and touching upon the impossibility to avoid responsibility, spoke searchingly on the acceptance of that responsibility and the necessity of forgiveness and confession of failure. The impression made was very real.

SIN AND TEMPTATION.

If the solemnity of this succession of topics, Faith, its active application in missionary work and study, and Sin, had already made its impression on the Conference, that impression was intensified on the following morning when Rev. C. Dowse (Dublin), who has worked much among the students of Trinity College, Dublin, spoke on the related problem of Temptation. Mr. Dowse commenced by defining temptation as the problem of self-control. Continuing, he spoke of the temptations of Jesus Christ, and urged that these special temptations were each significant of some temptation experienced by all of us. The turning of stones into bread might be considered as the doubting of God's love for man, a point in opposition to which the speaker urged the historical fact of the exhibition of God's love as experienced by the individual. The second temptation, of the kingdoms, was nothing more nor less than the using of worldly means for the achievement of spiritual ends. The third was the temptation to presume upon God's love. Apt as we are to excuse sin in ourselves, and thus consider ourselves as favourites of God, the speaker urged the danger of thus presuming upon the love experienced, and falling short of the ideal set up by us for achievement in our lives. In a final discussion of the methods of resistance to temptation, the speaker gave a very direct appeal for an increase of prayer, of self-sacrifice, and enthusiasm.

FOREIGN VISITORS.

The Union has its brother organizations throughout the whole world, and this summer delegates have been welcomed from the Student Movements of America, Russia and Germany, showing, by their presence, and by the account given by them of the progress of Christian work in the educational centres of their respective countries, how deeply the world-wide movement towards a personal Christianity has engrafted itself upon the intellectual life of the present day. Mr. Gilbert, of the Student Movement of America, gave a clear and systematic address on the study of missions as a preparation for personal work in the missionary cause. The ideal of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union is that the world should be evangelized in this generation.

The delegate from Russia is Baron Nikolai, whose account of the struggling movement amongst the students of his country, hampered by Government restrictions, class codes, and the most binding of Church traditions, was in the hightest degree pathetic and impressive. Herr Spemann spoke in a heart-felt manner of the student question in Germany, where the cause of Christ has to encounter such exceptional obstacles in the advanced philosophy and prevailing materialism of the age.

The more direct information on the subject of missions was provided on July 4 by Rev. Douglas M. Thornton, author of "Africa Waiting." In the evening, Rev. J. H. Miller, of Elie, well known through his close association with schoolboys' camps, spoke solemnly on the Cross of Christ, the central point of life on which the whole of Christianity focuses. On the following day, Mr. J. M. Oldham, of the Y.M.C.A. and Lahore, spoke on the subject of "Prayer." The emphasis was laid on the importance of prayer in the life of the student, and the necessity pointed out for increase of prayer in the Movement. The same morning was occupied later by two addresses on topics more directly affecting the methods of working employed in the Student Movement. The main problem of the student is how best, most tactfully, and yet most thoroughly, to bring the claims of Christ before his fellow-students. Miss Underhill and Mr. Lenwood dealt with these questions. The Movement of the British Isles is gaining steadily a hold over the student world, and its progress and development constitute the highest claims for its hearty support on the part of the Church of Christ.

From An Old Friend.

I LIKED your recent words, "To a Discouraged Missionary," very much. Many a time do I think of, and pray for, and write to such missionaries. Sometimes I weary writing practically the same thing to these workers, but when I get their thankful answers I am myself encouraged to go on in this work. I would commend it to any of God's people who think they have no talent to work otherwise—write now and again to any of God's lonely workers, and let them know you are praying for them and their work.

A remark made in the article in the Simultaneous Mission in Melbourne has very much impressed me. Mr. Geil says, "every Sunday 200,000 sermons are preached in the United States, and most of them good ones." I have been figuring out this town, where I live, on the same lines. We have about 140 places of worship here, and there will be at least as many Gospel sermons preached every Sunday. If at each sermon one convert were made, in less than ten years every person would be converted here. In the same ratio the whole population of the United Kingdom would be converted also! Why is not this the case? By way of encouragement, a minister was telling me he had had 125 new members added to his church during the last year. Of course, these were not all converts; but, deduct seventy-three for those coming from other churches, there would be left fifty-two converts, or one for each Sunday.

I am pleased also to see the article on "Releasing White Slaves." The combating of the social evil is one that needs to be brought prominently before the public. Sometimes I am compelled to stick up for this, and I invariably find this a complete answer to any objection to the action of any Vigilance Society: "If your daughter or sister were the 'unfortunate,' what then? And you must remember she is somebody's daughter or sister."

In conclusion, I would like to say how pleased I am with The Christian—its commendation of much that is good, and its uncompromising stand against much that is evil. After reading it from its commencement, now nearly fifty years, I like it better than ever.

My copy is first read by several in our home. On Monday I give it to a Swedish missionary to read. On Tuesday I post it to a missionary in Hungary, and he, I fancy, sends it further. May it continue and prosper more.—O. S. D.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

In continuation of the Mission at Bromley, Kent, Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, on Tuesday, July 22, presented the social aspect of the drink problem, calling attention to the terrible curse of treating at the public-house bar, a custom which has descended from the higher classes of society. He dwelt on the peril of social drinking among the more influential people, pointing out that if those who occupy an exalted position want the rank and file to desist from the use of strong drink it is obligatory on them to set an example worthy to be followed by the poorer classes. If the King brews beer the people will drink it, and if dukes and duchesses, lords and ladies cannot feast without it, it must be expected that people who have but little to eat will continue to indulge in these noxious beverages. Dr. Henry also spoke of the relationship of the barren and hopeless lives of so many to the social influence of the public-house, and stated that the supreme scandal of the Twentieth Century Christian civilization is that the social centre of our modern life is not, as it should be, the Church, but the public-house.

On Wednesday evening the chair was taken by Mr. Habershon. Dr. Henry dwelt on "The Drink Problem and National Decay," showing that the influence of drink upon the national life corresponds in every particular with its influence upon the life of the individual drinker; that its first effect is to excite the nerve-cells of the body, which, by comparison, may be said to correspond to the individuals of the nation; its second effect is to paralyse these cells; its third effect is to kill them; its fourth, to preserve these dead cells in the body until chronic alcoholism ensues, resulting in dishonour, premature death, and a hopeless doom.

Last Lord's Day Dr. Henry gave three addresses in the large tent. In the morning he spoke on "The Biblical Aspect of the Temperance Question," showing that it is impossible by any fair interpretation of the Word of God to connect intoxicating drinks, and their use by man, with the approval of God. At the close of the address a large number of representative Christian and temperance workers expressed their deep conviction that the time has come when more should be said about this phase of the Temperance question, that the Christian people in our churches needed to know more of the exact Biblical teaching with reference to this curse. In the afternoon Dr. Henry spoke to more than 1,200 young people on the "Satanic Traps set by the Drink for the Capture of Men and Women and Children;" while in the evening, to an immense audience, he discoursed on the "Example of Jesus Christ with Reference to the Drink Question." During the mission at Bromley between 450 and 500 new total abstinence pledges have been taken.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

July 31, Alford, Lincs.; Aug. 1-30, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; Aug. 31, Lincoln; Sept. 4, Louth; 6-9, Taunton; 10, 11, Newport, Mon.; 12-14, Taunton; 15, 16, Llanelly; 18, 19, Dunfermline; 21, Free St. George's, Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Whyte's); 22-24, Dunfermline; Sept. 26-Oct. 3, Alloa; 4-17, Perth; 18-31, Greenock; Nov. 2-Dec. 4, Ireland (Nov. 2-5, Cork; 6-9, Limerick; 10, 11, Athlone; 12-14, Wexford; 15-25, Belfast; 26-Dec. 4, Dublin); Dec. 6-16, Worcester; 21, Brighton; Jan. 9-15, 1903, Motherwell; 16-29, Lisburn; 31-Feb. 6, Newton Abbot; 28-Mar. 6, Middlesbrough; 7-13, Dundee.

Personalia.

This month, the beloved rector of St. Aldate's, Oxford, Canon Christopher, enters upon his eighty-second year, and the forty-fourth year of service as rector of the parish. He leaves this week for his annual holiday in the Isle of Man.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, M.A., of Cambridge, is contemplating a tour through some of the great cities of India from Travancore to Calcutta with the view specially of addressing the English-speaking natives, and also of visiting several of the mission stations of the L.M.S. He expects to be away from England about six months, sailing in October. Until the middle of that month he will be open for preaching and mission engagements.

A Disappointment for Gray's Yard.

In the forefront of all the numerous and varied philanthropic efforts which have their centre at Gray's Yard Ragged Church and Schools, is placed the motto: "The poor have the Gospel preached unto them." Sabbath after Sabbath there gather from 300 to 400 of the poorest outcast and homeless men and women to hear of the love of God and test the love of man. The mug of tea and piece of bread are thankfully received, and are a tangible proof of the sympathy which, if expressed in words only, might seem unreal.

Recognizing how unwise it is, as a rule, to give relief in money without investigation, the applicants on Sunday are referred to the Relief Committee, which meets on Mondays. Here the cases are examined, and endeavours made to find work or otherwise assist any whom it may seem possible to succour. One of the most useful adjuncts to the mission has been the lodging-house, which was always full. To the deep regret of the committee, the Lodging House has now been finally closed by the London County Council. The general funds of the mission will thus lose a sum of between £50 and £100 annually. To meet this deficit, and to provide from £150 to £200 required at once for much-needed repairs to the buildings, a special effort is being made to raise £300. Several branches of the work are unfortunately suffering through insufficient funds. The secretary, Mr. A. G. Fraser, may be addressed, 13, Harley House, Regent's Park, N.W.

The late Rev. G. B. Johnson.

The death took place, on July 17, at the advanced age of eighty-three, of Rev. G. B. Johnson, one of the oldest Congregational ministers. Educated at Coward College, he commenced his ministry fifty-eight years ago at Doncaster, whence he moved to Darwen. After acting as locum tenens for Rev. Thomas Binney at the King's Weigh House while Mr. Binney was in Australia, Mr. Johnson settled in 1858 as first pastor of Francis Road Church, Edgbaston, where nineteen years' ministry was richly owned of God. Removing to Torquay, the last ten years of his pastoral life were spent ministering to the Belgrave Church. He retired from active work in 1887, and for some time has lived with his son-in-law, Mr. W. Cook, Highbury New Park, N. Two booklets from his pen—"Our Principles" and "Reasons Why; or, Plain Talks on Church Matters"—have had a wide circulation. His son, Rev. A. N. Johnson, is the home secretary of the London Missionary Society.

The Boys' Life Brigade.

The Boys' Life Brigade has been founded with aims similar to those of the Boys' Brigade—"The advancement of Christ's kingdom amongst boys, and the promotion of habits of obedience, reverence, discipline, and self-respect, and of all that tends towards a true Christian manliness." These objects are sought chiefly by means of drill, which is not associated with the use of arms, but with instruction and exercises in the saving of life from fire, from drowning, and from accident. It is intended that the physical training given in the different kinds of drill should thus prepare for helpful service to others, whilst imparting healthful vigour to the body, and giving the moral discipline which comes from the obedience and self-regard and mutual trust necessary in effective drill.

The whole principle and tone of the Brigade is life saving—the highest ideal that can be formed of noble human conduct. Whatever may be his previous record, after joining the Brigade a boy must attend regularly either a Sunday-school or his Company Bible class. Many boys attend both. Full particulars of the methods of the organization are given in The Boys' Life Brigade Manual of Drill. (1s. Office: 56, Old Bailey, E.C.)

Evangelists at Work.

Mr. Jack Cooke at Blackpool.

Some ten thousand people gathered to hear Mr. Jack Cooke, "the boy preacher," on Lord's Day last in the Alhambra Theatre, Blackpool. An overflow meeting of some two thousand was held in the adjoining circus, while the arena was used as an inquiry-room. A large number of seekers were pointed to the Saviour. The services are to be continued over next Lord's Day.

Tent Mission at Aberdeen.

A fortnight's mission in the tent of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission was concluded, on July 10, by Mr. John Hawkins. This was his second visit, and a hearty welcome awaited him from a large band of Christians. Each evening witnessed anxious souls entering into peace. Mr. Hawkins was followed by Mr. R. Logan, of Glasgow, whose arousing preaching has been blessed to the awakening of the unsaved, while his addresses to Christians were stimulating and helpful.

Evangelists' Engagements.

 This column is intended for Missions of some days' duration, not for engagements of a single day. The evangelists ask prayer for their respective missions.

Mr. Chas. E. Barraclough.—August 2-22, Dundee.

Mr. G. Bennett.—Till end of August, Aberystwyth (services on sands).
Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh.—Till August 5, Flamborough.
Mr. J. Brunton, Jun.—During August, Waltham Cross.
Mr. Jack Cooke.—Till Aug. 3, Blackpool; Aug. 10-24, Scarborough.
Mr. John Coates.—With Ross Gospel Tent (No. 2), Kempley, till August 11.
Mr. W. D. Dunn.—August 3-25, Aberdeen.
Mr. P. Russell Hurditch.—During August, Ilfracombe (services on sands).
Mr. John Hawkins.—During August, Railway Mission Tent, Crewe.
Mr. Newton Jones.—Till August 26, Margate (services on sands).
Mr. Bob Johnson.—Till August 3, Tent Mission, Canning Town, E.
Mr. William Olney and Mr. F. Spencer Johnson.—August 3-11, South Street Baptist Church, Greenwich, S.E.
Rev. H. Powers, D.D.—Till July 31, Saltcoats.
Mr. T. Swanston Smith.—During August, Southend.
Mr. James Shields.—Till August 13, Tent Mission, Accrington.
Mr. Anthony Towers.—Till Aug. 10, Evangelization Society Mission Tent, Kendal.
Mr. James Wharton.—Aug. 1-26, Tent Mission, Hanley Castle, Worcestershire.

Requests for Prayer.

For Gospel work carried on by Mr. John S. Best, Prison Gate Mission, Winson Green, Birmingham.

For a tent mission to be held at Godalming, by Mr. Knight, of the Evangelization Society, August 16-31.

For the numerous efforts which at this season are being made to minister to the needs of those engaged in hop and fruit picking.

For blessing on a fourteen days' tent mission for navvies working on the Bournemouth tram lines, to be conducted by Mr. W. H. Holt.

Prayer is asked for a series of tent services to be held at various stations of the Navvy Missions Society.

For Gospel Tent services and open-air meetings at Sandford, near Crediton, and neighbouring villages, conducted by Messrs. Macfarlane and Niven.

For a man who is a slave to strong drink, and longs to be able to give it up. Yet his heart is hard, and he does not yield to the Saviour; pray that he may be led to seek the Lord.

Notices.

A correspondent would like to know particulars as to authorship of some lines, beginning:—

The hands are such dear hands,
They are so full, they turn at our demands;
So often they reach out
With trifles scarcely thought about.

Literature for Boys.—Friends having books to dispose of, suitable for boys, may be assured that such literature will be appreciated by the members of the Devonport Branch of the Postal Telegraph Christian Association. In making an appeal, the secretary, Miss E. M. Fox (Edgemoor, Yelverton, South Devon), mentions the Boys' Own Annual, books of travel and adventure, or good wholesome stories.

About Books.

TEACHINGS OF THE TABERNACLE.

As the subject of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness is included in the International Sunday School Lessons for coming weeks, we gladly call attention to a very helpful work, of which the ninth edition, completing the fifteenth thousand, has just appeared—Christ in the Tabernacle: With Some Remarks on the Offerings. By Pastor Frank H. White. (3s. 6d. and 5s. Partridge.) Teachers who would impress upon their scholars the spiritual significance of the Tabernacle and its furniture and institutions, cannot do better than consult these pages. Moreover, in a day when Old Testament subjects are much written down, there is a special call for men and women to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the writings of Moses and the Prophets, so as to be able to teach what they have learned and defend what they know. Richly illustrated with chromos, this book is well suited for presentation purposes.

A CHARMING BOOK.

We have already called attention to the work of Mr. Oliver G. Pike as an instructor and entertainer in a fascinating department of Natural History. The books which have come from his pen, lavishly illustrated with reproductions from photographs, have had a large circulation, and their ministry will not be exhausted while there are men, women, and children who, with a love for natural objects, are ready to learn the lessons of the wood or field, country lane or hedgerow.

We welcome a popular edition of the book which may fairly be said to have established Mr. Pike's fame—In Birdland with Field Glass and Camera (2s. T. Fisher Unwin). We do not know which to admire most, the charming letterpress describing objects and scenes in town and country, with the recital of artistic endeavours that always got the better of difficulty and conquered disappointment; or the engravings, eighty-three in number, reproductions of photographs taken direct from nature, and presenting for our inspection nests with eggs, fledglings, and parent birds, with other items of curious beauty. Introduced into a well-managed household, a book like this should do much good in stimulating interest in the wonderful works of God. As a Sunday-school prize volume, this is specially attractive, and its low price should make it increasingly popular.

THE PROGRESS OF DOGMA.

STUDENTS in particular will appreciate Professor Orr's book, The Progress of Dogma. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) It contains the Elliot Lectures, delivered in 1897 at the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, Pennsylvania. As an introduction to a subject that is at once large and important, this is a work deserving high commendation. The author is both erudite and judicious; he surveys the thought and movement of centuries, and is singularly cautious in generalization.

To begin with, Professor Orr holds, and that strongly, that there is a doctrinal content in Christianity which it is the duty of the Church to ascertain and witness for. Holy Scripture is the ultimate source of our knowledge of the facts and laws of Divine revelation. The story of the ages is one of conflict, and there will not yet be rest. Professor Orr says: "There are not wanting signs that we are on the eve of new conflicts, in which new solvents will be applied to Christian doctrines, and which may prove anxious and testing to many who do not realize that Christian faith in every age must be a battle. The battle will have to be fought, if I mistake not, in the first instance, round the fortress of the worth and authority of Holy Scripture."

We rejoice to note the attitude of Professor Orr regarding the great truths of the Gospel—the things that cannot be shaken, but abide for ever. He estimates at their proper value new and untried and unscriptural views of Christ and His redeeming work. He speaks of the lines of essential doctrine as "well and surely established," and looks to the twentieth century as an era of Christian ethic more than of Christian theology. "With God on our side, history behind us, and the unchanging needs of the human heart to appeal to, we need tremble for the future of neither."

Twenty-two Talks on Every Day Religion. By Theodore L. Cuyler, D.D., LL.D. (2s. 6d. Isbister.) A series of the author's contributions to the Sunday Magazine are brought together in this little book. They are as good as Dr. Cuyler's best: what more can be said? The talks are animated, and the religion is sound. We trust the little book will have many readers.

The Churches.

Church of England.

Rev. G. H. Frodsham, formerly of Manchester, has been elected Bishop of North Queensland. He commenced life as a clerk in Liverpool, and, after studying at Durham, went to Australia in 1896.

Speaking at a friendly society demonstration at Walsingham, the Bishop of Durham (Dr. Moule) said the idea of duty in this country was going down before that of amusement. The enormous cultivation in all ranks of the idea of amusement tends to become a national peril.

The Bishop has practically declined the offer of £10,000 for the erection of a new church in Oxford. A condition of the gift was that the patronage should remain in perpetuity with the Council of Wycliffe Hall, in order that a succession of Low Church incumbents might be assured. The Bishop suggested an alternative body of trustees, but this was not accepted.

The parishioners and members of the congregation of St. Simon's Church, Southsea, have decided to erect a memorial to Rev. F. Baldey, their late vicar, in the church which he loved so well and served so faithfully for over forty years. The memorial is to comprise a monumental tablet, the installation of the electric light, and the erection of a porch at the west end of the church. It is thought that many who have enjoyed the fellowship of this devoted servant of God at the Southsea Convention and other gatherings will be glad to share in perpetuating his work. Such may communicate with Mr. A. E. Large, 94, Palmerston Road, Southsea.

Addressing the Lewisham branch of the Mothers' Union a few days ago, Mrs. Temple offered some thoughtful advice on the questions of obedience, punishment, Sabbath observance, and temperance. In dealing with Sunday, she pleaded with parents to instil a few incontrovertible principles into their children's minds, to teach them that the day was given by God for worship, rest, and recreation, and then to guide them, after prayer and careful consideration, to apply these principles to the changing circumstances of their individual lives. At the close of the address the vicar admitted fifty-two new members.

Congregational.

Dr. Parker continues to make steady progress. He sleeps well, and his appetite has come back. It is hoped that by the middle of next week he will be fit to go away into the country for change.

Denbigh and Flint Association has arranged a Summer School of Theology for the benefit of its ministers, and has secured the services of Professor Henry Jones, Revs. Dr. Horton, J. Morgan Gibbon, and E. Griffith-Jones as lecturers.

The Sunday-school of Whitworth Church has just celebrated its anniversary, the services being conducted by Rev. G. A. Suttle, of Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court Road, W. At the close of the evening service, Mr. Suttle very feelingly referred to the loss that the church has sustained by the recent death of the pastor, Rev. R. Berry.

The London Congregational Union Council has passed a resolution of sympathy with Mrs. Mearns in the illness which has incapacitated her from continuing the work of the Convalescent Home, Folkestone, and expressing appreciation of her great work in carrying on the Home for the last fourteen years. The attempt to form a trust to take over the Home has failed, and the London Union is now considering the advisability of undertaking the responsibility as part of its philanthropic department.

The deputation from the English Congregational Union to the Canadian Churches (consisting of Revs. Alfred Rowland and J. D. Jones, Mr. Edward Smith, of Bewdley, and Dr. Lambert, of Lincoln) will sail from Liverpool on August 21, reaching Quebec about the 30th. After spending a Sunday in Montreal, they proceed to the North-West, returning to Ontario about October 2, and from that date till the 20th visit in the province under the direction of the Associations. They expect to sail from Boston about October 22.

Tontine Street and Radnor Park Churches, Folkestone, were crowded on Sunday week, when Rev. A. J. Palmer entered on his thirty-third year as pastor. Mr. Palmer announced that special efforts were going to be made at the end of August for the reduction of the debt with which the new church is burdened. It was intimated that Mr. Palmer would occupy the pulpit of one church or the other every Sunday during the season, and would be assisted by Revs. H. H. Carlisle, M.A., of Lincoln, W. J. Woods, B.A., T. Law, and S. A. Parsons, B.A.

Baptist.

Southwell Baptists were favoured with the presence of Rev. J. R. Wood, president of the Baptist Union, on the occasion of the anniversary of their church. Mr. Wood preached in the afternoon, and took part in the evening meeting.

The seventy-seventh anniversary of Shefford Church, Beds., and the second of the pastor's settlement, has just been celebrated. Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes preached, and a public meeting was held in the evening, when Alderman A. J. Hucklesby, J.P., of Luton, presided. Encouraging reports were submitted, showing steady progress in all the institutions of the church.

A large crowd of influential Baptists in Yorkshire recently gathered in the Grove, Devon Square, Ilkley, to witness Alderman Horsfall lay the first foundation-stone of the only church of the denomination in the whole of Wharfdale. The new building, which will comprise a chapel and school, will cost, it is estimated, about £10,000. The sum of £200 was raised at the ceremony.

The Nuneaton congregation has been engaged in the erection of a large schoolroom adjoining the church, the building of which was carried on in a novel manner. No one was employed for the work, as bricks, timber, and labour were given by the members of the church. During the day and at evening the pastor and members of his flock could be seen in their shirt-sleeves mixing mortar, laying bricks, and occupying their time in such necessary work.

After many years of mission work, carried on at Slade Green by the Erith Baptist Chapel, a church has been formed, with Mr. H. Humphreys as hon. pastor. At the meeting constituting the same, Rev. J. E. Martin, pastor of Erith Church and founder of the mission, presided. The infant church commences its career under hopeful circumstances, as there is a large Sunday-school, as well as Band of Hope, and other societies already flourishing.

In connection with the settlement of Rev. Alfred A. Savage, as minister of the South Woodford Church, recognition services were recently held. Rev. Dr. Glover, of Bristol, preached, and an enthusiastic meeting took place in the evening. A hearty welcome was tendered to the new pastor on behalf of the local Free Churches by their respective ministers; while some of the deacons from Salters' Hall Church spoke of the devoted labours of Mr. Savage at Canonbury, and the high esteem in which he was held.

Methodist.

In presence of a large gathering the memorial stones of a new chapel for the Bible Christians of Callington were laid last week. The chapel replaces the present one, built half a century ago, and which is now dilapidated and inadequate to the needs of the circuit. The building will cost £950, towards which about £300 has been contributed.

The members of Stoke Newington Primitive Methodist Church, N., last week took farewell of Rev. Joseph Johnson, who is completing fourteen years' ministry at Stoke Newington, and who is leaving, at the request of the Conference, to undertake the superintendence of the South-East London Mission. Addresses, full of appreciation of Mr. Johnson's work, were given by the Chairman, Mr. H. S. Miller, and representatives, ministerial and lay, of the Episcopal, Congregational, Baptist, Wesleyan, and other Churches, as well as members of local public bodies.

New Wesleyan churches have recently been opened at Birstal, near Leeds, and Middleton Wold, in the Driffield Circuit. In the former case the new building succeeds a chapel which has stood for a century, and has cost, including Sunday-school and caretaker's house, £6,000. The collections on the opening day amounted to £161. At Middleton-on-the-Wold, time and storm have made great inroads on the building. Lord Londesborough, the landowner, generously consented to bear part of the expense of renovation if the trustees would share the burden. The estate architect gave his services, and the result is a handsome little chapel, practically new.

A scheme for the erection of a Central Hall as the headquarters of the Liverpool Wesleyan Mission has been formulated. The plans have been drawn up by the architects who were responsible for the Victoria Hall, Bolton, and the Leysian Mission Hall, now being erected. The large hall will seat 2,250, and is to be on the lines of the Manchester Central Hall. The other features comprise a smaller hall, with accommodation for 700, reception halls, club rooms, vestries, and offices. The site is at Mount Pleasant, three minutes' walk from Lime Street and Central Stations. The estimated cost of the site and buildings is £44,000. The Central Hall will be known as the Charles Garrett Memorial.

After eighteen years' superintendency of the Clapton Primitive Methodist Mission, Rev. T. Jackson retires to take charge of a new station, formed by a second division of the Mission, with the Working Lads' Institute as its headquarters. In 1884 the Mission was commenced by Mr. Jackson, who held his first services in the Glenarm Theatre. The friends of the Mission, on Mr. Jackson's removal, have manifested their appreciation of his work by the presentation of an illuminated address, which shows that the result of the work of the Mission had been the establishment of seven churches, with over 500 members, 1,000 scholars and teachers, and property of the value of £37,000, upon which a debt of only £4,000 remained, in addition to which over £20,000 had been raised for various departments of the work.

Presbyterian.

The call from Westbourne Grove Church to Rev. P. Carnegie Simpson, of Renfield U.F. Church, Glasgow, will not come before the Glasgow Presbytery until September, Mr. Simpson having asked for longer time to consider the invitation.

Few congregations date the formation of their church to so early a period as that of Wharton (Lancs.), which celebrated last week its 240th anniversary. There are, it seems, twenty-eight congregations in the Presbyterian Church of England whose continuous history dates back to the seventeenth century.

The Synodical Committees assembled in London last week. In the Committee on Intercourse with other Churches Dr. Carter reported on his visit to the Belgian Synod. Rev. A. H. Drysdale, Moderator, gave an account of his visit to the United Free Assembly, and Dr. Hanson spoke on his visit to Australia. He took a pessimistic view of the state of religion in Sydney. Out of a population of 500,000 no fewer than 350,000 had no church connection, and while, according to statistics, there should be 40,000 Presbyterians, there were not more than 8,000. Rev. Robert Taylor compared the advance which had been made since he had resided in Australia fifty-eight years ago. A letter was read from the Free Churches of the Netherlands asking that a deputation should be sent to the Triennial Synod. It was decided to send a friendly letter. Arrangements were made by the Committee on the state of religion and morals for observing Temperance Sunday, and making a special thankoffering for home missions. In the Soldiers' and Sailors' Committee it was reported that an offer had been sent to the War Office to supply a Presbyterian chaplain in connection with the manœuvres on Salisbury Plain.

Rev. R. H. Eastty, pastor of the Spurgeon Memorial Mission Church, Walthamstow, N.E., is making vigorous efforts to extend mission work in this district. Owing to the Metropolitan improvements, hundreds of poor families are compelled to move out of the city, and numbers of these are settling in this north-eastern suburb. The Mission Church has become a strong centre for evangelistic enterprise, and Mr. Eastty appeals for the practical and prayerful sympathy of Christians in maintaining a difficult but needy work. He may be addressed—Woodford Villa, St. John's Road, Walthamstow, N.E.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. ROBERT LOCKHART, of Edinburgh, a strong advocate of total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the State, and a former president of the Baptist Union.—Rev. B. KENNY, of Granville, one of the pioneers of the Primitive Methodist church in New South Wales, having been appointed to Paramatta as far back as forty years ago.

The Christian.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to

"The Christian" Postal Department,
Bouverie House,
Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

"The Christian" during the Holidays. Will our readers, while away from home, bear in mind that The Christian can be obtained or ordered from local booksellers, or direct from this office? They will render service to themselves and give encouragement to us by thus maintaining their interest, as well as by introducing new readers.

A Disclaimer. Dr. Pierson writes: "As an article of mine in the March number of the Missionary Review has been thought by some to sanction Edward Irving's position, that our Lord took our human nature with its sinfulness, allow me, for the sake of the truth, and loyalty to our Lord's sinless perfection, to say emphatically that never for one moment had I the least sympathy with such teaching." We think that the addresses of Dr. Pierson reported in our last and present issues sufficiently answer such a question as the one raised. If anyone holds the proper Deity of Jesus, the sinless Son of God, assuredly Dr. Pierson does.

By the Mouth of Witnesses. It is a striking and pleasant sign that an influential section of the secular press is giving prominence to the religious side of our national life. Here and there leader writers, thoughtfully recognizing the hidden sources of much that is noblest and best around us, do not hesitate to enforce the truths that make for righteousness. One of these in an endeavour to impress the vital necessity that religion should in this new century be increasingly practical in its spirit, has recently said that it is to the enduring credit of the Evangelical movement that, from the first, it became the very inspiration of political efforts to redress wrongs and relieve misery; and, with keen perception, he has added a statement of simple facts which, in these days, cannot too often be reiterated:—

> For it should be remembered that it is not practical or philanthropic aims which alone can constitute a religion. In a religion the practical is not a contrivance, but a growth; it is a tree which has its roots in the spiritual, and that tree will be a upas tree giving off blistering dews, or a vine that sends its clusters tumbling to earth purple and gushing, according as the spiritual in which it grows be wholesome or the reverse.

Beside the Still Waters. A London physician of wide experience recently stated that there is quite a new list of nervous complaints, due not only to the hurry and scramble of modern business, but also to some of the unsuspected stimulants, not necessarily intoxicants, so largely used as means of recuperation. A good prescription in many of these cases doubtless would be "Don't worry," for, as has been wisely said:—

> We miss most of the best things in life because we worry a great deal too much about the worst; and we go about vexing our little moments in strenuous efforts to make mountains out of molehills, and molehills out of nothing.

Solomon undoubtedly hit off the mathematics of life in the declaration that "A man's heart deviseth his way: but the Lord directeth his steps" (Prov. xvi. 9). If our way is thus Divinely ordered day by day, we may trustfully leave to-morrow in His hands, resting upon the comforting promise, "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest" (Ex. xxxiii. 14).

Doctors and Drink. The social and moral aspects of medical science find an increasing place in the proceedings of the British Medical Association. At the breakfast in connection with the National Temperance League a valuable discussion took place on the duty of doctors in relation to drink. Dr. Sims Woodhead pointed out that, as no profession commanded greater respect among its patients, doctors could do much by putting the matter more frankly before those who need guidance and advice. This is a word in season: for it is idle to deny that many medical men might do a great deal more than they do in this direction. There is a heavy responsibility on those who ponder to their patients' taste for strong drink under the misleading name of medicine. The opportunity of doing good by checking the vice in its early stages is, on the other hand, unique. The doctor can speak with authority, and with a finality that carries more weight because the physical consequences can be made to emphasize the moral considerations, which often fail to carry conviction on their own account.

Grocers' Licences. We are glad to find that the doctors in council have joined in denouncing the two evils which "they as medical men were most familiar with as producing the greatest amount of intemperance throughout the country—clubs and grocers' licences"; and in congratulating the Government on its genuine attempt to strike at this worst form of the drink traffic. It is a great reinforcement of the temperance cause to find the authority of the British Medical Association so unequivocally on its side in this matter. Never was there a more disastrous piece of well-meaning legislation than this which authorized grocers' licences, and so made it possible for weak persons to indulge in surreptitious drinking at home. Short of complete suppression, the strongest regulation of these licences is the next best thing.

Saturday—and Sunday. A lively symposium has been held in the Christian Commonwealth on the "Future of Sunday," in the course of which Canon Armitage Robinson points out that one condition of reclaiming the Lord's Day for its higher spiritual uses is to teach a better way of spending Saturday evening. He would have all business finished by 8 o'clock, and all theatres and places of amusement closed, in order to procure a time of preparation for the solemnities of the morning. This idyllic plan may be unpracticable as things are; but it points clearly to one of the chief stumbling-blocks to the proper observance of the Lord's Day, which is made equally impossible by vicious pleasures, and by overwork in the closing hours of the preceding day. Those (and especially Christians) who value the day of rest and worship should work strenuously for a cleaner bill of health for Saturday. This is a point of view that is seldom dwelt upon sufficiently by our religious teachers. It is impossible to be "in the Spirit on the Lord's Day" when the body is jaded by overmuch toil, or the mind unsettled by doubtful amusements.

While Men Slept. In telling the parable of the wheat and tares, our Lord said that it was "while men slept" that the enemy came and accomplished his nefarious work. That one sentence deserves to be deeply pondered, for it offers the explanation of much that is mysterious in life. No man who is wide awake will allow an enemy to corrupt his field; man's sleep is the enemy's opportunity, and in carefully looking out upon life we may see that the presence of much evil among us is really due to carelessness on the part of those who ought to watch. While parents sleep, the enemy corrupts the minds of children; while pastors sleep, the flock is destroyed; while the guardians of the country sleep, rogues exploit the public. Much evil is beyond our power of prevention; but much also is due to our lack of vigilance. Our foe works in the darkness, and it is precisely because of this that we need incessant vigilance.

The Duty of Forgetfulness. Rev. J. H. Jowett, in his "Talks by the Way," published in the Sunday Strand, points out two seemingly contradictory conditions essential to spiritual progress. The first is a sense of defect and imperfection, illustrated by Paul in his autobiographical reference: "I count not myself to have apprehended" (Phil. iii. 13). The second is that of forgetfulness, the value of which he impressed upon the Philippians: "forgetting the things that are behind." Though it is well, in view of necessary watchfulness, to call to mind past offences against God, there is a tendency on the part of many believers to dwell upon them until the retrospect clouds the joy of the Divine pardon. Both the conditions named by Mr. Jowett should, however, be incentives to the "reaching forth to those things which are before"—"the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

"Decision Day." A new development in the religious training of the young is reported from America. Many churches have adopted the plan of appointing a day on which young Sunday-scholars of suitable age and understanding are urged to settle whether they will make an immediate profession of faith in Christ or defer it. We are told that the definiteness with which this brings home to the conscience the supreme alternative of life has already had a marked influence for good, thousands of young men and women having in this way been already brought to decision. So long as no undue pressure or unworthy motives are brought to bear on the scholars, this plan seems to supply a real lack. The greatest danger of those who have grown up under religious instruction in home and school is never to come face to face with the call to an act of personal decision and consecration. It would be a good thing if teachers, superintendents, and ministers were to institute a similar movement in this country. An annual Day of Decision in all our churches would do incalculable good. Decision itself may not be confined to a particular day; but its urgency may well be thus specifically pressed home.

The Work of Ritualism. In 1867, appeared a remarkable volume of "Essays on the Re-Union of Christendom," by members of the Romish, Greek, and Anglican Churches. The book was edited by Rev. Dr. F. G. Lee, while Dr. Pusey wrote the introductory essay. At page 180 we read this candid avowal:—

> The marvel is that Roman Catholics, whatever their views may be, do not see the wisdom of aiding us to the utmost. Admitting that we are but a lay body, with no pretensions to the name of a Church, we yet, in our belief (however mistaken) that we are one, are doing for England that which they cannot do. We are teaching men to believe that God is to be worshipped under the form of Bread, and they are learning the lesson from us which they have refused to learn from the Roman teachers who have been among us for the last three hundred years. We are teaching men to endure willingly the pain of Confession, which is an intense trial to the reserved Anglo-Saxon nature, and to believe that a man's "I absolve thee" is the voice of God. How many English Protestants have Roman priests brought to Confession, compared with the Anglican clergy? Could they have overcome the English dislike to "mummery" as we are overcoming it? On any (in italics in original) hypothesis, we are doing their work.

The Wealth of Roman Orders. The recent revelations which were made in France as to the accumulated wealth of the "Orders" are being illustrated by the expenditure of those who have found a refuge in Great Britain. It is stated that the Trappists, who have settled near Kingsbridge, in Devonshire, have arranged to spend no less than £30,000 upon the erection of a monastery there; and as this is by no means an exceptional case, it certainly would seem that these immigrants are not careful to observe the rule of poverty. In Ireland too much of the landed property that comes into the market, and especially that which has fine mansions, is secured by the various Orders, male and female. No wonder that there is a movement on the part of the Roman Catholic authorities in these islands to set aside the control of the Vatican over the temporalities.

Hope for the Native in South Africa. Mr. Chamberlain's deliverance, on his return to Parliamentary duties after his accident, on the subject of the Government policy in South Africa was very reassuring, especially to those who have the interests of the natives at heart. He spoke emphatically on the two crucial questions as regards the aborigines—drink and labour. Every effort would be made to prevent alcohol from becoming a stumbling-block to native progress; and, while all possible "inducements" would be put forward to make the native willing to work, the idea of securing enforced labour would be rigorously set aside. What kind of "inducements" he had in view was not explained; but the assurance itself, in view of certain extracts from the Rhodesian press quoted in these columns some months ago, will give general relief, and deepen the impression that the Government is really anxious to promote the best interests of our new territories, as well as to fulfil our compact with the Boers, in spirit as well as letter. On these points all our future progress in South Africa unquestionably depends.

As One with Authority. In the obituary press notices which followed the death, a little while ago, of Sir Richard Temple, Bart., naturally great prominence was given to the distinguished services which the deceased had rendered to the Indian administration and to the Empire. It is ominous, however, that very little, if anything, was said in regard to his views as to the value of mission-work in the great dependency. That testimony has been furnished in a pamphlet to the London Missionary Society, and it almost goes without saying that, in face of the silly sneers of those who decry Christian effort in India, it is of the highest importance; for Sir Richard had, at different times, governed 115,000,000 of our coloured fellow-subjects, and for years was an active member of the Government. India he considered to be "the fairest and finest field now in the non-Christian world for Christian evangelization," and speaking without any class or racial bias, he was in a position to say:—

> I know you will occasionally hear opinions contrary to those which I am now most positively pronouncing. You will hear the mission cause decried and the results of missions disparaged, whereas I say that these results are fully commensurate with all the efforts you have made; that the reports you receive are worthy of entire acceptance, their only defect being that they cannot give you the impression of the beauty and excellence of the work, as it is indelibly fixed in my own mind. Indeed, I am myself at this moment hopeless of conveying to you the glowing images which I have in my own thoughts of Protestant Missions of all denominations.

An Old Landmark. The writer of an interesting paper in regard to Bunyan, which appears in the current number of The Quiver, states incidentally that it is intended to rebuild, as a mission hall, the old chapel in King's Court, Great Suffolk Street, Southwark. It is much to be regretted that early steps were not taken to preserve the building as a national memorial of one of those great men whose lives have been a power for good in the building up of the English race. In that old chapel John Bunyan, after an imprisonment of twelve years for "abstaining from coming to church to hear Divine service," and for being "a common upholder of several unlawful meetings and conventicles," frequently preached. One of his occasional hearers there was the learned theologian, Dr. Owen, who, when Charles II. asked how he could go "to hear a tinker prate," replied, "May it please your Majesty, could I possess the tinker's ability for preaching I would willingly give up all my preferments." The little chapel has been condemned as unsafe, and on the 31st of this month 214 years will have passed since the voice of Bunyan was hushed in death; but, "being dead, he yet speaketh" the Gospel of Christ to ever-increasing congregations of readers of his immortal work, "The Pilgrim's Progress."

The Growth of Nonconformity. It is interesting to note from recent statistics published by the German Government as to the growth of various forms of religion in Germany during the last ten years, that while the Roman Catholic population has increased at a greater rate than the Protestant, the Dissenting Protestant denominations have increased at a higher rate than any others. While the proportion of the former has increased by 15 per cent., and Protestants of the various State Churches by 13·6 per cent., Evangelical Dissenters show a growth of 40 per cent. They still form only a fraction of the whole people of Germany; but if they maintain their present rate of progress they will become a great power in that land, as they have long been in ours. In 1700, Episcopalians in Britain outnumbered Free Churchmen by twenty-two to one; in 1800, they were as eight to one; in 1900, they were about equal in numbers. In view of the revival of Ritualism, these facts are both an encouragement and a warning.

The Bakers' Sunday. There are few harder-worked men than our journeymen bakers in London. It is time something should be done for them, and the London Master Bakers' Protection Society has been well advised in making its present efforts to prevent the baking and selling of bread on Sunday, so as to secure for their employés a day of rest. Such work is already illegal, but no authority is charged with the duty of prosecuting offenders, and the law to openly violated every week. The Home Secretary is to be approached with a view to seeing whether the law cannot be enforced by some appointed authority. This is a matter in which the Christian community can do much to help, both by a little personal self-denial (new bread is proverbially indigestible!) and by public advocacy. It is significant that the chief offenders are those who cater for the wealthy. If the latter knew the conditions under which many bakers work, they would surely show a little active pity and sympathy for them in their appeal.

Idle Land. Much has been written of late years in regard to the stoppage of our food supplies, which probably would take place in case of a war with Russia or another great Power. But there is an aspect of the present condition of agriculture in these islands which is of even greater interest, for it concerns the welfare of the people in times of peace. The population of Great Britain is stated to be about 40,000,000. In 1841, wheat amply sufficient for 24,000,000 people was grown within our own borders, although by no means all the cultivatable land was in use. That amount has steadily declined, although there are about 33,000,000 acres of land, and less than nine millions would produce sufficient wheat for the entire population. Prince Kropotkin, in a remarkable study, has said that if the cultivatable soil were cultivated, as it is in the best farms of Lombardy and Flanders, it would produce food for 80,000,000 people. On the other hand, there are generally in Great Britain from a quarter to three-quarters of a million of men out of work, and about a million acres of good land producing nothing.

"The Name above every Name."

DEAR SIR,—Surely in these days we have so many evils to deplore that we may well leave alone those who feel it right to put "Saint" before the Apostles' names. Reverence is not too great among us! The dear folk who object to using that word before the name of an apostle are too often those who omit "Lord" before the holy name of Jesus; that is a far greater offence surely, and one to which heed might well be taken.

Romanists and Protestants are alike guilty in this matter. In the Epistles, only twice or thrice is the word Jesus mentioned alone. I would that dear Christian friends would be more careful in this point; it is often very painful to hear the flippant use of that "Name which is above every name."—I am, yours truly,

The Puritan Ideal—1.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

IN the "Onlooker's Note-book," the well-known publicist and ardent Church worker, Mr. George Russell, speaks of Mr. Matthew Arnold as "his loved and honoured master." The expression struck me as somewhat hard to reconcile with the facts of the case. How an admirer of the Tractarian school can be a pupil of Matthew Arnold is not very easy to understand, except, indeed, that they are one in their hatred of Puritanism, and, taken together, represent the powerful forces against which Puritanism has to contend to-day. In Mr. Russell's view, his master has made the tempting subject of the "great middle class" his own. He will quote with approval the verdict which the critic passes upon the religious system by which that section of the community has been chiefly influenced. "It led away that middle class where religion still lived on, to a narrowness, an intellectual poverty, almost incredible. They entered the prison of Puritanism, and had the key turned upon their spirit there for two hundred years. It led to that character of their steady and respectable life which makes one shudder—its hideousness, its immense ennui."

The "Onlooker's Note-book" contains Mr. Russell's own pictures of the generation that has escaped from the "prison of Puritanism," and the more closely we study it, the more reason do we find for regret that the door was not kept strictly locked still longer. Here is the view of a well-known ecclesiastic who had migrated from a rural parish to one in a metropolitan area. "In his rural diocese he had admired smart society at a distance, but now he saw it at close quarters, and he was honestly amazed at to every form of religious faith and duty. 'What do these people believe in?' he asked in his bewilderment, and was not a little shocked when the answer was—Nothing." Anyone who knows anything of London as it is to-day must recognise the truth of this representation. And where our observation fails, the literature of the day comes in to enlarge our knowledge.

The troops of cyclists who crowd our suburban roads on Sundays are an eloquent testimony to the decay of Sunday observance. The old objections to the theatre have become almost obsolete, and, of course, are voted signs of blind prejudice. As to the prevalence of gambling, it is hardly necessary to speak. If there had been some marked improvement in the character of the amusements tabooed by Puritanism as "worldly," there might be some reason for this more indulgent view of them. But there are which tell in the contrary direction. A recent article in the Nineteenth Century, for example, was given to a scathing exposure of a play, the representation of which was forbidden by the official licenser, but to whose defence a number of men and women of literary or artistic distinction had rallied. That protest was indeed a sign of the times, if the account given by the reviewer is to be accepted as correct.

Looking at these and some similar features in the social life of the day, it seems somewhat surprising that any man concerned for the true elevation of society should take so depreciatory a view of Puritanism. That it made mistakes its most ardent admirers would hardly venture to deny. But as an ideal of character and life, it had qualities which are sorely needed at all times, and never more than to-day. To judge of its intellectual position by the standard of our time would be grossly unfair. In moral greatness, in its estimate of the aims of life, in its strong sense of duty, in its recognition of responsibility to God—it has never been surpassed. Even men who do not accept its doctrines, and stand apart from the churches which seek to embody its spirit, are compelled to admit its healthy influence in public life, and some of them have been heard to sigh for a breath of the old Puritanism as a prophylactic against the degeneracy of the day.

Mr. Russell gives us a portrait in his Notes which is itself an emphatic rebuke to the disparagement of Puritanism. Here it is:—"Even Mr. Matthew Arnold would, I suppose, have allowed that Puritanism, in its day and generation, did something to strengthen and purify the force of national life. Samuel Morley, alike in his inward character and his outward life, was a worthy descendant of those Puritan ancestors whose blood he inherited, and from whom it is not fanciful to suppose that he derived his characteristic qualities of temperance, courage, and unwavering will. To Samuel Morley the world was intensely real. It was a place where hard work must be definitely done, and where there was no room for idlers and dreamers."

And Samuel Morley was not only of Puritan descent, but he was himself a Puritan, and one of a very strong and pronounced type. I had the pleasure of his personal acquaintance, and certainly know of what stuff he was made. Mr. Russell has done well in fixing attention on the reality of the man. He was a thoroughly intelligent, active man of affairs, whose

RULING PRINCIPLE WAS THE FEAR OF GOD.

A conspicuous example of the Apostle's teaching that "godliness is profitable to all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come," he showed how possible it is to do the work of the world so as to excite the admiration of all who knew him, and yet to preserve a conscience void of offence toward God and men. Men like him, who are to be found in the walks of business still, are the strength and glory of our "great middle class," and the nation owes them a debt which it is not easy to estimate. Their religion has made them what they are.

But that religion is at heart, Puritanism. I use the word, not in its theological, or even its ecclesiastical, but rather in its spiritual sense. The Puritan is what Lord Rosebery calls

"A PRACTICAL MYSTIC."

He considers Cromwell to be one of the most illustrious examples of that type, which in its turn he regards as one of the most forceful developments of character. The "practical mystic" is, in the view of this eminently sagacious judge of men, "the most terrible and formidable of all combinations. A man who combines inspiration apparently derived—in my judgment really derived—from close communion with the supernatural and the celestial, a man who has that inspiration, and adds to it the energy of a mighty man of action—such a man as that lives in communion on a Sinai of his own, and when he pleases to come down to this world below, seems armed with no less than the terrors and decrees of the Almighty Himself."

A Christian who answers to this description is not likely to be popular in an age like ours. But it would be an evil thing for the nation and for religion itself if it were to lose the force which belongs to these high spiritual conceptions of life and duty. No doubt they are regarded as little better than fanaticism by men of the world, especially in an age when the tendencies to pure materialism (by which I do not mean a philosophical system, but rather that group of passions which the Apostle describes as the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, the pride of life) are so strong, and seem daily to gather new force. They belong wholly and entirely to the life of faith. The Puritan is distinctly a man of faith.

The Present Crisis.

BY AN INDIAN MISSIONARY.

THE recent proceedings of the Assembly of the United Free Church of Scotland in connection with the case of Professor George Adam Smith fill me with dismay, and the same feeling must be uppermost in the minds of many missionaries. I do not want to enter into any controversy, but as a practical missionary, with the realities of mission work constantly in evidence, I want to ask those disciples of the higher critics a plain question.

Missionaries constantly come in contact with Mohammedans. One of the chief objections to our teaching raised by Moslems is that in the Pentateuch and the Psalms of the Christian Bible we have not the revelation which was given to Moses and David respectively. The reply of all missionaries hitherto has been that in those books of the Bible we have such revelation—in short, that the author of the Pentateuch, under Divine inspiration, was Moses, and that the Davidic authorship of the Psalms, as a whole, is undoubted.

Now if a Mussulman brings forward the usual objection, what am I, in accordance with the teaching of higher critics, like Professor Smith, Professor Driver, Professor Cheyne and others, to reply? Am I to say, as all Christian missionaries hitherto have said (as above), "Your objection is groundless? The Torah as we have it is the Torah which was written by Moses, and the Zabbur is the Zabbur which was written by David." Or am I to say, "Your objection is well founded—as a matter of fact ascertained by criticism? The Pentateuch, or Torah, as we have it, was not written by Moses at all. There may be in it some Mosaic teaching, but, as a matter of fact, the Pentateuch, as we have it, as the Jews had it for centuries, as it existed in Mohammed's time, is not the production of Moses, but of some unknown Jew or Jews in post-exilic times. When and by whom it was so concocted—for whoever wrote it wished to make it appear that Moses was the writer—we do not know, but of this we are certain, that it was not written by Moses. And as for the Zabbur, the Psalms which we have, and which the Jews had, are not Davidic at all. Some may be ancient, but how ancient we do not know. One thing, however, is certain, that none of them were written by David."

And if the Moslem says, as say he will, "On what ground, then, do you ask me to accept your Torah, and your Zabbur, as Divine revelations, when you do not know when and by whom they were written, when as a matter of fact you admit that they were written by some unknown persons, centuries after Moses or David?"—what am I to reply?

And if the Moslem goes on to say, "You tell me that Jesus Christ in the Gospels tells us that the Pentateuch was written by Moses—for that is what His words plainly mean—and that the Psalms (or some of them at all events, which He quotes or refers to) were written by David. But when you now admit that such a statement cannot be true, how can you ask me to admit that Jesus Christ was the Son of the one true God? How could Jesus, Who you say was the truth itself, be Divine, when He made a statement which is not true?" What am I to reply? "And if Jesus is not Divine, as all missionaries hitherto have said, on what ground do you ask me to accept the Injil, or Gospels, as a revelation from God?" —what am I to say?

I say frankly that if I believed the teaching of Professor Smith and his school to be true,

I SHOULD CEASE TO BE A MISSIONARY

to-morrow. I could not possibly feel that I had any message to give to either Mussulman or Hindu; for the message is the revelation of God, and it is the revelation recorded in the Bible. If the Pentateuch and the Psalms are not to be attributed to Moses and David—if they are simply the production and concoction of some unknown writers, who could not possibly have been inspired by the God of truth, when their writings were undoubtedly suggestive of falsehood; if our Lord's testimony to their authorship is to be rejected—then I have no message based on Divine revelation to give. Can you wonder that the practical acceptance of such teaching (for not denouncing it as unscriptural simply means that a clergyman or missionary may teach it if he pleases) fills me with dismay?

Tampering with the written Word of God, so far as my experience goes, invariably leads to rejecting or, in some way, modifying or minimizing, the Divinity of the Living Word. And, to my mind, it is simply appalling that the chief assembly of a church should fail to denounce as unscriptural such teaching as that of Professor Smith. If there is not a "falling away," or apostasy, I do not know what words mean. An Indian Missionary.

Do We Know Our Bible?

DEAR SIR,—Many do not know their Bibles for this reason: they do not read it very much. While salvation is not received by reading the Bible, but by believing the Gospel—that Christ once suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit—still there cannot be the growth in grace and the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ that there should be, apart from a knowledge of the Bible. And there will not be much knowledge of the Bible apart from reading it, and giving heed to it as unto a light that shineth in a dark place.

Many read the New Testament and portions of the Old regularly, and many, I fear, rather irregularly; all the same, many portions of the Old Testament are never read at all, the reason given being that there is no use trying to go over all these names and numbers.

I once thought so, but I wish to say that it is different now. A good many years ago, I resolved to read the Old Testament right through; and if I could not pronounce some of the hard words, I would at least spell them over carefully. When I came to the book of Numbers, the idea struck me of writing down the numbers in a little book, so as to better understand what I was reading. In this way the book became deeply interesting.

I would recommend what I do myself—read the Old Testament straight through once a year, missing nothing. Divide it into twelve parts for the months of the year, which will give about thirty-one leaves for each division, and perhaps a few over of an Oxford Bible; roughly, one leaf a day to read. This will take about a quarter of an hour; the man or woman who cannot spare a quarter of an hour every day for this purpose is surely too busy.

But may not want of inclination be the cause of omitting to read, rather than the want of time? "Incline my heart unto Thy testimonies, and not to covetousness," is a needful prayer.

Read the New Testament also right through, with the prayer going up from the heart, "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law."

Yours truly, R. S. T.

Quaint Texts from Queer Places.

By Mr. CHAS. COOK.

The rule of the road is a paradox quite,
You'll find as you journey along;
If you drive on the left you're sure to go right,
If you drive on the right you'll go wrong.

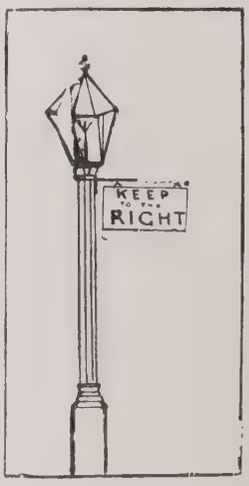
BUT our text had to do with the pavement, and, despite its simplicity, many of the pedestrians jostled each other, causing endless confusion and difficulty, besides trouble to themselves. If they had only "stuck to the text," and heeded the plain direction, "Keep to the right," they would have saved themselves much unhappiness.



So is it in the thoroughfare of life. Mother bade us "keep to the right," and father prayed as we left the parental home, "Lord, let my boy 'do the right.'" But we were weak, and the city's sins were strong, and we swerved and stumbled, and now —well, God and our consciences know the rest. "My mother taught me to do right," said a middle-aged man who followed me from our service in Hyde Park the other night. "But I cannot break from my old friends. I often think I should like to be a Christian; but——"

There he stopped, and thus he left me; reminding me of a saying of Seneca, the philosopher: "We know the right, but we do the wrong."

It is more than possible the case quoted would have been a more apposite illustration of another of my "quaint texts" recently seen, of which I may write subsequently, viz., "Chained to Sin."

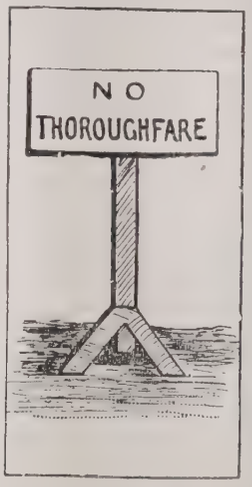
Some child of godly parents may see the above text. Does it not suggest that we should do the right thing; and if we have not obeyed the Gospel and accepted Christ as the Lord and Master of our life, that we should do so without further delay?

"Once upon a time" there was a servant of the Lord who was deeply tried. By an awful accident, a loved child was killed a few moments before he had to preach to a large audience. Trusting in his God, he repelled the whisper of Satan, "Is this the act of a God of love?" by the truth, "He knoweth the way that I take; some great blessing is behind this. The silver lining to this dark cloud will yet be seen." So he went forth to his Master's work, "trusting where he could not trace."

At the following Saturday evening prayer-meeting his two elder sons fell on their knees, exclaiming, "Dad's God shall be my God!" His two grown-up daughters did the same; and our prayer is that those who read these lines, who are yet unsaved, may do likewise.

Some texts principally apply to believers, and perhaps this one does. It evidently is practical, rather than doctrinal. There is a danger possibly of our being occupied with our position "in the heavenlies" without our being held by the truth, and thus our lives prove very earthly. Our pardon, peace, and position depend upon Christ's work for us; but our progress, purity, and power depend on the Holy Ghost's work in us, and His work involves our right living. In the closet, in the family, in the business, in the church, and in the world, may we ever "keep to the right," and we shall be saved from dishonouring God, from disgracing His cause, and from declension in spiritual life. The Spirit of God is the alone power for this; the Word of God and communion with God are the means.

Simply a board at the top of the street! Not even a policeman with an upraised hand! It was a question of faith rather than sight; but there it was, with a very official business-like look about it. The trouble was—to the many Jehus who pulled up sharply as it confronted them—that it meant a going by a very circuitous route rather than the usual direct way; but the London cabby is accustomed to our streets being "up," and most of them obeyed the notice; that is, believed it. Not so one smart driver of a Great Western van, who, driving his pair of horses to the left of the notice, determined to push his way down the forbidden road.



It was a good long street, and our friend had almost reached the end of it, when he saw, as he was turning again at the bottom, that the sewers were under repair, and a huge barrier blocked the whole road, making the street a veritable cul de sac. Thus he found by experience there was "NO THOROUGHFARE," and that "the longest way round was the nearest way home."

"You've soon got back," jeered a butcher-boy as he returned to the main road.

"Yus, 'cos he took a return ticket," remarked another lad.

How often this text is seen by us, yet we push on past it on a road from which there is no egress!

"I feel like going right back into the world," said a brother in Christ to me: "only I know that every step I take I should have to retrace sooner or later." That's just it! A child of God is spoiled for a sinner, nor can he be happy in the world. The Broad Way where sinners congregate is the wrong road so far as he is concerned, and sooner or later the Lord will bring him back; but it may be not until He has "visited their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes."

I was once used to the restoration of a backslider who was enduring "penal servitude for life." Oh, the bitterness of those tears! God had forgiven the sins, but He could not avert the consequences. She would never have trodden that road of immorality had she observed the text, "No thoroughfare!"

A Christian under sentence of death ("Tell it not in Gath") said to me, "I believe God has forgiven me; but when I think of my sins I dare hardly rejoice in the fact." Reader, hast thou left thy first love? hast thou wandered from God or the broad road of folly?

There's no way out, my brother; you must come back to "the good old way." If the devil hath tempted thee from the narrow path, if the world hath charmed thee by its glamour into its pleasant glades, or if some fair Atlanta hath drawn thee from the race by a golden apple, hear the voice of thy beloved Saviour, saying, "Return unto the Lord thy God." Hark thee back to the King's highway—there's "no thoroughfare" for such as you on the road to hell. Listen to the wooings of thy Lord: "I will heal their backslidings; I will love them freely." . . . "The ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them." "He restoreth my soul, He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His Name's sake." "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

SUNDAY, August 10. Joshua x.

HITHERTO Israel had dealt with separate cities, but now a formidable confederacy gathered, and Gibeon was the object of attack, partly because of its defection, and partly because it was a strategic point. As soon as Joshua received the summons, with his men of war, he climbed the difficult pass under cover of night, and broke on the sleeping host. But we cannot wonder at his courageous vigour, for soon after the first appeal for help had reached him, he heard the voice of God assuring him of His certain fellowship (8).

Before the onset of the Hebrew hosts, the Canaanites fled down a break-neck descent, and at this point a terrific storm in which great hailstones fell thick and fast, added to their discomfiture (11). But the stupendous miracle of the day consisted in the arrest of daylight, as is recorded in the poetical book of Jasher, a quotation from which is cited in vv. 12-15. By some process, the laws of which are probably unknown to us, but of which we catch some glimpses in the refraction of light, in the afterglow of sunset, in the fantastic appearances familiar to travellers in high latitudes, and amongst the loftiest mountains, the daylight was prolonged by the special miracle of God, until Israel had made a full use of their victory. How this was, we know not, but we accept the fact.

There are days in all lives when circumstances and temptations combine against us, and we say, "there was no day like that before it or after it." But on such days, as we step down to meet them, we may hear the Divine assurance, "Fear them not, for I have delivered them into thine hands." Let us put the whole matter into the Divine hands, claiming Zech. xiv. 7 (R.V.)

MONDAY, August 11. Joshua xi.

To the Merom waters, Jabin, King of Hazor, aroused to fear and action by the tidings of the day of Gibeon, summoned all the tribes of the north of Canaan. The Jebusite heard the summons in the hill country of Judæa, and the Hivite under the brow of Hermon; and even some shattered remnants of the southern confederacy seem to have poured their contribution into the accumulated ranks of that great host. There were also many iron chariots. A sense of the awfulness of the crisis may have thrilled Joshua's soul, but he was fortified by the Divine assurance, "Be not afraid, to-morrow I will deliver them up."

We cannot but be reminded of a yet greater victory, when the Risen Lord, ascending to His Father's throne, put off from Himself the principalities and powers, made a show of them openly, and led captivity captive (Col. ii. 15). That marvellous feat of Divine power has established once for all that the Name of Jesus, which implies His nature, is all victorious, and that those who identify themselves with Him must conquer also. Nothing can stand against the soul which is united with the Lord Jesus, and in which He dwells.

Though the victories of Israel were decisive, in a sense they were incomplete, and needed to be followed up by the patient and resolute possession of the country. The Caananites were cast out "little by little," else the land would have gone out of cultivation to its great detriment; but "little by little" the Hebrew hosts were called upon to advance. In all things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us; but we must overcome by faith, by the word of our testimony, and by the blood of the Lamb. Claim daily your share in the results of your Saviour's victory.

TUESDAY, August 12. Joshua xii.

The Book of Joshua naturally divides itself into two parts, the first of which deals with the conquest, the second with the partition of the Land of Promise. The junction of these two is at the end of the previous chapter, and just there we have the significant sentence, "And the land had rest from war."

All this is in harmony with the spiritual analogy which pervades this book, and which anticipates the spiritual lessons of which the Epistle to the Ephesians is full. When our blessed Lord had won that great fight with the principalities and powers of evil, He sat down at the right hand of the Throne of God. It was not the rest of over-weariness, nor of inaction, nor of weakness, but He had finished the work to which He had put His hands, and therefore ceased from His works, as God did from His. Into that rest we should strive to enter. We also may cease from anxiety and labour, from the restless effort to justify ourselves, and by faith participate in the results of Gethsemane, Calvary, the open grave, the riven skies. In this chapter the sacred historian recites the extent of the territories which had come into the possession of Israel, and the names of the vanquished kings. In this we have some anticipation of what will be our lot some day, when we shall look back on the various foes which the Church has vanquished. What a chapter shall be written! Even now we may anticipate some of its items! Slavery, one; the power of strong drink, one; the rule of the war demon, one.

WEDNESDAY, August 13. Joshua xiii.

Joshua was probably about ninety years old when the conquest of Canaan was complete. But a very important work had to be done. Destruction must be succeeded by construction. He was destined to bear fruit in old age, and to become as great an administrator as he had been a warrior.

His first step was to map out the land not yet possessed, and which included all the region of Philistia, the rich pasture-lands of the south, and, in addition, the luxuriant plain of Phœnicia. Compare this outline sketch of the Divine intentions with the territories then, or afterwards, actually possessed; and the difference between God's ideal, which might have been, and the actual facts is very striking and saddening.

Let us consider whether there may not be a similar contrast between what God has intended for us, and that which we have made our own. Spread out in the Bible, and set forth in the life of Jesus Christ there is for us, as there was for Joshua, a map of what God desires for his people. Here, as in a Divine Domesday book, is a list of the mountains of vision and the valleys of blessing; of the green pasture lands and the waters of rest; of the cities we may occupy, and the foes we may expel. All is mapped out for us, and we shall be wise to understand how much land there is still to be possessed in our knowledge of God's Word, in our attainment of Christian grace, and in our reception of the gifts of the Risen Lord. Let us leave the things that are behind, and press on to apprehend.

THURSDAY, August 14. Joshua xiv.

It must have been a great epoch in Hebrew story when the tribes assembled around their veteran leader, before whom and Eleazar stood the urns, the one containing the name of each of the tribes, while the other contained the name of some portion of Canaan.

Judah, first in the march and in war, first drew near. It was a great people, and destined to play a most important part in future history. But an incident intercepted the casting of their lot. Caleb had wholly followed the Lord, and two things filled his heart with joy; first, that God delighted in Him; and, secondly, the thought of Hebron. It was long ago since he had cut down the bunch of grapes in its immediate vicinity, but he had never forgotten it; and now God, who had read his secret, arranged that what his heart loved best his hand should take and keep—"Him will I bring into the land whereinto he went."

Out of this life of entire surrender to God sprang a faith which dared to claim the realization of the olden promise (v. 12). The fact that Hebron was held by the Anakims did not seem to stagger him. It was enough for him that his Divine Friend had pledged it to him. Besides, Hebron means rest, and it was a worthy guerdon for the old veteran, who had borne the weary wanderings of forty years.

How strong and vigorous they are who walk in entire consecration and holy faith! "They bear fruit in old age, and are fat and flourishing, to show that the Lord is upright." As the sap flows through the vine branches in spring, so God's strength passes into them who believe, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength."

FRIDAY, August 15. Joshua xv.

Of all the Israelites that received an inheritance in the Land of Promise, Caleb seems to have been the only one who perfectly succeeded in expelling the native occupiers of the country. Repeatedly we meet the sorrowful affirmation, that they were not able to drive them out. But Caleb was a notable exception. What though Arba was the greatest man amongst the Anakims (xiv. 15)! What though his three sons were prepared rather to yield their lives than surrender possession (xv. 14)! Yet Caleb drove them out; not he, indeed, but the Lord who was with him. The man who wholly followed the Lord was alone wholly victorious. Our failures in expelling the giants of our hearts, in dealing with inbred corruption and the assaults of Satan, are almost entirely due to some failure in consecration. In some respects we have not wholly followed the Lord.

Twice, in the sacred story, we are told how Achsah alighted from her ass to ask for springs of water, in addition to the south land which her father had given her. With fatherly generosity Caleb gave the upper and nether springs. So when men live in the light of fellowship with God, they become possessed of the wonderful prerogative of distributing the living water to others. Out of them flow rivers. The Othniels and Achsahs of their home circle gather round them for blessing, and the result is help in the heights of heavenly fellowship and help in the lowland valleys of daily practical life.

SATURDAY, August 16. Joshua xvi.

The limits of Judah's territory are assigned in the previous chapter, and those of the children of Joseph in this and the next. Each of us has a share in the gifts of the Ascended Saviour. To each is given some work for Him, and to each grace to fulfil it. But it is they who receive the abundance of grace that reign. Some who have learned the blessed art of receiving have therefore a practically unlimited supply of joy, and strength, and blessedness; with others it is not so.

We are told that the Canaanites were set to do taskwork. This was better than nothing; but it was not the best, and there was always a danger that they might combine, and rise in insurrection, and make it hard for Israel. God would have done better for His people, if only they had more perfectly trusted Him. Had He not promised that He would, without fail, drive out all the inhabitants of the land? Was He not able? Was it not at least sure that these were possibilities, which were not realized?

Too many of us are content with a bare existence. If we just scrape the rocks, if we have just enough to maintain our Christian life from extinction and exhaustion, if we have just enough for the emergency—we are satisfied. I am persuaded that it is the overflowings of the cup that really bless others. It is the exuberance, gladness, and fulness of the heart welling over into the face and manner that are most attractive. Hence we should utter the prayer of David: "Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation . . . then will I teach trangressors Thy ways."

Other Lands.

Notes From Madras.—III.

AMONG the missionaries whom we met under the banyan tree was Miss Grace Stephens, the superintendent of the M.E. Zenana Mission, through whom many have been turned to righteousness. Of her says Dr. Rudisill:—"Through her instrumentality the Hindu editor, first idolater, then atheist, was transformed into the earnest, eloquent preacher of the Gospel; the astrologer and magician burned his books, and now declares the truth as it is in Jesus; the priest, who for more than a quarter of a century was worshipped as a god, now cries to his once deluded followers: 'Behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world.'"

A little book from the pen of this lady recently published, and entitled, "Triumphs of the Cross," begins thus:—"In the year 1886, a seed was sown in the city of Madras, India. It was small and insignificant, like the mustard seed of old. But God, true to His promises, has made it as a mighty tree in the forest."

THE WORK NOW COMPRISES

visiting and teaching of more than 500 Zenana women; nine day-schools with about 600 pupils; nine Sunday-schools; a girls' orphanage; a Converts' Home; and the Christian Workers' Home; a liberal and extensive circulation of tracts and the editing of the Tamil Woman's Friend, or Mather Mithiri. It owes its origin to the valiant efforts of Dr. and the late Mrs. Rudisill, who, after coming to Madras and finding Gospel work entirely ignored among the native women, urged its necessity on the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M.E. Church in America.

On obtaining permission to introduce the Gospel among the Zenana ladies, Dr. Rudisill, then pastor of the Vepery English Church, Madras, prayed with his wife, asking God to reveal to them whom it was His gracious will to entrust with the sacred task. Both wrote down on a piece of paper the name of her whom they considered the best fitted, and then exchanged their slips. On each of them was written: "Miss Grace Stephens." She was a lady, born in India, who, having been brought up in the Church of England, found her field of usefulness in the M.E. Church. Having been praying for a larger sphere of activity, she looked upon her pastor's proposal as an answer from above, and though ignorant of the Tamil language and the Zenana work, she consented at once to start upon a round of visiting. This was by no means a pleasant task. As she went in search of pupils, trying to attract the women by some dainty pieces of needlework, she found many doors hard to open, and, when opened,

HOSTILITY AND OPPOSITION WITHIN.

After much hard labour three pupils were secured, one for English, one for needlework, and one for Tamil. In order to teach the latter, Miss Stephens had previously to learn the lesson with the Munshi (teacher). Little by little, however, crooked places were made straight and rough places smooth. The number of pupils increased, and in 1887 a Zenana Caste School was opened, now organized and recognised by Government.

At that time, also, was started the Woman's Friend, edited by Mrs. Rudisill until her home-call in 1889. It still continues to meet the needs of the women.

With the growth of the work the orphanage, which had been built in connection with it, became over-crowded, necessitating a new building. After much prayerful waiting and exercise in patience, the new foundation was laid in 1897, and in 1899 the Home was opened as the Harriet Bond Skidmore Memorial. It has room for 200 native girls who may be without a home or wandering the streets. The orphan school is on a good basis. In a comparatively short time three more buildings were erected:—The Baltimore Memorial and Deaconess Home, where the mission offices are located and the workers reside; the North-Western Memorial, or Nikodemus Home—the first Zenana Converts' Home in S. India—and Bethesda, near the entrance to the compound, destined to meet inquirers of the destitute class. Some cottages near by form the colony, and are occupied by native workers. Miss Stephens looks upon them as the nucleus of the future church.

She has recently been to America with Sooboonagam Ammal, a Brahmin convert, now an efficient worker in the mission. Soon after the latter's baptism, her family performed funeral rites over her effigy, giving another wife to her husband, and she has since been dead to the nearest and dearest of her kin.

While visiting the Zenana M.E. Mission, with its imposing buildings, another beautiful Brahmin lady was introduced to us as having escaped from her home in order to be an open follower of Christ. She is dearly loved by her husband, who came pleading and beseeching her to return to him. She stripped herself of her jewels, which she returned to him, but could not listen to his entreaties.

"WILL YOU SEE MY TROPHIES?"

said Miss Stephens, as telling us of the struggle of the new convert, she took us to a room containing an exhibition of idols of all kinds and shapes. "They all have their history," she said, "some of them having been worshipped for generations, and they all have been given to us voluntarily. A woman became our pupil at the age of sixty. The Word of God did its work; she was convinced of her idolatry, and with tears gave me her much-loved idol, saying she would never again worship it. I took it with a thankful heart. When I called at her home the following week, she was not there. I never saw her face again, and I believe that she was made to leave the house." "And the idols He shall utterly abolish," Isa. ii. 18, 19, 20. WILMA MORGAN.

Revival at Livingstonia.

FOLLOWING a time of earnest waiting upon God, accompanied by patient sowing of the seed, Rev. Donald Fraser writes from Hora (British Central Africa) of a time of awakening and of progress towards God:—

At the beginning of the year, I began a series of sermons on the Atonement on Sabbath mornings. As we advanced with the subject week by week, the interest became keener and the impressions deepened, until it became plain that many were crying out for Christ. Frequently we closed the services in the most solemn stillness, and at last began to hold after-meetings when the congregation was dismissed. Sometimes as many as sixty or seventy inquirers would gather in the side room, and to them the way that leads to God would be pointed out.

Then I had to set my afternoons apart for inquirers. Within three weeks I had spoken with over two hundred. Some of them showed a very clear knowledge of the meaning of Christ's Atonement for them, and could tell me definitely of the time of their conversion. A remarkable feature, which one was not sure how to deal with, was the influence which dreams had in awakening several. They spoke of going home, perhaps on the Sabbath, deeply impressed, and in the night Christ came to them and urged them to immediate decision. In the morning, with the awe of the dream still on them, the great step was taken.

Towards the close of that series of addresses came a Communion Sabbath. A number of people, over fifty, were baptized at the morning service, and then came the Lord's Supper in the afternoon. At the after-table address I again spoke on the promise of the Father. There was a profound solemnity and almost audible yearning after this great gift, so I invited all who sought to give themselves over to the control of the Spirit to meet again at night. Two or three hundred gathered. I spoke simply, explaining step by step how this mighty sanctifying power of the Spirit is the promise of God to each disciple who will give up his life to His obedience, and then we came to open prayer. Numbers of men and a few women prayed—some with a great longing, some with thanks for what they believed they had now received. When we had finished, I told the people to go. But no one would rise. They sat on, thirsting to hear more. So once more I began to speak, and then called on one or two of my more trusted teachers to testify. At last, after a long service we broke up, and the people went home very quietly. Next morning there was a holy joy on more than one face, and teachers went off to their out-schools in much expectation.

HUNDREDS OF CANDIDATES.

Since then I have received letters from out-teachers telling of the wonderful power of God at their schools. At some stations daily prayer-meetings are being held. I am busy every day examining candidates for the catechumens' classes. Already I have spoken with over four hundred, and very many more await my leisure. Some of them can give good reason for the hope that is in them; but others are rejected, for they seem rather to be going with the tide, and have not that intelligence or experience which one would desire to see.

One result of this new life is a greatly-increased activity. I have started here a band of Scripture-readers; already over a hundred have joined it, and daily the number is being added to. They receive no pay—their work is entirely voluntary. Each evening they go to their appointed villages, some of them walking daily eight and ten miles. There they read the Word of God, retell in plain language what they have read, and then pray. Once a week, at some schools daily, they meet for prayer and consultation about their work. The effect of this is bound to be deep and far-reaching. Already some who were entirely heathen have begun to seek after Christ.

Light in South America.

"EL CORREO EVANGELICO" ("The Gospel Post") is the little monthly paper published by Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, self-supporting workers in Buenos Ayres, who are the South American representatives of the Postal and Telegraph Christian Association (senior) here in England.

"We are thankful," Mrs. Harrison writes, "to be able to send forth El Correo, and as the Gospel through its pages reaches many remote places in this dark land by its quiet but effectual means, and as of old we read of 'the Lord working with them,' so now we believe that many more than we shall ever know whilst on earth have had their hearts touched by the Lord working through these printed papers, which go to each of the 2,000 post-offices in Argentina, as well as to missionaries for distribution in this and other Spanish-speaking Republics."

News comes through the post that the message of the paper has brought blessing. One man, awakened by reading simply a scrap of it found on a rubbish heap, is now not only a lover of the Bible, but is known as a preacher of the Gospel. El Correo has also been the means of bringing those wanting the Holy Scriptures, and unable to obtain them, in touch with Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, who gladly supply Bibles and Testaments to those who write and ask for them.

If through lack of funds a month passes by and there is no issue of El Correo (and this has happened three times last year and once or twice already this year), anxious inquiries come to hand as to why it has not been sent as usual. The appeals for regular and larger supplies are very touching.

If dark South America is not to miss its monthly issue of this really much-valued little Gospel paper, the prayers and practical help of the Lord's people are needed. The hon. treasurer is Mrs. C. L. Smith, 35, Eltham Road, Lee, London, S.E., to whom communications may be sent; or through THE CHRISTIAN.

Forward Movement in Italy.

FEW forms of missionary activity better correspond to the work of the Sower than that of colporteur-evangelists. They go forth to sow on fields rough and stony, seeking the ground untrodden by the feet of others. They carry their seed with them, and when it has been cast far and wide, it is only the dews of heaven that can provide for the watering, and the hand of God that will give the increase.

Recently I visited, together with two of our agents, some of the remoter villages in the Abbruzzi, and enjoyed the glorious privilege of preaching the love which passeth knowledge and the sweet burden of the precious Word. At Palena we met with considerable opposition on account of prejudices raised against us after a previous visit. It was significant, however, to notice that the spot where the Gospel had been preached was now marked out by a large cross, placed there in reparation, but still a standing monument to that saving power which it is ours to proclaim. Under its shadow we would fain have preached again had opportunity offered; but now the crowd no longer listened to the life-giving Word.

Half an hour later we were holding a meeting on the same road, and in the deepening shadows of that glorious evening it seemed as if a new Light was entering many hearts. The Word of God was deposited in several homes, and a promise received from seven or eight young men that they would meet together to read and to pray. May God give the increase.

Another, and still more interesting, visit was that paid to Canzano. It was in this village that we met with the warmest welcome, as soon as the people had heard our good news. Speaking in the streets, and offering the Scriptures for sale, we enjoyed grand opportunities of approaching the people, and after some simple conversation on religious needs we were rejoiced to find that not a few hearts were open to receive the Word. The exclamations of these poor peasants, with the tears which soon filled their eyes, went straight to our hearts, and we blessed Him who had sent us. For as the Gospel was preached I heard on every side such expressions as these:

"NONE EVER SPOKE LIKE THIS IN CANZANO;"

"God bless you; blessed be the hour you came to teach us this." It was difficult to leave them; but we entered one of those poor houses, and, all kneeling on the mud floor, united in earnest prayer that God's gracious Spirit might abide with them; and those simple hearts seemed there and then to give themselves up to Christ and to His promises. An hour later we were preaching on the public square, and it was interesting to notice that, whereas many women kept at a distance, all those who had heard us before stood close at our side. That day, with its preaching, its prayer-meeting, its sale and distribution, will be long remembered.

The above examples illustrate the constant, experience of our agents in many parts of Central Italy. Opportunities are not lacking for witness-bearing in this branch of our work. May God in His mercy give us the men and the means to utilize such possibilities of missionary enterprise. We need the prayers of many, and the support of those who believe that the seed sown is the promise of harvest.

Bureau of Missions, New York.—The Bureau of Missions is the outcome of the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions of 1900. Primarily organized to care for and develop the missionary exhibit and library gathered at that time, its scope has been enlarged so that now it has three departments—a bureau of missionary information, a museum, and a library. The object in general is to gather and arrange the facts of missions of every description and make them available for the public. It is incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, and its trustees include representatives of different Churches identified with the work of foreign missions.

A Visit to Luther's Land.

IN the course of a recent tour in Germany, extending over three weeks, Mr. Henry Edmonds, of Tunbridge Wells, had the privilege of meeting religious reformers, university professors, and members of the Christian Students' Union. His experience emphasizes the fact that, while much agnosticism and free-thinking have always been associated with Germany, there is in the Fatherland a deep-rooted piety animating the lives of students and the younger generation, which augurs well for the spread of Evangelical religion.

After describing visits to various Christian resorts, Mr. Edmonds says:—"At Bonn I went out to try and find the Y.M.C.A. In front of the building is a large shop for the sale of Christian literature, and on entering I found a bright Christian young fellow, who spoke English, and who took me over the premises, which were not large; but the work is encouraging. I saw some brass instruments in the hall, and learnt that the young men had formed a brass band. While waiting in the garden I saw a dozen young fellows enter, and turn into a little room under the Hospiz. My friend followed soon after them, and upon inquiry I learnt that the young men were some Christian students of Bonn University, who were going to have their weekly Bible-class.

I at once told my friend that to attend the meeting would interest me much more than seeing the town, so I was cordially invited to join the Bible circle. After a solemn prayer, during which all stood with reverently bowed heads, a young German student gave an address on 'Waking in the Light.' When he exclaimed with animation in German, 'God is Light,' a student sitting beside me responded with enthusiasm, 'Hallelujah!' and the faces of the whole class lit up in sympathy. I could not understand much that was said, but the spirit of the young man who spoke, and the evident presence of God, was a refreshing delight.

"The first Sunday evening at Berlin, I attended a meeting of a Christian Students' Union. The address was by a young theological student, and the subject was 'A Recent Conference at Eisenach,' where there was an endeavour to bring pastors, professors, and students together, with a view to discussing evangelistic work generally, and especially in the hope of bringing about more co-operation. A son of General von Viebahn (the general is an earnest evangelist) introduced me to Fraulein von Blucher, a relative of the great Blucher of Waterloo, and who herself conducts a good deal of evangelistic work in Berlin. I found the president of the Y.M.C.A., an old retired officer, dealing earnestly with a young fellow about his soul, and I have no doubt he is a great power for good among the young men."

Mr. Edmonds is convinced that the work of the Christian Students' Union is one full of promise for the future of all the countries where it is or may be organised.

Scriptures for India.

IN a letter just received from Rev. S. V. Karmarkar (secretary of the committee appointed by the Bombay Conference of Missionaries in connection with the Scriptures for India scheme), he writes that he is receiving letters from many missionaries who are eagerly expecting copies of the Scriptures for distribution. The numbers required to meet the demands from this district are:—English—822 Bibles, 1,082 New Testaments, 1,055 Gospels; Marathi—1,230 Bibles, 3,239 New Testaments, 5,439 Gospels; Guzerathi—393 Bibles, 721 New Testaments, 2,316 Gospels—16,297 volumes. He specially asks for copies in English, to give to zenana ladies in Bombay, and to officials at Poona and elsewhere, who are anxious to receive memorial volumes. A munsiff (native magistrate) recently sent a teacher to Bombay, a distance of 200 miles, to obtain a large-type English Bible, which Mr. Karmarkar was able to supply, and a second copy for the use of the teacher himself.

From Romanism to Christ.

Recent issues of Le Prêtre Converti have been telling the story of the conversion of Abbé Dujardin. The following summary is from Mr. W. F. Hathaway, of Pewsey, Wilts., hon. sec. in England of the Work Among French Priests.

I ENTERED the ministry full of fervent zeal, and in time was appointed to a church at Havre. At the end of last year I was in a bric-a-brac shop, and noticed an old Bible which I spoke of as "Protestant." This led to conversation with a woman who had been an earnest Romanist, but who had become Protestant through attending some evangelistic services; and one day she asked me whether I was courageous enough to have an interview with one of the pastors of the town, or whether I was afraid of facing the light.

I replied that I had nothing to fear, and was open to a knowledge of the truth; whereupon she took me at my word, and arranged that I should meet Monsieur Paul Monod. I was pleased with the manner in which he received me, and we took as the subject of our discussion the supremacy of the Pope. I must confess that I was deeply struck, first, with M. Monod's thorough knowledge of the Scripture, and secondly, with his very honest and impartial treatment of the subject, as if he only wanted to set forth the truth, and not in any way to gain a victory over myself.

But his prayer struck me more forcibly than anything else. It was so touching in its simplicity, and all so different from the way in which I prayed, that I was deeply impressed by it. Suddenly an extraordinary idea came to my mind: "Could it be possible that by some compact with Satan he was really at heart praying to him, although the words were ostensibly addressed to God?" It was a strange notion; but I had always been taught that Protestantism was such a monstrous absurdity that I did not know how otherwise to explain this wonderful prayer.

A few days afterwards, through an introduction from the same Protestant woman, I went to see the evangelist (previously a Salvation Army officer) through whom she had been led to the truth. As I was going up the hill by the cable tram, the thought came to my mind: "Supposing an accident takes place, shall I be lost in hell?—since Catholic teachers might say that I was going into mortal sin by entering into relations with heretics!" I hoped, however, that perhaps God would not condemn me, since I was only seeking the truth.

But when I got to the house, and began talking with this evangelist, my fears soon vanished. I was strangely drawn to him, and as our conversation proceeded I felt a wonderful peace stealing into my heart. After a long talk we knelt in prayer, and I seemed still further to yield to the sweet influence of God's grace. I felt at peace with Him.

I went to another interview with Pastor Monod, well armed with proofs of the supremacy of St. Peter; but I soon found how worthless were my arguments when fairly tested by Scripture. Gradually I found myself obliged to relinquish altogether the Roman Catholic doctrine of Tradition, and to hold that Scripture was capable of explaining itself. But these convictions were not arrived at without severe and prolonged mental struggles, which can only be understood by one who has gone through them, and I suffered much before I came into the full truth as it is in Christ.

E. DUJARDIN.

Drink and Old Clothes.—What practical relation is there between strong drink and tattered clothing? The question is raised by a brief statement that has gone the round of the papers, as follows:—"Architects practising in Ireland are invited, on behalf of Lord Iveagh, to send designs for the erection of a market for the sale of old clothes in Dublin." The people are impoverished by drink; like drowsiness, drunkenness "shall clothe a man with rags." The drink lord is prepared for the situation, and accordingly steps in with the proposal of a rag market. The rags of the community may well pass through the same hands that supply strong drink to the thoughtless millions. Strange that drink should do things so dissimilar—it has built churches, and now it would seem to be prepared (grotesque and distressful fact) to provide a market for the sale of rags.

On French Rivers and Canals.

"LA BONNE NOUVELLE" MISSION-BOAT.

READERS of The Christian are familiar with the work of the boat, Le Bon Messager which has been now for ten years carrying the Gospel to the river-side populations in France, work which has been attended with so much blessing. During these years, Le Bon Messager has had 2,578 meetings for adults and 741 meetings for children on board, 115 missions having been held in 105 different localities. At the present time the boat is on the Marne, and the work is, if possible, more encouraging than ever. M. and Mme. Huet, who are in charge, were formerly living in those parts, M. Huet as parish priest and his wife as school-teacher. They have been welcomed by many old acquaintances, who knew them in their former capacities, and who now hear from them the "good news" that they have learnt to love and teach.

We greatly desired to have a second boat to carry on work in other parts, and our desire has been granted, La Bonne Nouvelle having been built, and got off to work last April. The boat is a beautiful one, somewhat larger than the old one, and able to go through all the locks and canals in the country. In charge of M. and Mme. Dautry, it was taken up to the little town of St. Mammés, not far from Fontainebleau, where the meetings were begun; and it is now going on its way down the Canal du Loing, towards Nemours, and so southwards, to parts which we have as yet never visited in this way. The accompanying pictures give some idea of the outside of the boat, as well as of the pretty saloon in which the meetings are held. There are three living rooms and a kitchen on board, and great attention has been paid to the heating and ventilation, so that the boat is comfortable in all weathers, and is kept perfectly dry and habitable. Most of the money for its construction and fitting came from friends in America. A small sum is still needed to complete the payment of every expense of the building and furnishing. Many are the

that we are permitted to see in this work. Not long since we heard from a friend in Switzerland that a young man from a mountain village near to Zurich, getting tired of the old home, insisted on leaving his parents, to "see life." He came to France, and, following only too faithfully the example of the prodigal, he was glad, at length, to hire himself to a small farmer to keep himself from starving. The man was a hard worker himself, and made his young labourer toil from early morning till sunset. The life was a hard one, but God was leading the lad by a way he little thought of. One evening he observed that all the population of the little village was streaming down to the river-bank. He followed, and there he saw a strange-looking craft moored alongside, and all lit up. Some strains of sweet music were heard, and, as he listened, a home-sick feeling took possession of him, as for the first time in France he heard the old hymns so often sung in the little Swiss village. He went on board, and the solemn words of the speakers, on the story of the Rich Man and Lazarus, deeply impressed him. He went regularly every evening, for he saw that he was losing his own soul and had gained nothing. Soon the Spirit of God showed him clearly the way of life, and not long after, he returned to his father's Swiss châlet, with a new heart and to live a new life.

THE MISSION BOAT.

Writing in the end of May, M. Huet says: "We had yesterday one of the most splendid meetings we have ever had on board. At two p.m. the boat was over-filled by children and parents, and in the evening some 300 persons were crammed in, and there must have been quite 200 outside. When the people of Azy came to take their places, they found the boat half filled with our friends from Château Thierry and Essomes. The people here never go near their churches, and at Azy there are no services held except burials and marriages, so the people never hear anything to remind them that there is a God and a future life."

We commend this good work to the prayers of our friends, that the Lord may be graciously pleased to bless the preaching of His message to many who will hear it, probably for the first time in their lives. W. Soltau.

Testing and Training Home.—The tenth report of the Y.W.C.A. Testing and Training Home for Foreign and Home Missions, 495 and 497, King's Road, Chelsea, shows that during the year nineteen were received for training, six left for the foreign field, four had definite openings in prospect, and others entered upon mission work in England as a preparation for more distant fields of service. Spiritual Need of the West Indies.

AT this time, when the hearts of so many are being moved to send relief to the sufferers from the terrible eruptions in Martinique and St. Vincent, will not the Lord's people also remember the great spiritual destitution of many of the West Indian Islands? The impression seems to be common that the islands are practically evangelized; but, as a matter of fact, scarcely one-fifth of the population has even the loosest nominal connection with the Protestant churches. Of the remainder, probably about a million are entangled in one of the darkest of heathen religions, that of the Vodu, which flourishes in the island of Haïti. Many votaries of the sacred snake are people who have been baptized by Catholic priests; and throughout the islands where Rome bears sway an almost inconceivable amount of vice and pagan superstition is to be found, mingled with an extreme devotion to the externals of the Roman ceremonial on the part of some, and with sheer atheism on the part of others.

Such is the case in Martinique. Yet there is scarcely anything being done there to evangelize the people. I believe I am correct in stating that when the British and Foreign Bible Society's agent visited the island about ten years ago, there were no Protestants at work; and that now there are but two, who divide their time between Martinique and Guadeloupe. In the smaller French islands, and in Jesuit-ridden Cayenne, there are no missionaries. There are none in the Venezuelan "Leeward Islands." There are none in the greater part of the interior of Haïti, and even in the towns of that island evangelization is only imperfectly carried on. In Cuba and Porto Rico, until the Spanish-American war, there was only a handful of Protestant workers, who were hindered by the Government whenever possible.

Unfortunately the churches of the Protestant islands are engaged in a hard struggle for financial self-support. In the struggle many a congregation would compare very favourably with those in England, especially considering the prevailing hard times due to the failure of the sugar industry, and the great hurricanes of 1898 and 1899. But these circumstances make it very difficult for the churches to do what they desire for the evangelization of the islands.

Between 1889 and 1899, the Moravian Church, for example, felt compelled to refuse at least six separate appeals for work in important unevangelized districts, including a curious request for educational work from the Government of the Republic of Haïti. I believe that West Indian missionaries of experience would agree that if any friend felt impelled to help on the work, it would be best to help those churches which are already in the field. The chief of these are the Anglican, Baptist, Wesleyan, Presbyterian, Moravian and Congregational. No doubt our people in some places might do more themselves. Even the Protestant islands have a very low standard of moral purity; nor can they boast of freedom from Obeah. Many church members who emigrate in search of work become terribly corrupted amidst the great temptations of the Spanish-speaking, French, and Haïtian towns. Will not English Christians pray for their West Indian brethren, that they may be made holier and stronger in Christ, and that they may not succumb, but be faithful witnesses for Him? West Indian.

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

THE MANUFACTURE OF SAINTS.

AN ADDRESS TO MINISTERS.

By Rev. Canon HAY AITKEN.

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth (2 Tim. ii. 15).

The great object of the life and service of ministers is to make saints, and I use the word "saints" as St. Paul used it when he wrote to "the saints which are at Ephesus," and as he would if he were here. Doubtless he would recognise imperfections, and know that some would be but feeble saints. God has made men interdependent (hence the relation of ministers and people), and in this work of making saints He takes ministers to co-operate as "workers together with Him."

Observing, then, that the world is a great field for the creation of saints, let us notice that the work calls for three agents—(1) God's Omnipotence is employed; not the omnipotence that in our childhood we were accustomed to associate with some tale of a benevolent fairy, who by waving a magic wand called ivory palaces into being, for it is God's will to progress through means to the attainment of His ends. He creates man as a free agent, not an automaton, for were we automatic we should not be like God. It is by the exercise of moral freedom in the surrender of the will that the soul becomes assimilated to God.

THE WAY TO DISASTER.

(2) There must be response to the Divine idea. In the making of saints the minister must throw his whole being into this service, which is the ultimate aim of all his activities. The work cannot go on if the minister himself fails to co-operate, by devoting himself rather to merely outward signs of success, to acquiring influence, attaining popularity, pushing himself into notice in his district or among his denomination. If he allows himself so to slip, he is paving the way for disaster. "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" The outcome of the lapse may be a passing popularity, but spiritually it means dismal failure.

Of course the temptations to such a course are strong and obvious. A minister argues with himself: "There is my gifted neighbour, who has a crowded building. He refers to the Gospel in a way that suggests, 'We used to love it once, but of course we have advanced since then.' I preach the old Evangel, as Charles Simeon did in the days of the Cambridge revival." Then that minister, too, gets the idea of "conforming to type," accommodating his doctrines to the ideas of the people around him, and the spirit of the age. He preaches on a variety of topics. He becomes like the lady I have heard of who complained that a certain minister preached Scripturally, and who, when asked why she objected, said that the minister's duty was "to preach like a leading article in The Times"!

He loses taste for spiritual things and forgets altogether that the test of success is to produce saints.

"AND ART DEAD."

Let us be ashamed to spend our lives in producing what is not worth the making. It is said that in Birmingham idols are manufactured for export to foreign lands. If it be true, the workman who makes them should be ashamed of his handiwork. And should not a minister, too, be ashamed, if he produces not a saint and not even a travesty of a saint? He may gather people who are agreeable and amiable, who talk philanthropy and discuss social subjects; but he makes nothing like saints if there is no contact with God, if there are no products of the Holy Spirit—love, joy, peace—in their hearts. The minister, perhaps, says nothing of such things, and they do not occur to the hearers. Christian life is toned down. They are decent people, but it takes more than decency to constitute a Christian. Are there not plenty such to whom Christ, if speaking to-day, could even scarcely say as He said to the Church at Sardis:—"Thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead." They cannot be said to have so much as a "name to live."

On the day of trial by fire, then, what will become of the worldly sermon, its well-balanced periods, and the fashionable devotees who flock to hear? If, in a word, the minister's strength has been spent in that which does not tend to the great work of producing saints, then, alas! for a lost life and a wasted minister!

FAULTY WORKMANSHIP.

Again, a workman is ashamed to make an article, and yet make it badly. We remember the old story of the little boy who, after labouring long and unsatisfactorily to draw a horse, wrote underneath it, to avoid mistakes, "This is a horse." Half-hearted Christians might be labelled so; for no one would know, else, that they were Christians at all. A team of horses could not draw them to a prayer-meeting, or to engage in active work. They give a guinea, perhaps, to the missionary fund, and consider they have extinguished their liability. They pose as respectable church members, while the unconverted man looks on and says, "Well, I see no particular difference between my church-going neighbour and myself. Indeed, I show some interest in the poor, and put myself to inconvenience on their behalf, where my neighbour does not."

REV. CANON HAY AITKEN.

From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.

These, surely, are people of whom "the workman is ashamed." They may even flatter themselves that they enjoy Evangelical doctrine, and congratulate themselves that they are not like the Broad Church folks or the Ritualists, who do not hear such Gospel preaching as they. Yet selfishness is at the root of all they do. Where is the image of the Master? Where is the saint? He went about doing good and delivering those who were tyrannized over by the power of the devil, because of the power of God within Him. The Holy Spirit is grieved as they go on in self-indulgence, flattering themselves, and flattered with the idea that justification gives a kind of back-door into heaven, and sanctification a higher one brighter in glory, and that they have the option, but will at any rate get in! Corruptio optimæ pessima.

What are we to do to prevent our work from being burnt as wood, hay, stubble? We want to show ourselves "approved unto God," only satisfying and being satisfied if we make saints. May we not each ask ourselves, "Am I one myself? If not, let me claim His help and blessing now. Now, Lord. Thou dost not deal in legal fictions, promising to make me holy without meaning it, but Thou canst make me pure in heart. Thou didst it for Thy servants of old. Do it for me." So shall we lay hold of that unspeakable gift—the gift of the Holy Ghost.

THE DEITY AND GLORY OF CHRIST.—I.

A BIBLE READING.

By Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

(2 Peter i. 16-21.)

Peter, in the twelfth verse of this second Epistle, uses an expression which we find nowhere else in Scripture—"the present truth." This present truth is given and is needed for this generation also.

Observe the stress which is laid on the contrast between "fables" on the one hand, and vital, eternal, indisputable facts, certainties, realities, on the other. We have, in these days, fallen upon times when both the Word of God and the Person of Christ are the subjects of diabolical assault. We oppose all trifling with either.

During the early part of my ministry, I was much harassed and troubled by representatives of that species of infidelity which, under the ostensible plea of seeking light upon difficult points, really aims to undermine and overthrow the centres of faith—the Word of God and the Son of God. I made due investigation, and struck the foundation-rock from which, by God's grace, my feet have never since moved. I therefore want people to get to see and know with clearness and positive assurance that, so far from Christ being a myth, and the Cross and the Resurrection, fables or delusions, we have a body of well-ascertained and absolute proof of the great facts of our faith. If I can show you this, I am satisfied.

Let us first turn back for a moment to the Gospel of Luke. See how the writer starts: "Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things that are most surely believed . . . it seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order . . . that thou mightest know the certainty of those things wherein thou hast been instructed." Again, in the Book—I had almost said the Gospel—of Acts (i. 3) we have the phrase "by many infallible proofs." Certainties and infallible proofs there are, and we know that we have not believed in vain. We have the "word of prophecy" made "more sure;" that is, not that the words of the prophets are to be doubted, but we have the confirmatory testimony of eye and ear witnesses to the majesty of the Son of God.

The words "dark places" may be rendered literally "miry, murky swamp,"—where some of my hearers perhaps are—where every step is attended by risk, and where there is special need for "the light that shineth in a dark place"—the light of God. Here is no false flicker, no will-o'-the-wisp. Follow this light; it will lead you to a sure footing.

THREE LINES OF THOUGHT.

There are three lines of thought on the subject: (1) the testimony of Messianic prophecy, (2) the testimony of Messianic history culminating in the Transfiguration, (3) the testimony of what I will call Messianic experience in the human soul itself, when He dawns "in your hearts" (v. 19). When He comes again it will not be in our hearts, but where every eye shall behold Him.

The testimony of Messianic prophecy is of especial value. If faith is to be intelligent, it must rest upon intelligent conviction, founded upon rational evidence. The Apostle (1 Pet. iii. 15) speaks of giving "a reason of the hope that is in you." Now reason, apart from faith, may recognise the spirit of prophecy, so that even unbelievers may, by conviction, be prepared to take the Word of God as their guide, and the Christ of God as their Saviour. Prophecy, of course, may mean "forth telling" as well as "foretelling;" but we are now dealing with the Messianic predictions, and there are four criteria of such prophecies which mark them as Divine. (1) Remoteness of the event foretold. (2) Minuteness of the details set forth. (3) Novelty of combination. (4) Mystery of contradiction. When these unite, then prophecy is indisputably and irresistibly Divine. The first excludes the possibility of the prophet affecting the fulfilment. The second shuts out the possibility of its being merely shrewd guess work. The third precludes the prophecy from being an inference made from past to future events. The fourth makes even the seer himself blind to the meaning of the prophecy he utters. The prophets themselves, searching into the meaning of prophecy, were baffled, until God revealed unto them that the Word was for the time to come.

CENTRED IN CHRIST.

Now, as to Remoteness of Time. Why was there a space of 400 years between Malachi and the New Testament? The Old Testament Scriptures were complete in the Hebrew between four and five centuries before Christ, and in the Septuagint translation two and a-half centuries before Him. Was not this partly to separate the Old Testament Prophet from the New Testament Evangelist, and thus avoid any possibility of framing a fulfilment of his own forecast?

Minuteness of Detail. All the predictions centre in the Man, Christ Jesus; all the prophecies in one man, one place, one set of circumstances. Remember, too, that the whole of the Old Testament is prophetic, and that not only in prophecy, but in song, in psalm, in ceremonial, in individual experience, Christ, the Redeemer, is foreshadowed.

Dr. Gordon, of Boston, had a large dissected "puzzle map," which he gave to his children, saying, "Don't press the parts into their places; you will soon know when they fit." Coming again into the room very soon after, he was surprised to find the map complete. He felt like saying, as Isaac to Jacob, when the latter returned with the venison, "How is it that thou hast found it so quickly, my son?"

"Why, father," was the reply, "there was a man printed on the back, and we saw where the feet, the eyes, the arms, and the rest of the body came, and so it was easy to watch it and fit all in." So, if we know the Bible, we see "the Man on the back"; we put together the prophecies of the Old Testament by "the Man Christ Jesus."

UNERRING ACCURACY OF FULFILMENT.

Novelty of Combination. Disraeli, in his "Curiosities of Literature," speaks of "uninspired prophecy," as when events are foretold as the result of study and careful observation; but in Jesus Christ this was not possible. Never before was man born of a virgin; never before was a king thus laid in a manger; never before did man die that dead men might live. It is wholly novel, mysterious, and was, and is, and must remain through eternity, absolutely unique. The inspiration of that portrait came from the heavenly gallery, and not from the studio of an earthly artist. The details, too, are so striking. Christ might have been born—anywhere; but Micah dares to put his finger on the very spot: "Thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall He come forth that is to be Ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." Christ might have been born of any family; but there is to be the one line, the one branch, step by step, generation by generation. Jacob had twelve sons, but the one, Judah, is chosen. The very twig on which this blossom is to appear is shown with unerring accuracy. And Daniel's prophecy of the time, seventy times seven = 490 years, from the rebuilding of the Temple to the coming of Christ, was fulfilled with absolute correctness.

The Mystery of Contradiction. Turn to Isa. liii., one of the main instances of Messianic prophecy. (Men are saying, "Oh, this does not refer to Jesus Christ." Philip, however, speaking under the Holy Ghost, says in Acts viii. it does, and I prefer the judgment of Philip.) Here are paradoxes, irreconcilable by merely human ingenuity. Even the Rabbis could not reconcile them except on the supposition of two Messiahs. He was to suffer unto death, yet prolong His days; to be cut off from the land of the living, yet have numerous seed; to experience adversity throughout, and yet to prosper; to be spoiled, yet to divide the spoil; to be condemned, yet to be the Justifier of the condemners; to be bruised, yet satisfied; counted a malefactor, yet a Benefactor. God speaks in paradoxes, but not in contradictions, and the apparent parallels converge in Himself.

Again, Ps. xxii. is plainly quoted in the New Testament as applying to Him. The atonement cry on the cross begins the psalm, and the end may be read: "They shall come and declare . . . that 'It is finished.'" The true explanation of the psalm could not be made by an exclusively Hebrew application. "They pierced My hands and My feet." The Hebrews never did so; but, on the other hand, the Romans did. "They shoot out the lip," &c. How exactly all this was fulfilled at Calvary! "I may tell all My bones." Not only does the nudity of the person crucified render the body apparent; but its dependence, in hanging, on particular parts, brings out the bony structure with distinctness. Notice the paradoxes, also, in this Psalm. He is crying out in extreme suffering, and yet is strangely protected; surrounded by scoffers, and yet by believers; enclosed by the assembly of the wicked, and yet to be honoured by coming generations. We see the "Malefactor;" and yet when we see Him we understand it all, and the "Malefactor" of the cross is the Benefactor of the ages.

THE PSALM OF SOBS.

Well has this psalm been called the "Psalm of Sobs." The Hebrew is in a series of fragmentary gasps. "My God—why forsaken Me—words of My roaring." This is the language of the Son of God in death, having no strength to utter completed sentences. The Psalm is like a cavern of gems—we introduce a torch, and it is immediately radiant with all the colours of the rainbow; but the predominant tint is the ruby red of the blood of Calvary.

Do you bow to the doctrines of critics, and allow the foundations of our faith to be disturbed, if not destroyed? Here is God's light to lead you out of the quagmire. Argument may be used for, as well as against, and so we may establish the truth of the Scriptures and of the Incarnation of the Son of God. It is inconceivable that these Scriptures, if not God-given, should so marvellously and exactly foreshadow the Son of God. It is impossible for Christ to have been either a fanatic or merely a misguided, good man, when the prophecies of the centuries so conclusively point their finger to Him as "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." I have been by faith to His cradle, His sepulchre, His cross, and my eyes follow Him to the Throne; and I say: "Let all the powers of hell unite to shake our faith in the verities of Christianity, we will still hold fast our belief until 'our eyes behold the King in His beauty,' in the land of which He is the light."

Drink and the Labour Market.—Speaking at the temperance meeting in connection with the recent Wesleyan Conference, Lady Henry Somerset said that she is persuaded that drink holds greater sway over the people than it did ten years ago. The invasion by foreign labour is largely due to the fact that drink is answerable for unsteady and slack work on the part of our own countrymen.

INTERRUPTED COMMUNION.

(Genesis xii. 4.)

By Rev. S. A. McCRACKEN.

I am sure there is a deep conviction in many hearts that God has been dealing with us, and has been searching us and bringing us to the dust; that there is a crisis. A great moment has come to pass when some realise that they are at a kind of parting of the ways. They ask, Which way shall we turn, to the right hand or to the left? One great point has been advanced, and very strongly emphasized, that in this teaching we do not present an "it"; we do not present something that is neutral, but a Person, One who lives, One who abides, One who indwells, One who empowers. That Person is the Lord Jesus Christ Himself; and I have been very much struck with the way in which the very person of God in the life of Abram dominated all the blessing of that life of faith, in which Abram is one of the most brilliant examples that we have in the Word of God.

"The Lord had said to Abram." It is noteworthy that in Genesis xii. we have not the beginning of God's dealings with Abram, but the time when they began to be worked out by obedience. So long as Abram obeyed not in fulness the Word of God given to him, God remained silent to this man whom He had called to live a life of full obedience.

ABRAM'S THREE-FOLD CALL.

There were three things in that call—(1) to leave his country; (2) to leave his kindred; and (3) to leave his father's house (xii. 1). The first he obeyed, the second he partially obeyed, and the third he did not obey at all; and during all the time of that peculiar experience there was only the one message to that man. The Lord had spoken, and had said, "Abram, leave thy country and thy kindred and thy father's house; and go into a land that I shall show thee." Oh, is it not a wonderful call!

God's Word is ringing in your ears, calling you to a great renunciation and surrender, in obedience to His Divine claim. Until your heart looks up to Him, and says, "Lord, I am willing to be made willing to do Thy will," that message remains the one absolute final message of God to you.

Abram made a tremendous mistake when God came to Him with this call. Instead of rising up and doing as the Lord had said, he went and consulted his father, and so went to Haran with Terah. He ought to have left father, and kindred, and country, and to have passed through Haran clean into the land of Hebron, in the power of the message the Lord had given him.

NO TIME FOR CONSULTATION.

You must not consult any man where God is concerned. If God lays claim to your heart, your all, you must not consult any person about that claim. It is a question between your soul and God; and just as you are able to look up and say, "Here, Lord, I do decide, absolutely and finally, to give myself to Thee," or, if you have done that already, you have entered within the realm of the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ.

Notice how God delivered Abram from this state. He delivered him by the power and principle of death. Abram tarried at Haran, instead of going right on into the land of Hebron. Then God steps in and takes away Terah from the scene; and Abram leaves Haran and goes right into Hebron, where He was to have such wonderful fellowship with the God who had called Him. If Abram had lived in our day he would have looked back and said, "Ur and Haran are crucified unto me, and I am crucified to them. I yield myself to God as one alive from the dead, in the power and principle of death that has ensued, and I yield myself to the Lord who calls me fully to Himself."

DELIVERANCE IN THE PRINCIPLE OF DEATH.

All deliverance for the saint is in the power and triumph and victory of Christ's death. He has died to be a redemption between His people and Egypt; and He desires to-day that we shall be on the right side of that redemption. Oh, to make up our mind as we think of the power of the death of Christ, putting the world and the flesh upon the cross; and to say, "These are crucified to me, and I am crucified to them. I reckon myself dead to sin, and I yield myself to God as one that is alive from the dead."

When Abram got into the land of Hebron he immediately erected his altar there, and held sweet communion with his God. Then that converse and communion were interrupted in a very peculiar way. There came a famine, and though he had no voice from God to move from the land, on his own initiative he went down into Egypt; and during all the time he was there, God was silent—no fellowship, no converse, no communion, no power. By-and-by Abram is drawn up again from Egypt, and came to where his tent was at the beginning (xiii. 3).

It may be that I am speaking to some who entered into the fulness of the life of faith in days gone by; and you have had an experience similar to Abram's. You have felt the power of the famine staring you in the face; and you thought you would be so much better off in Egypt. You have gone back into the old place from which the Lord delivered you. If this be your state of soul, you will never enjoy the peace with God that is yours through Jesus Christ, you will never enjoy the power from God which is yours through Jesus Christ, you will never enjoy communion with the Father, until you get back to where your tent was at the beginning.

NO "NEAR CUTS."

The journey to Egypt was a "near cut" from the famine, and there are a great many who like to take a "near cut." But it is done on their own initiative, and they have to climb the wall. When the Spirit of God meets them to show them to themselves, and to bring them back into the place of communion, He says, "You must go back to the very spot where you left off." When Abram got back to this spot, God reopened the communication which had been interrupted. Have we got back to where the tent was at the beginning? Then God will, indeed, renew the old acquaintance with us. God grant that it may be so.

To-day we do not preach an ideal or an idea. We do not ask an assent to something, or that you should subscribe to a belief. We ask you to do as we by the grace of God have done—by simple faith to enter on this simple, blessed, holy experience for yourselves. For long I held and preached a doctrine of separation from the world, separation to God. One night I was in Mildmay Conference Hall, and after the general meeting, our friend, Mr. Webb-Peploe, went downstairs to conduct an after-meeting. He told us his own wonderful experience, and all in a flash I saw this great truth revealed to me, that there was an experience to be attained to, to be entered into, as well as a truth to be held. And I remember one Whit-Sunday morning, when I was preaching on the Holy Spirit, the fulness of the Spirit filled my heart, and from that moment I was enabled to enter into the wonderful blessing of appropriating Jesus Christ as my wisdom, justification, sanctification, and redemption.

DEEPENED BY STAGES.

We often say to the sinner, "Will you just yield your heart now? Will you say, 'I will trust and not be afraid'?" I want to say to those of you who are truly born again, who know it, who believe it—to those who may be hungering and thirsting for something higher and deeper—"Will you, here and now, just yield yourselves fully unto Him? Will you just claim Him fully as your Saviour? Will you just now in your heart of hearts say:—

> Take my life, and let it be > Consecrated, Lord, to Thee;
> Take my moments and my days,
> Let them flow in ceaseless praise"?

God led Abram, and deepened his life by stages. You cannot know all at once. When we have entered into our Hebron by faith in God, when we have dared to obey Him without chart or map of any kind, when we surrender our will to the will of God, we begin to learn the revelation of the dominating power of God in the life of faith, to those who absolutely trust Him.

SUPPOSING HIS PRESENCE.

(Luke ii. 44.)

AN ADDRESS TO YOUNG MEN.

By Rev. J. STUART HOLDEN.

This is a very simple word that comes to us to-day from one of the earliest recorded incidents in the life of the Lord Jesus. When a child of twelve years of age, he was taken to the temple by his parents; and after they had performed the rites for which they came, the homeward journey had begun. "They, supposing Him to have been in the company, went a day's journey." "Supposing Him to be," when He was not with them, when they had no grounds for their supposition, for they had never seen or spoken with Him that day, and the gracious influence of His presence was not towards them. They "supposed" Him to have been with them; and hence mingled with their kinsfolk seeking Him.

This almost describes the normal state of many of the people of God to-day. We "suppose" that Jesus Christ is in the company, but our hopes and suppositions are in the main unwarranted; for I have no right to suppose that Christ is in my company if I have never invited Him to come. If I have never opened my heart to the Son of God, I have no right on account of my confirmation, or on account of my admission to church membership, or on account of a past emotional experience, to suppose that Jesus Christ is in my company, if I have not definitely invited Him. It is an axiom that the Lord Jesus Christ never comes where He is not invited, and never stays where He is not welcome.

EVIDENCE OF CHRIST'S PRESENCE.

There may be some here who really know Him, who have had an experience of His Divine grace, who can truly testify that all their hopes for eternity are founded upon Him, who recognize that the ideal life is that which is lived in the presence of God; and in a kind of way "suppose" it is all right. We have been converted it may be; but, my brothers, I would that all our hearts were searched as to the evidences of the presence of Christ. Though there is not a truth which you do not endorse, and to which you do not say "Amen," in the spiritual world seeming is not being; and if we search ourselves on this point it may save us a good deal of trouble. The fact that I seem to recognize something to be the truth of God, that I endorse all that is proclaimed by Him, does not carry with it necessarily that I am living in fulness of fellowship with the Lord Jesus.

We go along and pride ourselves on our orthodoxy, and on being members of this great concourse, and on a twelve-year-old experience; but the Lord Jesus is not with us, and that is a fact. The parents had not seen Jesus that day, there had been no intercourse or communion with Him, or that word "supposing" would never have been written. Have you talked much with the Lord Jesus to-day, and has He talked with you, as that presence which, when it enters our souls, dispels all darkness, all worry, all weakness, and changes them into victory? Is there aught of that in your life to-day?

THE HALL-MARK.

A man's true life is not seen in his public ministry, if he be a minister; or in his definite outward service, if he be a Christian worker; but in the depth and reality of his communion with his Lord. Is this supreme hall-mark of real spiritual life yours? Do you know daily, hourly, fellowship with Jesus Christ? Is His Word that which speaks to your heart now, that which speaks not in the dim past, but in the real present? If this be so there will be not only communion, there will be victory where there was defeat; for if I walk with Christ I walk with Him who said, "All power is given unto Me."

It is idle to profess that He is in the company, and to hug this self-deception, to go on "supposing" that He is with us, if we have not victory over the world, the flesh, and the devil every time. That is what God has called us to be—more than conquerors all the time. If I walk with Him as Enoch walked with God, I should have something of the sensitiveness with regard to sin of which we read in His Word. The presence of sin will give us more pain than when we are apart from Him.

THE AMBITION OF CHRIST.

If He is in the company we shall be in sympathy, and ever-increasing sympathy, with His aims and ambitions. What is His ambition as He sits "from henceforth expecting, till His enemies be made His footstool"? Christ's ambition is the evangelization of the world, which He has redeemed, that that last command of His shall be laid to heart and practically obeyed. His ambition is the salvation of every soul for whom He shed His precious blood, and if I am in His company, and He is in mine, there will be an ever-increasing sense of sympathy with the Lord Jesus.

Have you any real love for souls—not a sentiment, but a love which has two voices, obedience and sacrifice? Did you ever sacrifice one hour from sleep to pray for souls? Have you ever sacrificed for missions till you felt it in your pocket? Do you know anything of sacrificing in health for the seeking of souls? If not, it is a fair thing to raise the question about Christ being in your company.

Thank God there is a way back. There was a way of restoration for his parents, and there is a way of restoration for you and me. The blessed Lord is not only here as the Light of the World to show us these things; but He is here to show us the way into the place where this life shall recommence, and we should go forth in fellowship with Him.

STEPS IN THE WAY BACK.

Mark the steps. (1) There had to be an honest though humiliating confession that they had lost their son. That must have been bitter. It was tantamount to a confession of neglect of obvious duty. You will never be blessed, you will never see the far-off land of promise merely by thinking of it or desiring it. The first step is an honest specific confession that Christ is not of our company. It must not be done in a vague, general way, dealing with generalities. Let us be honest and say, "My God, through some fault of my own, Thou art not in my company, and I want that Thou shalt be." Let us confess as these parents did.

(2) There had to be the supersession of every other interest by the necessity of the search. They had to leave friends, and give up for the time their journey home, and do nothing but look for Him. They spent three bitter, sorrowful days in the search. If you are going to be blessed, it is not by sitting down folding your arms. You must be in dead earnest. I never knew anyone who came into the Kingdom of God in its fulness except through tribulation. We must strive and agonize to enter into the Kingdom of God. Every other interest must be superseded by the search for the Lord Jesus, and, when we have found Him, by the claims of our walk with Him.

(3) They went back to the place where they had recently been paying their vows, and there they found Him. Altering the idea somewhat, we must go back to the place of broken vows—back to our reception into the Church, back to times of loneliness and of the special presence of God, when we made vows we have not kept. There we will find Christ, and the fulness of the life to which we are being called. What does this mean? It means restitution to those whose money you would have scorned to take, but whose characters you have not hesitated to take away. It means going through fire and water into the place of peace. It is not God's way to white-wash, but to wash white.

BROKEN AND FULFILLED VOWS.

(4) It was not only in the place of vows, but also in that of the morning and evening sacrifice. We must get back to Calvary, not only to the place of broken vows, but the place of Christ's fulfilled vows. There we see our own poverty, the unsatisfactory nature of our own lives, the precious blood of Jesus; and we hear the words of Jesus to fill us with the Holy Ghost, and make such a life possible as He would have us live. There we should find Him. What will it be if we go no longer "supposing," but certain, and certain upon evidence credible by an observing world, that Christ is in our company and we are in His!

SPIRITUAL POVERTY.

(Rev. iii. 14-22.)

By Rev. GEORGE WILSON.

In this passage we have the Lord's dealing with the spiritual poverty of His children. Last year, in going from this tent, I met a friend whose path I had crossed in the East. I was surprised, and ventured to put a somewhat foolish question: "What has brought you to Keswick?" His answer was, "Poverty, spiritual poverty!" Anxious to help, I asked if there was any definite form that his poverty was assuming. The answer showed that there was not: "No, just an all-roundness." "Something like Laodicea?" I suggested. "Yes," was the answer, "I think that is it."

I am quite sure that every one of us feels the reality of spiritual poverty. It may be vague, but it is there. An honest look inward, and are not many of us obliged to confess lack of peace, lack of rest, lack of serenity, lack of purity, lack of a consecrated heart? When we look at the outward life, do we not feel that we are very unlike the New Testament Christian, that we sadly lack the graces of saintliness, while we ought to bear those graces and no other? When we turn to the stewardship of our lives for the Lord, do we not all feel that there is a woeful disproportion between our activity for Christ and our fruitfulness for Him? I believe that I am not speaking in the air when I ask you to face with me the Lord's dealing with our spiritual poverty as his children; and I think we have guidance here that by the Spirit's ministry may be helpful to us in God's presence.

THE DIFFERENT ESTIMATES.

We discover our spiritual poverty, not by the false and flattering witness of our own self-estimate, but by the infallible and faithful witness of the estimate of Christ. Listen—"These things saith the Amen, the faithful," or trustworthy, "and true Witness, the beginning," or the origin, "of the creation of God: I know thy works. I, and I only, know Thy works." What is called self-examination? I don't think it is this. True self-discovery never comes by searching ourselves and confessing to God the poverty we find there. That does not take us very far into self-knowledge. True self-discovery always comes by submitting our life to the searching of God, that He may tell us the poverty He sees there.

This is, I believe, an utter truth. This is the only thing that will save us from self-delusion and self-deception; and it will save us, for He has all the needed qualities for the searcher. As we shall see, He loves us too much to hide from us what He sees to be wrong in our life. He is trustworthy, He is true, and He is the origin of both creations.

He created me, He knew the ideal He had before Himself in that creation, and He knows how far I have come short of His purpose. He re-created me; He knows the purpose He had in re-creating me, and He knows how far I have come short of that purpose. Do not go to examine yourselves, and do not come to me, and my poor words. Let our hearts utter this cry, "Search me, O God, and when Thou hast searched me, tell me what Thou hast found." I believe if we miss the initial step, in what I venture to call Keswick week, we will go without a blessing. It must begin here if it is to be a week of spiritual blessing, of spiritual reality, of spiritual transformation, of spiritual elevation, of spiritual progress.

GOING BEHIND PHENOMENA.

Then when God has brought home to us our spiritual poverty, we may find that as Christians we have been satisfied with a life that is very offensive and very loathsome to Christ. "I know thy works." "Lord, my Lord, what dost Thou know about them? Ah, Thou not only knowest my works, but what lies behind them." And the secret of life is to know what lies behind phenomena in the natural world and in the spiritual world. He knows "that thou art neither cold nor hot. I would thou wert cold or hot. So then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of My mouth"—hardly that, but, "I am about to spue thee out of My mouth; I am about to cast thee off."

We know how insipid tepid water is, and chemists tell us there is a great deal of difference in the insipidity when it is increasing or coming lower in heat. In the latter state the insipidity is doubled, I believe, and the same is true spiritually. Is it not true that thousands of Christians are living a life which is neither off nor on with Christ? Off and on with Christ always means off at the present. When you are on with Christ you are off self; when you are on with self you are off Christ. But this neither off nor on is a vacillating compromise between the self-life and the Christian life in the human soul; and it is that which makes it so offensive and so loathsome to our Lord. Both our Lord and the self-life are vacillating from their right into their wrong place.

What is the right place of Christ? The throne, the sway, the domination, the power. What is the right place of the self-life? The place of the crucified. Disturb these relations and you live a life offensive and loathsome to your Lord. Oh, beloved brethren, is that not true of many a Christian life? You are not altogether off with Christ. You are not altogether on with self. Oh, no. But are you trying to make a compromise between them? If so, you are ruining your spiritual life. You are growing in spiritual poverty and in offensiveness to your Lord and Master.

"KNOWEST NOT."

This satisfaction with our loathsome poverty is entirely due to our pride and self deception. Let the seventeenth verse come home: "Thou sayest I am rich and have gotten riches, and need nothing." What an awful manifestation of pride in a child of God, finding himself wealthy, and saying his wealth is all self-earned, not from grace at all. "I have gotten riches. I have earned, I have achieved, I have attained to riches; and I do not want anything else. I have need of nothing." That is the pride. What of the self-delusion? Oh, Christian soul, will you let the Spirit of God burn these two words into your heart—"knowest not"?

What is it you do not know? It is the lack of this knowledge that makes up your self-delusion. "Knowest not that thou art the wretched Christian? Knowest not that thou art the pitiable Christian? Knowest not that thou art the beggarly Christian?"—that is the literal meaning of the word "poor." "Knowest not that thou art the blind Christian? Knowest not that thou art the naked Christian?"—Oh, how the Spirit takes away all the tinsel of our self-gained wealth, and makes us stand out in God's presence truly humbled, because these are the features of the life that we may be living even though children of God.

WHAT IS CONVICTION OF SIN?

The next step is that we must meet God in perfect agreement with His judgment on our life. I know few principles that carry us further than that. "Loving Lord, hast Thou called me by all these unlovely names? I will not deny them. Thou knowest me better than I know myself; and if I bear in Thy sight the character of the wretched, blind, beggarly, naked Christian, let me agree with Thy judgment." What is conviction of sin? Agreement with God's judgment on sin. What is seeing our Saviour in the Lord Jesus Christ? Agreeing with God concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. What think ye of Christ? Just what God thinks, that is the safe answer.

Let us realize, with great humility, that He brings us to this, and yet that humility will be a spring of blessed hope. "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous, therefore, and repent"—"Lord, I want to do that. If my picture has been drawn in these words from Thy holy Book, I want not to resent them." There must be unhappiness before true happiness comes; and if God makes these things real to your soul and mine, let us agree with Him. By the double step of confession and readiness for renouncement in the power of the Spirit of God, let us turn to Him. Let us know what the repentance of a poverty-stricken Christian means.

THE ONLY REMEDY.

We must in repentance for our impoverished life be found daily at the treasures of the Lord's grace. "I counsel thee to buy of Me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white garments, that the shame of thy nakedness be not manifested; wrap them round thee; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see."

"Behold I stand at the door and knock"—here is the method of the enrichment—"if any man hear My voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me." That is the secret, Christ coming in to be Host with us as His guests; Christ coming in to be Guest with us as His hosts. Remember this, Christ can only have fellowship with you and me from the throne of our heart—with dominion, absolute, real, and sovereign—over the heart, He will have fellowship with the soul, but on no other condition.

When I invite Christ to the throne of my heart to cleanse it, to rule it, to take the government of it upon His own shoulders, I enter on an overcoming life that ends in my welcome to His throne. Christ enthroned in the heart of the believer guarantees that the believer will be enthroned on the throne of Christ. "He that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me on My throne." All depends how we hear. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith to this congregation," for what He said to the congregation He is saying to you and to me. Let us thank God we are within the reach of God to deal with our spiritual poverty, and to turn it into a wealth that is unspeakable in its riches, and that will last as long as the human soul endures.

How Lepers Listen.

(Based on Rev. John McNeill's treatment of Matt. viii. 1-4, and Matt. vii. 7.)

No tune will flow to the withering woe
Of a leper's lonely lot.
I could not sing of an unclean thing
Cast out on the waste to rot.

I did not belong to the world of song
With the brand upon my brow,
But my soul is stirred by the slightest word
Of a world of prayer now.

In my anguish grim I thought of Him
Who lifts life's darkest doom—
Whose power is such He has but to touch,
And blight will change to bloom.

And as I stood in my solitude,
One day of grief profound;
There came to me on the breezes free
A strange inspiring sound.

A voice of hope came o'er the slope,
And I wondered, "Can it be
That Christ is there in the open air,
Speaking that word for me?"

I was not allowed to stand in the crowd,
That gazed on the Speaker's face;
But His Word's wide sweep took a leprous heap
Right into its pure embrace.

The voice said, "Ask" (no arduous task);
So I vowed with my tainted breath
"That Word I'll test with a big request—
I'll ask a cure for death.

"I'll ask a cure for the life impure,
That has eaten my youth away,
For the seedtime past and the judgment blast
The harvest of foul decay."

A midnight sky, and billows high,
A prayer half-choked by fear,
As the Form that stood on Galilee's flood,
To my shattered bark drew near.

One touch of His hand and a high command,
And, lo! in the dawning day,
The wreck restored, with a harp on board,
Making its homeward way,

And the strings repeat the message sweet
Of that blest voice from heaven,
With endless praise to Him who says,
"Ask, and it shall be given."

'Tis a song supreme, on the old, old theme,
Of Moses and the Lamb,
For a leprous soul made clean and whole
By the Priest with the pierced palm.

The General's Birthday.

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

ARNOLD SOLWAY had given to the world the best part of his life. He was a retired military man, one who was proud to tell of his career, and boast of the hardships he had endured and the honours he had won.

His sixtieth birthday had come round, and he was feeling the chill of loneliness as he sat by his breakfast-room fire. It was a pleasant home; but a great shadow had fallen over it when lately his wife had passed away.

Few in his position were near enough to cheer him, and he found it difficult to fraternize with others. A letter or two had wished him "many happy returns of the day"; but with dejected spirits and morose thoughts General Solway started out to freshen himself by a walk along the esplanade. At the far end, in a sheltered nook in the sunshine of that autumn morning, sat a blind man feeling out the words of the Book on his knees. His sightless eyes were turned upward, and slowly he read.

The General watched him for a minute, and wondered at the happy look on his face. Then, as others walked away, and no one was near, he sat down on a seat near by, and listened as the fingers wandered over the page, "Now they desire a better country, that is an heavenly."

"Lively topic you've got there, my man," said Solway. "Eh, indeed it is, sir; and I never tire reading it," said the old man moving the book in the excitement of speaking. "You'll lose the place if you don't mind, and I can't put you right," said the General, taking out a cigar indifferently. "I'll soon find it; that's a verse as sets one longing; it's fine to know there's a better country," and the old man was soon busy over his reading, and the sixty-year-old General walked away.

"A better country," he said to himself; "I've had a little to do in winning other countries, and sharp work it meant; but now I'm old and weary and lonely. I wonder what that blind man's history is; he seemed far happier than I, and almost revelling in the words, 'a better country.'"

Thus talking to himself he reached his house, and sat down by the fire to rest. The large clock ticked loudly, his wife's portrait seemed to become more life-like, he could have declared the lips moved and spoke the last words he heard her utter—"going home."

Was he dosing? He tried to move, but the old sensations of weariness in his head returned, such as he had in a serious illness. He closed his eyes, and as consciousness left him he dimly heard,

"GOING HOME"—"A BETTER COUNTRY."

Weeks of hovering between life and death, and at last the strong man conquered, and began to mend. "Nurse, I want you to fetch an old blind man to speak to me; words I heard him read have started new thoughts, and I believe he can help me. That's something for a General to confess!" "Indeed it is, but I will do my best to find him; I think I know one who is often about here," she answered, eager to do anything to relieve him of the depression of the last few days.

The afternoon was cheerless, but within old Thompson's cottage all was clean and bright. He had been blind for years, yet, believing, as he did, that "all things work together for good to them that love God," he rose above despair, and prayed that he might glorify his Lord, even in his affliction. If he must ask help, he decided he would in return do something that would be for good, and thus it was he often read aloud from the Bible, and it was he who had been overheard by General Solway.

The nurse was directed aright, and told the blind man all about her patient. "I remember a gentleman speaking to me, and I recall the verse I was reading, too—"A better country, that is an heavenly," he said.

"Would you come with me? He is wanting to speak to you."

At first Thompson shrank from it, but a word from his wife, that he should use the opportunity, reassured him. Soon after he was sitting beside the general, who was in his lounge chair for the first time.

IT WAS A STRANGE CONTRAST,

the happy, sightless man and the stern commander. "What do you understand from those words you were reading that day?" he asked. "I understand, sir, that this life isn't all, and my Saviour died that I, a poor blind man, might go to that 'better country, that is an heavenly,' when this body is done with. I'd like you to know the joy of being sure of that."

"But listen here, old friend. For sixty years I have lived only for time and self—a poor way to win heaven, eh?"

"Sir, there's no winning that better country; it's beyond our winning, and can only be the free gift of God to such as believe in Christ and have eternal life." And thus the General found there is only one way for all, and that through Jesus Christ.

Only in a chair could he again go out, but he thanks God that he was reminded of the heavenly country, even though it was on his sixtieth birthday.

Suffering one, wait patiently; that land knows neither pain nor sorrow; soon, and for ever, thou wilt be strong.

Christian worker, tell of its glory; men and women grow tired of sin and the world; show them the way thither, that they may lay hold on eternal life, and desire the better country.

For now we fight the battle,
But then we wear the crown
Of full and everlasting,
And passionless renown.

O land that seest no sorrow!
O state that know'st no strife!
O princely bowers! O land of flowers!
O realm and home of life!

Among London "Arabs."

"IT has been stated," writes Mr. W. J. Orsman in the annual report of the Hoxton Costers Mission, "that quite 100,000 children of school age are drifting away from all the possible influences that make for good. Last winter we captured nearly 5,000 of these neglected juveniles in a series of meetings specially arranged; and by means of a powerful lime-light our Gospel addresses were illustrated by good pictures, texts of Scripture and hymns. The behaviour and gratitude of these "ragamuffins" were most encouraging."

A review of the past year embraces the work of teaching 870 children in the Sunday-schools; the Bible-classes of 345 young people; 170 members of the Christian Endeavour Societies; the adult Gospel services and prayer-meetings, with an attendance of 1,000 adults; the International Bible-Readers' Association of 810 members; and the Lantern Gospel Services in the winter for city arabs. It is thus a fact that at Costers' Hall definite teaching of the Bible and clear religious influence are brought to bear on nearly 8,000 children and adults.

In addition there are the open-air services, which have been bravely carried on without intermission; district visitation and tract distribution; the "sunshine visitors" to cripples, sick, and aged people; eleven thrift, temperance, and sick benefit societies; social gatherings of young believers, and many other departments of useful work.

Sympathetic care is given to the cripple children of the district. The little sufferers are visited in their homes and assisted with surgical appliances and sick comforts. They are sent to the seaside or liberally supplied with toys, books, &c., while the strongest are invited to a fortnightly treat in the "Cripples' Parlour." Mr. Orsman's address is 130, Shacklewell Green, N.E.

Arsenic in Spirits.—Acting on a suggestion from the London County Council, several of the metropolitan boroughs have added whisky and gin to the list of things for public analysis. The Council has drawn their attention to the fact that mineral acids are sometimes used to give a special flavour to cheap spirits, and that sulphuric acid is occasionally added as an "improver" of whisky and gin.

THE BRISTOL ORPHAN HOUSES.

"Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day."

SO spake the Apostle Paul to Agrippa, giving his experience "up to date;" and such, we might say, is the language of the Institution in Bristol whose annual report, from the pen of Mr. James Wright, has just been published. Like its predecessors, it is an unvarnished record of fact—a story of needs ever arising and ever being supplied, of "new mercies each returning day" coming in answer to constant, believing prayer. In the opening pages, detailed reference is again made to the reasons given in a previous report for widening the basis of admission. In addition to this, particulars are given which show the working of this new rule. The result is striking.

During the year ninety-eight orphans were admitted, who had been bereaved of both parents, and 371 who had been bereaved of one parent. Of these 371 the number bereaved of the father was 279. The total number received was therefore 469. Deducting deaths, thirteen (a very small proportion), and dismissals to situations, &c., 232, an increase in the number of inmates to the extent of 224 is registered. This increase in the number of inmates has, of course, meant increase of expense all round, but here again the record shows how the care of God has been manifested in making provision for this need. All the expenses for the year have been met, and the account closes with a substantial balance in hand. The donations, as usual, come from all kinds of people, and from all parts of the world. NOTABLE COMMUNICATIONS the following is specially remarkable: "From Staffordshire, £4 15s. 9d. for missions with the following letter: Honoured Sir,—A converted atheist, out of deepest gratitude to his precious Lord, humbly encloses a P.O. Order for £4 15s. 9d. (to be used as the Lord shall direct you), as a thank-offering for saving, more than half a century ago, one of the most ignorant, stubborn, and impenitent sinners, possibly, living upon the face of the earth; by Himself proclaiming to him the Gospel of the love of God, in a lonesome place, where he sat down to commit suicide; convincing him of the folly of infidelity, which himself compared to a soap bubble—hollow and empty—which could never bestow benefits upon mankind, being a sham of Satan; whereas Christianity hath the promise of the life that now is and of that to come; so that the believer in a living God, and in the Holy Scriptures as the written Word of God, can never lose anything, but only gain."

Here is another:—"From Chicago; a ten-dollar note, from an orphan formerly under our care, who left us a professing believer; but (as he now confesses), departed afterwards very far from the Lord, giving way to drinking, betting, gambling and other sins. God, however, in the riches of His grace, restored his soul, and he is now seeking to live as becomes a child of God. This is one of many instances which have come before us, encouraging us to go on patiently sowing the good seed of the Word of God in the hearts of the orphans, and not to despair when we see the fair hopes of a spiritual harvest apparently blasted by the enemy; for often the grace of God triumphs, in reviving the spiritual life which appeared to have been destroyed."

The report also testifies to the great spiritual blessing experienced among the orphans, during some special services held in the month of May by Mr. Jordan, of Greenwich. Mr. Wright says: "It would be too soon to attempt even an approximate estimate of these results, but we are very hopeful that the future will prove that this mission has been the day of visitation to many souls."

The report will be found to be no exception to its predecessors in the amount of interesting information and profitable comment, and we anticipate that it will prove edifying and encouraging to readers wherever it may come.

"A Sharp Bargain."

THE other day I saw a set of very curious pictures with the above title. They represented a German dealer making a bargain with an elephant! Let me try and describe them to you.

Picture I. Here is the dealer with a large pack of goods upon his back. We shall see what it contains presently; but outside it are fastened a saw, a walking-stick, and a top hat.

Picture II. The pack is lying opened upon the ground, and the dealer is showing the elephant a very startling-looking pair of trousers of a "draught-board" sort of pattern, which the elephant is eyeing with mingled curiosity and surprise.

Picture III. The elephant has allowed the dealer to put the trousers on his hind legs (and a pretty sight he looks!), though evidently he is not quite sure if he is pleased or not.

Picture IV. shows him dressed up with another pair on his front legs, a coat laid across his back, and the top hat upon his head. But now the dealer is holding the saw in one hand, and with the other he is pointing to one of the elephant's tusks, which, by the way, are of exceptionally fine growth. I suppose he has induced Mr. Elephant to let him cut one off, for Picture V. shows him sawing away at it, to the elephant's manifest discomfiture, for he is pulling back, and I see there is a tear trickling down from his eye.

Picture VI. shows him waddling off in his strange attire, with an expression on his face which says plainly, "I don't want to have anything more to do with you!" But the crafty dealer has not finished with him yet. He holds up in a very enticing manner the walking-stick and a watch and chain, and the elephant wavers in his determination, and comes back again.

In Picture VII. the dealer is cutting off the other tusk, and Picture VIII. represents the silly, disfigured monster strutting off to join his friends, dressed in his absurd attire, carrying the stick in his trunk, with the watch and chain hung on to his tail! And there in the distance the dealer is making off with the two precious ivory tusks, which are worth a great deal of money, and very much more valuable than all the rubbish he has given in exchange. I expect that when the elephant got home he would be met with derisive snorts and blows from his friends, to say nothing of a good round scolding from his wife, who would pretty soon pull off all his finery, and give him a long "curtain lecture" for having made such a stupid of himself! How he would have liked to meet that artful dealer again next day, who at any rate had left him his trunk, with which he could have carried him to the nearest pool of water and dropped him in.

As soon as I saw these pictures, I thought, "There's something for my nephews and nieces"—and myself too. I daresay most of us who are old enough have made bad bargains with our playmates at school, for which we have been very sorry when it was too late. I wonder how it is that we so often think that the possessions of others are so much preferable to our own. It is just as well that our parents keep an eye upon us, to prevent our exchanging (or "swopping"—that is the correct word at school, isn't it?) what we have got for something of less value that belongs to another boy or girl. This reminds us of a verse in Isaiah (lii. 3), which says, "Ye have sold yourselves for nought."

No tears or regrets could put the poor old elephant's tusks on again, and I am sure that, although he knew nothing of their money worth, yet he must have missed them sorely when he had to defend himself against the attacks of his enemies or his angry friends.

God has given to each of us qualities that are far more precious than ivory tusks, and of greater value than anything money can buy. Our honour, our good name, our truthfulness, our purity, our faith in God—these Satan is always trying to take away from us by some clever pretext, in exchange for some pleasure which can only last us a few moments at the best. These are the tusks with which we can "resist the devil," that he may "flee from us," and if we give them up, we shall fall again and again into his power. Oh, do not forget that the loss of any of them will leave a disfigurement on our character, and perhaps for our whole life we shall bear its ugly mark, to the distress of those who love us, and to our own disgrace and shame and loss. Nothing can ever replace them; and although we may, by God's grace, be forgiven, and have our sins cleansed through the precious blood of Christ, yet it may be years before people can fully trust us again, or we can undo the consequences of the foolish bargain we have made.

Above all, Satan tries hard to make us exchange Christ and our salvation for the tawdry pleasures with which he tempts us. But Jesus says, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul; or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

Isaiah told the people of Israel, "Ye have sold yourselves for nought"; but, thank God, he was able to add, "Ye shall be redeemed without money." That is what Christ came to do, to "redeem us from the hand of the enemy." Will you not come to Him and ask Him to save you from your sins, to forgive all your past mistakes, and help you to fight and live for Him through all your future days? Dear boys and girls, let this story of the elephant speak to your heart, so that you may not make a terrible mistake, and fritter your precious young life away.

Uncle Tom.

"The Christian" in the Holidays.

I HOPE parents will kindly see that their young folk are provided with The Christian every week while they are on their holidays at the seaside or elsewhere. It will do much to brighten their Sunday afternoons while they are away from their Sunday-schools, because this page does not take a holiday, and with articles and the Bible Searcher I shall provide interesting reading just the same as when they are at home. The paper can be obtained or ordered from local booksellers, or direct from this office; and it would be a great pity for my young readers to lose its continuity.

I hope, too, that the boys and girls will do their best to secure new readers and searchers while they are away; and remember the Competition on Aug. 28.

Holidays: Holy Days. Luke ii. 41-51.

FROM all the land the Jews thronged to their great feasts. What a treat it must have been for the Jewish boy, who was allowed at last to travel with his parents through the country to the Holy City. The flowers in their rich profusion, the sound of the turtle in the land, the carrying at night, the contingents of new pilgrims pouring down every valley to swell the main body, the songs of degrees chanted in unison by the long procession—all these were elements in a holiday of the rarest description for any intelligent boy of twelve—and how much more for "the boy Jesus."

He seems to have been wholly absorbed in the temple. From His earliest years He had been taught to think of it with extreme affection and reverence. It was His Father's house, consecrated by the hoary memories of the past, and by the maintenance of holy rites, which ministered to the spiritual needs of the world. How the hours would fly past as Mary, Joseph, and He stood in the Temple-courts and watched the priests performing their sacred functions; or listened to the sacred psalmody, for which the Levite choirs were so famous.

Perhaps on the appointed day of return to Nazareth the boy had paid a final visit to the sacred courts, going there by Himself in the early morning, and becoming so absorbed in all that was going on that He became quite oblivious to the flight of time. Thus it was that His parents left the city without Him. But what a lesson does that loving absorption teach us! How little do we combine the service of God with our happiest hours! Would that to us also holy days might be our best holidays, and our holidays filled with blessed and holy associations!

As the child lingered the hours lengthened into days, and one day into three. Perhaps He was hardly conscious of the need of food, or perhaps some friendly priest or Levite who dwelt in the sacred place offered a share of his own humble dwelling and food. And so He spent those two nights, within the sound of the evening hymns, sung by the night watch (as in Psa. cxxxiv.); and not without thoughts of Samuel. Would He also be startled at the midnight hour by hearing His Name called by the voice of God? And would He have to answer, Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth?

He had a very sweet assurance, also, that He was there on His Father's business. He knew that He was on the plan, which already was beginning to bulk before His mental vision. He felt that there were other claims than Joseph's, another voice beside Mary's. These times always bring a heartache to the fond mother and father. It seems hard for them to see the young bark cutting loose from them and making a course of its own. We should always be very attentive and thoughtful for them, never exposing them to needless pain, and always going down, as Jesus did, to be subject to them again, and for as long as we may. Fathers and mothers, on the other hand, who may not be able to understand their children, should at least give them a certain liberty, if only they are sure, as they may be, that they are being directed by an absorbing passion for the Father's house and its interests.

Let us beware never to take it for granted that Jesus is in our company. We may suppose things which are not verified by fact. Mary and Joseph supposed that Jesus was in their company, but He wasn't, and they had to search for Him for many weary hours. Make sure work for eternity, lest standing condemned before God it should appear that you have lost the most priceless opportunities through your inattention,

C.E. NOTES.

In India there are 600,000 villages, every one of them affording an opportunity to form a C.E. Society. Rev. F. S. Hatch writes that already the Jaffore district is rich in societies, and famous too, for here was founded the first C.E. Society in Asia. Until recently all these societies have been in the schools; but having learned Endeavour principles there, the scholars are now carrying them to the villages where they dwell.

In greater France, outside of Paris, Christian Endeavour cannot be said to have flourished, chiefly because no one has been responsible for its growth and progress. There have been no national organization or officers. Dr. Clark's recent visit to France has resulted in this defect being remedied. A conference was called, and a numerous company of Christian Endeavourers came together. Among those present were Rev. C. E. Greig (McAll Mission), Rev. G. Whelpton (Wesleyan), and Pastor Theodore Monod. The result of the gathering was that the old Parisian Committee was enlarged and instructed to form a National Union for France.

Journeying towards Canaan (Num. x. 11-13, 29-36).

Golden Text—Psa. xxxi. 3.

ONE month after the erection of the Tabernacle Moses, by God's command, numbered the people of Israel, omitting the Levites. On the fourteenth day of the same month the feast of the Passover was observed in the wilderness of Sinai (Num. ix. 5), and on the twentieth day of the second month "the cloud was taken up from off the Tabernacle of the testimony," and the silver trumpets (whose "music knew no jarring sound," for they were made each of one whole piece of silver) called the people to form into rank and follow the symbol of Jehovah's guidance.

I.—From Sinai to Paran.

"Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount" (Deut. i. 6). Fresh from a land of idolatry, and for the most part a people born in Egypt, Israel strongly needed (a) the training under which the Lord had placed them at Sinai; (b) the rest from physical labour done during their bondage in Egypt; which also gave leisure for the (c) spiritual teaching which was to profit their souls and prepare them to recognise Him as the Holy Being whom they should exclusively worship; as also to teach them the manner of approach to Him, which he had appointed by the typical sacrifices and offerings; and to seek and follow his guidance in their journey to the land of promise. "Thou art the guide of my youth" (Jer. iii. 4). God's pleading with the young, coupled with His sure promise in Psa. xxxii. 8 and Is. lviii. 11, "guided them on every side" (2 Chron. xxxii. 22).

PARAN.—From one wilderness to another, and that one an arid tract of bare limestone rocks; but wherever God leads is "the right way." The will of the Lord was forward, and "right on into the goodly land" (Deut. i. 6, 7, 10); but Israel was a perverse and crooked generation. By direct route eleven days would have done the journey (Deut. i. 2).

II.—Moses' Invitation to Hobab.

This brother-in-law to Moses probably accompanied his father on his visit to Moses, recorded in Ex. xviii., and remained with Israel when his father returned home. Judges i. 16, iv. 10, affords some reason to think Moses' appeal prevailed. The thought of Moses in v. 31 may have referred to camping in the wilderness, and some of the other daily wants concerning which Hobab was an expert in comparison with the Israelites.

Moses and Hobab had first met probably when Moses received hospitality from Jethro in return for his kindness to the daughters of the priest of Midian (Ex. ii. 18, 21).

The offers of the Gospel are often refused at first, but accepted afterwards. Let us not be weary in well-doing, but press the plea with the tenderness, earnestness, perseverance, and tact of the patriarch when we are trying to win a companion for Christ, remembering all the time that the power to draw a soul into His kingdom is His, and His alone. We may plead how much our friend would be able to accomplish in the Master's service if only the heart was given to Him.

III.—On the March to Canaan.

A journey begun and ended, and hallowed by prayer (vv. 35, 36). If our enemies are God's enemies, then they will be scattered, and we shall come off victorious through Christ (v 31).

The ark and the cloud are both types of Christ, Who has "gone to prepare a place" (John xiv. 2)—symbols of guidance and protection. The cloud by day directed in the way and shielded from the sun. By night it was a protection from wild animals, and gave light over the camp.

When the cloud lifted Israel began to move; the movements of the ark were determined by the cloud by day,

Questions.—1. Where have you come from? Out of the bondage of sin into the glorious liberty of Christ (John viii. 32). 2. Where are you going? To the land of promise (Heb. xi. 10). 3. Do you know the way? (John xiv. 3, 4-6). You may have an infallible Guide (Luke i. 19) "even unto death" (Psa. xlviii. 14) and "unto glory" (Psa. lxxiii. 24). 4. Are you alone? If Jesus is not with you as the Friend of sinners (Pro. xviii. 24) you have grave reason to doubt you are on the King's highway at all. 5. How does the Lord guide His people now in their life journey? By His word (Psa. cxix. 10) and by His spirit (Acts viii. 29, xvi. 6, 7) for the asking (James i. 5, 7).

Reconstruction in China.—The remarkable reconstruction of missionary work in China is evidenced by the fact that the issues of the British and Foreign Bible Society in that Empire during the first five months of 1902 have been 515,936 copies of Scripture, of which 150,000 went out in the first eight days of the year.

WE WILL DO THEE GOOD.

At the time when Cowper was much depressed, he came into contact with John Newton, a man bluff and sincere; and under his care Cowper lost many of his fears. He served as lay curate in the parish of which Newton was vicar, and the two joined in a literary partnership, to which we owe some of the most beautiful hymns in our language. Cowper, in the joy of his new hope in God, went from house to house, cheering the slow-witted villagers, and the companionship of the cheery Newton brought real happiness to the heart of the poet. "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good" (v. 29), said Moses, and the invitation is given to-day by the people of God, to all weary wanderers, to join them on the pilgrimage to the Land of Promise.

WHICH SHALL IT BE?

Hobab hesitated to join Moses, and thought to depart to his own land and to his kindred (v. 30). Many a man has been kept from the Kingdom of God, because he was loath to leave a friendship or a business which could not be harmonized with godliness. Mr. Moody was once approached by a man, who would not become a Christian, as he then should be compelled to drop his soap business. He explained that the soap was advertised to work wonders as a grease eradicator, and it certainly did all that was claimed of it. But the man failed to say that the soap would rot all clothes, and, because of the deception, he dared not become a Christian. God in the heart means God in the business, and in the home as well. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

THE SHARING OF BLESSINGS.

In the year 1573 the citizens of Leydon successfully resisted the attack of the Spaniards, and as a reward the Prince of Orange offered either to exempt the people from certain taxes or as an alternative he proposed to offer them a university. The inhabitants preferred the latter, and thus was founded one of the most famous schools of learning in Europe, and the noble choice of the Dutchmen has proved a blessing to all succeeding generations. The goodness of the Lord was to be extended to Moses' father-in-law (v. 32), and in making our choices in life we often share the advantages possessed by others, and in turn become a blessing, possibly an unexpected blessing, to our own and following generations. Verily no man liveth unto himself.

THE LORD WENT BEFORE THEM.

One of the most dangerous mountains of the Alps, the Weisshorn, has now been roped by a party of guides in order that climbers may, in future, make the ascent in safety. The rope, an inch in thickness, has been riveted to the mountain side, and several climbers have since successfully made the ascent by means of the guidance. Though the rope is found to be encrusted with ice, the rivets are all firm, and a very dangerous pathway is rendered passable for mountainers. It was Jehovah himself who went before to search out a resting place for the Israelites (v. 33). He provided the guiding rope, and undertook to conduct His people to Canaan, the summit of their ambition.

Revival in an Indian Orphanage.—"I received a letter from Miss Adam inviting me to come and hold meetings in Deoghur. A work of God had already begun among the 160 orphans, consisting of native children and girls rescued from the famine. Some forty orphans had yielded their hearts to the Lord Jesus. The meeting on Sunday, through an interpreter, was a blessed time. On Monday morning I spoke to some ninety of the elder orphans. In the after-meeting about twenty-five rose to give themselves to Christ. On the same afternoon we held a meeting for all the young people, and again over twenty stood up to decide for Christ."—Reginald A. Studd, in "Victory in India."

Kindness to Animals.—The children's section of the Humanitarian League has issued an appeal to teachers urging them to include "the lesson of the Humane Treatment of Animals," a subject which is too often neglected altogether in the education of the young. In many instances cruelty is simply due to the thoughtlessness of ignorance, and the need of teaching in regard to the matter is amply evidenced by quotations which have been made in a contemporary from a chronicle, published in connection with Eton College, in which reference is made to certain "sports." "After being hunted for two hours and a half, the hare was seized and torn up by the hounds. They thoroughly deserved blood. . . . One had crawled out of a gate, and entered a public-house, so done that it could not stand, and was caught by some boys. Too bad luck for words." Yet approached by the Humanitarian League, and personally by Lady Dixie, the Head Master declines to interfere with the brutal sport, as to do so would be to "interfere with the liberty which, from time immemorial, the boys have enjoyed in this matter."

The Wesleyan Conference.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

DURING the last week, the pastoral session of the Wesleyan Conference has dealt with many matters concerning ministerial character and work. The president's address at the opening was a thoughtful and suggestive attempt to STRENGTHEN FAITH IN DAYS OF DOUBT.

Professor Banks said there was a close parallel between practical saving faith and intellectual doctrinal faith. Faith was the new principle—almost the new discovery—of the New Testament. There were many degrees of faith, but the Divine blessing was not limited to strong faith. The great point was the genuineness, the sterling character of the faith. Speaking to his younger brethren, the president said if they had faith only as a grain of mustard-seed, it would certainly grow into the faith which could remove mountains. He wondered sometimes at what seemed the comparative ease with which some of his brethren could surrender to the first attacks of doubts and difficulties. There were no earnest believers among them to-day who had not passed through the scathing fires which had left their scars, but amid all the difficulties they held fast to the primeval, essential verities.

Professor Banks remarked that Butler was not very fashionable in these days. Matthew Arnold thought rather lightly of Butler; but what the good Bishop would have thought of Matthew Arnold was another question. The obsolete points in that great master's reasoning were only in matters of detail, while the wonderful view he gave still held in regard to the vastness and complexity of God's government of mankind.

The chief controversies of our day turned upon Scripture, its Divine authority and trustworthiness as a revelation of God to man. The president urged that the result of recent controversies and discussions was distinctly and illustrated his contention by reference to the changed front of rationalism in its treatment of New Testament writers. The older rationalism maintained that the great fundamental doctrines of Christianity were not held and taught by Paul and the Apostles. The most able modern representatives of rationalism admit that Paul does hold the central doctrines of the faith, though they declare that Paul and John are no authorities to them. The gain to the Christian believer was in this, that it was acknowledged by these teachers that Paul's belief was ours. Now it was simply incredible that Paul, who was in such close relationship with Christ and His disciples, could have misunderstood and misinterpreted His meaning on these vital points of Christianity. Thus they reached the conclusion that our doctrinal position was precisely that of the earliest church. The Rationalists also had been compelled to admit that the substance of the fourth Gospel must have come down from apostolic hands. Professor Banks also declared that the

and the uniqueness of its religious teaching, had never been so widely admitted as to-day.

The importance of the Scriptures in their witness to Christ was emphasized. "How can we disintegrate the Scriptures," asked the President, "which tell us about Christ, and yet believe in Him and preach Him as the sinless and infallible teacher we need?" Acknowledging the value of experience in regard to Christian evidence, Professor Banks counselled his brethren to remember that history, and reason, and sound philosophy supported the Christian's faith in Christ as his Saviour. The best teachers and thinkers of all ages had been believers, as they were to-day. Materialism did not hold the field of thought in any European country.

The address closed with a quotation from a German professor, who, speaking of prophecy, said, "There is one thing which utterly refuses every attempt to trace the matter to human reflections, every appeal to natural development; in short, every thought of the evolutionist's theories at present in vogue, and that is prophecy." The abiding value of the Old Testament lay in this, that it guaranteed with absolute certainty the fact of the process of the Divine plan of Salvation, which found fulfilment in the New Covenant in the person and work of Jesus Christ.

Great interest has been taken in the question of the

to the Theological Chair in the Richmond College. Definite objection was raised to Dr. Beet's doctrinal position by Rev. JOHN WILSON, B.A., B.D., who declared that Dr. Beet had published in his book, entitled "The Immortality of the Soul: A Protest," doctrines contrary to the standard of the Methodist Church. A large and representative committee was appointed, which sat during a great part of two days, and patiently investigated the matter. The conclusions of the committee were adopted by the Conference, and the substance of them was as follows: The committee reported that Dr. Beet rejects, as without adequate foundation, the doctrines popularly known as those of Annihilation, Conditional Immortality, Universal Restoration, and Probation after Death; and maintains (a) that though the Holy Scriptures teach that all our souls will survive death for a period to which no limit can be affixed, and that utter, hopeless, and final punishment will overtake the impenitent, they do not assert or assume the essential permanence of the soul, though neither do they deny this; and (b) that while the Scriptures give no ground for hope that the agony of the lost will ever cease, they do not plainly and categorically assert its endless continuance.

The committee found that this teaching fell short of, and contravened, the doctrines held and taught in the Methodist Church. But in regard to the whole case, and in view of the dread solemnity and admitted mystery of the subject, and the necessity of allowing some freedom of opinion upon it, and out of regard to the fidelity of Dr. Beet to our general system of doctrine, the committee recommended that the Conference take no further step in the matter, on condition that Dr. Beet does not teach in our pulpits the doctrine of his book. The Conference confirmed these findings, and added another condition, viz., that Dr. Beet should publish nothing further on the subject except with the consent of the Conference. To these conditions Dr. Beet voluntarily agreed.

Then followed the question of the theological professorship. The names sent forward by the Representative Session were Rev. T. F. Lockyer, B.A., Dr. Beet, and Rev. F. Platt, M.A. It was stated that Dr. Beet never had taught his particular views on eternal punishment in the class-room, and would follow the same course if re-appointed. The result of the vote was that Dr. Beet was re-elected to the theological chair, Mr. Lockyer receiving 235 votes, and Dr. Beet 329. Thus ended one of the most troublesome questions of controversy of recent years. The result practically is that the Conference reasserted its loyalty to the orthodox doctrine of eternal punishment, tolerated Dr. Beet's doubts on the question as a private opinion, but refused permission to teach or preach them.

Considerable discussion took place on the raising of the

on the part of candidates for the ministry. It was feared by some brethren lest in making an appeal to young men of promise, especially those who had had the advantages of a higher education, the Conference was in danger of holding out inducements to men to enter the ministry as a profession. Rev. Samuel Chadwick, for example, urged that such a step would be a dangerous departure from their old methods. He believed in the call of God the Holy Ghost, and if that were not sufficient to bring men to see their duty they would gain nothing in the efficiency of the ministry by the method suggested. This year ninety-eight young men were accepted as candidates for the ministry; but still the demands and the extension of the work at home and abroad outstrip the supply of men of gifts and grace and fruit.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

ON the occasion on Thursday last of the annual meeting of the Alford and District Temperance Association Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. HENRY met in conference at an afternoon representative meeting the local Christian total abstainers, including ladies associated with the B.W.T.A. He dealt with the Christian aspect of the drink problem, showing how great would be the dishonour both to the Church and to Christ if, as Christian people, we failed to take the lead in the solution of a great problem of this nature, emphasizing the thought that the time has come when the Christian Churches must provide better leadership and better organization, as well as adopt better methods, if the cause is to be successful. Dr. Henry's address was followed by a series of questions on the part of the ladies and gentlemen present, which added interest to the occasion, and supplied Dr. Henry with special points for the subsequent address in the evening, when, before a large audience, a comparison was made between the situation in America and in Britain with reference to Temperance Reform, and an indication given of the lines along which a community like that of Alford and district could carry forward a successful campaign against the traffic in strong drink. Dr. Henry not only met with a hearty reception, but so highly did the friends appreciate his advocacy that arrangements were at once begun for another visit to be paid at the earliest possible date.

EDINBURGH CASTLE, E.

On Lord's Day last, morning, afternoon, and evening, Dr. Henry conducted services with much acceptance at Dr. Barnardo's popular mission church, "The Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E. In view of the effect created by former visits from Dr. Henry, it was no surprise to find that the gatherings were very largely attended. In the afternoon there was a united P.S.A. meeting, when the audience was estimated at close upon two thousand persons. Each service was, as usual, characterized by absorbed attention on the part of the hearers, as with burning force and conviction Dr. Henry enlarged upon the great subject of Gospel Temperance, and set forth the claims of the Lord Jesus Christ to the hearts and service of mankind.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Aug. 1-30, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; Aug. 31, Lincoln; Sept. 4, Louth; 6-9, Taunton; 10, 11, Newport, Mon.; 12-14, Taunton; 15, 16, Llanelly; 18, 19, Dunfermline; 21, Free St. George's, Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Bible Crowns.

AN OUTLINE "CORONATION" BIBLE STUDY.

"The Holy Crown," or sign of consecration on the High Priest (Lev. viii. 9).

"The Crown of Glory and Honour" (Psa. viii. 5). The possible possession of all men made in "God's Image."

The Crowns of Goodness and Loving-Kindness (Psa. lxv. 11; ciii. 4). On nature and man.

The Crown of Virtuous Womanhood (Pro. xii. 4).

The Crown of Righteous Age (Pro. xvi. 31; 2 Tim. iv. 8).

The Crown of Children's Children (Pro. xvii. 6).

God Himself a Crown (Isa. xxviii. 5).

God's People His Crown (Isa. lxii. 3).

"Corruptible Crowns"—rewarding earthly strife (1 Cor. ix. 25).

"Unfading Crowns"—crowning immortal life (1 Pet. v. 4).

Undying Crowns—souls won for Christ our King (Phil. iv. 1).

Eternal Crowns—before God's throne to fling (James i. 12; Rev. ii. 10, iv. 4, 10; Rev. iii. 11; Heb. ii. 9).

C. MAUD BATTERSBY.

"One by One" Meeting at Keswick.

At the close of the Keswick Convention a meeting was held in the Victoria Hall to set forth the "One by One" method of soul-winning. The hall was crowded and many were unable to gain admission. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and with Scriptural illustrations urged the value of individual effort.

Rev. R. Middleton, the author of the "Experiences of a Country Curate," stated that from the first hour of his conversion as a youth he had been working upon the "One by One" method. The first one he led to Christ was his own father, and since that time, by definite prayer and persistent earnest personal effort, he had rejoiced over many others, and gave instances of how some of the most difficult persons had been reached and won for Christ. He said some had written him doubting the facts given in the "Experiences of a Country Curate,"* but every case was real, and, instead of being over-stated, much more could have been told; and he was glad to know that those spoken of were standing true to-day. A short time ago, when preaching in a distant town, a prosperous tradesman came to him to express gratitude for the help he had given; and he found that he was the coachman whose story was told in that little book.

Mr. T. Hogben followed. He said the One by One plan was not complex and difficult, but clear and plain; so easy that the young, the invalid, the infirm, and the aged, who love Christ, can follow it with success; while the strongest and most robust Christian must work upon these lines to maintain effective service. The One by One method has two hands; with one it takes hold on God, with the other it takes hold of sinners. Those who follow it dwell with the King to speak to him for lost sinners, and dwell with sinners to speak to them for the King. It differs from ordinary service in this—believing prayer is focussed upon individuals, and direct personal effort follows to lead them to Christ.

METHOD AND RESULTS.

The band embraces members of all the different sections of the Christian Church who are united for one purpose—to save the lost; and thus it makes for the fulfilment of Christ's last prayer, "that they may all be one." Each member is a real help to every other member, by daily prayer that each and all may be filled with the Holy Ghost. Then as answers come for those prayed for, notes of praise are recorded to glorify God and to inspire faith and confidence in His people. The working of the method was shown by various illustrations from the experience of ministers and Christians of various ages and stations in life.

One was that of a minister who, in the spring of 1901, entered in his Throne of Grace book from time to time the names of several of his young people. Among these, in the early part of this year, the Lord graciously began a work, and one after another was brought into the fold. Another illustration showed how an invalid, who was a great sufferer in his own bedroom during five years, rejoiced over more than eighty whom he led to Christ.

Again he told of a lady in London who was co-operating with her friend, a missionary in China, and received from that far-off land names of such as the missionary was praying for and working with, and during one year seven such were brought out of the bondage of heathenism to Christ. By such illustrations we believe many were inspired to go from Keswick confidently hoping to return next year praising God that they too had had the joy of harvest.

We understand that Mr. Hogben purposes to go from place to place conducting three days' prayer missions, to lead God's people to live, pray, and work for a glorious revival. Full information respecting the One by One Working Band will be sent from the "Welcome Mission," Portsmouth, on receipt of two penny stamps.

Foreigners in England.

THE fortieth anniversary meeting of the French Reformed Evangelical Church in Bayswater, and of the mission work connected with it, was held a few days ago in the beautiful grounds of Grove House, Regent's Park, by kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Greer. The report was read by Pasteur Du Pontet-de La Harpe, the founder of the church and the superintendent of its mission-work. It was permeated with a thankful, cheerful, hopeful tone, and rightly so, to judge from the account given of the work done and of the gratifying results obtained.

Congregations made up of all sorts and conditions of men, from many lands, meet Sunday after Sunday in the church at Bayswater, to hear from pastors, missionaries, and laymen from all faithful sections of the Christian Church in French-speaking lands, the glorious Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, by which they all can be saved. Occasionally British friends, like Lord Radstock and others, lend valued co-operation and occupy the pulpit.

Undoubtedly, next to the church, the most interesting, important, and hopeful branch of the Mission is the schools—upper, day, infant, and Sunday-school; 1,346 foreign boys and girls were educated here during the twenty-five past years; 185 attended during the past year. The present number could easily be doubled, if funds permitted. Sometimes as many as six children have been refused admission in a week for want of accommodation. Most of the boys and girls seem to settle down in after-life in Great Britain and the Colonies, where they prove useful members of the community, and become

MORE BRITISH THAN THE BRITONS.

During the year 242 governesses availed themselves of the Home Bienvenue; at the Société Protestante Française de Placement 297 foreign servant-girls registered their names; 571 families applied at these two institutions for foreigners. The Y.M.C.A. continues its hopeful, healthful work, with all the entrain of youth meeting weekly for recreation, prayer, and the study of God's Word, and lending a useful co-operation to the general mission work. The evangelization of the quartier Français round Fitzroy Square, including services and house-to-house visiting, was carried on with unabated vigour.

The Country Air Mission, the Window Gardening Mission, the Zambezia Society, which keeps people in touch with the Coillard Mission in South Africa, and many other minor but for all that not less useful and needed agencies, are carried on with unflagging zest. Nor have they been in vain. Many are the instances in which the workers have been cheered by finding that they had not cast their bread for nought on the mighty stream of foreigners which flows ceaselessly through the Metropolis.

Two dark spots though were pointed out by the report:—The Medical Mission remains closed for lack of funds; the general subscriptions and donations for the year were £414 less than the previous year, with the result that on March 31 last a sum of £645 was wanted to balance accounts. "The situation is serious," says the report; "but we are neither dismayed nor disheartened. This is not a call to curtail anything; it is a call to Christians to rise to the emergency of the times in zeal, in love, in prayer, in faith, and in self-denial for the sake of Christ and of our fellow-men."

Stirring and instructive addresses were delivered by Dr. J. H. Gladstone, F.R.S. (who presided), Revs. J. M. H. Goodman, Herbert C. J. Marston, and E. A. Stuart, Messrs. D. J. Anderson and Carteret F. Collins, and Captain the Hon. C. Hobart-Hampden.

Bible Work in Japan.—Mr. A. Lawrence, a sub-agent in Japan, has been devoting part of his energy to careful training of four Japanese colporteurs, whom he schooled in those methods of sale which he has himself found so successful. One of these men has made a five months' journey, and has sold no fewer than 9,800 copies of Scripture.

Dr. Baedeker's Movements.

I HAVE only just come home from the continent of Europe, having spent six weeks in Norway and Baltic provinces, and thence going to Austria-Hungary for a very short visit. Some days spent with the Slovaks at O'Tura and Vag Ujhely in Hungary were made a blessing to many of the strong men by bringing them to the feet of Jesus as the Saviour they need. On Lord's Day, July 20, we experienced a feast of a Spirit's outpuring, and on Monday we left for Vienna. On Monday evening O'Tura was flooded by a heavy shower of rain, which inundated the place and did much damage, the dear sisters Roy having their own house flooded, and in the orphanage they have begun a part of the building was washed away by the water; the children's lives were saved, although four of them were missed and at last found and rescued.

A TIMELY GIFT.

The sisters were on the point of making known their sad condition by writing an appeal for help in their little Slovakish paper, which they publish for instruction and edification, when a gift of 200 roubles was sent to them from a servant of God in South Russia, who felt constrained just then to send this gift to them, not knowing that they so urgently wanted help at the very time. So they will not now remind their brethren of their need, but they praise God who is mindful of them even before they ask or make known their wants. Hallelujah!

They are poor, but they are making many rich! Very feeble, but strong in the Lord! Giving glory to God!

At Laurvik, in Norway, God gave great blessing with the Gospel during the annual conference, where over 3,000 people were assembled in the open air under the beech trees. No sooner had we left the place, than an alarm was sounded, a fire broke out and a conflagration burned 170 houses, rendering 2,000 people homeless! Forget not all His benefits! To do good and to communicate forget not.

Obituary.

BISHOP WILLIAM WALSH.

THERE passed away on Wednesday week at Shankill, county Dublin, the Right Rev. William Pakenham Walsh, in his eighty-third year. Dr. Walsh was ordained in 1843 to the curacy of Avoca. He was afterwards incumbent of Sandford Church, Dublin, Dean of Cashel, and Canon of Christ Church Cathedral. In 1878 he was elected to the Bishopric of Ossory, and held that office until 1897, when he retired owing to advancing years, and was succeeded by Dr. Crozier, the present Bishop. Dr. Walsh, who was Donnellan lecturer in Trinity College in 1861, was the author of several religious and learned works, including "Ancient Monuments and Holy Writ," "Heroes of the Mission Field," "The Decalogue of Charity," and "The Voices of the Psalms."

MISS ROSE BENN.

That devoted servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, Miss Rose Benn, passed to her rest on on July 18. She was much beloved, particularly among the poorer classes, to whom she ministered with tenderness and sympathy. Miss Benn was well known as an honorary worker in connection with the Tower Hamlets Mission (Mr. F. N. Charrington's). Many will esteem her, too, for her efforts on behalf of tired workers needing rest; for these she maintained a "cosy corner" at Hailsham, Sussex. The departed lady also influenced a wide circle by her writings, particularly by her poems (some of which have appeared in our columns). Her remains were followed to the grave by large numbers of friends and neighbours, who, as they walked, sang some of her favourite hymns.

Evangelists at Work.

Rev. E. P. Hammond in New York.

DESCRIBING a recent mission at New York city, Rev. E. Payson Hammond writes:—"I am thankful to the Lord for the power of His workings which He has permitted me to see during the last fall, winter, and spring. I am only recently back from New York, where we have seen hundreds, of various ages, flocking to the Saviour."

Mr. Hugh Paton in Queensland.

Cheering tidings are arriving by every mail of the work of the above evangelist in the most distant Australian State. He had a warm welcome from the Scotch churches in Brisbane, and missions in Park and Thompson Estate Churches were arranged, resulting in much blessing. Leaving Brisbane for the North, he commenced in a country district, with reference to which he writes: "God is wonderfully answering prayer. Each mission seems better than another. We are in the midst of a revival in this country district. We had a great break on the second night. About twenty marched into the vestry. Seven of them were among the finest fellows in the neighbourhood. People are riding and driving eight miles to the meetings."

Tent Campaign in Dorset and Wilts.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith, Evangelization Society, is now conducting his fifth consecutive summer Tent Mission in the counties of Dorset and Wilts. Time has tested the character of the work done by the evangelist on previous occasions, and proved much of it to be permanent. God has not only blessed His word through the mouth of His servant to the salvation of souls, but has graciously sustained and established the work in the lives of many who are now earnest workers for the Lord. The services at Nunney, where the tent is now erected, are being, as at other places, well attended; and the earnest, outspoken, and Scriptural appeals of the evangelist are proving a means of salvation and blessing. R. M.

Tent Mission at Ballyclare.

During the month of July Mr. William Hill conducted a tent mission in the town of Ballyclare. The Wesleyan ministers gave active help. There were generally large gatherings afternoon and evening on each Sabbath, many coming from distances of seven and eight miles, and while the week-night attendances were smaller by reason of its being the time of hay-harvest, those who came were amply rewarded by the blessing received. Mr. Hill preached in two of the churches during the visit, and was greatly appreciated. The closing night of the mission was a memorable time when, after a number had yielded themselves to the Lord, many testified to blessing received during the mission. So manifest was the Lord's working that it was generally felt that there might have been a widespread work of grace could the mission have continued longer, but this was not possible, owing to the tent being wanted elsewhere.

The Boy Preacher at Blackpool.

A Gospel Mission is now progressing in Blackpool under the ministry of Mr. Jack Cooke, the "Boy Preacher," and his coadjutor, Rev. J. Russell Coutts.

The promoters of the Mission, in arranging for it at this midsummer time, aimed specially at reaching and benefiting the vast crowds that constantly assemble from various parts to Blackpool, attracted thither by the bracing sea air, the fine sea views, and the many facilities for rest and recreation furnished by this seaside resort. The resident population are, at such a time, necessarily engaged very fully in caring for the visitors; but it is hoped, nevertheless, that much permanent benefit will accrue to them also from the mission.

During the week nights, from July 14 to 19, preparatory union meetings were held, in turn, in the Baptist, Congregational, Methodist, and Wesleyan churches, and in the room of the Y.M.C.A. Prayer, praise, and short sermons were the exercises in these gathering; and despite the preoccupation incident to the height of the season in a great pleasure resort, considerable expectancy and spiritual interest, in relation to the work, were developed.

On Sunday, July 20, Mr. Cooke preached morning, afternoon, and night to audiences each numbering fully 4,500 people, that packed the Alhambra Theatre to its utmost capacity. On Sunday, the 27th, the circus of the Alhambra had also to be used for large overflow meetings.

On the week nights, united meetings are held in the Abingdon Street Baptist Church, which is invariably filled. The mission was to close on Sunday last, with three services in the theatre and three in the circus.

The good order and seriousness of the crowds attending the meetings are noticeable and gratifying. While a large proportion of the audiences are professedly Christian people, there are also great numbers of unsaved persons, many of whom do not ordinarily attend Christian worship. As yet it would be premature to reckon the number of the converts; but it is safe to say that a good work of large extent has been done. Many Christians profess to be spiritually quickened, and a large number of souls, hitherto unsaved, profess to have found salvation in Christ.

Philos.

Tent meetings conducted at Belton, near Uppingham, by Mr. F. Chapman, of the Evangelization Society, have aroused much attention. People have walked in from places miles distant in order to hear the message, and the tent has been crowded out on Sunday nights. While there, several anxious souls were pointed to Christ.

Mr. S. Bradfield, evangelist in charge of the "Bishop Hooper" Protestant Van, has been holding a mission in the parish of Brockworth, near Gloucester. He also attended a Sunday morning service at the local church, and at the conclusion went into the vestry and entered a respectful protest against the ritualistic proceedings of the vicar.

A very encouraging eight days' mission has just been concluded at New England, Peterborough, in connection with the Railway Mission, by Mr. R. Keeton, of Peterborough. The Great Northern Railway Company's houses and works were visited, and meetings held in the smith's shop and mess-room by the missioner. W. Hill, Superintendent.

The eighth annual visit of Rev. H. Powers, D.D., to Saltcoats has proved so fruitful that the evangelist has been pressed to continue his work among the children and adults on the shore. Dr. Powers, with his wife, son, and daughter, is therefore remaining until August 21. The services will be divided between Saltcoats and Ardrossan. Great crowds gather three times daily. Last Sunday night between 1,500 and 2,000 persons attended the Gospel service. Christian workers from all parts of Scotland are taking part in the meetings, and hundreds of people are being blessed.

Evangelists' Engagements.

 This column is intended for Missions of some days' duration, not for engagements of a single day. The evangelists ask prayer for their respective missions.

Requests for Prayer.

For a tent mission at Billsdon, Leicestershire, by Mr. F. Chapman, of the Evangelization Society.

For blessing on a ten days' mission at High Wycombe, among the men employed on the new railway works, conducted by Mr. W. H. Holt, of the Navvy Mission Society, commencing August 9.

The Working of Faith.—Right faith is a thing wrought by the Holy Ghost in us, which changes us, turns us into a new nature, and begets us anew in God, and makes us the sons of God, as thou readest in the first of John, and kills the old Adam, and makes us altogether new in the heart, mind, will, desire, and in all other affections and powers of the soul, the Holy Ghost ever accompanying her and ruling the heart. Faith is a lively thing, mighty in working, valiant, and strong, ever doing, ever fruitful, so that it is impossible that he who is endued therewith should not work always good works without ceasing. He asks not whether good works are to be done or not, but has done them already, ere mention be made of them, and is always doing, for such is his nature, for quick faith in his heart, and lively moving of the Spirit, drive and stir him hereunto.—William Tyndale.

About Books.

THE EMPHASISED BIBLE.

WE were among those who encouraged Mr. Rotherham to follow his "Emphasised New Testament" with a version of the Old Testament made on similar principles; and we are glad now to be in a position to congratulate him upon the approaching completion of his great undertaking. There lies before us Vol. II. of The Emphasised Bible, and the concluding division is reported "in the press." The title-page prepares one for a book of no ordinary kind when it describes the work as: "A New Translation, designed to set forth the exact meaning, the proper terminology, and the graphic style of the sacred originals; arranged to show at a glance narrative, speech, parallelism, and logical analysis, also to enable the student readily to distinguish the several Divine names; and emphasized throughout after the idioms of the Hebrew and Greek tongues. With expository introduction, select references, and appendices of notes." By Joseph Bryant Rotherham. (8s. each vol. H. R. Allenson.)

The work is unlike any other. With plans of his own, Mr. Rotherham set himself to produce what other scholars had hoped for, but had not the initiative to attempt, the courage to achieve. Already three-fourths of the entire Scriptures are in our hands as prepared by this devoted man, and we look forward to the time when the completed work will occupy a place of distinct value in the study of the theologian as well as the less critical Christian scholar.

The Second Volume contains—1 Samuel to the end of the Book of Psalms, and is therefore a specially important section of the work. We have examined the pages with much satisfaction. The graphic arrangement and the method of emphasis add greatly to the interest of Job and the Psalms. Many familiar passages have a new message for the ordinary reader. The scholar will know the reasons that lie behind the forms of expression, and in many cases will be led to wonder why the simple and obvious sense of the original has so long been overlain and denied the English reader. Another fact: Mr. Rotherham is a translator—not an expositor; yet, again and again his setting forth of a passage, with possibly a note of two lines, is worth more to the student than the long and wordy explanations of commentators who are not sure of their ground, or have not made up their minds on critical points.

A feature of special importance is the adjustment of the version to the newly revised Massoretio-Critical text of Dr. Ginsburg; the assured emendations of this most valuable Hebrew Bible find judicious representation in this English work—and of no other version of the Old Testament can the same be said. At the end of the Second Volume there is a Special Note on the Psalms, in which much that is helpful as well as beautiful is said regarding the external features and essential characteristics of that portion of Holy Writ. Every page of this translation testifies to Mr. Rotherham's discernment no less than to his scholarship, also to his honesty and candour, to his industry and literary insight.

Rev. Dr. J. Paterson Smyth has enriched the "Bible for the Young" series for schools and families with Joshua and the Judges. (1s. 6d. Sampson Low.) The treatment is fresh and suggestive.

Wings Celestial, and other poems. By Charlotte Murray, Grace and S. Pennell, Annie Gregory, and others. (1s. Kaufmann.) There are beautiful verses in these pages. The title is furnished by the opening poem, by Miss Murray.

The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges is becoming a considerable library. The Song of Solomon is now included, as edited with introduction and notes by Principal Andrew Harper, D.D. (1s. 6d. Cambridge University Press.) Students will find the pages of special service.

The Names of God have formed text and subject for many expositions of revealed truth. We know nothing, however, to compare, in point of fulness and eloquence, with The Titles of Jehovah: A Course of Sermons. By Prebendary H. W. Webb Peploe. (2s. 6d. Nisbet.) Nine in number, these discourses present teachings that are as practical in application as they are profound in doctrinal relation.

During a long period of years Mrs. Brightwen, the well-known naturalist, has been collecting Oriental curios and objects named in Holy Scripture. She gives pictures of them, and tells their interesting story in a book, entitled Side-Lights on the Bible. (2s. Religious Tract Society.) Many passages of God's Word are made plain by the lucid descriptions here given of natural objects and social customs, and other Eastern things and ways of life.

The story of the life of Andrew Byers (Langholm) told in A Bright Border Sunset (6d. Brodie and Saimond, Arbroath), by George McRobert, is an attractive memoir, which will be lovingly cherished among Christian workers in the Scottish border counties. Mr. Byers was one of those who combine with diligence in business that fervency of spirit in the service of the Lord which marks out the truly consecrated life.

Two critical essays that will be welcomed by art lovers are Rossetti and Rembrandt. (2s. 6d. each. Duckworth & Co.) Each volume contains a long series of illustrations of the work of its subject, produced in most satisfactory fashion; while the letterpress will give to the uninitiated a guide to the understanding of pictures by these masters, and at the same time add to the knowledge of the majority of even those who are specially informed on the subject.

Aids to Practical Religion. Selections from the writings of W. Boyd Carpenter, D.D., Bishop of Ripon. Edited by Rev. J. H. Burn, B.D. (3s. 6d. Cassells.) The Bishop has himself contributed an interesting preface, and the contents include a considerable proportion of material which has never before appeared in book form. The volume is further enriched by the insertion of several of the Bishop's most beautiful poems. Printed in bold, clear type, the book will be found especially suitable for the use of aged persons and invalids.

In the journey to the Antipodes with Rev. J. G. Greenhough, undertaken in his year of the presidency of the National Free Church Council, a widespread interest was taken throughout the country. His route has been often trodden and described; but the impressions of an observant traveller are ever fresh, and Towards the Sunrising (2s. 6d. net. A. H. Stockwell) has a distinct value for all who are interested in present discussions of the relations of the Colonies to the Mother Country. The brightly-written chapters are characteristic of the author—shrewd and farseeing, yet kindly and modest.

In 1876 Mr. Ned Weeks, a popular evangelist, visited Northampton for a seven days mission in connection with Gospel services that were being held in an old circus. He stayed on, however, for the remainder of his life, labouring, until the home call came in 1899, with much acceptance, and building up a splendid cause. His life story, Ned Weeks, of Northampton, written by his friend, Mr. Barry Wake, gives a vivid pourtrayal of the character and work of this rugged but devout missioner to the working classes. The book is embellished with illustrations and a capital portrait. (1s. Passmore & Alabaster.)

That the Resurrection of our Lord is the central fact of our Christian belief has been emphasized in the Apostolic and every succeeding age; yet the tendency even among believers is to meditate not too much but too little thereon. There are very many by whom The Glory and Joy of the Resurrection (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) by Rev. Dr. James Paton (Glasgow), will be welcomed as a guide in such a thorough study of the subject as will, we believe, be unto edification and growth in grace. In seven sections the place and value of the Resurrection in the New Testament are exhaustively examined, and the fact clearly brought out that the Rising of the Lord is the dominant note in the minds of all the writers. The book deserves a warm welcome in any Christian family. The Person of Christ will become more real to the prayerful reader, and the coming King a greater power in the life.

Amid the constant attacks made on the Bible and Christian belief, the faith of the timid and fearful is strengthened by the calmness of those whose moorings have a firm hold within the veil; and such a book as The Integrity of Scripture (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), by Rev. Dr. John Smith, will fill a useful place in any Christian congregation. This is not the expression of any hasty consideration or conclusions, but a statement of the ripe judgment of a devout and earnest student. As a class-fellow of Professor Robertson Smith, the author was early brought into touch with the methods and point of view of the destructive critics, and that too in one whom he was predisposed to admire. But other and deeper influences were at work, and "even at the beginning the conviction that the startling phenomenon of the Higher Criticism was a new departure, from which there was no safe issue but in return, took full possession of the writer's mind. And as events developed, the instinctive judgment became a reasoned belief." The chapters were originally lectures to Dr. Smith's congregation, and were then published serially before being gathered together in the present form. Point by point the new teaching is tested in the light of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself, and found wanting. We warmly commend the book as a valuable addition to the discussion of the Christian evidences, and as a re-statement in the language of the people of the orthodox belief.

Consecration and Sanctification is a helpful work by Commander B. H. Key, R.N. (1d. W. E. Stride, 3 and 5, Strand, East Southsea.) Being in the form of an envelope booklet, the message will find many readers.

Church of England.

The Simeon trustees have conferred the vicarage of St. Edmund's, Whalley Range, vacant by the death of the late Rev. H. Woods Tindall, on Rev. Noel Lake Aspinall, vicar of Holy Trinity, Chesterfield.

The annual report of Holy Trinity, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C. (Rev. J. L. Evans, M.A., vicar), gives, as outstanding difficulties of the district, "the long hours of work, the immoral state of the streets, and the drinking habits of the women." Aggressive operations are maintained, in addition to the regular services, by street preaching, visitation, lodging-house services, a mission among the poorest, Bible classes, temperance meetings, and many other forms of religious and social ministry.

Archdeacon Sinclair was present at the official opening of the old graveyard of St. Botolph, Billingsgate, opposite Billingsgate Market, for the purpose of open-air addresses. In declaring the ground open, he said that Rev. Wilson Carlile (of the Church Army), Incumbent of the parish, was doing nothing unusual in deciding to use the graveyard for open-air services. One of the advantages of open-air services is that earnest and good laymen can there uplift their voices in testimony to God.

At the consecration of Shaldon Church the Bishop of Exeter said he had been told he ought not to recognise the adornment of the building by personally consecrating it. Although he should continue to be the friend and brother of the clergy so long as they were faithful to the law, he had been obliged to decline to consecrate the church until a written engagement had been signed by the clergy and wardens that certain illegal things, including the stone altars, should be removed without delay.

Rev. W. Odom, vicar of Heeley, Sheffield, writes in his parish magazine: "Some of us have thought that Englishmen had become too enlightened to give any encouragement to the system, founded on a gross superstition, called Mormonism. Be this so or not, it is a fact that Mormon elders have been visiting some of our parishioners, seeking to proselytize—more especially among women and servants. I may shortly have more to say on a system which has been described as one in which 'simple faith, gross materialism, fantastic and blasphemous theories, and the greatest sensuality are combined.' I hope, however, that in Heeley our people have too much common-sense to listen to false apostles."

The Church Missionary Society is asking its friends to observe Tuesday, September 30, or other convenient day falling in the same week, as a day of intercession. The circular of invitation says:—"Never was the need for prayer greater; because never were the openings for work more numerous and more promising, and the demands for funds and living agents more urgent. The Katikiro of Uganda recently pleaded for 200 workers, and he is receiving two. A missionary, lately home from India, speaks of 'scores of villages' that might be won for Christ immediately if the men were there to do it. If our 1,000 Church Missionary Society's missionaries could be doubled at once in numbers, the mission field could easily absorb every one of them."

Congregational.

Rev. Dr. Caleb Scott, who is now staying at Crieff, N.B., hopes to be restored to health in time to preside at the forthcoming Glasgow meetings of the Congregational Union.

By the will of the late Miss Esther Spear Mann, of St. Leonards-on-Sea, the Women's Settlement, Canning Town, E., receives a bequest of £300 and the Congregational Chapel, Moreton-in-Marsh, one of £500.

A remarkable Congregational movement in Exeter, in which the Mayor of the city (Mr. A. E. Dunn, J.P.) takes a very active interest, has reached a new stage of progress by the opening of a third mission church in one of the worst districts of the city.

Rev. D. Foulkes Roberts, of Exeter, lately conducted Divine service and delivered an address on "Spiritual Power" from the Speaker's desk in the Swedish House of Parliament, at Stockholm, in connection with the visit to that city of British Good Templars.

A special effort has been made in connection with Carr's Lane Church, Birmingham, to increase the number of subscribers to the London Missionary Society. Rev. J. H. Jowett preached a powerful sermon, and a special canvas of the church members and seatholders was made by fifty ladies and gentlemen, with the result of about 150 new names being added to the subscription list, and many old subscribers increasing ten to twenty per cent.

Baptist.

The services at Highgate Road Baptist Chapel will be conducted during August by Rev. John Urquhart, of "The New Biblical Guide." Mr. Urquhart takes for his morning subjects special aspects of Christ set forth in the four Gospels.

On Thursday last a "welcome home" was given to Rev. A. Tildsley, at the Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle, Brunswick Road, E. The church continues to be, in the words of a correspondent, "a beehive of activity in the neighbourhood."

The church at Wellington, Somerset, has just been celebrating the first anniversary of the settlement of Rev. Sydney J. Jones. Earnest addresses were given by Mr. Charles Baker, Mr. W. D. Haddon, and Rev. W. Owen (assistant pastor), and fitting tributes were paid to the devoted service rendered to the church and people by the pastor during his first year among them.

Methodist.

The new Primitive Methodist church at Whitby will cost about £4,000. The Church Extension Fund has promised to meet the interest on £1,000 for ten years.

In the recent great effort put forth by Southend Wesleyans the sum of £727 was raised for chapel extension and new schools. Sir Horace Brooks Marshall presided.

The ordination service in connection with the Wesleyan Conference, took place at Gravel Lane Wesleyan Church, Manchester, on Monday last. Rev. Dr. W. T. Davison, ex-president, delivered the charge.

The old Primitive Methodist church at Cradley Heath, on which there was a debt of £450, has fallen into ruins through the working of the mines. The £450 has now been raised, and £900 secured for a new building. The new scheme will cost £3,000, and the Church Extension Fund will render assistance.

The recent quinquennial canvass and temperance census in the Free Methodist Churches has had very gratifying results. In connection with it 106 officers, 571 teachers, and 13,864 scholars signed the pledge. The result of three of these canvasses has been an addition of nearly 50,000 new pledges to the already splendid muster roll.

Commenting on the inaugural address of the new President of the Wesleyan Conference, the Methodist Times, upholding Prof. Banks in his emphasis of the evangelistic side of preaching, remarks:—"We greatly resent the deadly delusion that the 'soul-converting power' belongs more to missions than to circuits, or to missioners than to circuit ministers. There is nothing in Scripture, history, or reason to justify that fatal distinction. We do not deny—we have, on the contrary, asserted—that some men are specially gifted in evangelistic work, and some men are obviously called to be evangelists or prophets in the New Testament and Apostolical sense. But our special point to-day is that, in some degree, all our ministers should be of this class."

Presbyterian.

During Rev. R. E. Welsh's absence in Canada, the St. George's congregation, Brondesbury, N.W., is raising £600 for alteration and enlargement of the church premises.

The new church lately commenced in the Stanhope Road Board School, South Shields, continues to make very satisfactory progress. At the last communion twenty-two new members were admitted, the number on the roll now being 209, and of these over 160 partook of the Lord's Supper on a recent Sunday evening. The Sunday-school is increasing correspondingly, while the finances are all that could be desired. The Newcastle Presbytery, at its last meeting, gave the congregation power to close with the offer of a site, and buildings will be begun as soon as possible.

The third anniversary of the young cause at Brighton Avenue, Gateshead, was held recently, when the Moderator of Synod, Rev. A. H. Drysdale, M.A., preached to good congregations, taking for his text in the morning, John xv. 1, "I am the true vine, and My Father is the husbandman;" and in the evening from Rev. i. 5-6, "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father, to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever"; from which he preached well-reasoned and stirring addresses which were much appreciated. The Moderator expressed himself well pleased with the life and vigour shown by the cause, which gives promise of great usefulness.

Society of Friends.

At the Sussex, Surrey, and Hants quarterly meeting, Joseph Gundry Alexander returned the minute granted him for service in the Vaudois Valleys, Switzerland, Belgium, and France, and gave an interesting account of the Protestants among whom he had been called to labour, and their upholding of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. They have acted as true missionaries, as they have moved about in the world, and have carried the Gospel into many places, and especially to America.

William and Susan T. Thompson recently attended Tottenham meeting, and also the mission meeting in the evening, and had good service there. They have received word from New England that there is no occasion for them to pay the visit which they had in prospect to Syria at present. After leaving Southampton they therefore expect to return to Ireland to resume their service there, and to remain there till after the holding of the Ulster quarterly meeting, when they hope to continue their visits in England.

Salvation Army.

The Lord Mayor of Birmingham will open a new Army citadel at Small Heath, Birmingham, next month. A fifth corps is to be opened in Dublin.

Several hotel proprietors in Seattle, U.S.A., have promised to meet the rent of a Rescue Home in that city, for one year, if the Army will furnish and control it.

The Army's officers at Marseilles, where open-air meetings are not permitted, have obtained from the authorities a special license allowing them to hold singing meetings in the streets. Good work is also being carried on through the visitation of brothels in the lowest parts of the town, although the police authorities urged the officers not to undertake the work, on account of the possibility of their encountering personal violence.

A Californian publican, who objected to the Army conducting open-air meetings outside his house, turned the hose upon the gathering, drenching not only the soldiers, but two by-standers, who were warm friends of the Army's work. The latter entered into negotiations with the proprietors of the block of buildings in which the saloon was situated, purchased it, and subsequently ejected the saloon keeper, handing the property over to the Army.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. S. R. Durrant, of Walton, Ipswich. He joined the Baptist Church at Walton in the year 1843, and has been connected with the same church ever since, excepting for short periods when he resided elsewhere. He also acted as deacon and treasurer respectively.—The oldest member of the Society of Friends in East Anglia, Mr. Francis Dix, of Norwich, in his eighty-ninth year. He was a familiar figure in the city, and wore the Quaker garb until the last.—Camden Road Presbyterian Church, London, N., has suffered a great loss in the death of Mr. John G. Murdoch, of Huntingtower, Camden Square, at the age of seventy-one. Mr. Murdoch was an enthusiastic temperance worker, and a most generous giver to Christian causes.

Dr. Barnardo is now in Germany undergoing further treatment for the affection of the heart from which he has been suffering. Communications addressed to him at Stepney Causeway will be opened during his absence and dealt with. Matters of a strictly private or personal character that are so marked on the outside, will be held over unopened until Dr. Barnardo returns; but in that case correspondents cannot expect any acknowledgment until after the 15th September.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott, to Saturday, August 2, 1902.

 All amounts received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott for charitable purposes are remitted WITHOUT ANY DEDUCTION WHATEVER to the institutions for which the gifts are sent.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

THE Association newly formed at Buenos Aires has been publicly opened with much enthusiasm. Mr. A. Carnegie-Ross is the first president, and over 200 members are already enrolled.

The Lerwick Association reports an encouraging series of public meetings in the churches, which were kindly lent for the purpose in rotation. Good attendances ruled; special attention was devoted to the music, and the meetings brought the Association prominently before the townspeople.

In connection with the Hackney Association, a special service was held on Lord's Day afternoon in St. Michael's Church, London Fields. There was a large attendance of young men. The preacher was the Bishop of Hereford. Rev. W. G. Morcom, M.A. (vicar), the Mayor of Hackney, and the secretary to the Y.M.C.A. also took part in the service, which was of a most simple and hearty kind.

The Volunteer camping season is being taken full advantage of this year for work by the Y.M.C.A. in the various encampments. For several years the South-Western District Union has worked among its own battalions on Dartmoor, and more recently has followed the men to Aldershot. The Welsh Y.M.C.A.'s have tents on Salisbury Plain, and a staff of workers who will direct their efforts towards young Welshmen. The North-Midland District Union is co-operating with the Soldiers' Christian Association in similar endeavour at the same place, and tents have been erected also by the Lancashire Associations and those of the Western District. The South-Western District is again working on Dartmoor, and the S.C.A., in addition, has erected a large marquee at Aldershot. The tents will be used as writing and recreation rooms during the day and for bright Gospel services in the evening. The military authorities have displayed much interest in the scheme, and the utmost readiness to assist it.

The Spoil of the Poor.—Recently-published returns show how much harder the life of the poor is made by the rapacious dealings of dishonest tradesmen, who make haste to get rich at the cost of those who in many instances are unable to protect themselves. During the past twelve months the Stepney Borough Council have by means of their sanitary inspectors seized no less than one hundred and ten tons of unsound food, which in a less carefully-protected district would undoubtedly have been a dangerous agent in creating and spreading disease. Add to this the fact that the number of prosecutions in connection with the use of dishonest weights and measures is almost incredibly large, and it will be seen how the low wages of a large section of the industrious poor are still further depreciated, and how necessary it is that our public education should have a basis of Christian ethics.

NATIONAL BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY.

In thanking the readers of The Christian for their kind response in the past, I again bring before them two more cases that require immediate aid.

A BLIND MUSICIAN.—L. A., aged 50 years, has become blind through overstudy. She worked 10 hours per day to gain a gold medal for music in order to support her parents, who died at the age of 92-82. She is extremely delicate, and, owing to a cancer at the back of her eyes, suffers constant pain, and quite unable to earn her own living.

G. S., in whom I am interested, has been blind from lead poisoning since 1897. He was sent to the Exeter School for 2½ years, and then went to the Normal College. He had to leave the latter as the Doctors said the poisoning was beginning to affect his brain.—R. D. C.

The Rev. J. PULLEIN-THOMPSON, Hon. Sec., the Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W., will gladly acknowledge donations, or they may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

This Society continues to Spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row London; and at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Notes & Comments

The King Crowned. "Crowned at last!" What relief of suspense these words have brought to the nation—may we not say to the world? If not accompanied by the proverbial "Queen's (or King's) weather," the day was, at any rate, sufficiently fine to obviate any serious discomfort. The change of date had necessitated many vacant seats in the Abbey, which, however, were easily filled by specially-invited guests. That his Majesty was so far recovered as to pass through the ordeal in good health and spirits, did much to inspire the grateful enthusiasm of the vast crowds lined along the line of route, as the imposing pageant threaded its way to and from the Abbey; and their loyal demonstrations proved how deeply the Royal Family is endeared to the hearts of the people.

Royal Bounty. The Prince and Princess of Wales once again evinced their interest in the poor by inviting over 1,000 children to occupy seats in the gardens of Marlborough House, from which to view the Royal Procession, providing them also with a hearty meal as well as amusements with which to while away the weary hours of waiting. This thoughtful act will live long in the hearts of present and future citizens. And what can be said of the King's magnificent gift to the nation of Osborne House, the favourite palace of the late Queen, as a home for soldiers and sailors who have been invalided in active service! The accession and coronation of King Edward VII. will indeed carry down gracious memories to generations to come.

A Better Temper. It is significant and gratifying to note the mutual goodwill evinced by the police and the public. That the former discharged their arduous and trying duties with cheerfulness and skill is the general testimony; while so far as the crowd was concerned rowdyism and "mafficking" were conspicuously absent. Truly there has been compensation for the disappointments in June, in the subdued and saner behaviour in August.

The Late Anna Shipton. At the special request of some of our readers, we have taken steps to procure cabinet enlargements of the only known portrait of this sainted authoress. They may be obtained from our publishers (2s. each, post free. Morgan & Scott).

The Dearth of Missionaries. A painful paragraph has appeared in the daily press in reference to a clergyman who, after being three years without an appointment, had to sell his library and other belongings, in order to maintain himself, until ultimately, a week or so ago, he had to become an inmate of Tiverton Workhouse. He had been a curate for twenty-three years, and had made 470 unsuccessful applications for a curacy, the vicars, he stated, wanting only young curates. The facts hardly need comment, but they may be taken in connection with the statements which come from the Church Missionary and the Zenana Missionary Societies, as to the startling falling-off in the number of candidates for the mission field. An application for two hundred workers for Uganda has met with a response of two only; and, as regards the Zenana field, it is stated that if volunteers ready to go into training next month do not come forward, the small number of workers going out will again have to be reduced next year. The appeal of the C.M.S. that September 30th next should be observed as a day of special intercession on behalf of missions is therefore well-timed, and there is ample scope for good men to turn their attention to the foreign field, white unto the harvest.

The Drink Bill again. Mr. T. P. Whitaker's recent contribution to the literature of the temperance movement—The Economic Aspect of the Drink Problem—is sufficiently startling in its facts and figures to alarm even those of his fellow Members of Parliament who either regard with apathy the growing intemperance of the people, or who assist the Administration in gagging righteous efforts at reform. Mr. Whitaker sets down the Drink Bill for the year ending March last year at £189,072,000, a sum which represents £4 11s. 2d. for every man, woman and child of the entire population, or over £21 for every family of five persons. This is, of course, the direct loss to the community. The indirect loss is equal in amount, and the total, as Mr. Whitaker clearly puts it, would be sufficient to meet all the charges now defrayed from the rates and taxes. Of all this expenditure the working-classes are responsible for two-thirds, a state of things which lies behind the fact that in thousands of homes a little sickness or a slight break in employment simply involve destitution. Every day the responsibility of the churches in regard to the drink evil is increasing, and, as has been powerfully urged:—

> The Christian Society that fails of its duty here, sins against the light of two thousand years which has streamed from the cross of Christ and out of His open tomb.

Moth and Rust. Each quarter we are carefully informed how the National Revenue continues to increase, but similar prominence is not given to the set-off on the other page of the ledger. It is somewhat startling to find that in face of this development of wealth the cost of the relief of the poor is going up rapidly. During the last ten years the indoor maintenance of our paupers has grown 47 per cent. in London, and 44 per cent. throughout the country, whilst indoor relief now costs 37 per cent. more in the Metropolis, and 28 per cent. more in the provinces. These figures point grimly to at least one of those pressing social questions which, like drink and the betting evils, the Government have not time or courage manfully to face. Mr. Chamberlain has more than once referred to the sordid, hopeless lives, "without pleasure in the present or hope in the future," compulsorily led by thousands of the population of our large centres; and people unfamiliar with the mean necessities of politics, as distinguished from statesmanship, would naturally think that the unhappy condition of a mass of the people would appeal to a Government professing to govern. Unhappily, however, the pigeon-hole is as convenient as it is capacious, and meanwhile the development of drunkenness and animalism proceeds apace.

Infant Mortality. The significant fact was elicited at the Medical Congress that the rate of infant mortality is in direct relation to the illiteracy of mothers. In 1900, out of 927,062 children born, 142,912 died before they were a year old. It is surprising and humiliating to learn that the infant mortality is as great proportionately as it was half a century ago. A considerable number of these infants die through being "overlaid," a tragedy that statistics show is more frequent on Saturday nights than on any other. Drunkenness is unquestionably a main cause of this evil. The ethics of parenthood need to be taught to many among the working-class population. How to bring home to young married people the first principles of child-training is one of the pressing needs of the day.

Precocity in Education. A fresh reform in the treatment of children is suggested by Dr. Arthur Newsholme, Medical Officer of Health for Brighton, in Public Health. At present over half a million children under five years old are in our Elementary Schools. This is denounced as distinctly injurious to the health of the little folk, owing to the readiness with which infectious diseases are passed on among children under five, and to the effects of confinement and undue stimulus at so early an age on the brain tissues. Doubtless the chief reason why parents send their children to school at so early an age is the greater freedom enjoyed at home for their household duties, but this is not an adequate reason for reducing the stamina of the rising generation in so serious a way. This subject deserves serious attention from our educational authorities, as well as parents generally, and steps should be taken to minimise the evil.

The Garden City. We are glad that Mr. George Cadbury, in a recent address, made it clear that the Garden City Scheme, in which he is so largely interested, and of whose methods he has given practical demonstration, is in no sense of the word a work of "charity," as that term is commonly understood, but a work of business founded upon justice. When he said that working-men do not want doles in philanthropy, but justice in the matter of their dwellings, he touched the heart of the whole question. There would be less need of "charity" if justice more largely prevailed; and surely the most elementary justice demands that every human being shall be housed in such a fashion as to enable him to respect himself, and to live a healthy physical life. Nor is the notion of justice eclipsed when those who further its interests combine with it a scheme intended to be commercially successful. Those who are not impelled upon moral and humane grounds (and there are some so base as this) to alter the present abominable condition of housing may at least give heed to men who have demonstrated that, commercially, good housing pays.

Parliament or Christ? A few thoughtful words spoken by Mr. W. J. Nichols at the recent Bible Christian Conference, are entitled to the careful consideration of those who profess to believe in the redemptive power of the secular side of the State, and whose appeal in social and national matters is invariably made to Parliament, to the complete ignoring of those deeper and more potent forces which are at the foundation of all reformation. Mr. Nichols said :—

> The lifting of the masses lies not at the door of Parliament so much as at the door of the Churches. It is their duty to find some message for their unrest, and some power for the healing of their miseries.

Happily, however, it is not necessary to seek the message, for it is ready at hand, and needs neither dilution nor strengthening. "The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations" (Rev. xxii. 2). And only so far as individual lives are brought under the influence of Christ, will the life of the State develop in the direction of obedience to the divine laws of the Kingdom of God.

"Protestant Sunday." In view of the many subtle ways in which Romanist doctrines are being inculcated where such teachings ought least to be expected, the appeal of the Protestant Alliance that November 2 next be considered as "Protestant Sunday," is far from being ill-timed or out of place. The mere proclamation of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus must necessarily in itself be a statement of the essential differences between the Reformed and the Romish faiths ; but a clear summary of the misleading and soul-destroying substitutes which Rome has introduced might, and doubtless would, be helpful to the young, and to those who are liable to be influenced by modern specious advocacy of "toleration." In these days it is well, at least occasionally, to accentuate the darkness of Romanism, and the dangerous twilight of Ritualism, as compared with the clear shining of the unadulterated Gospel of salvation.

The Temporal Power. The somewhat unexpected rapprochement of Russia and Italy is likely, if the present feeling continues, to have a powerful effect in regard to the strained relations between the Vatican and the Quirinal. With all deference to the Duke of Norfolk's unfortunate misrepresentation of British feeling in the matter, a large section of Roman Catholics in this country are as strongly opposed to the idea of the Pope's resumption of the temporal power as the United Italy party are, as, indeed, most educated and intellectual Italians, from Dante downwards, always have been. In the election of the new Pope—an event which, humanly speaking, cannot now be long delayed—the question will have to be finally settled ; and, as a German Romanist organ has pointed out, there will then have to be a formal abandonment on the part of the chosen Pontiff of a claim which, as a Florence Roman Catholic newspaper said some little time ago, "is in itself an insult to every loyal Italian." In the demand for this renouncement, those who are well-informed in such matters assert that Russia and Italy will join ; hence the present understanding. So the grossly abused Temporal Power, and the dream of its possible resumption will pass away, as John foretold, "for her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities."

The Sound of Coming Rain. A cloud bigger than a man's hand is upon the face of the religious sky just now, and a sound of abundance of rain. In the various conventions and church conferences which have just closed, there has been an unmistakable note prevailing—a desire, deeply and solemnly expressed, for a speedy revival of religious life. The most important thing in the address of the Wesleyan president at the late Conference was his passionate plea for a new order of evangelists—or, better, as he said, for a new baptism of spiritual power to descend upon the entire ministry, fitting it as never before, for the work of evangelization. This one note called forth the deepest response. An important Conference for Ministers only is to be held at Oxford early in September, in which the whole time is to be devoted to the consideration of topics which bear directly upon the revival of spiritual life. We are glad to chronicle such news ; it is better than the report of great demonstrations or of great gifts of money. The revival of the central fires will diffuse heat throughout the entire body in all its parts.

"Wilt Thou not revive Us Again?" God's people have long looked and prayed for Revival, and praised and thanked Him for the Revival that is coming, and God has answered prayer by doing a mighty work—at the other side of the world. He is sending showers of blessing, here and there, on this side also ; but we are not seeing "the great rain of His strength," which, in some measure at least, is falling at our Antipodes.

"Ye have not because ye ask not." Long before the Revival came in Australia, there had been united prayer by Christians of different Churches, who were knit together in the one desire that God would reveal His grace and power in quickening saints and converting sinners. Not only did they gather in public places, but in private houses. All over the States such meetings were held, so that 40,000 people are said to have been praying at one time. And they continued instant in prayer until the blessing came.

Revival Comes from God by Prayer. Psalmist and prophet alike look to God alone. Of Him and to Him are all revival blessings. "Wilt Thou not revive us again, that Thy people may rejoice in Thee ?" Not by human power or ingenuity, "but by My Spirit," saith the Lord of hosts. "O Lord, revive Thy work : in the midst of the years make Thyself known." Why should they say among the heathen, "Where is their God ?" Are we not sick and tired of ourselves ? Do not our hearts cry out for the Living God ?

Love One Another. All revivals begin with the mutual love of the children of God, and decline as love grows cold. Therefore let us cultivate love one towards another. For love is of God. No man hath seen God at any time, but the Son hath revealed Him. No man hath seen God at any time, but He that abides in love abides in God and God in him. And so God is revealed. "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples if ye love another."

God Uses Means. Dr. Torrey, of the Bible Institute, Chicago, who has been one of the evangelists used of God in the Revival in Australia, will soon be passing through England on his way home. It may be that God will use him here. He can tell us much of the work of the Holy Spirit in that far-off land.

God's Last Word to Man. We sometimes wonder how deeply the average preacher of the Gospel realizes the fact, that, in Christ, God has really spoken His final word to man ; and that the Gospel is the ultimate word that we shall receive from heaven during this dispensation. During recent years there has been a growing tendency, in certain quarters, to offer to men, in the Name of the Saviour, a larger hope than that of the Divine message in this life. Many men, entirely unwilling to receive Jesus Christ as Lord of their life now, have, it is feared, falsely consoled themselves with the notion that, rejecting light here, they may receive it at will upon the other side. It would be well if all such, together with their teachers (who, confounding things that differ, practically place heathens and enlightened people in one category), might read the solemn sermon of Dr. Newman Smyth on "The Last Judgment, the Christian Judgment." Rarely has any modern preacher more convincingly shown the terrible responsibility of a human soul being brought face to face with Christ. The preacher also, who fully realizes the meaning of God's last word to man, will become inspired with a new and holy passion to save men

Feeding the Lambs. Dealing with some present-day problems in America' Dr. Charles Sheldon has referred in the Homiletic Monthly to the shifting of base, to meet the changing conditions of the physical life of man which characterizes the present transition period in the work of the churches. If the work of a modern church is worth anything, it is based upon the eternal redemptive power of Jesus Christ, which never changes ; therefore, he says, in words that apply with equal force on this side of the Atlantic :—

> The Gospel does not change, but it may move over another track. The track is temporary, the Gospel is permanent. . .
> We ministers, as a rule, preach too much to grown-up people. We prepare too many elaborate sermons and too few helpful messages. We define a sermon as "an effort," and have in view when we prepare it the best minds among the grown-up intellectual people in our congregation. The best thing we could all do for six months in the year would be to preach to our Sunday-schools. Give the simplest message containing the Gospel to the children. Why not ? The old people in our churches have been preached to all their lives. I have no doubt many of them need preaching yet, but they would all stay and hear the sermon to children. The trouble with most of us is our unwillingness to serve in the capacity of teacher through the slow but effective process of making disciples. We want to shine in the pulpit as eloquent speakers, rather than as simple candles of the Lord to light men along the way of life.

Battle and Victory. Certainty of victory gives force to the soldiers' arm and gladness to his heart ; uncertainty, doubt, or despair weakens them both. In the Holy War there is no success for the pessimist. The fundamental conditions of victory are, belief in the justice of our cause, complete obedience to the will of our Commander, and certainty of our ultimate triumph. When the seventy disciples returned from their first tour and recounted their small successes, the Lord at once pointed them to the final triumph. They saw a demon here and there ejected ; He had been contemplating the final downfall of the evil one himself : "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." What He beheld in spirit, we, thank God, shall yet behold in literal fact. Everything done for the slaying of evil and the establishment of the Divine Kingdom is in line with that Will which shall yet rule all.

The Puritan Ideal—II.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

IT is a noteworthy fact that by no one has more substantial justice been done to the Puritan character than by Charles Kingsley. His eloquent and just tribute to its principles and aims is not subject to any discount because of his theological sympathies. He was far removed from the Puritans in doctrinal opinions, but that did not prevent him from recognising the nobility of their spirit, and appreciating to the full the services they rendered to English morality, as well as to English freedom. His essay on "Plays and Puritans" not only renders due honour to a class who have been shamefully maligned, but contains some views of life which are hardly less appropriate to our own times than to the century of which they treat. Despite the sad pictures of deterioration which Mr. G. W. Russell has given us, the twentieth century has not sunk to the level of the seventeenth, but assuredly there is as much need for the stern testimony of Puritanism now as there was then.

THE QUESTION OF THEATRE-GOING.

Taking the particular point to which Mr. Kingsley refers, it is, to say the least, open to doubt whether the Church has acted wisely in treating the old Puritan protest against the theatre as a piece of old-fashioned strictness which has become obsolete. It is the favourite idea of many that the theatre has been largely purified, and that the stern condemnation pronounced on play-going by our fathers ought to be relaxed. In no point can it be more truly said that "old times are changed, old manners gone," and it is suggested that the change has been at least as much in the amusement as in the spirit of its critics. Certainly the change has been little short of a revolution. In my early days there were but few members of our churches who ever entered a theatre; to-day those who abstain are regarded as old-fashioned bigots.

It is worth our while to learn what the theatre, which is regarded with so much more favour, really is. The view I give shall be taken from one of its advocates. In the Nineteenth Century (July and August) we have some remarkable papers occasioned by a refusal of the licenser of plays to license a particular play, and the strong protest against his action of a few litterateurs. This was sharply criticized in the pages of the Review, and to this has been given an even keener reply. One passage only only do I quote from this latter. The writer is a defender of the stage, but, speaking of the action of the official to whom the right to prohibit objectionable plays is given, he says:—"He licenses pieces which you and I may class with the puerile obscenities," &c. He then proceeds to quote from a theatrical magazine statements which abundantly justify the use even of this strong expression. Such representations, which are certainly not open to the suspicion of being coloured by unfriendly prejudice, are, to speak in the mildest terms, sufficient to justify those who, retaining the old Puritan spirit, feel that there is much to be said still on behalf of the prohibitions which have drawn down upon its representatives such severe censure.

The subject, which itself is only part of a much larger one, demands a much fuller treatment than we can give it here. It is not to be denied that the severe discipline of which the attitude to the theatre is a part has been generally regarded as the great characteristic of the Puritan ideal, and that by it it has been and still is judged. It is not necessary to quote the caricatures which have long been imposed upon the world as a correct portraiture of men who served God and their country with a rare nobility of spirit and a strenuous performance of duty beyond all praise. They have been supposed to be sour, narrow pretenders, if not hypocrites; men who, by straining at the gnat and swallowing the camel, revived the old sect of the Pharisees. And yet they were men who laid some of the fairest stones in that great temple of our liberties which, broadening slowly down from precedent to precedent, is the envy of the world. Further, on the confession even of unfriendly critics, to their influence we owe some of the grander elements of the British character to which the nation

OWES ITS STRENGTH AND ITS REPUTATION.

The Puritan, perhaps, in his anxiety to guard against conformity to the world, was tempted to forget that such conformity was more a matter of the inner life than of outward act. To put it in a concrete form, the world-spirit may live and flourish and rule where every act of worldly conformity is carefully eschewed. A man may frown down the amusements of the world, he may not covet its treasure or its influence, he may stoutly refuse to do homage to any of its idols; and yet at heart he may be one of the world's most sincere votaries, without fear of God before his eyes, without love to God in his heart, without any purpose to glorify God in his life.

Far be it from me to insinuate that a true Puritan could be thus described. But outward compliance is all that can be enforced, and there have been many who for various reasons would yield that, perhaps even be ostentatious in it, and yet be in heart alien from God and wedded to the world. Puritanism has had to accept the responsibility for men of this type, and heavy has been the cost.

There was a time when it insisted too exclusively on what I have sometimes called

THE GOSPEL OF "ANTI."

And godliness cannot flourish or manifest itself by a mere code of prohibitions. In other words, the service of Christ can never consist in mere negations.

This may be fitly and fully described as the "obedience of faith," or otherwise as "obedience to Christ;" and when that obedience is perfected, the highest triumph of the Christian life is secured. Obedience and faith have sometimes been divorced and separated, and while some have made orthodoxy their idol, and treated all reference to obedience as a servile homage to Mr. Legality, others have insisted that obedience is all in all, that a man's faith is nothing, his life is everything.

The true character of a man may justly be determined by the passion that rules his heart and so shapes his life. The Apostle Paul describes himself and his fellow-Christians as "under the law to Christ." It is mere trifling with a great theme to suggest that this does not enforce any creed about Christ. Men do not obey one of whose claim to rule they are not satisfied. If he were Jesus, the prophet of Nazareth, we might accept the teachings where we approved of them—it might even be that some of them might captivate us by their beauty; but neither this agreement nor the higher enthusiasm to which it may sometimes grow is obedience. That means the supremacy of the will of Him whom we obey. Because we love Christ we submit our wills to Him and keep His commandments. But how is the love possible unless we know we love and obey, and so love Him that it is our joy to do His will?

The answer to the question is that which faith only can supply. "A life of faith in the Son of God who loved us, and gave Himself for us," is the Puritan ideal. It begins with a recognition of the seriousness of life, distinguishing those who hold it from the giddy throng, whose constant cry is, "Who will show us any good?" This seems a very simple—one might have thought a very obvious—point. But it is one which is utterly forgotten, it may be even contemptuously despised, by the children of this world. Their idea is that their one business is to have a good time. The simple truth conveyed in the opening of the Assembly's Catechism—a teaching as sublime as it is simple—"Man's chief end is to glorify God, and to enjoy Him for ever," is to them nothing more than mystical nonsense. Alas! for the world, and alas for our own country in particular, if there had not been men to accept its lesson for themselves, and then to teach it to others.

FAITH AND CONDUCT.

Destroy the faith of the Gospel and the whole edifice collapses with truth, which is its one foundation. True, the faith would be nothing unless it had its right effect upon conduct, but there could not be the qualities of character and conduct without the creed. He that cometh to God must believe "that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him." In that is the secret of Puritan strength. Its faith is in the living God. Faith inspires love, and love induces submission to His rule—and in that is the aim, the law, the hope, the end of life.

From Our Readers.

"THE NAME ABOVE EVERY NAME."

E. M. B. should have been more careful before affirming that the Name of Jesus is mentioned alone only twice or thrice in the Epistles. Any carefully got-up concordance will furnish him with a list of fully a score of passages in which the name of Jesus is used by itself. Besides, there is no evidence of any lack of reverence on the part of many who constantly use it, any more than there is evidence of any special reverence possessed by those who always prefix it with Lord. The Christian poet sang:—

"How sweet the Name of Jesus sounds and he was not astray in writing these lines, as thousands of devout souls will affirm. And with the New Testament to guide, it would be well not to judge one another as to what name is used, so long as any one of the names used in Scripture is adhered to.
In a believer's ear,"

We have heard it said again and again that the name Jesus was not His post-resurrection name, a statement we entirely dissent from, unless there be some New Testament writing not possessed by us which furnishes ground for making such a statement. In the Acts of the Apostles the name of Jesus by itself occurs about thirty times, and it is distinctly a post-resurrection book. Then there are the Epistles over and above, with their use of the word as we have already pointed out, not to speak of the Revelation.

Going back to the morning of the Incarnation days, we find the angel saying: "Thou shalt call His name Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sins" (Matt. i. 21), and so long as His saving work is needed, multitudes, blessed and saved by Him, will find delight in calling Him by that precious name. No other form of His name can ever more gladden any poor sinner's heart. "I love the sound of Jesu's name." So sings and says many a reverent believer without thinking for a moment that he is violating any laws of terminology with reference to the Saviour, who is dearer to him than all else beside.

Moreover, it should not be forgotten that He, after His ascension, used that name Himself. "Who art Thou, Lord?" said the astonished Saul of Tarsus, as a light from heaven above the brightness of the sun shined upon him. "I am Jesus," was the answer.

As to applying the word "Saint" to Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, and others, its use lends an affected superiority to such men that they themselves would have been the first to disclaim.

There is only one Jesus: blessed be His name for ever. But there are, and have been, millions of saints.

REVERENTIA.

The Ideal Holiday.

By Rev. E. GRIFFITH-JONES, B.A., Balham.

FOR a holiday to be really beneficial, definite conditions must be fulfilled, which are at once simple and imperative.

I. The Ideal Holiday must be a rest from honest and legitimate toil.

A life of pure enjoyment, as such, lies outside the Christian programme. Life is not primarily for enjoyment; it is for work, for service, for the realization of great, spiritual, eternal ends. That this is so is shown conclusively by the fact that when we make pleasure, or even happiness, the end of our existence, we invariably miss it. If we live only to be happy, we shall neither really live, nor can we be really happy. I have known many miserable people, but perhaps none quite so hopeless as the ignoble army of dullards who spend their life in continental hotels, flying from one pleasure resort to another, seeking—enjoyment! The tired clerk or girl typewriter who revels in a fortnight's holiday, armed perhaps with a kodak and a guide-book and an infinite appetite of body and mind, has found the secret that many a millionaire would give a fortune to discover. And the reason is obvious—to the one pleasure is an end, to the other an interlude. God has ordained that pleasure, to be real, must be

THE REWARD OF HONEST TOIL.

There is no vacation like that which follows the utter strain of a testing school or university examination, or a long spell of business stress, or the exhaustion of literary work, or the monotonous pressure of household tasks. How the vision glows in prospect; how laden are the hours of utter ease with which it begins! And how Nature opens her very heart to such a man or woman, boy or girl; the landscape is a fairy picture, and every pathway leads into an enchanted land. We purchase our rights to happiness through service; we win our claim to our holidays in virtue not of the money we have saved, but of the work we have done.

II. The ideal holiday does not depend on any mere accident of place or circumstance, but on the mood and temper of the soul.

"Where shall we go for our holiday?" is a problem that occupies a large place in our minds for some time before the happy day of departure. Was ever so superfluous a question? Let us have a man in the right frame of mind, and the right answer is—"Anywhere!" or a man in the wrong one, and the reply is—"Nowhere!" It is not what we find in a place, but what we take to it, that settles how far we are going to enjoy ourselves in it. Let us earn our change, and take it in the right temper, and what one person will stigmatize as a "dull hole" will be to us none other than a gate of heaven. Just as a ruin makes a picture to the eye of the artist, so a lonely village or a crowded promenade, a moor or a sea front, a mountain or a plain, will make a paradise to the weary, and be a joy to the wise.

What then are the right temper and mood in which to take our holiday?

1. A heart and mind open to the magical influences of Nature.

2. A determination to make the best of all circumstances, weathers, and surroundings.

3. A companionable and genial temper towards fellow-travellers.

4. An unselfish spirit, that seeks the happiness of others, asking little, ready to give much.

5. Simple tastes, which take their pleasure in the things that rest the heart, and build up the equal energies of mind and body.

Now on each of these points much might be said. Taken together they point to the secret of happiness always, but especially at holiday time. The dull eye, untrained to see the fair and the beautiful, and the heart insensible to the myriad messages of sky and earth and sea; the discontented temper, which is disappointed at trifles, and demands impossible conditions of comfort in order to be at all happy; the querulous soul, self-centred, self-absorbed, that always demands its own way, and goes off at a tangent at the slight, inevitable provocations of human intercourse; a passion for artificial enjoyments, which barters a healthy simplicity for the ostentations of dress, and the gratification of that puny vanity which is the only source of happiness to some microscopic souls—how can such be happy at home or abroad?

The arch enemy of pure happiness is always—selfishness; and the key to true joy is—unselfishness. It was the happiness of Christ, who "pleased not Himself," but bore the burden of the whole world's sorrow and sin on that awful but splendid cross, and who "despised the shame for the joy that was set before Him."

There are many applications of this point that bear on our subject. There are some in every family group whose holiday can never be quite complete, since they have to look after the creature comforts of the others. The cares of the household follow after them; they have to be thinking of others all the time. Therefore all the others should think of them, and see to it that they have as good a time as possible. Little attentions and acts of thoughtfulness go a long way to lighten this burden of care and solicitude.

A word may be said to

HUSBANDS AND WIVES.

Holiday time gives a much-needed opportunity of companionship which is not always taken advantage of in the right way. There are many things that tend to divide married people in these busy days, when the hours of home-fellowship are so few and so broken by other claims. But on the annual holiday there is an opportunity of making up for this to some extent. Here, again, unselfish love is the key to the secret door of happiness. Let each think of the other; let the husband remember that the wife cannot do quite so much physically, and that her weakness and her many domestic anxieties are a claim on his kindness and self-restraint; let the wife remember that a man needs an occasional chance to stretch his limbs and go off on a strenuous mountain climb, or cycle ride, or game of golf, or some other form of hard exercise; let her send him off with her blessing, and he will return tired and happy, and grateful for the respite from the keen excitements of the parade and the fatigues of the morning stroll! If we all did what we might do to renew the romance of the young days, and drink of the Pierian Spring of mutual tenderness during these brief days of repose and refreshment, the whole year would be sweeter and holier for it, and fewer would complain of the separation of interests and so of heart which too often marks the passing years.

III. Finally, we must not forget that the Ideal Holiday is one in which the soul has its claims as well as the body and the mind.

There is a holiday of the heart, and we should see to it that this is enjoyed by us to the full. We lay aside not only our tasks but our competitions, our rivalries, our struggle for existence; and in this is the highest benefit of all. How delightful it is to give a rest to that side of our nature which is engaged in this struggle! No more, at least for a time.

At this time a plea is needed for

THE TRUE USE OF THE LORD'S DAY.

It is sad to think how many people who at home acknowledge its claims, and spend it in the usual exercise of worship, simply ignore and desecrate it during their annual rest. It is no credit to us that so many on whom the activities of the Church of Christ depend at home, not only take a rest from Christian service, which is legitimate, but habitually absent ourselves from worship when away. Are there not six days for pleasure, and mountain-climbing, and strolls by the sea, and cycling in the country lane? I take it that no consistent man will do away from home what he would not do at home. It is true that the facilities for worship are sometimes poor, and that the village church or chapel may be badly manned, and the singing rough, and the sermon lacking in grace; but if we have felt this often, there have been times when God has come nearer to us in such surroundings than in the crowded assembly, or the pillared cathedral. Nay; there should be no holiday from devotion and worship, and the ministries of the Spirit for any of us; every Lord's Day we should go into the Lord's House, and join with others in morning hymn and evening prayer. We need this at these times as much as any other; and the chance of gaining good for our souls is greater than any other time, because every appeal has a better opportunity of finding its way into our heart of hearts.

If these three principles are always kept before us, and acted upon loyally, our holiday will be a true holy-day, and we shall return to our daily duties refreshed in body, re-invigorated in mind, and eager in heart for the thronging duties that await us on our return.

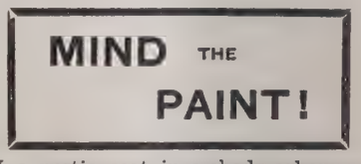
By Mr. CHAS. COOK.



ON a rustic seat in a shady arbour we saw the above. Not so the Yankee lover and his maiden fair, as from the heat of a New York sun they had wandered midst the beauties (and the solitude) of Central Park. Alas! such mundane matters as paint and varnish troubled them not. With hands clasped, and let us hope hearts entwined, they saw not the text of warning; pre-occupied they sat them down, but a pungent odour told the tale, and when they rose—well, they were a little greener than heretofore.

"Mind the paint!" Can we never "put old heads on young shoulders"? There's a proverb that runs, "Paint the devil on the wall and he'll appear anon." How important in these days of prurient pictures and suggestive stories that we "mind the paint."

Satan oft-times gets into the citadel of Immanuel by eye-gate. Eve saw the tree "was pleasant to the eyes," and then she "desired," and then "took"—and then came sorrow.

If we put our hands into the fire we must expect to be burnt; if we touch pitch we cannot but be defiled.

Cowper, speaking on these lines, says:—

He that abstains, and only he does right,
If a wish wanders that way, call it home,
He cannot long be safe whose wishes roam.

Said the matron of the Tombs Prison, New York, to me, "Drink and dress bring most of the women here; and one wonders what fashions next will be in vogue to ensnare the youth of both sexes."

"Show me a man's books and I'll tell you what he is." What with Norwegian dramatists, and French novels, and religious plays, we do well to take heed what we read, and what we look at.

"Mind the paint!" Standing on the piazza at Northfield, a lady said to me, "The influence of that bad man's book clings to me to this day." She had as a girl read "The Age of Reason."

How annoying it is! It generally happens to new clothes. We apply the turpentine, and rub and scrub, and the worst of the paint comes off, but there is always an ugly stain, and somehow we never fancy the coat afterwards—we naturally think other people see it. "Mind the paint!"

If Muriel and Reggie were a little wiser, they'd accept Pater's advice, and read their Bible more and lighter literature less, and questionable stuff never. Good health is produced by plain living. "Desire the sincere milk of the Word that ye may grow thereby." Go not too near the margin! Be careful of the polish and the paint of cultured criticism. "Keep thine heart," as well as "Edify thy mind." Whether as touching the company we keep, the mental pabulum we feed on, or the things we admire, let us remember, "A fence at the top of the cliff is better than an ambulance at the bottom."

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, August 17. Joshua xvii.

NOTE the strength of that word would. It surely was no expression for the Canaanites to use. They were a dispossessed race, and had forfeited their right to Canaan. Israel had made a profound mistake in allowing them to remain, in the face of God's great word, "I will drive them out from before the children of Israel." Yet let us not condemn them, unless we are prepared to condemn ourselves. There is not the least reason why besetting sins or fleshly lusts should hold their own or maintain their position in the region of a saved nature. They must never be allowed to say they must or they will. Even though they should be stronger than our resolutions and endeavours, they should have no weight against the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ in the might of the Holy Spirit.

Their permitted presence led to a strong altercation between Joshua and the children of Joseph. They boasted that they were a great people, and deserved a wider share in the land. "No," said Joshua, "not while there is so much unoccupied territory (forest land perhaps) in your limits. Cut down the wood!" They replied, "The hill country is not sufficient, and the valley is full of Canaanites with iron chariots." But Joshua answered, "You have the power for one or the other, if only you would use it."

God often puts forests and Canaanites into our lives, great difficulties and trials, that we may be compelled to avail ourselves of His all-sufficient grace. Oh, to hear God's voice saying, "Thou shalt drive out . . . . though they be strong."

MONDAY, August 18. Joshua xviii.

How truly might Joshua's remonstrance be addressed to the Church of God to-day, for we have been very slack to possess the world for Christ! He has redeemed it by His most precious blood, and it is all His own, but how halting has been our acquisition of it! There is practically no hindrance now to the evangelization of the world. The Bible has been translated into most of the tongues of mankind, and the way is opened into the heart of great continents and kingdoms, once shut. Why is the Church so slack to accomplish the work for which her Master chose her, and sent her forth?

Perhaps the reason may be found in a defect in our plans of attack. We overrun each other's ground. We accumulate workers in one place, and neglect vast tracts of territory which need us sorely. We are endeavouring to do the work by Anglo-Saxon and other missionaries, instead of making more use of the natives themselves as they ente the Kingdom of God. I cannot forget meeting a missionary in India, who told me that since his wife died he had taken ten or a dozen young men into his house to live with him, that he might mould them by his example and influence. This was the way of the Master Himself. And we might well send out, as Joshua did, twenty-one commissioners to survey the unoccupied tracts, assigning them to various sections of the Church, and throwing on these the burden of their evangelization. But all will be in vain until every member of the Christian Church adopts the principle of systematic tithing of income for the cause of God. Why do not you begin to practise this godly custom?

TUESDAY, August 19. Joshua xix.

Joshua's portion is spoken of as Timnath-serah (50); in the next book as Timnath-heres (Judges ii. 9). It was "the portion of the sun." The old veteran had deserved well of his people, and must have been glad to retire to his estate, on which the remaining twenty years of his life were spent. And the greatness of his influence may be inferred from the magnitude of the evils that rushed in on Israel when he was taken. As for him and his house, he served the Lord, and maintained the sacred rites, as Moses had enjoined. His example shone like a beacon light, and kept the darkness at bay.

There is fascination in the name of his inheritance—"The portion of the sun." Did it lie specially open towards the sun, catching the first glimpse of sunrise, and holding the last fading gleam of sunset? Perhaps so, but there seems a special beauty in the name, when we associate it with his previous career of unswerving fidelity to the will of God. As Caleb's career ended in Hebron, which is Fellowship, so Joshua's ended in that dwelling in the Light, which is the highest bliss we can attain unto. Be wholly given to God; then your sun shall no more go down, but the Lord shall be to you an everlasting Light, and the days of your mourning shall be ended. An ungrieved Spirit always involves the consciousness of the presence of Christ.

WEDNESDAY, August 20. Joshua xx.

Six cities were apportioned for the manslayer, who had committed manslaughter without murderous intent. Three were situated on each side of Jordan, central to the adjacent districts, easily accessible, so that the fugitive, who had killed any unwittingly and unawares, might flee from the pursuit of the next-of-kin. Once within those walls, all breathless with his flight, the manslayer waited at the entering in of the city, till he had stated his case to the elders.

It is interesting to notice this provision, made in the Land of Promise, for the passing over of sins which were not sins of presumption. For the latter no provision was made; but for wrongs which did not arise from a fixed or rooted malice, there was this merciful provision. Take heart, O Christian soul! thou hast done many evil things, in ignorance and thoughtlessness, for which thou art justly guilty, and which might well exclude thee from the Land of Promise; yet there is forgiveness for thee. Only get thee to the City of Refuge, which is also the City of the High Priest, and hide thee there. Thou wilt not only be safe, but shalt enjoy thine inheritance beside, for the High Priest has died, and in His death put away thy sin for ever. There is, therefore, now no condemnation, because thou art in Him. Has not Israel acted the part of manslayer, but one day he shall return to his heritage!

THURSDAY, August 21. Joshua xxi.

At the Divine command, forty-eight cities were given to the Levites, with 1,000 cubits of pasture land, as measured outwards from the city walls. There they dwelt, when not required for temple service, or when they were incapacitated by age from attending on their sacred duties.

As Jacob predicted, they were scattered, but the effect was most salutary. They permeated the whole land with the influence of Shiloh. Moreover, the teaching of the law was their special province, and for this they travelled through their appropriated districts. They taught Jacob His judgments and Israel His law, as well as putting incense and whole burnt-offering on God's altar. They caused the people to discern between the unclean and the clean, and acted as messengers of the Lord of Hosts (Deut. xxxiii. 10). So a curse was turned into blessing. Thus the work was finished, and not one good thing had failed. And this is true still. Our Father has blessed us with all spiritual blessings in Christ. In Him all fulness dwells, and we are complete in His Person and work.

In eternity, when we shall stand together and review our life course, with its battles, marches, and experience, we shall without doubt take up the noble confession of these words, and confess that all has come to pass which the Lord has spoken, and that not one good thing has failed. We shall see that our Lord Jesus has done all things well.

FRIDAY, August 22. Joshua xxii.

When the seven years of fighting were done, and the people were settled in their land, the forty thousand warriors who had so nobly fulfilled their early promise received the public thanks of the great leader, and were dismissed to their own territories beyond the river of Jordan. He expressed the fervent desire of all that they should be abundantly prosperous.

When they reached the river, a sudden fear seems to have taken them, that in coming years the nine tribes and a half might deny to them the right of common inheritance in the national life. So they built a great altar on the western bank. It was a great mistake. No pattern had been received for its construction from God, and certainly no order had been issued. It caused a great deal of excited feeling, which nearly led to the outbreak of hostility. The true principle of unity for Israel was not the altar of Ed, but the assembling of all males three times a year before God.

How often we make a similar mistake. In our endeavour after Christian unity, we too often set up a great altar of Uniformity, whereas all who hold the Head, who worship and love the Lord Jesus, who are set on faith and obedience, are necessarily and blessedly and for ever one—His Body, His Bride.

SATURDAY, August 23. Joshua xxiii.

Eighteen years had passed since the events of the last chapter. The rest of the people of God had not been broken in upon by war, and the people had been able to prosecute their toils. But the great leader was old and well stricken in years. What a contrast to that Greater Joshua, who leads us into God's Sabbath and who ever liveth.

Knowing that his end was near, Joshua called for the leaders of the people, as Paul afterwards summoned the elders of Ephesus to meet him on the shore of the Ægean. Probably Caleb would be there, with Kenaz, Phinehas the priest, warriors who had taken part in the conquest of the land, and others who had grown up since the occupation. Joshua directed the minds of his audience into the great past, and reminded them what God had done for them; but his one anxiety was as to the nations that were left. Seven times he refers to them; and how great would be the temptations if they were left unmolested. He proposed three safeguards: That they must not swerve from the law of Moses; that they must not identify themselves with them in marriage; and that they must be sure to maintain themselves in the love of God.

Let us be equally on our guard. It is easier to go out of the world, than to be in it and not of it. All around are enticements to ally ourselves with the world. The temptation to this is most alluring, especially to the young. But where God is always first, His love, like Milton's spear of Ithuriel, will indicate where danger lurks.

Evangelistic Efforts in the Western Counties.—The July number of Counties' Evangelization, issued for the information of assemblies, gives particulars of the evangelistic work carried on in the three wooden tents. Messrs. John and Fred Foley have visited, among other places, Organford, Winterbourne-Kingston, Stourpaine, and Shillingstone, where encouraging meetings were held. Tent No. 2 was opened at Edington, where the Spirit's working was manifest from the first, in conviction of sin and change of life. After eleven weeks the tent was removed to Catcott. Ten weeks of earnest testimony resulted in the first meeting to remember the Lord's dying love. About twenty now meet on the first day of the week, and they, with others, are waiting for a simple building, so that the tent may move on. Tent No. 3 has been at Tiverton Hill, Bath, under the care of Mr. F. S. Bryant, and good fruit of the patient and persevering testimony has been seen. Mr. F. A. Glover has visited a number of small country assemblies, while camp work has been carried on with a canvas tent and Gospel van in numerous hamlets.

Other Lands.

In France and Belgium.

THE series of visits in France and other French-speaking countries of the Continent, which it has been my privilege to undertake during the past five years, is now completed. At the recent yearly meeting of the Society of Friends, I returned the "certificate" which it is the Society's custom to deliver to its ministers in token of concurrence in their conviction that the Lord calls them to service abroad. My last journey, though shorter than most, lasting only two and a-half weeks, was by no means the least interesting.

Calais, Boulogne, and Amiens lie on the main route between London and Paris, which is traversed every year by thousands of British Christians; yet how few of them know anything of the efforts made in each of these towns, through the instrumentality of the M'All Mission, to make known the Gospel in its simplicity. At Calais, the work is under the charge of a Swiss Christian, the manager of a factory, and his devoted wife. After a meeting held in a very neglected neighbourhood, where this lady is doing a good work amongst the young, two working youths came up to talk to me about the difficulties they experience in trying to live a decent and Christian life. I would commend them, and others like them, to the prayers of those who are more favoured.

At Boulogne the work is most cheering; scarcely a week passes without some one deciding for Christ. Not far off is the manufacturing village of Desvres, where work was begun hardly two years ago, through the influence of a convert of the mission from another village. A large proportion of the inhabitants now attend the Gospel services. One of the principal employers recently testified that whereas before the Protestants began their work he could get no work done on Monday, or, if it was done, it was badly done, now Mondays are just like any other day. It was delightful to visit homes which have been completely transformed by the power of the Gospel, and where the Lord Jesus Christ is now loved and faithfully served.

At Amiens, the pastor, M. Bruce, who is of Scottish descent, took me to call on the wives of some Lancashire operatives lately settled there, whose addiction to drink, and resulting brawls, make them very bad recommendations of British Christianity. Not having an evening at liberty, I could not see the husbands. M. Bruce would be very glad to arrange an English service for them on behalf of any properly recommended worker, who could stop at Amiens in passing.

THE MISSION BOAT.

I found the Bon Messager, the original mission boat of the M'All Mission, at work on the Marne, to the north-east of Paris. In this district M. Huet, the "Captain," was formerly a priest and his wife a Catholic schoolmistress. The good repute which they won in those days helps them in their present work. I have visited them now in six different localities, with ever-growing appreciation of their zeal and tact, and of the importance of this method of evangelization. At Epernay, where I next called, the work originated through a visit of the boat to this centre of the champagne country.

THE FRENCH BLACK COUNTRY.

After passing a night at St. Quentin, famous in French history, I arrived at Lille, where, and at the neighbouring town of Roubaix, I spent a week. In this great manufacturing district five devoted pastors of the Reformed Church, with their wives, are grappling with the social problems of the day from the Gospel standpoint. The working people are completely alienated from the Roman Catholic Church, and their Socialist leaders are, in many cases, bitterly hostile to all religion. But the beautiful lives of these pastors, spending and being spent in the effort to win men to Christ, cannot but produce its impression. Never can I forget two evenings spent with one of them in his "rogues' meeting," surrounded by young men, nearly all of whom had qualified for admission by one or more terms of imprisonment.

Y.M.C.A. CONFERENCE IN BELGIUM.

Finally, crossing the frontier, I spent a Sunday at Courcelles, in one of the mining districts of Belgium, where the Young Men's Christian Associations of that country were holding their annual conference. The 25th anniversary of the local Y.M.C.A. was being celebrated at the same time. This is, I believe, the largest of the Belgian Y.M.C.A.'s. Its members have built with their own hands a convenient room adjoining the Protestant Church. They number more than a hundred, in a village of less than 2,000 inhabitants, of whom about one-third are Protestants. With three other delegates I was entertained by a widow and her daughter, well-to-do tradespeople, who, although themselves Roman Catholics, were glad to testify in this way their gratitude to their Protestant neighbours. The husband and father had died after a long and painful illness, and they gratefully told us how he had formerly been an unbeliever, but that the visits of the pastor had been the means of bringing him to believe in Christ, and enabling him to die happily. The Conference was marked by much life and earnestness, as well as good-fellowship; it was attended by about 300 delegates, nearly all belonging to the class of miners and factory workers, many of whom had travelled considerable distances, at their own expense, in order to devote their Whitsuntide holiday to the work. No wonder that, with such a spirit animating its members, the Y.M.C.A. in Belgium shows steady growth from year to year.

JOSEPH G. ALEXANDER.

The World's Young Women.

THE second Conference of the World's Young Women's Christian Association was held at Geneva, July 24-29, and enthusiastic delegates from far and near rallied to it. Specially welcome to all seemed the presence of quite a large (comparatively) contingent from Italy, with bright faces and ardent manners, and a few paler, more tranquil representatives of FINLAND and SWEDEN. What these latter lost in mobile adaptability, by comparison with the warmer Italians, they gained in steady intelligence and tenacity of expression, and none could choose between these two contingents, which were the observed of all observers. To find that Finland had beaten most of the smaller or newer Associations of the World's Y.W.C.A. in the number of "world's pennies" contributed, and, indeed, by comparison, made a sort of world's record in support of Y.W.C.A. propaganda, evoked a perfect storm of applause.

Madame SCHALK (Italy) made an ideal president of conference. Her gracious tact, untiring zeal, and long-suffering patience were beyond praise; and her linguistic versatility took our insular breath away. All the continental delegates seemed veritable polyglots, and the tedious translations of papers and interpretations of tongues almost superfluous, except for the enlightenment of the British contingent, with whom the English version of reports was in eager demand. Our pride was humbled, and we coveted earnestly facility in tongues.

The mal-àpropos delegate (who spoke from a side-wing), who proposed that the world's Quarterly should be printed ever, only, and altogether in English, found herself in a marked minority, her suggestion being received with good-humoured ridicule! Naturally GREAT BRITAIN contributed the largest number of delegates, having the oldest association, and when they showed themselves upon the platform upon the night of the reception, the crush was very great. FRANCE became conspicuous through Miss Johnstone's paper, setting forth the need for an International Home in Paris; PORTUGAL, by sending to represent her a male student resident in Geneva! CHINA and JAPAN were in evidence by a request from missionaries for Y.W.C.A. help among factory workers, which the conference unanimously recommended should be sent to them. Perhaps most interesting of all were the papers read by Miss TAYLOR and Miss HILL upon the educational side of Y.W.C.A. work in AMERICA and INDIA, and the utilization of our "sweet girl-graduates" as secretaries, and teachers of their less cultured sisters.

THE SPIRITUAL TONE OF THE CONFERENCE

is impossible, to report. One feels sad that the best of a religious gathering should always be the intangible, which cannot be embodied in mere words. But at least we may hope to have carried away a little of it to energize our lives and work, that as our bodies were invigorated by the air on the mountain sides, our minds elevated by new views of nature's glories and fresh thoughts about nature's God, the Holy Spirit may have whispered to our souls: "Be ye also enlarged," and we may have a wider spiritual view, a larger fellowship, loftier aims, more strenuous exertion, more God-like charity—in fact, spiritual length and breadth and depth and height according as Divine Power had given to us all things pertaining to life and godliness, and that to "earth's remotest bound" may be felt, through us, the effect of the world's Y.W.C.A. Conference.

"SLIEVARDIA."

The following additional particulars from the report reach us through the Hon. Emily Kinnaird:—

In many respects the calls from Japan may be said to have a prior claim over those from China; and of these two, the educational or the industrial situation, we must give precedence to the educational. In the spring of 1901, there was opened at Tokio the Women's University of Japan. Thirty-two of Japan's best statesmen and educationalists are its trustees. The course of study is to last three years; there are special departments of English and French literature, and, further, no student is expected to enter under seventeen years of age. So many applications poured in before the university opened that the standard of examination had to be raised, and four books of geometry, besides a knowledge of Chinese and Japanese classics, are required for entrance.

The young women who enter are those who have been for a longer or a shorter time in the mission-schools; some are Christians, others may have been baptised; others again have only an intellectual knowledge of Christ. Are they then far different from the young women at Upsala or Christiania, Copenhagen or Paris, Girton or Wellesley?

The university opened with 500 students, who have taken up their intellectual work with zest. The young women of our best western colleges need the help of religious organizations; how much more these clever young women of this ambitious empire? The young women of the west go out to unite with much useful work of various kinds; these young women go out to point and lead the way for the rising generation, following them all the more closely because these are pioneers in a way which is novel, and therefore admirable, as are all new methods in Japan. We want to send out to them the best and brightest and most steadfast young Christian women of this western world of Europe or America, who will live near the university, welcome them to an attractive home, teach them of western literature, and live before them the highest standard of Christian womanhood.

Demill College.—Rev. A. B. Demill, president of the Ladies' College, St. Catherine's, Ontario, writes:—"We are still in the great struggle to rescue the Protestant girls, meeting the difficulties before us as well as we can. A Roman Catholic in some way secured the sub-agency of the property we are in, and has been using his ingenuity to crush us out, but He that is for us is more than all that can be against us. A gentleman in New York has promised us £200, on condition that we could raise the whole amount of the balance still due on the property—£4,000. Since then I have met two other friends who promised each a like amount on same conditions. Some are promising smaller sums. We could do a wonderful work if the burden were lifted."

S. Arcot, India.

THE HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES MISSION.

PUNROOTY, in South Arcot, lies outside the beaten track, and is, therefore, not much molested by trippers. The inhabitants, of whom there are about 20,000, engage largely in trading with ground-nuts and in oil-making. The only European living here besides the Lutheran missionaries is Miss F. M. Reade, who looks back upon twenty-six years of faithful testimony among the natives of India,

It has been said of her work, on the one hand, that it represented but small results; on the other hand we were told by friends, themselves hard labourers in the mission field, that, though small in number, her converts stood the test of being thorough.

If we take into account all the drawbacks and difficulties which beset a solitary woman in a land where the native woman has no standing but that of servitude, and in a town so untouched by European civilization, the marvel is, not that there are so few, but that there are so many professing Christians (there are about eighty in membership with the church), who acknowledge the spiritual leadership of one so delicate in frame, yet so strong and enduring in soul that nothing will daunt her courage. Despising the assaults of climate upon her constitution, unmindful sometimes even of the necessaries of life, she will travel about the country, preaching to whosoever will hear; and, while doing so, the same jolting bullock-cart which is her conveyance serves her as home and shelter.

Hostile manifestations from those to whom she eagerly communicates the glad tidings of a free salvation are less frequent now than they used to be. The people, as we had opportunity to watch, will gather around her and her native helpers at street-corners and in market-places, and attentively listen; they will drop into the mission-hall, attracted by the singing, and behave quietly. Now and then one comes out, willing to be taught the way of life. He soon professes to be Christian at heart, but when it comes then there is a full-stop; and the disappointed missionary, who, in her fight with the powers of darkness, seems at times defeated, has no friend to give her a word of cheer or sympathy, while mission supporters at home clamour for new results. There is no Keswick to look forward to, where the raptured soul receives new visions of the Mount of Transfiguration; and echoes travel slowly. All around is darkness and devil-worship, and the sole refuge and the best, after all, is God Himself. Can we doubt that such a soul, in pouring itself out before Him, hears the very whisper of His voice?

Seeing our friend so lonely made our hearts ache, and we naturally asked, "Why not have a helper, or why not join an organized mission, which at least would carry the increasing financial burden of the work?" To this our Spirit-taught sister replied: "With regard to my standing alone, the whole question turns upon whether you yourself take the initiative or whether God leads you by His providence into the position. It is a position absolutely contrary and trying to my nature; but God literally hedged up my path and drove me into it, and, therefore, I have no alternative but to accept it, with all the looking askance and misunderstanding it brings from those who do not know me personally. I dare not leave it, and take upon myself to say, I will put myself in another, without the distinct moving of the cloud. He has so marvellously gone before me, shown me the way, answered prayer, supplied every need directly Himself as it arose, granted deliverances; in fact, so literally fulfilled His Word to me since I first came out, that I feel it would be grieving to Him, an ungrateful return, for me now to seek to man."

As God deals with each one individually, we feel we have no right to substitute our own wisdom in the place of "God hath told me." Miss Reade, however, sorely needs a consecrated helper, one whose loving heart would make up for her forgetfulness of self and its needs, and hold up her hands in the work she loves so much.

As many of her old friends and subscribers have been called home, we think it our duty to make this fact known to mission friends. And may we again ask those who may be about to visit India not to forget the "out-of-the-way mission stations." It is well to sacrifice some of the sights in order to bring cheer into the camp of some lonely worker.

Our visit to Punrooty only lasted from Saturday till Monday afternoon; yet it was long enough to enable us to see the appalling need of the place.

On Sunday afternoon, Mr. Morgan gave an address to a few Brahmins who had assembled on the verandah of the mission-house. At the close of the meeting, two of them argued that Christianity was all right, but that Hinduism was just as good. It is the Hindus' boast that, in matters of religion, they are the most tolerant of peoples. To this principle they will adapt their arguments, no matter how illogical or absurd they may be. On two previous occasions, while talking to educated Hindus of our Saviour and the blessed Redeemer of the whole world, we were confronted by the remark, "Christ is very good, very good; but Krishna (this hideous personification of abject sensuality and immorality) is good also." Oh, how our hearts heaved with sorrow at such remarks!

An interesting department of Miss Reade's work is her industrial class, in which a number of young women (Christians) are taught lace-making. Another is the "Theological Library" at Cuddalore, the capital of S. Arcot. It was started in 1891 to supply the need of inquiring students, Government clerks, and officials, who, during Miss Reade's holiday stay at Cuddalore, flocked to her place for private conversation and books and commentaries explanatory of the way of salvation.

The library, begun with seventy little books, mostly the missionary's private property, has grown to 700 volumes, some of which were valuable grants from the Religious Tract Society and from the Christian Evidence Society, embracing many good works on theology and subjects bearing on the Bible. The attendance is good, and the library is almost self-supporting.

Mrs. de Noë Walker, whose visit to the mission station was at the time of great help and cheer to Miss Reade, is now in England, her address being 21, Gunton Road, Clapton, N.E.

As secretary for Miss Reade she will no doubt be pleased to communicate with anyone wishing to know more of the work.* W. M.

Training Chinese Boys.

THE Tientsin Intermediate School for Chinese Boys, under the direction of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was established in 1890 for the purpose of giving a Christian education to boys selected from the numerous day schools, and preparing them for Pekin University. Most of those who pass through the school are unable to pay for their training, while some were unable to give anything towards their support. No boy, however, because he was poor, has been turned away from the doors of the school, and some of the best men trained in the University are the results.

The course provided enables a boy who cannot proceed to the University to return to his native town or village with an education far ahead of anything he could secure there; and in many cases he becomes the leader of the church and the helper of the native minister. At present there are in the school several boys who lost their parents in the Boxer troubles of 1900, and of course have no means for their support. A sum of £5 will provide for a boy for one year. The principal is Rev. Frederick Brown.

*The deeply interesting story of the foundation and history of this effort, is told more fully by Miss Clara M. S. Lowe, in PUNROOTY; OR, THE GOSPEL WINNING ITS WAY AMONG THE WOMEN OF INDIA. (1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

Opportunities in Hyderabad.

HYDERABAD, a city of 400,000, and capital of his Highness the Nizam's dominions, is worthy of the careful study of God's people, being a field unusually inviting for missionary labour. A missionary, with the Hindustani language at his command, has the rare privilege of preaching Christ to ten or twelve different nationalities. Many of the ignorant and prejudiced are daily seen to walk the streets armed with as many as four or six different weapons of warfare. No European is allowed to live within the city walls, and until recent years none were allowed there at all without a proper escort.

The M.E. Mission is the only one working within the walled city, and we labour under very great and serious difficulty. We have had an Anglo-Vernacular day-school for years, which now has 130 bright Hindu and Mohammedan boys. The headmaster is a consistent Christian, and well qualified for his work, being a graduate of the Madras University. Together with their other studies, the boys are carefully instructed daily in the Scriptures. By this means the Gospel seed is scattered.

THE NEED OF MEDICAL WORK.

There are many who will gladly listen to the Gospel story if we have first done something for their sick or diseased bodies; but here we are again confronted with what has always been an insurmountable difficulty—a suitable building of our own, which would cost £500. In heathen countries, especially in such a superstitious and prejudiced place as Hyderabad City, there come times of opposition and persecution; and if our work is carried on in rented buildings, as it now is, we are in constant danger of receiving a notice to quit, and then the work that has been patiently carried on for years, is greatly hindered.

Progress in Spain.

AT Malaga, in the Matamoros Hall, the Gospel is faithfully preached by E. Blanco, half brother of Matamoros. A policeman named Bonachera has been converted, and now acts as colporteur. He is fully in earnest, and God is blessing his labours wherever he goes, not only in and around Malaga, but at a village forty miles away, called Villa Nueva del Rosario, in the direction of Granada. Here they have 300 people coming to hear the Gospel, and the results are such that a godly woman who works there says the Roman chapel there will be ours, as the priests have left one after another, and all the people except the Alcalde and another leading man are with them!

A man of the congregation, named Podedera, converted in Buenos Ayres, has great influence in that village, but by the representations of the priests was put in prison, quite unlawfully. After some days he was released, an act which excited great popular enthusiasm.

At Malaga itself, Miss Browne lives in the house of the mother of Matamoros—Doña Dolores Garcia Blanco, aged ninety-six, and very frail and ailing now. Miss Browne has large schools, male and female, and a room for English sailors. At Alicante, where Albrecias and his wife live, a grand Gospel work has progressed, with large and flourishing schools. Here, too, an outpost has been started, three miles from Alicante, where another Gospel centre is flourishing.

The healing medicine of the Gospel is being applied to the wounds of Spain, and a decided movement is manifested through the country against priestcraft and towards Christ. There is still a debt of £30 on the Malaga Gospel Hall.

May I add a word to correct an error I made by oversight in my reminiscences of the late Mr. Robert Chapman, which appeared recently in these columns? The Barcelona schools were not, as stated, founded by Mr. Henry Payne, but by the late Mr. George Lawrence. Mr. Payne has, however, had the oversight of them for many years. WILLIAM GREENE.

Home Missions.

The Gospel in Ireland.

FRIENDS who co-operate in the efforts of the Irish Evangelization Society will learn with feelings of gratitude of the success with which the work continues to be attended. The annual report, recently issued, shows that during last year nearly two thousand meetings were held in one hundred different places, and the results have been of a most cheering nature. There has been no lack of response to the preaching of the Gospel, and at almost every mission there were several conversions.

In the early part of the year Mr. T. M. Carleton conducted three missions in the district of Ten Acre, Wexford. Concerning this effort, a gentleman wrote some time afterwards:—

I am very glad to be able to report that the Mission has been abundant in blessing to a great many. The testimony of the Lord's children who have been interested in the work is, that never before has there been such an awakening in these parts. The meetings were well attended from the beginning, and as they went on the interest deepened, so much so that during the last meetings at Ten Acre and Bannow every available space was occupied, and the testimonies given showed how wonderfully the Holy Ghost had been working.

Christians were quickened and blessed, and many were led to trust in and know that Saviour, whom to know is life eternal. We feel doubly grateful knowing, as we do, how hard it is for those in a scattered country district to get together to hear the Gospel. Thank God, they came from many miles round to hear the old, old story of Jesus and His love, and it proved now, as ever, that "Jesus saves."

At Tramore, in Co. Waterford, not far from the scene of the massacre of Protestants in 1798, where there is much terrorism and organized opposition, a singularly successful mission was held; and many of the Roman Catholics, who at first offered opposition, in the end expressed the hope that the missioners would return. After the close of the mission, Miss Beach, lady superintendent of the Y.W.C.A. Holiday Home, wrote:—

Before closing my work for this summer in Tramore, I should like to bear my testimony to the great spiritual benefit we derived here from the Wooden Hall services. Personally, it helped my own efforts in trying to advance Christ's Kingdom to such a great extent that I praise God continually that Tramore was the place chosen for such meetings. Many of my own visitors received blessing, besides numbers of others.

Another centre of a far-reaching and fruitful work was Arklow. At this place, not so many years ago, Christian workers were met by an organized mob, who endeavoured to burn the tent. Since then other open-air preachers have been met by fierce opposition, but have lived it down, and now all is quiet and respectful. Referring to last year's mission, Rev. J. Hoffe (Church of Ireland) writes:—

I am thankful to be able to send you a good report; the Lord is blessing us, the meetings have been well attended from the beginning, and the interest increasing, and already conversions have occurred; many also, I am sure, are concerned about their eternal welfare, and will, I trust, before the mission ends, give themselves to the Lord. You have sent us one well fitted for the work of winning souls, and as the truth is so clearly put before his hearers, our wonder is how they can find it in their hearts to reject or to delay in accepting it. We cannot help contrasting the present with the former visit of a tent to this place; on the first occasion, nineteen years ago, determined resistance coupled with intimidation—now all peace and quietness, no hostile demonstration of any kind. We trust that it is significant of better days for our land, and that the various influences for good that flow from a preached Gospel will make themselves felt in the former bitterness and intolerance being lost in a growing charity and liberty.

Many similar testimonies may be found in the report, indicating the widespread influence of the society, and the marvellous blessing from the hand of God which has followed the evangelists' labours in almost every part of the Sister Isle.

Among the Hop-Pickers.

IN KENTISH GARDENS.

FOR thirty-three years the Hop-pickers Mission, inaugurated by Mr. J. J. Kendon, Goudhurst, Kent, and still under his direction, has developed and extended in many directions. In eight centres are placed missionaries who during the day visit in all the hop-gardens round. The evenings are spent in holding services in the camps and village streets. A hoppers' camp is full of interest, consisting chiefly of gipsies. In these camps, some fifty to a hundred men, women, and children are gathered, and when the toil of the day has ended, wood fires are lighted throughout the encampment, and the cooking of the evening meal commences. The missionary times his service when the meal is over, and the people are resting round their fires. Some well-known hymns are sung, and in simple language the Gospel message is given. As the camp fires light up the faces of the motley group of worshippers, the workers are able to observe the intense interest with which the proceedings are followed.

A new branch of the work—viz., a hop-pickers' shelter and medical mission—has been established at Curtisden Green, an outlying hamlet on the verge of Goudhurst parish. The building has completely met the needs of the people, who were grateful for the warm, cheery room wherein to spend their evenings. During one month 200 letters were written, and it was a great boon to the poor hoppers who could not write, to have their letters written for them. On Lord's Day the children flock from the camps round to a bright service conducted by the Sister. The Medical Mission stands out as one of the most powerful agents for bringing the Gospel home to the hearts of the people.

MARDEN SHELTER.

Miss Julia Smart, who is resuming her labours among the hoppers at Marden for the eighth season, writes that last year was a record one for the Shelter. "Our oldest customer was said to be ninety, and the youngest were twins a fortnight old, who were brought into the Shelter at 3 a.m. one cold morning. They bore their hardships well, and went back to London at the close of the season in good health. This year we must add a working woman to our staff, as no casual help is to be obtained in hop-picking. If there is a funeral our postmen are obliged to act as bearers. Hitherto I have saved the funds by filling all gaps, but owing to a long illness I am forbidden to overwork myself again."

WORCESTER AND HEREFORD YARDS.

Mr. John Jones, of Shepherd's Bush, and myself are hoping to start once more on our walking mission in the hopyards of Herefordshire and Worcestershire. This will be our twentieth season. Last year we covered 300 miles, with heavy loads of Gospel literature, singing, speaking and distributing the Word of Life to 167 different lots of hop-pickers in these two counties. We find that on foot we are able to reach so many out-of-the-way hop-yards, to which no one else penetrates, and in such places the need is great.

We rejoice in all that others are doing; but the area is large and there is more than room for all. We hope to take with us two or three tried brethren, so that the arduous toil may be shared. We work with as little outlay as possible; but travelling expenses from point to point where travelling is possible, board and lodging, carriage of heavy parcels, &c., mean considerable outlay. WILLIAM LUFF.

Lavender for our Soldiers in Hospital.—Miss L. Farrell, 31, Birkbeck Avenue, Acton, W., writes:—"Will those who have lavender in their gardens send some to cheer and refresh our brave soldiers in hospital, many of whom have been through the late campaign? The lavender is placed into muslin bags, to which is attached a text. In many cases this has proved a word in season to him who was weary."

The Value of Soldiers' Homes.

BY MRS. JOSEPHINE BUTLER.

THE change in the morale of the Army, which has come about in the last few years, has been largely due to the establishment of Soldiers' Homes in the different parts of the British Empire where troops are maintained. The name of Miss Sandes is conspicuously and honourably associated with this important movement, which is proving to be an undermining power against the corrupting influence of the State regulations of vice in military stations. These Homes are superintended by spiritually-gifted women—"elect ladies" in the apostolic sense. Miss Schofield, who is in charge of one of these Homes, wrote, in April last, a letter (since published), in which she said, "Did I ever tell you how the sergeant-major of a regiment we have known for years cut me short one evening when I was speaking to him about the power of God? 'Madam,' he said, 'you have no need to tell me about the power of God; how can I help but believe it when I see the transformed lives of the men of my own battalion?'"

A DEEP-SEATED CHANGE.

This is but an indication of a very real work of reform beginning in the hearts and souls of men. In the face of such a fact it seems almost a blasphemy to continue to proclaim that the exigencies of military life demand such degrading and disgusting arrangements as are represented by the law, which was successfully brought to an end in England in 1885.

Our soldiers must no longer be treated as the raison d'être of arrangements which facilitate and virtually sanction vice. They must now be accorded a place far above that in our nation's esteem.

No plans for the amelioration of morality can ever succeed which are based upon a low and degrading opinion of human nature; they will inevitably fail, morally and materially. Every true reform takes human nature at its best, not at its worst, and works on that basis. Long ago, Mrs. Harriet Martineau, in a published letter on this subject, said that our whole nation itself would become corrupt if we continue to consider and treat our soldiers and sailors as "predestined fornicators" (a strong expression, but not too strong). They must be treated rather as capable of becoming good servants of God and their country; and if our opinion of them should be much too high, yet it will affect their character and conduct infinitely more favourably than if that opinion were much too low. Men not infrequently become what they are expected by their superiors to become, and what they are believed to be capable of becoming.

Coronation.

GOD BLESS OUR KING!

From misty borderlands
Of worlds beyond, thou comest back again,
With high resolves, and noble purposes.
A Nation's prayers hung round thy wearied form,
Then floated on to plead with gracious Heaven.
The answer came to thee, Most Noble Sire,
And on to us, writ large upon thy brow
In lines of strength, and with the glow of health.
We hail our King.

What myriad tongues now sing
In joyous strains, their homage deep and true,
Illustrious Sire! I hear it in the West
Come rolling o'er the broad Atlantic waves.
From the Far East, it ripples in the air
Of tropic Ind. E'en from the blood-stained soil
Of Afric's shore it gathers up fresh notes
Of fervent hope, and gladness mixed with pain.
Onward it flows, o'er Australasia's strand,
Till like the voice of Ocean's wildest wave
It breaks in song. I see its mighty surge
Of homage deep, roll onward to thy throne,
And spend its vastness at thy very feet.
God bless our King! Our constant prayer shall be,
That on thy brow may shine Heaven's brighter crown,
Through Him alone who is the King of kings
And Lord of lords.

God bless our gracious King!

S. TREVOR FRANCIS.

An Apostle to Fiji.

Rev. FREDERICK LANGHAM.

THE preparations for the Coronation of King Edward VII. have brought to London representatives of many races and climes, but among the native troops from the remoter parts of our wide-flung dominions none, perhaps, have been welcomed with greater interest than the soldiers of the King from the once "cannibal Fiji." It was indeed a pathetic scene that was witnessed the other day in front of Buckingham Palace. Countless prayers had been offered during anxious days for the kingly sufferer, but it was reserved for the children of cannibals to sing a hymn of intercession before the palace gates. One day the Fijian troops asked to be taken to the King's palace; and there these dusky warriors, picturesquely clad in their quaint tunics, sang, to the familiar tune of "Hiding in Thee," a hymn of intercession, of which the burden was:—

The King is great and noble and good;
May he find favour in the sight of the Ruler of Kings;
May he wax strong and stay the tears of us all,
For his people are sad.
Mighty is the King; and his people shall be glad.

These same Fijian soldiers, all of whom, save one, are either Methodist adherents or members of the Methodist Church, have gathered for worship on recent Sundays in the open air near the Alexandra Palace, where they have been encamped; and Rev. Frederick Langham, a famous Fijian missionary, now resident in London, has had the joy of preaching to them in their own tongue. It is fitting that Mr. Langham should be thus privileged to minister to the representatives of Fiji on an occasion when their allegiance to the Empire is emphasized, for he was chairman of the Fijian Wesleyan missionary district at the time when the islands were ceded to Great Britain, and played an important part in opening up communications between King Thakombau and the British Government.

Not only do we rejoice that the fair islands of Fiji are under the rule of Great Britain, but still more do we rejoice that they belong to the kingdom of Jesus Christ. There is no more marvellous story of modern missionary triumph than that of the mission to Fiji. It was more familiar to our fathers than perhaps it is to their children, and yet it is but sixty-six years since the first missionaries of the Wesleyan Missionary Society went to Fiji. They found the islands haunts of heathenism, savagery, and cannibalism. To-day there is not a heathen Fijian in the colony. A brief reference to the life and work of one who witnessed this wonderful transformation wrought by the Gospel in Fiji, and did much by more than thirty years of faithful labour to bring it about, will be of interest to all who rejoice in missionary enterprise.

Mr. Langham is a Tasmanian by birth. His long white locks and flowing beard give him a patriarchal appearance, but his strong physique, alert manner, and splendid voice show that long residence in the islands of the Southern Seas has not abated in any great degree his natural strength. He was born in 1833, and is therefore in his sixty-ninth year. In 1858, Mr. Langham entered the ministry of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in connection with the Australasian Conference, and shortly afterwards was sent to the Mission in Fiji. At that time the missionary staff included Rev. John Malvern, who was chairman of the district, "Fiji Wilson" (both of whom have passed to their reward), with Revs. Joseph Nettleton and John S. Fordham, who are happily still spared. Mr. Langham was first stationed on the island of Lakemba. There he had a narrow escape from drowning. His boat was thrown on a reef by night, and only by the help of a native local preacher was the missionary enabled to battle against the strong current and swim to shore.

After spending some time on the island of Viwa, where John Hunt was buried, Mr. Langham lived for twenty-seven years at Bau, the capital of Fiji, and the home of King Thakombau. From 1869 to 1895, as chairman of the district, he had the direction of the Methodist Missions in the islands, and innumerable were the triumphs of the Gospel that he witnessed during those years.

Among the troops now in London is the grandson of Thakombau, the once infamous cannibal king. In a recent issue of a monthly magazine some account was given of the enormities of which Thakombau was guilty in his heathen days; but no word was said of the transformation wrought in the wicked king by the Gospel of Christ. For sixteen years Mr. Langham lived side by side with him, and he bears unflinching testimony to the sincerity and consistency of the converted cannibal in his Christian profession. The four-pronged fork, made out of a human leg-bone, used by Thakombau at cannibal feasts, was presented by the king to Mr. Langham, and it is one of the trophies of pathetic interest often exhibited at missionary meetings addressed by this veteran ambassador of Christ.

MANY ARE THE THRILLING STORIES

Mr. Langham tells of the early days of his missionary work. Men talk of the romance of missionary enterprise as having departed, but those who hear Mr. Langham's deeply interesting addresses will thank God for the wonderful way in which He often delivered His servant from the toils of bloodthirsty men, and will rejoice in the striking proofs given of the supernatural power of the Gospel. The following facts and figures quoted by him bear testimony to the success of missionary work on a scale scarcely to be paralleled in either modern or ancient days.

Sixty-six years ago, the Fijians knew nothing of God, or Christ, or salvation. They were sunk in superstition, cruelty, and cannibalism. They had no written language. This was given to them by Wesleyan missionaries. Now they read the Bible in their own tongue, and it is taught in all the day-schools of the colony. Ninety-five per cent. of the population worship in Methodist sanctuaries, which number, including chapels and other preaching places, nearly 1,250. There are more than 70 native ministers, 3,526 local preachers, and 5,330 class leaders, many of whom were themselves formerly cannibals. More than 50,000 Fijians meet in classes for Christian fellowship.

The Fijians, in their turn, are sending missionaries to the far-off islands of New Britain and New Guinea, and with finest heroism are seeking to rescue their dusky brethren of other lands from the pit from which they themselves have been digged. Well may we gratefully say, "What hath God wrought!"

For the last five or six years Mr. Langham has been engaged on the revision of the Fijian Bible, and in this important work he has been greatly aided by his devoted and now sainted wife, and by his adopted daughter, Miss Langham-Lindsay, both of whom were familiar with the Fijian language. A great blow has fallen upon His servant. First, Miss Langham-Lindsay was called home, and then within a few days Mrs. Langham, who had shared with her husband for so many years the perils and the joys of work in Fiji, followed their daughter; so that Mr. Langham is left alone in a land far from old associations and friends, in the eventide of life.

THE REVISION OF THE FIJIAN BIBLE

has been a task of considerable magnitude, demanding the utmost care and precision, 60,000 emendations having been made by Mr. Langham in the Old Testament alone. The language is rich in words expressing minute shades of meaning, and the difficulty of exact translation is thereby increased, while the fact that the earlier versions in the Fijian tongue were of necessity hurriedly prepared, accounts in some measure for the large number of changes required. The New Testament was completed a short time ago, and 5,400 copies were sold immediately on publication. Another edition of 10,000 copies is in the press.

During his revision work, Mr. Langham has found time to render admirable service on the missionary platform. For example, in the months of October and November last year he was able to fulfil no fewer than forty engagements in advocacy of the cause so dear to his heart. This sketch may well close with an incident told to the writer by Mr. Langham:

Many years ago there appeared in The Christian some account of the progress of the work of God in the mountain regions of Fiji. This met the eyes of a good man, who was so deeply interested that he wrote to Mr. Langham in far-off Fiji, and said that he had put down the Mission on his prayer-list, and would henceforth intercede for the workers and the work in those islands. Mr. Langham read the welcome letter to his native helpers, who were greatly rejoiced and cheered by the prayerful sympathy of this unknown friend, thousands of miles away. With renewed earnestness they devoted themselves to their great work.

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

THE DEITY AND GLORY OF CHRIST.—II.

A BIBLE READING.

By Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

(2 Peter i. 16-21.

THE germ of all Messianic prophecy is contained in Gen. iii. 15. This verse, with the fulfilment of the events foreshadowed in it, is alone enough to accredit the Old Testament Scriptures as being inspired of God. Between this germinal prophecy and the terminal prophecy of Malachi there is no absolutely new truth. All that is contained in Messianic prophecy is enfolded in this germ, and unfolded from it.

There are four things promised. (1) The Seed of the woman (nothing is said of the Seed of the man). (2) The Seed of the woman is to represent the principle of eternal enmity against the serpent, and (3) is to crush the head of the serpent, while (4) the serpent is yet to wound His heel. The colossal figure filling all Messianic prophecy is thus outlined in the very first book of the Bible. We see this divine figure in imperial majesty crushing out the serpent's life, while the serpent wounds the heel that so crushed him. Here is the priesthood of Christ, wounded for our transgressions, and his kingship in his triumph over the enemy—humiliation on the one hand, victory on the other. As we trace the germ we observe it grow up into the plant of renown, with 333 twigs of prediction.

THE TESTIMONY OF MESSIANIC HISTORY.

From this body of Messianic prophecy we turn to the testimony of Messianic history, culminating in the Transfiguration. It is a remarkable fact that Peter, who was one of the eye-witnesses of the Transfiguration, rivets our attention almost entirely to the accrediting of Christ in the holy mount.

The Transfiguration was a supreme moment in the life of Jesus Christ. In the three synoptic Gospels it occupies a central place, and is the "summit" of each narrative. We have at first a constant ascent of miraculous words and works, which challenge attention; and little is said either of the hatred and opposition of the priests or of His own death, until He is going up to the holy mount. It is at this time that He shows the disciples how He must "go up to Jerusalem and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes," &c. Then, as if to comfort them and put the seal of indisputable attestation on the fact of His being the Son of God, He leads them into the cloud, which is at once a cloud of mystery and of revelation.

THE VOICE OF GOD.

Only once, be it remembered, was Jesus Christ revealed as the Son of God. In the resurrection He triumphed over death, rising to die no more; in the ascension, defying the laws of gravitation, He rose to heaven, and was received up before their eyes; but neither was so particular an attestation as the Transfiguration in the mount, when God stripped Him of His disguise as Man, and pointed the disciples to the star of empire blazing on His breast, and the crown of universal sway upon His brow. The effect was ineffaceable. Peter speaks of being "an eye witness of His majesty." See how the Apostle piles up the words—the power and coming, the honour and glory, from the excellent or transcendent majesty: "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Notice what terms he uses: Jesus, the human name; Christ, the Messianic name; Lord, the Jehovah name. All must be associated with His glory, when the voice that had spoken from heaven, but seven times, spoke these unmistakable words. God said nothing of the humanity of Christ, but all of His Deity. "Hear ye Him" is the command, investing with infinite authority every word He should speak. To avoid the very possibility or suggestion of an optical illusion or dream of the imagination, they hear that majestic voice.

Moreover, that they may know their eyes and ears have not been deceiving them, Elijah and Moses are there, speaking of the mystery of that coming death, the fact of which Jesus Christ had revealed to them only just before. Human language found the glory unutterable. Luke says Christ was praying when the change came, which showed Him as never seen before or after, except when John saw Him in the same essential glory, and fell at His feet as one dead. "Thou coverest Thyself with light as with a garment." The sheen of sunshine enveloped Him. Even His body lost its opacity, so that the translucence revealed, as it were, that which was occurring within—the Divine inscrutable nature and emotions shining through His humanity. They saw light ineffable and full of glory. They were blinded by the supernal splendour. No wonder, then, that Peter forgets all else but the Transfiguration, and speaks of the attesting voice and authorised command associated with the transcendent majesty of the Son of God.

From this mount He comes down into the valley of human insult, the deep valley of the crucifixion, the deeper valley of the burial, and the Hades of departed spirits. There is no such manifestation of Deity from this time forth.

PROPHECY AND THE TRANSFIGURATION.

It may be objected that it is strange that in all the body of prophecy there is no direct reference to the Transfiguration. But the reference may be occult. Notice Isa. ix.; we have a hint of the Incarnation; "Unto us a Child is born." Then, "Unto us a Son is given." The Divine Son is revealed, which reminds us of the Transfiguration, and His Name shall be called the Worker of Miracles, the Counsellor of Wisdom, God the Mighty, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. It may be objected, too, that John does not refer to it. Does he not, however, write from the "Mount of Transfiguration"? Read the fourteen opening verses of his Gospel, and notice that the one idea brought out is not Christ's humanity, but His Deity. "In Him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness." And do we not read in the fourteenth verse, "We beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father," the glory of transfiguration.

Again, turn to 1 John i.: "That which we have seen with our eyes, gazed upon, handled." If we consider John giving his witness as from the Transfiguration Mount we shall recognize that though it is not in the record, the Transfiguration permeates the whole writing.

THE TESTIMONY OF HUMAN EXPERIENCE.

Notice, too, how the attestation upon the mount is by three disciples of widely differing nature; there is Peter, impetuous and impulsive; John, philosophic and reflective; and James, the embodiment of Christian integrity and prudence. Can any further attestation, then, be made? Yes. It is strange that Peter says, "Ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts." I want to say, in all reverence, that whatever value there is in Messianic prophecy and in Messianic history, culminating in the Transfiguration, both sources of evidence are, after all, lesser sources for the truth of Christian revelation than His abiding presence in your heart. In the dark night of unrepented—or even of repented—sin, He rises over the horizon of your being, and the brightest stars fade and the moon pales because the bright sun of righteousness shines.

You do not thenceforth need the witness of fulfilled prophecy and of history, for you have the portable evidence of Christianity in your soul.

THE FRAGRANT EVIDENCE OF A HOLY LIFE.

In the fourth chapter and 23rd verse of Ephesians—the epistle of "the heavenlies"—we read, "Be renewed in the spirit of your mind." Notice the searching analysis, not "renewed in the spirit," or "renewed in the mind," but in "the spirit of the mind." It is as though some subtle property is suggested, analogous to the fragrance of a flower. Is not the Christian's character often without that fragrance? A high purpose, a good conscience—these are well, but are not enough. When the fragrant grace of the Holy Ghost comes upon the soul, all can perceive and acknowledge its ethereal, mysterious sweetness.

Look at Rom. xii., "Be ye transformed (literally transfigured) by the renewing of your mind." This is, again, what Paul has set forth in Ephesians as the summit of experience, and compares to the experience of Christ on the holy mount. When your carnality is thus acted upon, when all malice and pride and ungentleness and sensuality and selfishness of every kind is eliminated, and the glory of God takes their place, then as Psa. xc. sublimely says, "The beauty of the Lord our God is upon us."

We read elsewhere in the Psalms (xxvii. 4) of "beholding the beauty of the Lord," but here His beauty is to be upon us. And what follows? "And establish Thou the work of our hands upon us." It will be established when the transfiguration experience is attained. Then we can go down the mount and cast out demons. Had the three disciples partaken in this sense of that transfiguration with their Lord they would not have had to cry, "Why could not we cast him out?"

Now, if Keswick stands for anything, it is for this transfiguration experience. Thousands have proved this to be the holy mount. The glory of Deity has been reflected on them, and they have gone forth again to witness, their faces shining with heavenly lustre; and the consummate effect of our study ought to be that evermore there shall be no reservation on our part, as we worship Jesus Christ as God.

THE LAMB UPON THE THRONE.

The late Dr. Fuller, of Baltimore, speaking once on Christian Unity, said that in heaven denominational differences would disappear in the glory of the Lamb, that which was magnified on earth being minimized in heaven. He pictured members of the respective denominations arriving in the land of glory and looking for their ecclesiastical affinities, the Episcopalian for those of their apostolic succession, the Methodists for their classes and class leaders, the Presbyterians for their church order, the Baptists for those who had been immersed, the Brethren for those who magnified the truth—to the exclusion of many who also believed the truth.

At the end of the sermon there came a Unitarian to Dr. Fuller, complaining that the preacher had found no room in heaven for him and his sect. With a bland smile the doctor undertook to preach a special sermon on "The Unitarian in Heaven." He did so, and his Unitarian auditor duly attended.

The preacher pictured a Unitarian placed, by special grace, with John, on Patmos, looking into heaven, and even entering therein. While looking for the Unitarians at worship, he came upon a stupendously glorious scene, One wondrous Being on a throne had in his hand a book—so holy that none of the great host around dare so much as look upon it. But lo! a Lamb as it had been slain took the book, and opened it, and a great shout went up from the host, "Thou art worthy," and the whole creation joined in a swelling anthem, "Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever."

"Evidently there are no Unitarians in that company," said the inquirer, and he passed on further.

Next he came to a great and glorious throng of 144,000, with the Name of God on their foreheads, and a great multitude of all peoples crying, "Salvation to our God, which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb."

"There are no Unitarians there," was the comment of the Unitarian, as he passed on further still.

Then he came to another vast multitude, as surrounding some august Personage. And One, Whose name was called the Word of God, and Who rode forth on a white horse, bore the two wonderful names, "King of kings" and "Lord of lords."

"There are no Unitarians here. Christ is God, and I must either get out of heaven or yield Him homage," said the Unitarian.

And at the close of the address, that Unitarian came to the preacher and said, "Dr. Fuller, Christ has conquered. I feel I could fall in this aisle before Him, and cry, with Thomas, 'My Lord, and my God!'"

LIFE IN HEAVENLY PLACES.

A BIBLE READING.

By Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

Every writing that is theopneustos, God-breathed or inspired, has a special intention; and every one of the writings of the Bible is filled with food for our souls; but in the Epistle to the Ephesians we have the highest of all the fields for study with which God has provided us. It may be well entitled, the Alps of the New Testament, because here we are bidden to mount step by step into the presence of God in Christ Jesus, and there, from the highest tops of the spiritual mountains, to contemplate the majesty and beauty of God. Coleridge said: "The Epistle to the Ephesians is one of the advanced positions of man. It embraces every doctrine of Christianity; first, those doctrines peculiar to Christianity, and then those precepts common to it with natural religion." Adolph Monod wrote: "The Epistle to the Ephesians embraces in its brevity the whole field of the Christian religion. It would be difficult to name any great doctrine or any great duty which has not its place in the Epistle." There is perhaps no writing in the Book of God so majestic, so great. Let us draw nigh, seeking help to lead a nobler and higher life.

FROM THE CROSS TO THE HEIGHTS.

How wonderful is the transition from the Galatians to this! There we were brought face to face with the Cross of Christ, and set, as it were, at a separating point between the old life and the new. Now we have done with the Cross, for it is only mentioned once, and that incidentally (Eph. ii. 16). Instead of the Cross we are taken to the heights of glory, and bidden to realize the possibilities open to the believer in Jesus Christ. All that we seemed to get from Galatians was liberty, but here we are to pass into life, and while liberty is blessed, liberty without life would be of no profit whatever. The purpose of God was not simply to set man free from any charge against him, with only the possibility of enjoying true freedom; here we find how that freedom is to be exercised and enjoyed at all times. So the key-thought of the Epistle has been called, "glorify in Christ;" but I think that is not sufficient. You must study every word of the first half of the Epistle. Then coming to the turning point with the word "therefore," you are called to begin the walk which is worthy of such convictions as you have received in the first three chapters.

I. The Calling.—In each of these four Epistles the central preposition is "in"—"in Christ Jesus"; twelve times in the first chapter and eleven times in the second do we find it as conveying the key idea of the whole Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Look at the expression "according to." No less than ten times is it found here—i. 5, 7, 9, 11, 19; ii. 2; iii. 7, 11, 16, 20—and these, if closely studied, will furnish a great field for meditation. While this life is provided for us in Christ Jesus, the question is to what it lifts us. Think not for a moment that man can enjoy this by any power of his own. It is simply according to what God has wrought in Jesus Christ our Lord (i. 20).

THE REPRESENTATIVE AND INCLUSIVE MAN.

Have we recognised that in Christ Jesus God exhibited His power that He might make Him to be first, the representative Man; and then, according to this Epistle, the inclusive Man? As the representative and inclusive Man, He raised Him from the dead, and placed Him at His own right hand. Now see the change from Galatians to Ephesians. The word "cross" is only once here, the word "death" never. Though the adjective "dead" does come four times, twice it is only used to show what we were by nature, and how God loved us. Twice it is used (i. 20, v. 14) to show what we are delivered from. The whole teaching is life in Christ, and why God raised Christ and placed Him at His own right hand. This is the special key-word of the Epistle, "heavenly places." Nowhere else do we find this expression, but here we are being taught the magnificence of privilege and potential possibilities for the believer.

In i. 20, "He raised Him"; in ii. 6, He "hath raised us"; iii. 10, the object of God is that the wisdom of God in heavenly places might be known; then you come to vi. 13 with the call to take unto you the whole armour of God. He has raised His Son, and raised us to the heavenly places, that the manifold wisdom of God may be seen in us, that God may be glorified in us; and because we are in the heavenly places, we must needs take the whole armour of God.

THE POSITION OF SATAN.

In case our souls are still in doubt as to what is meant by "we wrestle" (vi. 12)—mark ii. 2—the devil is "the prince of the power of the air." When the Lord Jesus Christ was on earth, and was passing to Calvary, He three times over spoke of Satan as "the prince of this world." The moment Christ was raised from the dead, He had conquered death and him that had the power of death; so when the message comes to John in Patmos, Christ Jesus is "the Prince of the kings of the earth." He has taken the princedom of earth from Satan, and has cast him out. Now Satan is only "the prince of the power of the air"; Christ Jesus is the Prince of this world. We are not under Satan in the earth, but are in the heavenlies in Christ Jesus.

See what a privilege it is to be above your enemy, not below him. The fault with many Christians is that they are trying to fight their way up, instead of remembering that they are far above all principalities and powers, and need only to fight downward.

THE PRACTICAL ISSUE.

II. The Walk.—Having taken our place, what is the practical issue of such a glorious position, such a place of power? "I beseech you" (iv. 1): once again the Apostle is pleading with men. It is not the word of command, it is the word of entreaty, and the Apostle is of all men the greatest, the most tender, shepherd of the flock that ever followed in the steps of his Master. Now, up in the heavenlies, though you sit, the moment there is anything to be done, the Christ rises, and Stephen sees the Son of Man "standing" at the right hand of God. Though we may sit, we must rise to do our part, and are called to "walk worthy." Have you examined the seven mentions of the word "walking." Two are the old walk of sin—ii. 2; iv. 17. We have done with that, and come to the walk of power and blessing—ii. 10; iv. 1. Then there are three "walks" which proceed from and are the provisions of love—v. 2, 8, 15.

When we turn to consider what will really be the outcome of this, we might have expected, if our future course was not laid down in Scripture, that it would be transcendent. But nowhere else is the Apostle so practical, placing the walk so low down in the routine of life; and it is this that will enable us to deal with the relationships one with another in the fifth chapter. There is one expression—"in love"—that enables us to understand our way (i. 4). Let us mark the solemn connection of the words. Here is the beginning of power, iii. 17; iv. 2; what a calling for us Keswick people—iv. 15, 16; v. 2! Why, if these be fulfilled we shall be indeed manifesting to the principalities and powers in the heavenlies the manifold wisdom of God; for the very angels will marvel at the power of the grace of God.

HE EMPTIED HIMSELF.

(Phil. ii 5.)

By Rev. DARLOW SARJEANT.

Jesus Christ came in the first place to be an atonement for sin; He came in the second place to be an example to His people; and we are to run the race which is set before us—no mystical thing that, but the everyday life which is set before us—looking unto Jesus. Our business as Christian men and women is to be like Jesus Christ; and if the Pentecost, of which we are hearing in every address, does not make us like Him, it is not a Pentecost of the Holy Ghost. When I was in the Louvre some time ago, I stood by the side of an artist who was copying a picture by one of the great masters, and I observed that he looked very little at his copy and very much at the original. We are to run the race looking away off from our environment and away off from ourselves unto Jesus.

I want carefully to examine what this mind is like. We find it described in the sixth, seventh, and eighth verses. Will you notice the steps there:—(1) Made Himself of no reputation; (2) took upon Him the form of a servant; (3) was made in the likeness of men, in the likeness of men He humbled Himself; and (4) in the humiliation He became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Do not talk of holiness or of a Pentecost that does not produce these.

"THE FORM OF GOD."

(1) He made Himself of no reputation. That is, He emptied Himself. Of what? Look at verse 6. He emptied Himself of the form of God. What is that? I do not know. Nobody knows. But whatever it was, before the advent He had it, and in the advent, for your sake, for my sake, for the sake of an unsaved world, He emptied Himself of it.

Turn to Exodus xxxiii. Here is a man who says, "I want to see the form of God. Show me Thy glory." And He said, "I will make all My goodness pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee; and will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will show mercy on whom I will show mercy. Thou canst not see My face; for there shall no man see Me, and live. Behold there is a place by Me, and thou shalt stand upon a rock; and it shall come to pass, while My glory passeth by, that I will put thee in a cleft of the rock, and will cover thee with My hand while I pass by."

What is it? I do not know. In the transfiguration the Lord Jesus took the three favoured men, and in that manifestation of glory they saw His face shining as the sun, and His raiment glistening as the light; but they did not know what the form of God was. Yet whatever it was, He emptied Himself of it. Let this mind be in you. The second Person in the glorious Trinity, born of a virgin, made in the likeness of sinful flesh—from heaven He came to earth, from glory to shame, from greatness to lowliness. Let this mind be in you.

Have you, for the sake of an unsaved multitude, found the holiness or the Pentecost which has enabled you to empty yourself for that multitude? He is the brightest advocate of the Divine truth who is the greatest example of its influence. Do not let us talk of holiness which does not lead to self-abnegation.

When the Holy Ghost in your conscience bears witness to your statement, there is no exaggeration. "Sorrow hath filled my heart"; do you know anything about it? Be on your guard against a spurious Christianity or holiness. I know people who want holiness for self-gratification. We have heard much about praying for a revival. When we are baptized into that spirit, a revival will come. Let that mind be in you.

THE FORM OF A SERVANT.

(2) He took upon Him the form of a servant, or slave. Angels had ministered unto Him. When, in the garden of temptation and humiliation, the Apostle Peter took the sword and struck off the ear of the servant of the high priest, "Put it up," said Christ. "Do you not know that I could pray My Father, and He would send Me twelve legions of angels?" But

He did not. He took upon Him the form of a slave. A slave had no property. The foxes had holes and the birds of the air had nests, but He had not where to lay His head. Think of it; no property. He was a slave of His Father. If you have studied the Gospel by John, you will see how fully He was the slave of His Father. "I seek not Mine own will," and He never did so.

WITH EYES FOR BASIN AND TOWEL.

He was the slave of man, always serving, no self-seeking, and whether in the multitude or whether by the way, He said, "I came not to be ministered unto;" it never enters His mind. "I came to minister:" will you follow Him? Let this mind be in you. He is going into the upper room. There is a basin at the door, and a towel. Not one of the twelve notices the basin or the towel; but He sees them. He girded Himself with the towel. He went to the basin. He began to wash the disciples' feet. Would not that spirit change your church, change the character of your service and ministry? "I am among you as One that doth serve."

If so poor a worm as I
May to Thy great glory live,
All my actions sanctify,
All my words and thoughts receive.
Claim me for Thy service,
All I have and all I am.

Will you take that towel and gird yourself that you may wash your fellow-disciples' feet?

(3) "Being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself." This is the crisis of redemption — Divinity in the weakness of humanity; the Son of God, the Creator of the worlds, in this feeble human body. "Sacrifice and offering," He said, "Thou wouldest not; a body hast Thou prepared." Cramped and cribbed in this human flesh—what for? That He might be touched with the feelings of your infirmities. Do you minister in that spirit? Do you take the sorrows of others into your heart in that way?

"CAN I NOT DO WHAT I LIKE?"

I do not understand mystical religion. "I beseech you by the mercies of God that ye present your bodies, a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Can I not dress as I like? No. Can I not go where I like, do what I like with this body? No, no. Know you not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost? To follow Him, let this mind be in you. "And being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself."

Beware of a false humility, a carnal humility, which is robbing Jesus Christ of glory and service. "I am a man of slow speech and tongue"—false humility. "I knew thee that thou wert an hard man"—false humility. "He humbled Himself." There is no haughtiness like that of stooping, but Jesus Christ never did anything in that spirit. He did nothing condescendingly. Oh, how Christian service is spoiled by an elevation which speaks of self. "He humbled Himself" in self-forgetfulness.

Let this be the essence and sweetness of your ministry. He became obedient unto death. Became? Was He not always obedient? Yes, but not always obedient unto death. He became, He learned obedience. Do not be afraid. How did He learn? In the way you will have to learn, on the path that I shall have to learn.

GETHSEMANE NOT REBELLION.

Come to the garden. The leaves cast their shadows. It is night, and you find three men with that Holy Man of Sorrows. He says, "Watch and pray," and He went to pray. The sweat of blood is on His heart as well as on His brow; and He said, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from Me." He returned to the three men for one look or word of sympathy, but He found them sleeping. He went back, and said, "Oh, My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me." He came again for one look, or word, or expression of sorrow in His sorrow, but they were asleep. He has come to you for that, and has found you asleep. He went back, and said, "If it be not possible, not My will, but Thine be done." He became obedient. Do not confound Gethsemane with rebellion.

Oh, be faithful—be faithful unto death. That does not mean unto the moment of your translation. It means to the point of dying every day for Christ and for men.

(4) He became obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross. The death of deaths. The death with the agony of the sting of the world's sin in it. Oh, think of it; and while the darkness of the sky is only the emblem of another darkness, He cries—"My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?"

A man who did not understand the mystery of that cry, or the agony of it, said, "He saved others, Himself He cannot save." He did not understand its meaning. But it was true. He saved others; Himself He could not save. You cannot save yourself and save others. It is only by death to self that we save the world.

PARTAKERS OF HIS SUFFERINGS.

AN ADDRESS TO YOUNG MEN.

By BISHOP TUGWELL.

That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death (Phil. iii. 10).

The question I should like to ask is, Do we desire to know what it is to become partakers of His sufferings?

Nine years ago, at Keswick, I remember dear Robert Stewart, who since died in China for Christ's sake, quoted John xx. 21: "As my Father hath sent Me, even so I send you." He went on to urge attention to the context. The preceding verse says that Christ showed the disciples His hands and His side, the nail-prints and spear-thrust, in His risen body. The lesson is that Christ says in effect, "As My Father sent Me forth to suffer, as these wound-prints indicate, so I send you forth as My servants to die if called to do so, and also to victory."

WHEREIN TRUE GREATNESS LIES.

It is only as the Church of Christ suffers that she can fulfil her mission. It was recently said by a political leader that "the greatness of a nation consists not in size, in numbers, or in wealth, but in the willingness of its people to suffer in its interests." The contention was applauded, the public approved truth.

It applies with equal force to the Church of Christ. Her greatness consists not in numbers or wealth, but in the spirit of self-sacrifice which should be manifested in us as followers of the Lord.

If this be so, and if the Holy Ghost has dealt with us on the matter, have we not reached the point at which some definite action should be taken? Consider, what is the thing God wants you to do? And I want to raise the question, "Has not God been putting before you the foreign mission-field?" I trust that true service means to us being thrust forth into the harvest. It must be so as we respond to the Holy Spirit's claims.

A PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

Speaking personally, I did not want to go, but when I had made up my mind to follow Christ by going, my dearest friends said, "Oh it's a mistake." Even an infidel, upon whom I happened to call, protested that I was committing a great error. "You have a good influence here," he said, "upon the young men, and you ought to continue." My sisters pleaded with me. I was told I should kill my aged father. The devil put every obstacle in the way, but the Holy Ghost thrust me out, and I praise God for it.

I shall never forget a visit I paid at that time to St. Leonards in order to obtain some rest. I was weary of the conflict and had nearly yielded. I went, however, one Wednesday evening to a church service. The preacher gave out as his text, "I have opened my mouth unto the Lord, and I cannot go back." I came out of the church filled with joy; the question was settled. Have I ever regretted going? Never. On the other hand I have never ceased to praise God that He led me to Africa. "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men."

THE MISTAKE OF HESITATION.

So it will be with any here who feel led to go forth. If the Holy Ghost lays this matter upon you, and you answer "Yes," then your friends may say, "It is all a mistake," but you will not. The mistake men do make is that when God speaks they hesitate. Do they not often own it later, saying "If only I had gone when I had the opportunity that is past."

I should like to refer to two who did listen to the voice of God and who did go.

On one occasion I was speaking at Ridley Hall, Cambridge, on the subject of the missionary call. One of the audience was a young man, who was evidently going through a severe conflict. He sat quite still, looking down, and speaking not a word. Later he came and gave himself to God for Hausaland. That was Dudley Rider. He sleeps in Hausaland. As we stood in that grass hut, his voice was clear, though ours were broken as he said, "Sing a hymn." We were downcast, but his whole countenance was lit up, and he said, a few minutes before he passed to his rest, how glad he was that he had been enabled to give his life for Christ in Hausaland.

Again, I was once speaking at Salisbury, and in the course of my address said that we wanted a medical man for work in Hausaland. Next morning, I was on my way to the railway station, when a young fellow darted after me and said, "I'm a doctor, I'll go to Hausaland." He went; has he ever regretted it? No.

I am not pleading with you in the interests of any particular part of the world, for it is all one great field; but I would urge every young man to whom the Holy Ghost is speaking upon this matter to settle the question, in all solemnity, alone with God.

*The Nation's Prayer and Thanksgiving

THE ILLNESS OF THE KING.

So near the hour of solemn Coronation,
So near the day of festal joys and songs
Low lay our King in deadly tribulation:
Awe-struck and stunned, the mighty, grieving throngs.
"Lord, why is this?" in trembling tones was spoken;
"Why brightest hopes give place to darkest fears?
What message comes from Thee in such a token?
Oh, spare our King! give not this day to tears."

DIVINE EXPOSTULATION WITH THE NATION

"'Tis not in wrath; 'tis Fatherly correction;
Fain would I lead a nation in My ways;
Long have I sought your wayward wills' subjection;
Why, O My people, why these long delays?
Had ye but hearkened unto My commandments,
Surely, your peace had like a river flowed;
Why still deceived by this world's vain enticements?
Flee from your sins; 'Prepare to meet your God!'"

THE NATION'S CONFESSION.

Lord, we have Thee most grievously offended:
Pride and self-will have led us far astray;
Well might our Empire's day of grace have ended;
Each one has turned to his own evil way.
Yet, in Thy mercy, pardon our transgressions,
For Jesus' sake, in Whose great Name we plead;
Save thou our King! oh, hear our intercessions:
Grant him Thy strength in this his time of need.

THE NATION'S THANKSGIVING.

"'Tis done! 'tis done!" Thy healing word was spoken;
Swift to the King Love's Messenger there stole—
"Your prayer is heard; be this command the token—
'My son, arise! Christ Jesus makes thee whole.'"
Now shall descend on him high benediction:
His stricken form shall slay our hateful strife;
Strong shall he rise from out his dire affliction—
God's Call to all, to lead a nobler life.

O King of kings! we thank, we praise, we bless Thee:
Heaven's star of hope has dawned within our breast.
Chastened by sorrow, meekly we confess Thee;
'Neath Thy strong wings our fears are hushed to rest.
Dark was the night; but bright is now the morning;
The clouds dispersed by sunshine high above;
King, Queen, and people, robed in joy's adorning,
Blest with Thy favour, Lord and King of Love!

Ernest Hudson's Recovery.

By Rev. JOSEPH WOODHOUSE.

There is a fountain filled with blood
Drawn from Emmanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood
Lose all their guilty stains.

Dear, dying Lamb! Thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power,
Till all the ransomed Church of God
Be saved, to sin no more.

IT was this hymn that was used by the Spirit of God to reclaim Ernest Hudson.

For a short time he had been an active professor of religion. But he drifted away from the faith of the Gospel, and became the companion of Sabbath-breakers and drunkards.

Hudson was seated in a public-house one Sunday evening. For months past he had spent several hours of the Lord's Day in a similar manner. A darkness was over his mind. The paralysis of unbelief had seized his heart. The stupor of strong drink had benumbed his soul.

Within hearing of five or six boon companions drinking in the parlour of the Duke of Wellington, in a quiet town in Devonshire, stood a band of singers. If they could not preach the Gospel in eloquent speech, they could sing words of life written by others. Why, on this occasion, had they chosen the hymn beginning with the familiar sentence:—

There is a fountain filled with blood?

By accident? Surely not! There is no such thing as accident in the Divine purpose that brings a sinful soul to itself and to Christ. It was part of God's plan that the members of the "Christian Band" should stand where they did, and sing this hymn through.

The words were very familiar to Ernest Hudson. They were like old friends coming back to him after months of separation. Whether he listened intentionally or not, he could not avoid hearing every stanza. Almost unconsciously he found himself repeating the last verse, as the singers poured it forth:—

Then in a nobler, sweeter song,
I'll sing Thy power to save,
When this poor lisping, stammering tongue
Lies silent in the grave.

There was a chorus to it that was repeated several times, in which the words, "lies silent in the grave," occurred again and again.

Hudson grew hot, then almost shivered with cold. "Silent in the grave!" The grave had dark terrors for him, for "after death the judgment." How could he meet the judgment? What would it be like? "He had broken faith with Christ! . . . Christ had never done him any wrong, but he had wronged Christ." Tears swam in his eyes, and a lump rose in his throat. "He had fallen out of step with Christ. The future, the judgment, the open book of God's remembrance — how could he face these supreme realities?" "Silent in the grave!" would end all things here.

His immediate thought was to find an excuse for leaving his companions earlier than usual. In fact, the arrow of conviction had entered his soul, and he was sick at heart.

"Good night!" was spoken abruptly, and without another word he left the house. There is no need to follow him. With broken and contrite heart he sought his heavenly Father, making the prodigal's confession his own: "Father, I have sinned against heaven and in Thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called Thy son." And in His infinite mercy, through Jesus Christ, God removed his transgressions "as far as the east is from the west."

All the early religious associations of Ernest Hudson were with Methodism. He had been a boy in a Methodist Sunday-school, and grew up amid the fervour and activity of these energetic followers of John Wesley. In due time he made a public profession of faith, and at first seemed to "run well."

Not being thoroughly "rooted and grounded in love," the perilous relapse came, and "the world, the flesh, and the devil"—a trinity of soul-destroying forces—asserted their tyrannous sovereignty. The true "King of Love" was dethroned, and the city of Mansoul was in the keeping of the enemy.

The downfall was soon complete. The church was exchanged for the tavern, the pew for the "seat of the scornful," the psalm of praise for the ribald song, the holy keeping of the Sabbath for the open profanity of its sacred hours.

There he sat, as gay as any, when the Christian Band sang before the doors of the "Duke of Wellington" Cowper's familiar lines. And so it came to pass that, as Dr. H. Bonar wrote:

The Shepherd sought His sheep,
The Father sought His child;
They followed me o'er vale and hill,
O'er deserts waste and wild;
They found me nigh to death,
Famished, and faint, and lone;
They bound me with the bands of love;
They saved the wandering one.

The reclamation of Ernest Hudson was permanent. His coming to God and to himself was not like the morning cloud and the early dew. He has been kept by the grace of his Saviour, and used not a little by the Holy Spirit in works of faith and labours of love.

In quiet humility Hudson returned to the scene of his former labours among the young. First suspicions as to the genuine character of his repentance were speedily removed. He made the request to the superintendent of the Sunday-school to give him for a class the most unmanageable lads in the school. With some misgivings the request was granted, but the wisdom of acceding to it has been more than justified. About no class in the whole school is there more hope that the labour expended upon it is not in vain in the Lord.

The argument Hudson used in seeking to be reinstated as a teacher was, "I know what it is to be reckless, defiant, wilful. Let me deal with those who were as I was in the dark days of my declension, and, God helping me, I will manage them."

The early years of the new century find Ernest Hudson one of the most energetic and valued workers in the town of his nativity, where his fall and recovery are items of history in the last twenty years.

He is respected, trusted, honoured by all who know him. His business has recovered the decay that set in during faith's eclipse. The church with which he is associated has elected him to positions of responsibility, which he fills with intelligence and ability. His gift of fluent speech is laid upon the altar of Christ's service. Few are the Sundays when his voice is not heard proclaiming from some village pulpit the supreme story of the Cross of the Lord Jesus.

And if he were interrogated to-day it would be out of the fulness of a consecrated heart that he would testify to the fact of another stanza in Cowper's hymn:—

E'er since by faith I saw the stream
Thy flowing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die.

It was the fountain of blood, "shed for many for the remission of sins," that Ernest Hudson found to be enough for life and death, for time and eternity. And it is:—

Enough for each, enough for all,
Enough for evermore.

The White Slave Traffic.—Mr. W. A. Coote writes:—"In the report of the official Conference at Paris, which appeared in The Christian, Holland is not mentioned as having been represented, and it is only just to say that from the very first the Dutch people have been most enthusiastic in their work in this direction. Of all the National Committees they have perhaps been most to the front in their efforts to suppress this vile traffic. Holland was represented by three delegates, one of whom was our esteemed friend, Rev. Henry Pierson, who for many years has done such good work in connection with the Orphan Homes at Zetten, and whose name in Holland is a household word. He is the brother of the late Prime Minister."

George Müller's Testimony.

NEARLY seven years ago I happened to be spending a Sunday in Bristol, and in the evening went to hear George Müller preach. He took as his text 1 Tim. i. 15, "The Chief of Sinners." There was a good deal of extreme teaching on the subject of sanctification being propagated in Bristol at the time, and on that account perhaps he spoke more strongly than he would otherwise have done, warning his hearers of false doctrine, and dwelling specially on the failure and sin of his own Christian experience. It was a very black picture he gave of himself, I remember, and as I knew nothing of his spiritual experience beyond what he had uttered that night, and as I was seven years younger then than I am now, I sat down forthwith and wrote a long letter to him on the subject of "Sanctification by Faith." Among other things, I referred to the marvellous testimony borne by his work to God's faithfulness in supplying temporal needs—could He not be trusted to meet our spiritual needs in even a more glorious way? And should our testimony to the latter not be as clear and definite as our testimony to the former?

In reply I received the following letter, which I found among my papers lately. It is in Mr. Müller's quaint writing, which must have been the medium of carrying tidings of life and joy to many, many thousands. Without touching on all my arguments about sanctification, he put into thirty-six lines one of the most God-glorifying testimonies I have ever read. Needless to say, if I had any doubts about his knowing the fulness of God's salvation they were speedily scattered.

Dear Sir,—I became a believer in the Lord Jesus in the beginning of November, 1825, now sixty-nine years and eight months. For the first four years afterwards, it was for a good part in great weakness; but in July, 1829, now sixty-six years since, it came with me to an entire and full surrender of heart. I gave myself fully to the Lord. Honours, pleasures, money, my physical powers, my mental powers, all were laid down at the feet of Jesus, and I became a great lover of the Word of God. I found my all in God, and thus in all my trials of a temporal and spiritual character, it has remained for sixty-six years. My faith is not merely exercised regarding temporal things, but regarding everything, because I cleave to the Word. My knowledge of God and His Word is that which helps me.—Yours sincerely,

George Müller.

Bristol, July 17, 1895.

Again, later, not long before the end I think, I heard him preach, and strangely enough from the same text. Again it was George Müller, "the chief of sinners"; but this time I was not to be deceived, for between the lines of his sermon I read the quaint writing of a little sheet of note-paper, and somehow it seemed to spell out "The Chief of Nineteenth Century Saints." Thy Kingdom Come!

Thy Kingdom come! our lips repeat
Those heavenly words, so wise and sweet;
But deeply hid their meaning lies
From heedless hearts and faithless eyes.
My soul! how great thy King must be,
Whose Kingdom rules internally.

Thy Kingdom come! With royal sway,
To usher in that glorious day—
The crowning time for which we long,
When right shall triumph over wrong;
And sin and grief no more shall be
The burden of our prayer to Thee.

Thy Kingdom come! Lord let it be
Our strong desire to work for Thee;
For humble, earnest, tireless ways,
Thy cross to bear, Thy Name to praise;
To hold Thy banner wide unfurled,
Thy message to a stricken world.

Thy Kingdom come! how vain the prayer
From those who ne'er Thy travail share;
Who take Thy love-gifts large and free,
Yet own no debt of charity.
Lord! let our faith and works agree
And both unite to follow Thee!

SWEET FLOWERS.

MANY of you have gardens adjoining your houses, and perhaps some of you have a little piece which you call your "very own." How much pleasure it gives you to watch the flowers and the plants growing, and how eagerly you wait for the time when you will be able to gather a nosegay for mother or father out of your own little plot! I once heard of a little girl who was so anxious to get to this stage that she dug up the seeds she had planted to see how they were getting on, as she could see no sign of them above ground!

What lovely times many of you have had this year in roaming through fields of golden buttercups or cowslips; in wading knee-deep through the long grass, and coming home laden with flowers to decorate your rooms. Or you have wandered through the woods looking for violets and primroses; or over the moors with their wealth of purple heather; and the beauty of God's earth has made you so joyous and happy.

But, alas! there are many hundreds living in our great cities who have no such opportunities of gathering flowers for themselves. They are either too poor or too ill. The only garden they possess (if any at all) is a flower-pot or two containing somewhat smutty and dwarfed specimens, and yet these are tended by their owners as carefully as the flowers in Kew Gardens. Think what a bunch of bright-hued flowers must mean to such as these! Many must be the messages of comfort and beauty that they bring to weary hearts.

They who can wander at will where the works of the Lord are revealed,
Little guess what joy can be got from a cowslip out of the field.
Flowers to these spirits in prison are all they can know of the spring;
They sweeten and freshen the wards like the waft of an angel's wing.

If they bring this gladness into our beautifully-kept hospital wards, what must they not bring into the dingy attics of our slums?

I wish Uncle Tom's "Searchers" could have seen the joy given to some slum children by flowers sent through him not long ago. How they were treasured and taken care of, some of the children appearing on the following Sunday with the faded remains in their buttonholes! A cripple girl had the whole day brightened by receiving a bunch of daffodils. As she expressed it, "It gives me something to think about, and I don't feel so lonely, because I talk to the flowers, and they seem to understand. I feel quite lost without them when they die."

I remember, too, once hearing a very poor girl say when a bunch of white flowers was given to her, "Oh, teacher, I wish my life were pure and white like those." The flowers had a mission that time, had they not?

There is a society which arranges for the distribution of flowers among the sick and poor. It is called the Bible Flower Mission, 110, Cannon Street, E.C., and into many a hospital and mission do the flowers go. The hon. secretary, Mrs. Turton, would be grateful for flowers sent at any time of the year, and is specially in need of evergreens and "everlastings" (helichrysums) for the winter months. Not only do all the flowers sent out bear their own unspoken message of beauty and purity, but to each bunch is attached a pretty card bearing a verse from God's Word, in the hope that this message will live on in the hearts of the receivers when the flowers are dead.

If you have not a garden, and cannot obtain flowers from anywhere, perhaps you could help Mrs. Turton by making some lavender bags, which she always has a good use for.

It is not only the gift of flowers that is appreciated, but the kind thought which prompted the gift may help those who receive it to understand that not only do you care for them, but that God cares for them too, and wants them to realize His love and pity, and to roll all the burden of their pain and weariness upon Him.

In all places, then, and in all seasons,
Flowers expand their light and soul—like wings,
Teaching us, by most persuasive reasons,
How akin they are to human things.

And with childlike, credulous affection,
We behold their tender buds expand;
Emblems of our own great resurrection,
Emblems of the bright and better land.

The Power of Sympathy.

The memory of a kindly word
For long gone by,
The fragrance of a fading flower
Sent lovingly,
The gleaming of a sudden smile
Or sudden tear,
The warmer pressure of the hand,
The word of cheer;
The hush that means, "I cannot speak
But I have heard,"
The note that only bears a verse
From God's own Word—
Such tiny things we hardly count
As ministry,
The givers deeming they have shown
Scant sympathy;
But when the heart is overwrought,
Oh, who can tell
The power of such tiny things
To make it well!

The Life of Faith (Gen. xii. 1-5; Heb. xi. 1-6).

IT was only after Terah was dead that Abram launched forth on the naked promise of God. He had two calls. One was in Ur of the Chaldees, which led to the migration of the whole clan from that sinful city to Charran, on the Upper Waters of the Euphrates. But there the patriarch's family remained. It was as though the old man, Terah, remonstrated at any further journeying, and insisted that his sons should remain with him to the end of his life. Was not this probably a great hindrance in the way of Abram? But "when Terah was dead" the Divine Voice spoke again (Acts vii. 1-4).

It seemed suicidal for Abram to leave the well-watered plains of the Euphrates Valley, and start for a six-weeks' march across the desert wastes, where wandering Bedouins and robbers would be only too glad to plunder him. Besides, what did he know of Canaan, and what hope was there that he would be able to find a footing there among men of strange tribes?

All these objections and difficulties, however, were silenced by the faith which took God at His word, and which realized that all the things which He promised were as absolutely certain as if they were visible to the eye and tangible to the touch. This is faith! It is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. To faith, the future and unseen will enter as much into the calculations of motives and reasons as anything which presses on the consideration of the man of the world.

What a setting-out that was, in the grey dawn of history—the vast flocks and herds; the camels in long trains, heavily laden and patient under their loads; the inner circle, where Sarah and the maidens rode, strictly veiled from view! Think of the farewells with those whom Abram would never see again; and imagine the loneliness, the threatening of peril, the strange sense of stepping into the untried and unknown. Perhaps, young friends, you have heard some such call as Abram did. You are to go into a land which none of your kindred have ever entered. You are to be a missionary, a minister, or in some other way to step into the foreign and unknown. But be of good cheer, God will be with you; pillow your soul on His sure word of promise; He cannot fail nor forsake. He will open up the future step by step, and at the end of a long and blessed career of service He will show you that the greatest possibilities of life are only reserved for those who simply trust and obey.

But there will be also blessing to thousands more whom you know nothing of as yet. Every blessing that shall come into your life by obedience shall descend on them, and they, too, shall be blessed.

Lot went with Abram. Not that he had faith like his, but because he was swept along with the swift movement of his great kinsman's life, like the paper and chips which are caught up for a moment in the wake of an express train. Ah, how many there are like this, who endure but for a time!

Would you have faith like Abram's? Live much alone with God; meditate on His promises, which are faith's native food; and, above all, do not wait to feel faith, but act on such faith as you have. Step out, and as you obey, you will find yourself able to obey.

C.E. NOTES.

A spirit of earnest devotion and deep enthusiasm pervaded the annual meeting of the New York City C.E. Union. The secretary's report showed a gain of five young people's societies during the year.

Throughout the Bible Christian denomination Christian Endeavour is making gratifying progress. At the recent Conference it was reported that during the year there had been an increase of twenty-two societies. The denomination has now 191 young people's societies, with a total membership of 6,354; 46 junior societies, with 1,534 members.

Endeavourers throughout the world have learnt with regret that Mr. J. Willis Baer has resigned the post of secretary of the American C.E. Union, an office he has held for the last twelve years. He has accepted the invitation of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions to become one of its secretaries. Mr. Baer will, however, continue to be a trustee of the United Society, and will serve C.E. in many ways.

Report of the Spies (Num. xiii. 1-3, 25; xiv. 5).

Golden Text—Ps. xl. 4.

FROM Horeb to Kadesh must have been a dreary journey, according to the description of the country given by Moses himself—"a waste, howling wilderness;" "great and terrible" (Deut. i. 19; xxxii. 10). While on the way the conduct of the people of Israel sorely tried the patriarch as well as provoked divine punishment. They murmured at Taberah, and fire was sent to destroy them; they ate ravenously of the flesh miraculously given, and many died of a plague. Miriam invited Aaron to join her in openly questioning the supremacy of the authority exercised by Moses, and for this Miriam was visited with leprosy during seven days. She was healed by the Lord through the intercession of Moses, Aaron having pleaded for them both with their brother (xii. 11, 13). Kadesh-Barnea, next to Sinai, was the most memorable of all the places connected with the wanderings of the people of Israel, and apparently their headquarters during the thirty-eight years' stay in the wilderness. It was situated on the southern border of Canaan, close to Edom, and somewhere between the Gulf of Akabah on the east and Gaza on the west.

Index Lines.

I. Appointment of spies.
II. Report made.
III. Report opposed.
IV. Israel's complaints and rebellion.

I. What led the People to Propose Sending the Spies? (Deut. i. 22.)

Unbelief.—Deut. i. 8, 32. Open rebellion followed, and then God's judgment came down on the transgressors, tempered by mercy at the intercession of Moses (Num. xiv. 20, also vv. 11, 12, 29, 30). The spies added nothing to their former knowledge, and, for the forty days spent in trying to find out what God had already told them, had forty years' wanderings in the desert (Num. xiv. 34).

God had
- "Espied" out the land already (Ez. xx. 6).
- said "fear not" (Deut. i. 21).
- promised (in same words) (Ex. iii. 8).
- guided through wilderness (Deut. i. 19).
- led them to the border (Deut. i. 19).
- promised to go before them (Deut. i. 30).
- promised to fight for them (Deut. xi. 23).

Yet He condescended to meet their fears, and allowed them to send the spies (xiii. 2, 3); but He punished their rebellion (xiv. 29), after their own words (2). They forgot, in their passion, reverence for God's name; took His name in vain while they were opposing His will. One sin opens the door to many more.

II. The Spies. All saw the richness of the good land (27, and xiv. 7). All saw the giants and the walled cities, but they disagreed about their power to overcome them. "Well able," "not able" (vv. 28, 33, with v. 30 and xiv. 8). God had promised nothing about their power (Ex. xxiii. 27, 30; Deut. i. 21, 30). The power was to be in their Leader. All were princes, and possibly looked much alike; but "the Lord looketh on the heart," and some were much inclined to idols, and Egypt; while Joshua and Caleb were whole-hearted for God. Ten saw the giants and walled cities through the magnifying glass of "fear" framed in "self," while the two saw the same giants and walled cities through the glass of "faith" framed in "God" (xiii. 28, 29; xiv. 9). Rewards Joshua and Caleb (xiv. 30, 38). The ten (xiv. 37).

III. We are well able. "Let us go up at once." Caleb spoke with the same spirit on him that rested on Moses when he uttered Deut. ix. 1-7. A hero by faith! (Contrast Num. xiii. 32.) Faith asks no questions, but steps out on God's promise. His order is the pledge of success. Gloriously Caleb's faith was honoured (Josh. xiv. 13-15). Canaan would have been Israel's even then, if they had taken God at His word. Unbelief shuts out many from the Saviour to-day (John iii. 36). God's gift is within reach (John iii. 16); "His only begotten Son;" "Eternal life through Christ" (Rom. vi. 23). "Take of the water of life" (Rev. xxii. 17). He knoweth them that trust Him (Nah. i. 7; Prov. iii. 5).

IV. Israel's Heart was more than Half in Egypt still.—Barely a year and a-half, and they had forgotten, among many other things—

1. "The iron furnace" (Deut. iv. 20).
2. The Covenant (Deut. iv. 10; Ex. xxxiv. 7).
3. The glory of the miracles (Num. xiv. 22).
4. Provision by the way (Deut. viii. 3, 4).
5. "The consuming fire" (Deut. iv. 24).

Many are more ready to believe an infidel critic to-day than read the Word of God, and believe Him.

Describes the scene (xiv. 1-10)—Moses and Aaron on their faces before the Lord in prayer for the rebels. (Note Luke xxiii. 34.) "Christ died for the ungodly" (Rom. v. 6). Joshua and Caleb mourning over them, remonstrating with them, trying to encourage them to do right even then; the people clamouring for stones to cast at their devoted chiefs. Then the glory of the Lord appeared, and the prayer of the persecuted servant of God was answered (v. 20).

Grumblers and Tears.—There was always some one to strike up the first wail of complaint in the camp of Israel, and plenty of grumblers to join in the chorus; but this time the murmur rose to a roar, and stones would soon have been raised had not the Lord interposed (xiv. 10; Ex. xvii. 4). So with Jesus, Stephen, and Paul.

Tears.—Difference between tears of sorrow and temper. Israel's tears of real sorrow moved the divine sympathy and gained God's gracious help; while the tears of rebellion and temper only roused His anger and brought down His just judgments. God sees the springs of our tears, and comforts or chides accordingly. (Contrast Ex. ii. 33, and iii. 7, with Num. xi. 10, 18, 23. Read Mark ix. 24; Luke vii. 30; Heb. v. 7; Ps. cxxvi. 5; and Rev. xxi. 4.

GOD'S PROTECTING HAND.

It is said that on one occasion, when William of Orange was besieging a town on the Continent, a gentleman came to him in camp on public business. Finding the King was before the walls, directing the operations of the gunners, the visitor ventured to approach. "Do you know, sir, that every moment you spend here is at the risk of your life?" "I run no more risk," replied the gentleman, "than your Majesty." "Yes," said the King; "my duty brings me here, yours does not." In a few minutes a cannon ball fell on the spot, and the visitor was killed. The spies sent by Moses were doing their duty, and they returned safely from searching the land, forty days (xiii. 25). God preserved them from all evil, for they were following His commandments.

THE FAR-SEEING MAN.

Mr. James Hill, one of the railway magnates of the United States, desired, as a young man, to enter the American Army. The doctor by whom he was examined said: "You cannot see far enough into things, my man." "Perhaps," replied James Hill, "I can see further than you think"; and though the medical man refused him admittance to military service, the subsequent success of James Hill as a railwayman showed that at least the eyes of his mind were far-seeing. Caleb, though he saw the Amalekites, the Hittites, and the Jebusites, saw as well the arm of the Lord on the side of Israel, and it was he who had a truer vision of the Land of Promise than the men who went up with him. They displayed their short-sightedness in exclaiming: We are not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we (xiii. 31).

TRUE BRAVERY.

In the early days of last century a punitive expedition was despatched to the heights of Northern India. The native troops, however, would not face the sturdy little men of the hills, and fled, leaving their commander, Captain Young. He was soon surrounded, and on being asked why he had not escaped with his men, replied that "he had come to fight, not to run." The hillsmen were astonished, and answered "Oh, we could follow a man like you." So, at a later date the first Goorkha regiment was raised from the little natives, and Captain Young was proud of saying, "I went out one man and came back seven hundred." The Goorkhas who recently came to this country for the Coronation were presented with portraits of their founder, "Young Sahib," and as a brave man they still honour his name. Caleb possessed a similar spirit of bravery when he "stilled the children of Israel, and said, Let us go up at once and possess the land, for we are well able to overcome it" (xiii. 30).

FAITH THAT REMOVES MOUNTAINS.

When Napoleon was anxious to go into Italy, his advisers replied that he would never be able to cross the Alps. To that objection Napoleon replied, "There shall be no Alps," and eventually he was able to force a road through the Simplon Pass, a route that has since been used by many thousands of travellers. Had the children of Israel but employed a faith in God's guidance equal to that which Napoleon placed in himself they would have never murmured, and said, "Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt, or would God we had died in this wilderness" (xiv. 2).

Rev. J. C. Lawson writes us with thanksgiving to God that He has sent him £475 for the famine-stricken people of North-West India. Mr. Lawson wants to make the sum up to £900 before he sails for India on August 23, and in order that this may be done, Mr. John Cory has promised £100 if the other principal donors will double their gifts. Mr. Lawson is also seeking a master boot and shoe maker for the work at Aligarh. Communications for him may be addressed to our care.

The Wesleyan Conference.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE closing days of the Wesleyan Conference were given up to the Ordination Service, in which thirty-two young men, nwho had already spent four years of probatio in circuit work, were solemnly set apart for the work of the ministry, the appointment of ministers to circuits for the ensuing year, the Obituary Service for deceased ministers, and other matters affecting the administration of the Church. The delivered by the ex-President, Dr. W. T. Davison, fitly crowned the services which the retiring president has rendered during his year of office. It was eminently practical, illuminating, and spiritual. It was based upon Eph. iv. 11, 12: "And He gave some to be apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ."

The chief points in a most impressive deliverance were—That the Christian ministry was a gift of Christ to His Church, that it was to be employed in all its various offices and functions, and that its end was the perfect realization of Christ's ideal for the individual, for the Church, and for all mankind.

In passing, Dr. Davison made reference to the doctrine of Apostolic Succession, which he described as a narrow ecclesiasticism, disclaimed by the noblest and best Anglican teachers. It was one of the heresies of our time, a fruitful parent of schism, which he bade them resist and oppose whenever their people were assailed by it. In a striking passage he dealt with the validity of their orders as Methodist ministers. They belonged to a Church raised up in this country by the immediate operation of the Spirit of God, when religion was at its lowest ebb; and directed from step to step of its constitution, not by human plans or foresight, but by the guidance of Providence to meet successive needs and exigencies. It need no more disturb them, said Dr. Davison, that the hand of an Anglican bishop had not been placed on their heads, than it disturbed the Anglican that the sanction of the Pope had not been given to his bishops. What God had stamped for 150 years with His own seal required no countersigning on the part of a human ecclesiastical functionary. The divine mark remained indelible unless erased by the Church's own unfaithfulness. The speaker solemnly urged to the ministry. God might take an Amos from his herd and his sycamore fruit, and send him to the king's court, or might bend a Saul of Tarsus to preach the despised Nazarene. He might make a brilliant scholar glad to offer his highest powers in such a service, or He might scatter the proud in the imagination of his heart and exalt the humble and meek. But Christ knew who could serve Him, and we do not. The only security for a truly Gospel ministry was that that which was true at the beginning should hold all through history. "He gave some to be apostles, and some prophets, and some pastors and teachers."

Those whom God had called and fitted for His work should give the Divine grace room and opportunity to work. They must keep the skylights of the soul clear, and kneel often with their window open and their face towards the Jerusalem which is above. They must not silence other voices in their souls simply to follow their own fancies, and imagine them to be original and striking and impressive; but let God speak, and let the Spirit mould and fashion. And then—whether their abilities were small or great, their education complete or scanty, their attainments few or many—the Church and the world would praise God that they had ever become ministers, because they were so clearly Christ's gift to his own people for the carrying on of His own work in His own world.

In dealing with the various functions of the ministry, it was urged that every minister ought to have the heart of an Evangelist. Those who needed the Gospel did not all dwell in slums nor wear rags. Never must they yield to the wretched delusion that their ministry had got beyond this elementary, but

ALL-REWARDING, FUNCTION OF EVANGELISM.

In season and out of season, with no mere professional demeanour or cant phrases, but in a bright, cheerful, helpful spirit they must be evangelists. "Distinguish," said the preacher, "between a shepherd and—ugly and awful word—a hireling;" adding that a minister who professed to fulfil his duty by merely preaching sermons at times appointed, without looking after his people, was a hireling. They must care for the people as an Eastern shepherd cares for his sheep, as Christ has cared for us. And as teachers they must know the Book of books. "Wherever you are weak, be mighty in the Scriptures, and as a Christian minister you will never lack the power to teach."

One main cause of the corruptions of the Church, especially in her ministry, was that means had been allowed to take the place of ends. Church government was important, Church doctrine was more important, Church practice was most important of all; but they must keep the end in view, which was the Kingdom of God in Christ. Nothing was important in this world but persons; nothing was important in persons but character. And the only power in the world which could set the character of persons wholly right was the Gospel of Christ.

Dr. Davison closed his address, the practical advice and timely admonition of which are but faintly indicated in the above extracts, by reminding his young brethren of the assurance of the help that would be given them in promoting the great end he had set before them. They need not fear that He who is ordering this great progress of the ages, and bringing about His own vast and benign purposes for humanity, would forget those whom in His incredible mercy He had appointed to help Him. If they thought and prayed and toiled and strove all for the building up of the body of Christ, then in the end of the days they might stand not solitary, bereft, and sad, but as faithful under-shepherds, bringing their sheep in their hand—as faithful workers in the broad harvest field bringing their sheaves with them. And to the great Shepherd, the Lord of the harvest field, would be the sole and eternal praise.

The discussion of the

throughout the Connexion during the ensuing year was long and tedious. It is not always easy to harmonize the needs of the circuits and the claims of ministers. At last the seven hundred or more ministers who are changing circuits this year were appointed to their new spheres, and on the first Sunday in September they will enter upon their work. Some of the chief changes are the transfer of Rev. J. Gregory Mantle from the West London Mission to the superintendence of the newly-formed Deptford branch of the London Mission and the appointment of Rev. T. Wardle Stafford, to succeed Rev. Simpson Johnson at Leeds, Brunswick. Rev. R. Harris Lloyd comes from Cambridge to take charge of the Lambeth branch of the London Mission, and Rev. F. B. Cowl becomes the superintendent of the newly-formed Hertfordshire Mission. Rev. J. Ernest Rattenbury, the grandson of one of the greatest of old Methodist Evangelists, goes from Leicester to undertake a great mission enterprise in the Albert Hall, Nottingham; while Rev. J. Sadler Reece succeeds Rev. H. Howard May in a similar effort to reach the "multitudes without," in connection with the Sheffield Central Mission. Mr. May is added to the list of Connexional Evangelists, and Rev. Simpson Johnson comes from Leeds to London, to help Dr. H. J. Pope in the administration of Wesleyan Home Missions.

The Obituary Service for ministers who had died during the year was a time of solemn heart-searching, and of joyful remembrance of the faithful service of those who had passed to receive the great reward. Many were the loving tributes that were borne by members of the Conference to the personal influence and distinguishing characteristics of their old colleagues and friends. Among those most frequently named were Dr. Bowden, whose love for the children was remarkable; Edward Smith, one of the most successful of modern evangelists; Joseph Rhodes, who, as Mr. Champness said, illustrated how graces might almost become genius; Samuel Walker, whose preaching Mr. Joseph Nettleton declared was another edition of the Book of Proverbs; and John Hughes, a great Welsh preacher.

Rescuing Women Inebriates.

I HAVE read with much interest the letter of Mr. Thomas Holmes, police court missionary, to the Daily Chronicle, entitled "Women Inebriates—is it Possible to Cure Them?" The grace of God is sufficient to cure not only the respectable woman who may have fallen into drunken habits, but also those much lower down. The power of Christ can rescue from the depths.

When I meet certain well-dressed, honest, happy Christian women to-day, memory goes back to twenty years ago; and while I shrink from reminiscence, and try to forget their past, I thank God, and take courage for the future.

One such has lately "gone home," and her later life was to me for many months a daily source of joy and encouragement.

I do not wish to recall the untold trial of love and of patience she was to us through many weary years. She often left, and returned. Oh, how one was tempted to throw off the poor sinner who seemed so utterly hopeless! But whenever she came back, after one of her miserable bouts, and I tried once more to bring back her self-respect, she became again the clean, industrious, loving woman that she always was when her senses were undulled by drink or opium.

Once, on her return, when I demanded the hateful bottle, all I could find hidden upon her was my own photo and a baby's shoe! "No,' she sobbed out, as she clutched them, "wherever I go I never part with these." She failed and failed again, as I knew she must until she found out the utter weakness of her own strength; but when she began to pray, I knew she was safe.

The last years of her life were spent in utter devotion and self-sacrifice. She had a passion for ministry. Every one loved her, and many who stood around her coffin could say, "She first helped me to try to be good."

For myself, she has made the thought of heaven more of a home than ever before; her last words remain to me a sweet comfort, "I'll be there to meet you when you come."

After all these years of toil among the lost ones, our work becomes more and more preventive. Ratcliff Highway is not what it was; the bad houses and the hundreds of outcast women are not to be found, but the children and the sweet young girls crowd and crowd.

Work in East London is much harder than it was ten or twenty years ago because the financial strain is so much greater. Perhaps the charities of Christian people are spread more thinly over a larger area, or perhaps weariness may have overtaken many of the enthusiastic helpers of former days; but our God knows "no variableness, neither shadow of a turning," and gives us strength to go on "faint yet pursuing."

Wales and Sabbath Observance.—At the August fellowship meetings of Christian workers at Cardiff, the question of Sabbath desecration was given serious consideration. Rev. E. G. Thomas, of Penarth, gave an impressive and lucid address on "What about Sunday?" He spoke of the growing disposition in the present day to relax the due observance of the Sabbath, and pointed out that it is not a human but divine institution. He deprecated the opening of museums, picture galleries, pleasure gardens, &c., all of which tend to Continentalise the Britishers' Day of Rest.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

THE "EDINBURGH CASTLE," E.

THE Mission by Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry during the month of August at this well-known Mission Church in Limehouse continues to be well attended, and the interest to be sustained, illustrating how firm a hold the missioner has upon the masses in the East of London, to whom by repeated visits he has come to be known, not only as a reformer who seeks to diminish the number of temptations to evil which abound on every hand, especially in that district, but also as an earnest and fearless preacher of righteousness.

Last Thursday night Dr. Henry gave a vigorous and inspiring address showing that the followers of Christ are justified in being ambitious when the cause is a holy and noble one. The Apostle Paul was ambitious, having the true missionary spirit (1) to preach the Gospel to those whom it had not hitherto reached (Rom. xv. 20)); he was ambitious (2) to make soul-saving his first and chief "business" (1 Thes. iv. 11); in order that (3) he might be accepted of God and receive His smile and benediction (2 Cor. v. 9).

In the morning of last Lord's Day Dr. Henry spoke upon national sins, calling attention to the support that is given to drunkenness, immorality, and gambling. These are the arch-enemies of Christ, and as long as Christian and self-respecting people tamely submit to the prevalence and power of these iniquities, they cannot hope to make Christ King in the realms of life from which He is now excluded.

In the evening Dr. Henry based his remarks upon the words: "Ye sought for David in times past to be king over you: now, then, do it" (2 Sam. iii. 17, 18). After calling attention to the magnificent spectacle of the Coronation of King Edward VII., Dr. Henry sought to trace the analogy between this important event and the Coronation of Christ as King of Kings and Lord of Lords. Dr. Henry incidentally remarked that the Archbishop of Canterbury, who crowned the King, and the Bishop of London, who was designated to preach on that historic occasion, are both active total abstainers.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Till Aug. 30, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; Aug. 31, Lincoln; Sept. 4, Louth; 6-9, Taunton; 10, 11, Newport, Mon.; 12-14, Taunton; 15, 16, Llanelly; 18, 19, Dunfermline; 21, Free St. George's, Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Whyte's); 22-24, Dunfermline; Sept. 26-Oct. 3, Alloa; 4-17, Perth; 18-31, Greenock; Nov. 2-Dec. 4, Ireland (Nov. 2-5, Cork; 6-9, Limerick; 10, 11, Athlone; 12-14, Wexford; 15-25, Belfast; 26-Dec. 4, Dublin); Dec. 6-16, Worcester; 21, Brighton; Jan. 9-15, 1903, Motherwell; 16-29, Lisburn; 31-Feb. 6, Newton Abbot; 28-Mar. 6, Middlesbrough; 7-13, Dundee; 14-20, Stirling.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

THE success of Y.M.C.A. tent work in the volunteer encampments has been gratifying in the highest degree. The tents have been crowded in the day time for the purposes of correspondence, reading, and recreation, while evangelistic meetings, bright and attractive in character, have been held in the evening.

Mr. T. D. Patton, secretary of the Central Branch of the Calcutta Association, writes: "This branch was organized for the purpose of reaching especially the young men who come out from the homelands. Of Calcutta's one million people, 14,000 are from Europe, and another 14,000 are partly or wholly of European parentage. This gives us a population of 28,000 as our special field. Every year a large number of young men come out to this city to engage in commercial or other pursuits. Many of these are from Christian homes, and were Church members and workers at home. The tendency is, if left to themselves, that these men will grow careless and indifferent about religious matters and gradually drift into the temptations which are so much stronger here than at home. Our first work, therefore, is to seek out these new arrivals and endeavour to bring them into touch with Christian life and the churches of their choice; secondly, through the active members we reach out after the non-church-going men and try to win them for our Master.

Scripture Distribution.

IT will be remembered that on January 15 last there passed away the beloved foundress of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. For some years prior to her death, Mrs. Robertson had passed on the whole of her work to her colleague, the present hon. secretary, on account of failing eyesight. Great as was the trial of her blindness, she used most pathetically to say she well understood it had been allowed to come, in order that she might transfer her beloved work to other hands during her lifetime, and thus feel assured that it would be carried on after she herself had passed from earth.

Happily this is the case, and the numerous letters written by workers in all parts of the world testify to the valued ministry and influence of the Association at home and abroad. Miss L. Perks, of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, writes: "I cannot tell how grateful we are to your Association. We receive many letters from our troops telling of definite blessing through these Scriptures. One young soldier writes that the Testament given him on embarking led him to Christ during the voyage."

Mr. A. C. Playfair, of South Africa, also thanks the Association for the "kind and generous donation of Marked Testaments. We have distributed a large quantity of literature, but whenever I was distributing Testaments or Bibles I felt I was giving away something worth taking, and I am certain that great numbers of men got blessing through receiving them in circumstances so unusual. A man came to my tent one day after the battle of Colenso with a torn and battered copy, soaked with water; he had picked it up as it was being washed overboard. He began to read it, and during the battle he felt he was not ready to die, but came to me afterwards, thankful that he was spared, and sought and found salvation."

In addition to the numerous appreciative letters from Christian workers, the following pathetic appeal speaks for itself:—"We, the members of the Nadayara congregation in the Attingal District, most humbly and respectfully beg our master to be good and kind enough to supply each of us with a Holy Bible and lyric book at half price. We hope fully that master will attend to our request. We promise by this that we will read it regularly, and pray to our Father in Heaven to bless us."

Friends desiring to further the work of the Association may communicate with Mrs. Arthur E. Pridham, the hon. secretary, Chesils, Christchurch Road, Hampstead, N.W.

Welsh Notes.

THE quarterly meetings of the South Wales Calvinistic Methodist Association were held at Pencoed, Glamorganshire, on August 5, 6, and 7. There was a large attendance of delegates and members of the Association from all parts of South Wales, and also from Monmouthshire and London. Rev. J. Morgan Jones was elected Moderator.

The programme consisted of private conferences and public services. Among the most important of the latter was the ordination service, when seventeen young preachers from various parts of South Wales were set apart to the full work of the ministry. The charge to the candidates for ordination was delivered by Rev. John Evans, Abermeurig, while the address on Church Polity was by Rev. Rees Evans, Llanwrtyd. Another meeting of marked importance was one at which several missionaries, who are home on furlough from the Khassio Hills, Assam, took part.

There were six preaching services, the majority of them being held in a spacious pavilion. These were attended by large concourses, who listened to the Gospel being preached by some of the most eminent ministers of the connexion. The preaching was exceptionally powerful, and cannot but have been productive of much good.

Correction.—The statement, in the "Notes from Madras—III.," that the Zenana work among native women was entirely ignored, referred to the M.E. Mission at that time. I regret that it was quoted by me; though without any intention of passing over the then existing and excellent Women's Mission work of the Free and Established Churches of Scotland, the C.M.S., and the L.M.S.—W.M.

Flood and Fire.

DR. BAEDEKER'S letter last week informed our readers of two disasters—the flooding of the village of O'Tura, with the partial destruction of a Hungarian orphanage, and the burning of 170 houses at Laurik, in Norway, rendering 2,000 people homeless.

Dr. Baedeker writes to "W. M.":—"You and your husband have seen the feeble ones in O'Tura and in Vag Ujhely whom God is using to bring strong men to the feet of Jesus, and who now cry to Him in their trouble. I am anxious they should be substantially supported, and I hope to get for Mr. Chorvat and his wife some money which may enable them to open a book and tract shop in Vienna, where their gifts may be appreciated, and where they would find wide scope for work among Slavs by colportage and otherwise. John Chorvat is thrown away in the place where he has given his message, and has done all he can do for the people, and is now rejected and hated by those who will not hear."

A fund is opened for each of the places above mentioned—£10 is given for O'Tura and £5 for Laurik. We shall be happy to receive any further sums, to make glad the heart of our dear friend Dr. Baedeker, by relieving the distresses which took place almost immediately after the large Convention under his presidency at Laurik, and after his fruitful visit to O'Tura.

American Notes.

MR. T. S. GLADDING, a member of a large drug firm, has given 15,000dols. to the Army Department of the Y.M.C.A. for the erection of a building for the soldiers stationed near Sandy Hook, on New York Bay. A part of this building will be devoted to study-rooms for a work recently taken up by the Army branches of the Y.M.C.A. That body encourages enlisted men to study for Army Commissions, and many men from the ranks who have lately received such Commissions have found their incentive in the Association.

At a meeting of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, held last week at Nashville, Tennessee, it was decided to endeavour to raise an endowment fund of 5,000,000dols., the interest of which is to go to superannuated ministers, widows, and orphans.

A new movement on the part of many New York churches this summer has been that of establishing vacation Bible schools. They are for children of all creeds, and the Bible is the only text-book used, no dogma or denominationalism having any place in the teaching. The sessions are from 9.30 to 11.30. Following devotional exercises, and a half hour of Bible study, the children do industrial work, and then enjoy various kindergarten games as recreation.

The Presbyterians have recently raised a fund of 5,000 dols. for the inauguration of a number of tent services in this city, and one new tent has already been opened. The Philadelphia Presbyterians are holding similar meetings at no fewer than ten different points, and are also holding noon meetings in the city parks and evening stereopticon services at Starr Garden Park in addition. Roger Martin.

To Aid Incurables.—The forty-first annual report to the governors and subscribers of the British Home and Hospital for Incurables shows that the year under review has been one of the most prosperous in the annals of the charity. No less a sum than £6,749 13s. 4d. was given in pensions, while the cost of administering the Home—£4,753 19s. 11d.—compares favourably with that of previous years, considering the increased number of inmates. The Home is intended for those who, having once been in a position of comfort, are now in necessitous circumstances, and so far incapacitated by incurable disease as to be unable to assist themselves, and are either bedridden or greatly dependent on others in the various offices of life. For these the institution provides the best medical attendance, nursing, and the comforts of a home for life. Annuities of £20 are conferred upon such as are incurable but not wholly destitute, in order that they may continue to reside with friends or relatives. The charity extends its benefits to all parts of the United Kingdom, and all who are deemed incurable, and are of the class for which it is designed, are admitted without distinction of sect, but not without hope that some may be either wholly or partially relieved.

Evangelists at Work.

The Australian Revival.

DESCRIBING the effect of the recent Simultaneous Mission in Melbourne, the Southern Cross says:—"The story of the Mission, indeed, is like a chapter of the Acts of the Apostles translated into modern terms.

"A new sense of duty has been created amongst Christians themselves. A new bond of love links together Christ's ministers, called by such diverse human names. A new sensibility to religious things is awakened in the hearts of multitudes. An obstinate and ignoble shyness about religious subjects is, too commonly, the characteristic both of converted and of unconverted people. A religious topic, if raised in the drawing-room, chills all conversation. Men can talk with each other about every concern in the world except that one great concern which transcends all others.

"But it is clear that the Mission, if only for a moment, sweeps this evil state of things out of existence. It melts the ice round the souls of men. It gives speech to dumb lips, and warmth to frozen hearts. Christ's followers can talk gladly with each other about their common Master and His redeeming love. Unconverted people do not recoil when personally challenged to surrender to Christ. Nay! they expect the challenge; they are disappointed if they do not hear it. There are probably scores of ministers just now in Melbourne, or Geelong, or Ballarat, who could tell of visitors who have come to the parsonage door on —asking to be taught how they should find Christ!"

A STRANGE AND BLESSED ERRAND

It is increasingly evident that at Geelong the Mission was remarkably fruitful. "The blessing that has resulted from the Simultaneous Mission to our city generally," wrote Rev. D. B. Bridgwood, of Geelong West, "cannot be over-estimated. The conversion of many hitherto unsaved ones, the quickening of believers, and the impression made upon many who did not yield themselves to God, will leave a permanent mark upon the spiritual life of the place. New classes for spiritual instruction and fellowship have sprung into existence, and old ones have received numerous additions. The spirit of love and zeal is everywhere apparent."

Rev. E. Turner wrote: "It was a delightful and a grand object-lesson to see on the platform at the tent, at every meeting, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Congregational, Baptist, and Methodis tministers, all helping the four good men that were at the head of the Mission. May they long continue in their Divine Master's service! When the people saw their ministers were united in fighting the enemy of the Cross under one flag, they united all their church forces, and fell into rank, marched to the same tune, led on by Him that is glorious in His dyed garments, and travelling in the greatness of His strength. There is scarcely a place around Geelong of any importance that was not represented at the tent meetings.

"Vehicles of every description were used to convey the people to and from the meetings. Many came to the Mission by trains and steamers. Geelong seemed to be another Jerusalem, and the central point where Christian workers met, inspired by the same Holy Spirit, and singing the same song of surrender."

The Mission has now extended far beyond Melbourne. At Bendigo, Rev. Dr. Torrey at first found the work somewhat hard, but

and the meetings grew in interest, magnitude, and intensity. As the Mission drew to a close it was found needful to hold two evening meetings. On the concluding night Dr. Torrey spoke first to an audience of 1,100 women in the Methodist church, and afterwards to a great assembly of both men and women in the Royal Hall.

Outside the Hall a great crowd of men had gathered early in the evening. Mingling with them on the outside edge of the company was a multitude of women, who had resolved to take their chance of the big meeting. When the doors were opened, the whole mass moved bodily into the hall, and the crush was so great that the ushers wisely refrained from attempting to check the inflow. So the women gained their point.

The hall filled in a few moments, and presented an inspiring sight. The Mission choir, 200 strong, occupied the gallery. Round the grand piano and organ was grouped a powerful orchestra. The platform was occupied by prominent ministers and business men. A solid block of men, 1,000 strong, filled the body of the hall. In the wings was a mixed multitude of men and women—the latter encroaching on the space that was to have been reserved for the former. Outside, a crowd of five or six hundred clamoured in vain for admission.

Dr. Torrey's address was on "Heroes and Cowards," and was an earnest and telling appeal. His concluding words were, "Let us give God the glory for all the good done. The Mission in Bendigo is just begun. Work and pray, and God will do still greater things." Subsequently the movement extended to the suburban districts, all the Protestant ministers taking part.

In other states of the Australian Commonwealth Simultaneous Missions have been conducted, with fruitful results. We hope to give further particulars next week.

Tent Mission at Kettering.

A tent mission has been held at Kettering by Mr. Charles Noakes, of the Evangelization Society. The tent was erected in a neglected part of the town, and from the commencement there was considerable opposition from the roughs. Stones and glass bottles were thrown at the roof of the tent during the progress of the meetings, while the yelling and screaming of some of the baser element tended to distract attention. In spite of this, the missioner was graciously sustained, and his earnest, outspoken messages will long be remembered. The meetings grew as the mission proceeded, and a number of seekers were pointed to the Lord Jesus Christ at the closing meeting. Many of the Lord's people expressed their gratitude for the spiritual encouragement they had received.

Work in Lanarkshire.

A splendid work of grace is, at this moment, in progress in Larkhall, a large mining township in Lanarkshire, distant about twelve miles from Glasgow. Special meetings in a large tent, pitched and worked by the Lanarkshire Christian Union, have been going on for weeks, and many have been turning to the Lord. Mr. S. A. Renicks, an evangelist, who was born in the county, but who has been in America, whither he returns soon again, is the preacher, and great things are accompanying the preaching of the Word. Larkhall has a population of some 6,000 or 7,000, and there is within its borders a true evangelical ministry, which has doubtless helped to lay the fuel that has now caught the fire. The tent seats about 500 people, and on some week-nights it is full to the door, while on Sabbaths it is now too small to hold all the people who wish to get inside.

J. C.

Rev. J. Bennett Anderson in Ireland.

Well and favourably known in many parts of the world as an acceptable preacher and singer of the Gospel, Rev. J. Bennett Anderson, formerly pastor of Byrom Hall, Liverpool, and, later, incumbent of the Mariner's Church, Sydney, returned to this country last year after his fourth visit to Canada. Since then he has spent most of his time missioning in London and Belfast, in addition to four months in Glasgow City Hall with Rev. Dr. John Robertson.

Since January this year Mr. Bennett Anderson has been preaching, or lecturing on Gospel temperance, in Belfast, Portrush, Ballymoney, and Cullybackey Y.M.C.A.s, and in Belfast, for the Irish Temperance League, supported by most of the leading Christian temperance workers. He is now resting for a time, after which he will resume his ministry of evangelism. He has two months vacant for short open air or indoor missions during this summer. His permanent address is "Blairgowrie," 26, Nadine Street, Old Charlton, S.E.

Evangelists in Open Spaces.

Though much advantage is taken by Christian workers of the opportunities afforded by open spaces in the suburbs of London and other cities, in many places highly-favourable sites are still left entirely to Socialist and Secularist lecturers. As an instance of what may be done Rev. Jesse Mayo writes that on a recent Sunday a great crowd of working men gathered at Jolly Butchers' Hill, Wood Green, N., and stood for nearly two hours listening to the Gospel, crowding to receive copies of Mr. C. Cook's "Gambling and its Sequel" at the close. If God's people are willing to go out and use language the men understand the message will be listened to greedily. "I stood with three others, one a lady. I shall not be able to be present continually because of other engagements, but plead for helpers to rally round Mr. Jim Lowings and Mr. Bradley, in order that this crowd of men may continue to gather and hear the message. Those who are led to help should be present at about eleven o'clock on Sunday morning."

Sunday School "Decision Days."

Pastor F. J. Walkey, of Leytonstone Road Baptist Church, N.E., writes:—"I was much interested in the reference under 'Notes and Comments' to 'Decision Day'; and as a similar experience has lately been known in the Sunday-school in my church, your readers may be glad to know of it. I suggested to the superintendent and teachers of the school the advisability of conducting two special services for the children on two Sunday afternoons, in the place of the usual classes; and, with their hearty co-operation, these services were held during the afternoons of the last two Sabbaths.

"The result has been that eighty scholars above the age of eleven years, have decided for Christ. The plan I adopted was to give simple Gospel addresses to the children, urging the necessity of immediate decision for Christ; and, at the close of the address, invited those desirous of making a decision, to meet me in one of the vestries, for prayer and instruction. The result is as above.

"A young converts' class has been organised, and I believe that these, under special tuition and care, will become the earnest workers and devoted members of our church in a few years' time. I believe that the reason of so many of our senior scholars not entering the churches is, that the matter of decision for Christ is not pointedly brought home to them during their Sunday-school days. I feel sure that were such a plan, or a similar one adopted, as in America, it would, under God, be the means of saving thousands of our senior scholars, and bringing them into the churches."

A nine-days' mission in connection with the Baptist Sunday-school at Shore, Todmorden, has been conducted by Messrs. E. Elliott and J. H. M. Johnson (students of Nottingham Baptist College). Some of the services were held in the open air, in different parts of the district. The visit of these young brethren was much appreciated.

Mr. William Collard, the sailor evangelist, has visited Stoughton Lane Mission, Guildford, with good results. There was evident signs of the Holy Spirit's working both in the open air and the evening indoor meetings, several making decisions for Christ; moreover, the missioner's faithful words were used of God in blessing many of our Christian friends.

Mr. William Forbes addressed the Great Yarmouth Y.M.C.A. Bible Class on Sunday afternoon last, and under the association's auspices spoke at the open-air service on the Hall Quay at night to a large gathering. This veteran in the Master's service is still full of vigour, and his visit will be long remembered.

A. C. Edwards,

Gospel meetings have been held in a tent at Hockliffe, Beds., under the auspices of the Ross Tent and Bible Carriage Mission. The tent has been crowded to excess on the Sunday evenings, and much good received. The seed of the kingdom sown will undoubtedly bring forth much good fruit. Each night the Gospel has been faithfully and powerfully preached by the three missioners engaged, Messrs. G. Bentley, W. Bilton, and Albert Richings. People for miles round the neighbourhood have made the journey, night after night, to hear the story of the Cross.

Hy. Pearson.

About Books.

By stating in a brief form The Creed of an Evangelical Churchman Rev. H. Lawrence Phillips has supplied to some extent a much-felt want of such a summary in popular language (5s. E. Stock).

Among new editions we extend a cordial welcome to Rev. Dr. J. B. Paton's The Two-Fold Alternative (2s.) and The Inner Mission (1s. 6d. Jas. Clarke & Co.); and to James Runciman's Joints in Our Social Armour (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton).

There are many in our land who will read with deep interest the graphic Life of Dr. Talmage (1s. net. Christian Herald Co.) which has been compiled by W. Percy Hicks, and to which an introduction has been supplied by Rev. J. Gregory Mantle. Portraits and other illustrations add much to the value of a book which claims a good reception by its own merits.

Others besides the young people for whom they are primarily intended have much to learn from the charmingly-written Talks About Peace and War (1s. net. Headley Bros.), by E. Josephine Penrose. The author is a real benefactor to parents and guardians who may be at a loss for simple, healthy literature on the subject, which will also commend itself to the youthful mind.

Two deeply-interesting books have just been published which shed a flood of light on the foreign mission work of the Society of Friends. The memoir of Joseph S. Sewell, by Edith Sewell, contains the record of a life of single-hearted devotion, eight years of which, spent in Madagascar, were fruitful unto the Lord of the spiritual harvest. Quaker Pioneers in Russia, by Jane Benson, tells of foundation work in a field equally difficult, though nearer our own shores. Round such names as Daniel Wheeler, George Edmondson, and Thomas Shillitoe gather many memories of pioneering for Christ's sake which are too little known in missionary literature. (2s. 6d. each. Headley Bros.).

That the volume of "The Nineteenth Century Series," dealing with the Progress of India, Japan, and China (5s. net. Chambers), is by Sir Richard Temple is a guarantee of able and thorough treatment of the subject. For each country a masterly introduction marks out the main influences which had been previously affecting the people, and thereafter the history is brought up to date. The careful reader will find much help in taking an intelligent grasp of the religious, social, and financial difficulties presented in our great Eastern dependency. The marvellously rapid development of Japan is hard even yet to understand, though the dates are set down. China has received the special treatment which it called for by the addition of a supplemental chapter treating of the Boxer Movement, 1900-1901. Altogether the volume is one which will do more than any other we have seen to place the general reader abreast of the times regarding affairs in the Far East.

A critical analysis of our most valuable and treasured biographies would in some cases reveal few, if any, incidents of outstanding public interest. The subjects would themselves have been among the first to declare that nothing had happened to or been done by them worthy of being placed on record. Yet the fact remains that among the books that have proved themselves by their usefulness in Christian households are the simple accounts of quiet lives lived in the fear of God, in the course of which grace was added to grace, and the trial of faith brought forth that patience which is as a crown of glory to the seeing eye. By very many who knew him a hearty welcome will be given to the Memoir and Letters of J. G. McVicker (3s. "Echoes of Service" Office, 16, Paternoster Square, E.C.), to which attention has already been called in our columns. Extracts are given from over two hundred letters, and the compiler, Mr. Max Reich, has prefixed a deeply interesting though brief memoir. Except in the case of Mrs. McVicker, the names of the recipients of personal letters are not given; but the chief topic dealt with is placed as a heading, and a careful index of these subjects is given. The volume will be treasured by many to be read over and over again in quiet hours. The words of encouragement, consolation, and counsel addressed to friends without thought of wider use, are well fitted to be useful in other lives; while the opening up of the Scriptures is full of that wisdom which is learned only in the secret place of the Most High.

Two Thoughtful Booklets, by Mr. C. H. Judd, of the China Inland Mission are—Women's Ministry in the Church, as taught in Holy Scripture, and The Word and the Seed. (One penny each. The Author, 27, Ovenden Road, Halifax.)

Systematic visitors among the sick will find in Remembrancer of Christ's Names (½d. Tract and Book Society, Edinburgh), by Rev G. R. Somerville, the outline of many short talks in quiet homes. The present Bishop of Durham has used a similar plan, and we heartily commend the booklet to the notice of busy workers.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of Spiritual Progress and Effort in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and not trivialities; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Preaching recently at St. Margaret's, Westminster, Canon Hensley Henson expressed his unfeigned satisfaction at the acquisition by the Wesleyans of the site of the present Royal Aquarium.

The Archbishop of York has awarded £500 from the Marriott Bequest for his diocese to the fund being raised for the provision of a Missions to Seamens Institute for the use of sailors and fishermen at Scarborough.

On their release from Bristol Gaol, after serving three days' imprisonment for alleged obstruction at Thornbury Plain, Messrs. J. W. Kensit and Herbert H. Martin were cordially greeted by the people. In the evening they addressed an enthusiastic meeting in Eastville Park. It is worthy of note that at the hearing of the case one of the magistrates said, "I have addressed meetings on the spot on political occasions, and had the whole place full. I have seen a good many held there."

The Bishop of Durham, addressing the clergy of the diocese, after announcing the retirement of the Assistant Bishop, "our dear and honoured friend, Bishop Sandford," says: "Bishop Goe, late Bishop of Melbourne, has consented to assist me, and will take up his residence and work, God willing, with the New Year. He will come not only as the experienced Bishop of a great Colonial See, but as one who well knows the diocese, and is warmly remembered in it since the time (1873-1877) when he was Rector of Sunderland.

Speaking at Cromer, the Bishop of Norwich said that the poverty of the clergy cannot be met by dividing richer livings with poorer ones. It might be urged, with more reason, that the incomes of bishops and other dignitaries might be reduced. If the Church thought it well to alter the traditional status of bishops, to sell ancient and costly palaces, to relieve them from high legal expenses, and to dispense with their attendance at the House of Lords, then no doubt a considerable portion of Episcopal incomes might be taken away. If the Church thought this would be to her interest he would not oppose it.

The Dean of Westminster, whose intention to resign immediately after the Coronation was recently reported, has definitely asked to be relieved of his duties, and the King has graciously accepted the resignation. Dr. Bradley, who had previously held the offices of master of Marlborough College, Canon of Worcester, and master of University College, Oxford, was appointed to the deanery on the death of Dean Stanley in 1881. The latter was understood to have expressed a hope that his old friend might be selected to follow him. Dr. Bradley has for some time been in indifferent health, and has been obliged to be absent from his duties for considerable periods. He was born in 1821, and is about a fortnight younger than the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Congregational.

Rev. F. D. Humphreys, of St. John's, Ipswich, has accepted the pastorate at Honiton, and has begun his ministry. Mr. Humphreys is a direct descendant of Philip Doddridge.

The vacancy in the pastorate of Mount View Church, Stroud Green, has been filled by the unanimous choice of Rev Harry Moffat Scott, of St. Paul's Church, Richmond. He has accepted the invitation, and will commence his ministry some time in the autumn.

Baptist.

Pastor Tait, after an absence of three years, visited his former sphere of labours at the Spurgeon Memorial Temple, South Leith, on Wednesday last. The state of his health did not permit him to address the meeting at length, but in a few words he wished the church ever increasing prosperity.

The East London Tabernacle Mission, Devonport Street, Shadwell, has been reopened after the complete renovation of the premises. At the initial service, Pastor Edwin H. Ellis, of the Tabernacle, presided, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. W. B. Bawn, L.C.C., and W. J. Howell. The cost of renovation had been partially subscribed, and the deficit was met by a generous friend at the close of the meeting.

Progress is being made with the administration of the will of the late Mr. Robert Arthington. Under that will the Baptist Missionary Society will benefit, it is expected, to the amount of about £500,000. By the end of the year the estate will have increased, through the accumulation of interest, to about £1,000,000. After personal bequests have been discharged, the sum of nearly £900,000 will remain to be divided between the Baptist and the London Missionary Societies, the latter taking four-tenths and the former five-tenths.

Methodist.

By the Manse Fund of the Methodist New Connexion circuits are aided to secure free manse properties. On the small circuits the acquisition of a free manse will be a great help. The loans are advanced at a low rate of interest, the legal expenses are small, and the cost of redemption decreases year by year.

An important change is being made in connection with Wesleyan Methodism in North-West Essex. Hitherto Bishop's Stortford has been the centre. Now the Hertford and parts of the Tottenham and Bishop's Stortford circuits are to be amalgamated, with headquarters at Hertford. Rev. F. Cowe, of Wandsworth, is to take charge of the new district, and Rev. F. C. Dugdale will be transferred from Hertford to Romford.

Presbyterian.

An anonymous friend at St. Andrew's, Upper Norwood (Rev. J. G. Train), has given a donation of £200 towards the building of a hospital at Unsio, in the Amoy district.

Presbyterians in Bath have gone into the more commodious hall at the Assembly Rooms, known as the Octagon, the lecture-room being in summer not so convenient. Next year efforts are to be made to secure a site and build a church.

At the November meetings of the Presbyterian Synodical Committees attention will be drawn to the inconvenience caused by the first meeting of the Aggregate Committees after the Synod being held so close to the holiday season as the third week in July. The Synod will probably be asked to change the time of meeting to the third or fourth week in June.

Mr. James Marchant has resigned his charge of the extension work at Keighley, Yorks, on accepting an invitation to undertake a moral crusade throughout the United Kingdom, in connection with the National Vigilance Association. At a farewell gathering last week the value of his pioneer work in Keighley was cordially recognised. The Presbytery of Yorkshire Extension Committee has also spoken in the highest terms of his work, and wishes him every blessing in the new and important undertaking.

Society of Friends.

A comfortable iron room has been temporarily secured in which to hold meetings at the lower end of Hamlet Court Road, Westcliff-on-Sea. The public are specially invited. It is hoped that some truly concerned Friends will be led to attend. The room has seating accommodation for 200.

The summer sessions of the Yorkshire Quarterly Meeting, held at Bradford, though attended by a rather smaller number of Friends than usual, were marked by much serious feeling and interest. The meeting on ministry and oversight was largely occupied by a consideration of the minutes of the recent yearly meeting on ministry and oversight. Taken in conjunction with the special duty of extending counsel, encouragement, and help to those engaged in the work of the ministry, they formed the basis for the expression of much helpful and suggestive thought. At the meeting for worship earnest addresses were delivered by Fielden Thorp, J. S. Rowntree and others.

The monthly meeting at Miss Child's Welcome Home for Sailors, Canning Town, E., on August 5, was an enthusiastic one. "The joy of the Lord is your strength" (Neh. viii. 10) was the text given by Miss Child, and commented on by her, Mr. Wm. Luff, and others. Some old friends gave cheering words, and new ones from distant lands were gladly welcomed.

Fallen Asleep.

A venerable Methodist of Cape Colony, Rev. Barnabas James Shaw, has passed to his reward. He was the son of Barnabas Shaw, and the son and the father between them span the interval from our own day to the origin of Wesleyan Methodism at the Cape.—Rev. W. Isaac Morris, of Pontypridd, one of the best-known Congregational ministers in Wales. He has been in ill-health for some time, and was taking three months' rest. Mr. Morris was a loyal servant of the denomination, and was also an active Temperance worker.—Dr. Agar Beet's father-in-law, Mr. S. T. Baugh, died recently, just before Conference reached its decision on Dr. Beet's case. Mr. Baugh was eighty-six years of age and had been a local preacher for sixty years.—Rev. G. W. Oldring, Baptist minister, late of Neatishead, Norfolk, aged sixty-three.—Rev. Fred J. Skinner, of Dover. His evangelistic gifts were most marked, and he took a prominent part in the Simultaneous Mission Services last year at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. On completing his student-days at college, he accepted some two or three months ago a call to join Rev. E. J. Edwards as assistant minister at Dover.—By the death, consequent on a cycle accident, of Rev. Wm. Johnston, M.A., B.D., Professor at Cheshunt College, Congregationalism loses a teacher of great promise and scholarship.

Gospel Effort in Armenia.—Mr. A. A. Hagopian, who, it will be remembered, spent twelve months studying medicine at the London Hospital, has now returned to Armenia to resume his work among the suffering and distressed. In a recent letter he tells of many opportunities for ministering to the spiritual and physical needs of the refugees. He is anxious to establish schools as the means for doing so come to hand. Many of the refugees are scattered through desperation, but numbers of orphans and natives have remained, and to these Mr. Hagopian is giving forth the "glad tidings." Mr. William Chorley, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N., is acting as treasurer to his Armenian friend.

Strangers at Port Said.—The Seamen's Rest and Strangers' Welcome at Port Said is a centre from which many visitors to Egypt in varied capacities have been helped. The workers also proceed to the vessels, and, as opportunity allows, minister to the seamen and passengers. Such efforts meet with cordial appreciation, and gifts of Gospel literature are eagerly accepted. It has for some time been hoped that the work on shore might have a building of its own, as the present rent is a heavy drain on the resources. For this purpose a friend has offered £2,000. As the purchase of the building at present occupied is not possible, Mr. and Mrs. Locke, with their helpers, have to find a new home for the work, and ask the continued prayerful sympathy of their many friends at this stage.

Notes & Comments

Hezekiah. The concise summary of the life and death of the son of Ahaz, which has come down to us in the Books of Kings and Chronicles, is, perhaps, doubly interesting at the present time, when we too have had cause to humble ourselves, as individuals and as a nation, before God. In that pathetic history, an insight is afforded into some of God's ways of dealing with men and with nations whose hearts, in the presence of prosperity, are "lifted up," and to whom a day of trouble and rebuke comes. In direct answer to prayer, after the King, sick unto death, had turned his face to the wall and had "wept sore," the message from God came to Isaiah that fifteen years should be added to Hezekiah's life. All such prolongations are in God's sight for only a definite and defined period, short or long, as the case may be, but inevitably brief at the most, for "there is no discharge in that war" (Ecc. viii. 8). The little biography is full of warning, emphasizing, as it does, the need for a quickened sense of dependence upon God. As a recent writer has said:—

If during these last weeks we have, as a nation, learnt anything of the necessity and privilege of prayer, the warning will not have been in vain. It is one thing, however, to pray in emergency; it is another to pray always.

The Boer Generals. The hearty welcome given to Messrs. Botha, Delarey, and De Wet, on their arrival in England on Saturday, must have been very gratifying to them after the painful experiences of the late campaign. This outburst of enthusiasm has revealed the true heart of the British people, in its appreciation of bravery and sterling character such as have been evinced by the Boer leaders. Their reception by the King and Royal Family at Cowes was another happy augury of the future in their new position as British subjects, and will do much to heal the mental wounds caused by the recent hostilities.

The Lord's Day in High Places. But we cannot refrain from expressing our regret at the arrangements which necessitated the Generals making the double journey between London and Cowes on the Lord's Day—as also those which brought the Shah from Calais to Dover on Sunday morning. There is far too little regard for the Day of Rest in official quarters, and the extra labour thus involved to railwaymen and others is without excuse. We should rejoice to see Royalty exercising its wide influence in safe-guarding the Lord's Day against such unnecessary violations of its sanctity.

Guarding the Lord's Day. It is encouraging to note that many leaders of opinion, including the Masters of the chief colleges at Oxford and Cambridge and of the leading public schools, are throwing themselves into the movement for the protection of Sunday from unnecessary labour. It is high time a healthier public opinion was created in "society circles," who are the principal offenders. A butler in a great house recently said, "We can hardly tell one day in the week from another in these times." Luncheon and dinner-parties, calls and excursions, have quite transformed the old-fashioned Sunday. Reform will be strenuously opposed, of course, by confirmed pleasure-seekers, who can be put down only by a thorough exposure of their heartless selfishness and oppression of their dependents. The local authorities at West Cowes have taken a bold step by summoning a tradesman for selling goods on Sunday for the convenience of wealthy yachtsmen. If this were done more frequently where the law is openly violated, a real check would be put on the growing tendency to turn the Lord's Day into a day of traffic and money-making.

Sunday in Ireland. We have on more than one occasion drawn attention to the flagrant way in which the Lord's Day is misspent in Ireland and other Roman Catholic countries, not only by the secular excursions and pleasure-making, but also under the cloak of religion. The leading Roman Catholic weekly in Dublin, the Irish Catholic, in its issue of August 16, affords further instances, in certain announcements connected with the "Catholic Boys' Brigade." The Brigade Camp at Ashford, Co. Wicklow, is described in our contemporary, and we read that on Sunday:—

After Mass the party returned to camp, where games of hurling, football, and handball provided abundance of amusement until the dinner, which was served at one p.m. After dinner the bands played a selection of Irish airs in camp for a large number of people from Ashford, who had come to visit the camping ground. Tea was served at six p.m., the evening until nine o'clock being subsequently devoted to an open-air concert. At nine o'clock the Rosary was recited in the open by the whole party.

In another column the annual excursion of the "Catholic Boys' Brigade, Church Street," is announced to take place on the following Sunday. The members are—Particularly requested to have heard Mass before going to the Brigade Hall on that morning. The excursion is announced to proceed in two trains to the Vale of Avoca, where "sports also will be provided."

The Romish theory that Sunday may be kept holy by an early attendance at Mass, and that amusements and worldly concerns may occupy the rest of the day, is subversive of all true ideas of Christian Sabbath-keeping, and will assuredly eat like a canker into the social and national life of communities in which it prevails.

Ireland's Poverty. Every now and again great prominence is given in Parliament and elsewhere to the question of the over-taxation of Ireland, and to the unequal share of the national expenditure which it is urged that country has to bear. A striking light is thrown upon this reiterated statement of a grievance by the fact that, during the past financial year, the excise duties paid to the Imperial Exchequer from the Irish people reached the enormous sum of £6,322,967. When to this startling amount the cost of the consequent crime and idleness and destitution is added, the figures become almost fabulous. In these circumstances it cannot be wondered at that poverty stalks through the land, and that a new public building, for which Lord Iveagh requires an architect, is to be devoted to the sale of old clothes!

The Gospel and the Drunkard. In asserting recently that no woman who has yielded to the drink habit can ever be reclaimed, Lord Rosebery went beyond the limits of experience. Numbers of those who have worked among inebriates testify to the contrary; as, for instance, Mr. Holmes, the police-court missionary, who states that he has known many cases in which the reformation has been complete. Such testimony, based upon personal knowledge, cannot be gainsayed, strengthened as it is by that of Mr. Bramwell Booth, who, referring to the work among the intemperate, says that there is ground for praising God for many noteworthy victories—

While the friends and relatives of former drunkards are rejoicing over the presence of wives and sisters, mothers and daughters, restored to them in health and happiness, and in the joys of God's salvation.

Such a statement as Lord Rosebery's implies a denial of the full redemptive power of the Gospel of Christ, and of the evidence of Paul, who, after including the drunkard in his dread list of those offenders who shall not enter the Kingdom of God, and adding, "such were some of you," continues, in words that are full of encouragement to both the offender and the worker: "But ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God" (1 Cor. vi. 11). See also the testimonies quoted by Mr. Meyer, on p. 13.

A Tainted Source. Without wishing to depreciate in any way the indebtedness of the temperance cause to the Bishop of Winchester, exception may reasonably be taken to the view which he has expressed in a recent correspondence in The Times. Approached on the subject of church-building at the cost of brewers and distillers, the Bishop, while admitting that "the excessive use of alcoholic liquor is a gigantic curse in this country," and that "strenuous efforts are demanded for repressing the evil," declines to acknowledge that the money acquired in the drink traffic is necessarily contaminated, and that it should not be devoted to moral and religious work. Unhappily, however, the huge revenues of the distiller and the brewer depend, not upon the moderation of the people, but upon the national drunkenness, and every "strenuous effort" in the direction of temperance inevitably reduces somewhat the bloated incomes of those whose business it is to supply the gin-shop and the beerhouse with drink. Simpler minds often see more clearly. "The Whisky Tower and the Porter Tower," said a car-driver in Ireland, pointing to two portions of a restored cathedral!

The Need of Watch Committees. So much good has been done by the Watch Committees in provincial towns and in the City of Westminster, that it is high time the same work was done in the London boroughs throughout. In Westminster alone this committee, by working on quiet, sensible lines, causing neither excitement nor sensation, secured last year the conviction of sixty offenders, accompanied with the closing of their disorderly houses. For lack of some such organization in London proper, existing legislation is not put into force. The London Council for the Promotion of Public Morality has been active in promoting a knowledge of the law, and in working with the existing agencies and the local authorities; but "where immorality has assumed the dimensions of a vested interest and an international trade," it is needful that each borough authority should organize definitely with a view to removing the reproach that makes London the most openly immoral city in Europe. Immorality cannot possibly be suppressed by law; but vice may be made more difficult, and the innocent and unwary removed from danger, by a resolute determination to remove the abominable traffic in soul and body from our streets.

The Cry of the Shop-Assistant. A dark picture is sketched by "One who writes from actual experience" of the condition of the employé in many so-called "stores." Low wages, long hours, unreasonable fines, an atmosphere of suspicion as to honesty, are among the grievances set forth. As the result, the assistant "becomes nervous and morbid, underrates his value in the industrial world, and gradually degenerates into a mechanical drudge."

"Living in." Much may also be said in the same strain of many establishments, drapery and others, in which the assistants "live in," with the provision of miserable food (and very little of it!), so that part of the scanty wage must needs be spent upon additional purchases for the maintenance of health. This leads to a moral tone which, in some such houses, is abominably low, and tempts (nay, almost urges) the assistants to supplement their incomes by illegitimate or doubtful means. It would be well if Christian employers would take pains to investigate matters for themselves.

Artificial Flowers. A recent report furnished by Miss Gray, the lady factory inspector for the Borough of Islington, is far from pleasant reading for those who recognize how some of the unhappy accompaniments of our modern civilization act as barriers in the way of the Gospel. Dealing personally with large numbers of those "home workers" whose toil ministers not only to luxury and fashion, but also largely to the comfort of daily life, Miss Gray's unadorned testimony to the miserable nature of their surroundings is touching in its very simplicity. She says, in giving examples of "cheap work":—

I found an artificial florist making violets for three farthings a gross, each flower having to pass through her hands four times. This woman said she made on an average 9d. a day. An ordinary price for making men's long silk ties is 4d. or 5d. a dozen; making paper bags, 4d. or 5d. per thousand; making tucked blouses, 2½d. each; ladies' long jackets, 8d. each. The women take out and carry back the work to the shop or warehouse, and provide their own machines and cotton, so their money is hardly earned.

A gleam of light amid such shadows of our City life is the work of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission (37, Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell, E.C.), where girls work under healthy and pleasant conditions and at a fair living wage.

A New Era in Trades-Unionism. A well-informed writer in the Daily Mail speaks with strong appreciation of the improved spirit now pervading English trades-unionism as compared with past times, and with the state of industry in America—

Struggles such as that paralyzing the anthracite coal trade in America are to-day scarcely possible here. British labour has emerged from the age of industrial conflict, and, as a rule, the responsible labour leaders are the greatest forces for permanent peace. In the textile trades a big strike is almost unthinkable, for masters and men work out their differences by frank conference. Coal-miners, ever the most ready to revolt, find a hundred barriers of their own erecting in their way, whenever quarrels arise that would lead to strikes. Engineers have found, from the bitter lessons of their own defeat, the better way of peace. Railway servants know that isolated struggles are useless in the face of the forces behind the United Managers' Committee at Euston. England has advanced beyond any rival nation in securing cordial relations between labour and capital, a fact which September's meetings cannot fail to bring out.

It is a long lane that has no turning; and if we are in future to be spared the misery and loss and sorrow of industrial strife, we shall have reason to be devoutly thankful. The interests of masters and men are at bottom identical, and to have this fact recognised by both sides is to make a big step forward.

The Patriotic Fund. The report sent out by the Commissioners of the Patriotic Fund, in defence of their much-criticised method of dispensing its benefits, practically substantiates the charges brought against them. Money contributed to meet the grievous necessities caused by war should be distributed while the suffering is acute and the need imperative, otherwise it fails in its primary object. To allow funds to accumulate on capital account, while there are widows and orphans and disabled soldiers unrelieved, is a gross dereliction of duty. On all these counts the Commissioners have practically to plead guilty. It is high time Parliament released the Victoria Fund from the limitations of red tape and the tardy methods of officialism, and it is probable that action of this kind will be taken during the autumn session.

A New Guide for Tourists. The Church Review, in a recent issue, after explaining that the Editor is frequently requested to mention books of a definitely instructive character, directs the attention of its readers to a newly-issued little volume, "Thoughts on Sundays" (1s. 6d. Church Review Publishing Company), and quotes, with commendation, the following passage for the help of the English tourist on the Continent:—

It is a law of the Church that one bishop must not intrude in another's diocese; therefore the true Church must be the national Church, if the bishops have the Apostolic Succession, and have not formally rejected any of the essential doctrines of the undivided Church. Therefore it becomes the duty of a true Catholic to hear Mass in the Catholic church of whatever country he may be in on Sundays and holidays; but as the Roman Catholics will not admit us to their altars, it is thought that we are justified in setting up churches in their towns for Anglican priests to minister to their own people; but if these churches are used in an attempt to proselytise the people of the country, they in so much become schismatic.

How Ignatius Loyola would have rejoiced over this specious teaching! We wonder, by the way, in what light our contemporary would regard Presbyterianism in Scotland, and the "national" religion of a Mohammedan or a heathen land!

"The Unspeakable Priest." Seldom has it been our lot to read a more damnatory indictment of priestcraft than that quoted on p. 13 from Mr. McCarthy's book, Priest and People in Ireland. Times are strangely altered which make such utterances possible from one still within the pale of the Romish Church.

The Revival in Australia. On page 25 we give further impressions from eye-witnesses of the inspiring movement of the Gospel in our commonwealth across the seas. The people of God may well entreat the Lord to breathe upon our land with the same life-giving Spirit. The faithful toil of ministers and other Christian workers need ask for no more blessed reward than a similar glorious ingathering of souls, as the result of their steady seed-sowing during the days that are past. "In due season ye shall reap, if ye faint not."

True Preaching. In a noteworthy paper, which appears in an American monthly, Rev. W. E. Griffin, D.D., dealing with the sermons of a recently deceased popular preacher, applies a somewhat high standard of success by which, when the work of the celebrated pastor in question is examined, it certainly is found wanting. The standard, however, is that which was fixed by our Divine Lord, and there is, therefore, nothing hypercritical in its application. The writer says:—

Of that form of service to humanity, as tested either by missionary interest or gifts to missions, which Jesus laid upon His disciples when He said to them, "Ye shall be My witnesses, both in Jerusalem and all Judaea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth" (Acts i. 8), astonishingly little was said or done.

Such a fact, Dr. Griffin urges, emphasizes the difference between a crowd and a church; for undoubtedly Christ laid down in the above words a programme of "practical Christianity"—(1) in personal and city missions (Jerusalem); (2) in the nation and home missions (in all Judæa and Samaria); (3) in foreign missions (the uttermost parts of the earth). And here comes in a word of comfort for those, who in the quiet corners of the ministry, are not dealing with merely transient audiences, but are teaching and feeding a few, to recognise that they are "saved for world rescue."

Confirmations, not Additions. A recent writer, dealing with the subject of the completeness of Divine revelation, makes a good point when he says:—

Whatever we know of God in these mortal years is in the Bible. Outside there are confirmations from history, from science, from experience, but they are confirmations and not additions. We set our faces against those who would add.

That distinction needs continually to be repeated, and particularly so at the present time, when the most bizarre and ridiculous of doctrines are being proclaimed in the name of "Divine Evolution." There are two kinds of additions to any organism — the natural addition of growing life, and the addition of foreign substances, which are known as accretions, and which are entirely alien to the life of the organism. The former only can be admitted as genuine. It would pay some of the modern teachers, who occupy themselves in preaching novel inventions, to study a little natural science, and to learn from it that true and healthy life knows nothing of patchwork, but that its unity is preserved entire to the end. God never reveals to any people a living truth which afterwards He flatly contradicts. Whatever of development there is in it (as between Judaism and the Gospel) is natural, marching to its goal according to the perfect wisdom of the Divine will. And so there can never be any addition to the Holy Word, in the sense that soi-disant prophets claim. The "addition" which comes through experience is always the confirmation of the original Word.

The True Apostolic Succession. It is a remarkable thing that in every epoch where men have been bound by practical materialism — the worship of goods, of money, of worldly success, &c.—material and mechanical conceptions of spiritual things have prevailed. It is as if men, like chameleons, had taken their colour from their surroundings. Our own epoch, which is so thoroughly materialized, has been marked by the revival of a mechanical idea of the ministry. A bogus Apostolic Succession has been, since the Tractarian movement, loudly proclaimed; and it is astonishing how men of culture, and even piety, seem to have fallen victims to its vicious logic. It is time to preach just as loudly the idea of the true Apostolic Succession, which is spiritual and not mechanical. No man can be in the Apostolic Succession unless he possesses the Apostolic spirit, and that is not gained through any form of official consecration to the work of the ministry. Only apostles succeed apostles, and the method of making them remains the same to-day as it was when our Lord first instituted the order: He must send them forth; there must be vocation; and they demonstrate that He has sent them forth, not by the production of certificates, but by those "signs of an apostle" upon which the great Apostle of the Gentiles supported his claim.

Social Plagiarism. A brilliant littérateur, in a recent discourse, introduced a question which has troubled the minds of many good people, i.e., how to account for the fact that a number of persons who are conspicuously busy in working amongst outcasts and others of the poor, and thus doing what is pre-eminently a Christian work, are nevertheless intellectually committed to agnostic and similar doctrines. It is argued that men who are given to such good works cannot be so very far wrong after all, despite their antagonism towards Christianity; and in this argument some have found a reason for their own lack of spiritual decision.

The Fruit and the Basket. So far as individuals are concerned, we leave the judgment of them to God, who knows all hearts, and probes to the bottom of all motives. But so far as the principle is concerned, we have no hesitation in describing such work as plagiarism. Horace Smith wittily described a plagiarist as a man who filched fruit from a basket and then threw away the basket. Would some who show the fruits of brotherhood, at least externally, have done so, had there first been no basket to steal from? Had they lived amongst a pagan society, would they have been as ready to help their fellows? The one factor which many take no account of is that there is an atmosphere of fraternity in the world, which has been created solely by our Lord Jesus; and many are affected by this who ignore the source of their inspiration. The meanest thing we know of is for any man to accept, even on the surface, those great blessings which Christ has brought to our race, and to deny Him from whom alone they are derived.

Losing the Opportunity. To all who fully trust God for definite guidance in life, the way they are to tread will certainly be indicated. But the whole of it may not at once be made clear; nothing more, indeed, than the open door, beyond which all is hidden. Where such a guidance is vouchsafed, a person's entire future may depend upon his action at that moment. If his faith is courageous enough to make him go boldly forward, following that first indication only, and trusting God to make the next steps clear, all will be well; but if fear prevails, and he waits until he sees the route beyond the gateway more clearly illuminated, he may lose the grandest opportunity of his life. There are men and women in the world to-day—any number of them—who are occupying inferior positions in life, just because they hesitated to commit themselves wholly to the heavenly influence which directed them into a certain way. The partial disclosures of God's plan for our lives are intended to develop our faith in Him; and the way in which we treat these Divine hints is a great test of the quality of our faith. It is a sad thing when people miss their opportunity through neglecting to fully follow whatever guidance is granted to them. But the faith that knows no delay will not miss its coronation.

The Spasmodic and the Settled Life. What great emphasis our Lord Jesus laid upon the necessity of settledness and perseverance in the lives of His disciples! Again and again on that last night before Calvary, the word "Abide" fell from His lips. As branches of the vine His people are to abide in Him for the bearing of fruit. Abiding in Him is the condition of successful prayer. And the fruit itself, which is born of abiding in Him, is to abide. Throughout the entire Gospels we are cautioned against turning back, and doing things by fits and starts. Is not this word particularly needed to-day, when the tendency is to rush from one thing to another, and to spend life in one long feverish chase after things which, in turn, fascinate us? The lives of too many people are spasmodic; they can never be relied upon for long together. A new thing causes them to wander away at once from the work to which they are pledged; hence they never do anything really well, and their fruit does not abide. The image of the vine is sufficient to show the folly of the spasmodic life, and the glory of the abiding habit. If it were possible for a branch to attach and detach itself at will to and from the vine, where would the fruit be? Only in patient, settled abiding is there any chance whatever of our lives being fruitful and enduring.

Perversions of Truth. It is commonly said, and with truth, that an unmistakable lie has no chance of success among men. But a half-truth and a half-lie seems, frequently, to flourish exceedingly. The greatest rival to Christianity could never have obtained its remarkable hold upon the Arab mind had it been an unmitigated falsehood. What vitality there has been in the religion of Mohammed is due entirely to what little truth lies within it, and but for this, the Koran could never have imposed itself upon the people. Within the pale of nominal Christianity the greatest menace to the truth of the Gospel has been, and is, the Roman Catholic Church. But as a pure falsehood it could not have endured for all these centuries. It is the element of truth contained in it that has prevented its entire collapse, and kept it alive despite its revolting superstitions. This mèlange of truth and error, however, is the most dangerous form of opposition to pure truth. Sometimes it seduces almost the very elect. The way to combat it is to detach the truth from the error, and to recover, in a positive manner, whatever of truth has been perverted or outraged.

Future Punishment. There is great need of a return to the distinctively Scriptural attitude on the question of future punishment. The neglect of this doctrine in modern preaching is one of its most serious defects. The Divine love has been proclaimed so exclusively that its complementary doctrine of the wrath of God against those who persist in their sin has been almost left out of account. No one ever gave a more central place to the love of God than the Apostle Paul does in his epistles; but he never forgets the dark background on which it plays like sunlight on a storm-cloud. "Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade men," was his perpetual attitude towards the mystery of human destiny, and it nerved him to use every faculty he possessed, and every opportunity that came to him, to urge men to repentance and acceptance of Christ as the one hope of humanity. Would that as much could be said of the average modern sermon!

Who is the Prince of This World? We are glad that Mr. Webb-Peploe, in his Bible-reading on the Ephesians, set forth the important truth that Satan is no longer prince of this world. He fraudulently superseded Adam, of whom it is said that God put all things under his feet. But Jesus our Lord has righteously deprived him of it: "Now is the judgment of this world; now shall the prince of this world be cast out; and I, if I be lifted up, will draw all unto Me." By His death He brought to nought the usurper; in His resurrection He became God's anointed Prince and King.

"The Present Crisis."

PERHAPS you can spare room for "An African Missionary" to thank you for the refreshment and help which have oft-times come to us in our far-away home amongst the heathen through your excellent paper. One had learned to love and value its consistent testimony at home, but I think it is doubly appreciated "amid the darkness of the regions beyond."

I am writing in my own name, and I have no doubt there are vast numbers of missionaries in Africa who join me in thanking you for inserting the article from "An Indian Missionary." The same message comes not from India only, but from China and Africa.

Is it really true, notwithstanding the increase in missionary meetings, that vital prayerful interest in foreign missions is on the decrease? I ask the question as one just home from a needy corner of darkest Africa. Some of those who are in the forefront of our largest organizations say that the only answer to this inquiry is in the affirmative.

Is there not a cause? Has the destructive Higher Criticism nothing to do with this sad and truly awful state of things?

If there is growing doubt and practical atheism at the very heart of the Church, shall not we who are the messengers of the Church know it and feel it?

Much is said and written of the dim faiths of the East. "By their fruits ye shall know them." The first chapter of Romans is an up-to-date description of those fruits.

Oh, how one longs that God's dear children, in the light of the Cross and the Great White Throne, could gaze upon the results of these non-Christian faiths. They would cease doubting the lost condition of the heathen, and begin to doubt their own personal interest in our Lord Jesus Christ if they harbour such suggestions of the evil one. While many of our Protestant Churches all over the land are paralysed with doubt, let it be solemnly remembered that Romanists and Ritualists are catching the eye and gaining the ear of the heathen, whose last state is thus rendered infinitely worse than the first.

The Preaching of Hypotheses.

THE case of Dr. Beet, which is now closed so far as the Wesleyan Conference is concerned, holds a lesson for all teachers at the present time. We are not concerned for the moment with the action of the Wesleyan Conference—that is their affair; but we are concerned with what underlies the whole trouble, and this is the business of all the churches. Periodically all the churches are troubled with questions of this kind. We have had a number of examples during the last decade. And the cause of all is that men will bring forward and teach—often dogmatically—their hypotheses as if they were proven truths. It is the preaching of hypotheses which does the mischief. A man is struck with a new idea; at once he rushes into print, and inflicts it upon the world without waiting to weigh all its issues. And this is none the less excusable when it comes from a theological professor. There are already too many hypotheses in the field; we do not need their number to be augmented.

We have heard of more than one congregation whose members have been distressed and agitated through the vague teaching which has come from the pulpit. If a man has nothing definite to teach he had better hold his tongue. If he finds himself in contradiction with the teaching of the Evangelical Faith on any point, common prudence should make him pause before he throws down the gauntlet. A remark of Dr. MacLaren, made in the presence of 5,000 ministers and others at Mr. Spurgeon's funeral, is worth recalling just now. Said the veteran pastor: "Burn your own smoke. Do not impertinently blow it into your neighbour's face."

There are a few simple principles which preachers and teachers would do well to observe.

We have no right to propound, as ascertained truth, anything that is not definitely and distinctly taught in the Word of God. Our duty as ambassadors of Christ is to "preach the Word," to "declare the whole counsel of God" as revealed in that Word. We are not called to argue about it, nor even to expound it, beyond making the sense clear to hearers or readers.

We are not called upon to publish all our thoughts, or even all our convictions; but to learn of our Lord, who said, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now."

Every public utterance of an ambassador of Christ should be a message from the Throne, not a mere opinion of his own. Life is too short for uncertain speculations. A speculator in the borderland of Divine truth cannot, like his Lord, speak "as one that hath authority, and not as the scribes." Even his assertions of truth will come to be discounted by his unauthorized and unauthoritative speculations. The chain of his testimony will be estimated by its weakest link.

Doctrine should not be built upon a basis of only parable or symbol. These are used for illustration, and are not to be treated as substantive statements of doctrine. In defiance of this rule, some Unitarians argue that because the Atonement is not affirmed or typified in the parable of the Prodigal Son, therefore an atonement is not necessary to the forgiveness of sins, and for the sinner's acceptance with God. "No parable," said the wisdom of our fathers, "goes on all fours with the subject it is intended to illustrate." Therefore, no parable should be pressed beyond the purpose for which it was used.

That of the Prodigal Son was the central parable of five, the occasion of which was the complaint of the Pharisees, "This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them." Their effect was to justify the Triune God in seeking and saving the lost; and to condemn the Pharisess as loveless brethren, as unfaithful stewards, and as appropriators of trust-properties; while they left the publicans and sinners, for whom they were trustees of the oracles of God, to perish in destitution and disease. They condemned the Divine Love. Divine Righteousness condemned them to the second death.

The means of a sinner's justification does not come within the purview of that discourse; therefore, the non-inclusion of the Atonement affords no argument for its non-necessity.

It has in recent years become a habit to infer from prophetic and figurative Scriptures, doctrines which they do not state, and which are not stated in any other part of the Word of God. Those who adopt this method can scarcely find fault with the method by which the Unitarians get rid of the Atonement, as above.

We cannot but regret that Professor Beet should have given himself away on the subject of future judgment. God does not need our vindication. It is remarkable that He has not justified those who have attempted to vindicate Him. We do not know a case in which teachers or preachers have preached either Universalism or Annihilation, in any of their forms, whose work as evangelists has not been marred. In some cases they seem to have been altogether set aside.

Our duty is to "preach the Word." The ambassador must deliver his message, even if he cannot expound it. And if he faithfully preaches it, God will by His spirit make it effectual. God cannot do other than He does. God, because He is God, can have no alternative. He can only move along the one straight line of righteousness. An impenitent sinner in the presence of God would be in hell because hell is in him. Penitent and impenitent, righteous and unrighteous, John the Apostle and Judas the traitor, each goes to his own place. God loves His creatures infinitely more than we can love them. Will He not do justly by them? "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" "Shall even one that hateth right govern?" "Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? . . . How then shall God judge the world?"

Let absolute confidence in the truth of God's righteous character be once and for ever firmly settled in our hearts, and we shall not doubt that He will save all whom He can save, and do the only one thing that can be righteously done in the case of each.

Holiday Equipments.

"I am still with thee" (Ps. cxxxix. 18).

TAKE with thee to the water side—
If such should be thy quest—
A praying heart, a thoughtful soul,
To keep the spirit bright and whole,
And make each moment blest.

Take with thee to the sylvan scene,
Or the romantic dell,
Fit treasures for the restful hour,
Strong bulwarks from the tempter's power,
And each alluring spell.

Maintain the hour of secret prayer,
For leisure hath its snares;
Repose might even steal away
Devotion's fervour, day by day,
No less than business cares.

Where'er thou art, wherever placed,
Or mingling whom among,
Live, that the hours of change might be
To those around, nor less to thee,
One sweet continued song.

ALBERT MIDLANE.

The Christian Ministry.

THE status of the Christian ministry of modern times is always a difficult question, in view of the two opposite dangers that threaten its claims—priestism and detraction. Those who deny the former assumption sometimes err in repudiating it so emphatically that its central place among the instrumentalities of grace is imperilled. The minister is to be honoured not for himself, but "for his work's sake"; and parents often do their children a grievous wrong in depreciating both in their presence.

The New Testament conception of the office safeguards both, and, when that is expounded with adequate breadth and fulness, it is a help for ministers and churches of all denominations to realise how little the minister's status depends on "theories," and how much on the practical usefulness of the service he renders.

The minister's qualifications are growingly hard to combine in one man, owing to the concentration, demanded in the present day, of several New Testament offices in one. As Dr. Davison tersely said, in his charge to the newly-appointed Wesleyan ministers, he needs "the spirit of a prophet, the heart of an evangelist, the soul of a pastor, the mind of a teacher." There are still men who are wise to specialise on one supreme gift, but the rank and file dare not do so, but must do their utmost to fulfil the round of weekly duties demanded from them.

The cry of every true man is, "Who is sufficient unto these things?" The answer should come in the sympathy and prayerful consideration of the people, who are co-workers with their minister and with God, in the grace of Christian service. For the ministry is a gift of Christ to His church, to be used in all its various offices and functions for the promotion of the highest conceivable end, which is for "the perfecting of the saints unto the work of ministering unto the building up of the body of Christ." This broad and comprehensive view of the ministry is the best antidote to the exclusive claims of the priesthood.

At the same time we are impelled to ask, Is it right to change God's order by burdening one member of the body of Christ with all the different gifts, administrations, and operations which he has distributed among the many, "dividing to every one severally as He will"?

If it would be impossible for one member of the human body to exercise the functions of the whole, is it possible for one member of the far more complex spiritual body to do so? If, in the order of God, "the whole body, fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body, unto the building up of itself in love," is it possible that this result can be obtained by one joint being set apart to supply everything?

Great Housing Campaign.—A band of earnest reformers has just completed a great scheme for rousing the country on the subject of the housing problem. By means of lectures, limelight, cinematograph, and phonograph; and with the co-operation of Mayors, Bishops, Nonconformist leaders, and other public men; the chief towns of England and all the boroughs of London are to be urged, in the coming winter, to take up the question of housing reform in a thoroughly practical manner. A guarantee fund of considerable amount has already been raised, and placed in the hands of the Bourneville Village Trust, and any balance that remains at the end of the campaign will be handed over to the Garden City Association.

The Unspeakable Priest.

Much stir was caused last year in Protestant as well as Roman Catholic circles by the publication of Mr. M. J. F. McCarthy's "Five Years in Ireland." The impression made on readers will be deepened by PRIESTS AND PEOPLE IN IRELAND (7s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall), just issued from the same pen. We hope to take further notice of the book; but in the meantime give the following extract from the introduction. If it be remembered that the words are those of one within the Church of Rome, the criticism will be seen to have a value which would not attach to any statement from Protestant sources. The reality and extent of Romish aggression in Ireland will be brought home to many who have been slumbering while the enemy was busy sowing tares.

BUT more ominous and more eloquent than the open adulation of the newspapers and the orators is the dismayed silence with which the growth and consolidation of the priests' power is being watched by the merchants, the professional men, and the civil servants of every grade, from the Clerk of Petty Sessions to the Judge on the Bench, from the sergeant of police to the highest permanent official in Dublin Castle.

For all of them the power of the priest is the one unspeakable, unmentionable thing.

The British public, reading the overt Parliamentary proceedings in connection with Ireland, rarely hears of this new power from the lips of a member of the Government. For, although Acts of Parliament are passed annually, and departmental concessions are made daily, in order to confer some pecuniary benefit on the priests, the name of the sacerdotal organization is never publicly mentioned.

The duty which I undertake in this work is that of presenting the public, as I believe for the first time, with a survey and examination of as they operate upon the daily lives of the people.

The concentrated energies of this old power in its new Irish environment are persistently directed to the achievement of four main objects, all of which are antagonistic to the national weal.

1. Its own aggrandisement as a league, apart from the body politic in which it flourishes, but in alliance with an alien organization whose interests are not the interests of us, the Roman Catholic laity of Ireland.

2. Moulding the ductile minds of our youth, so that their thoughts in manhood may run, not in the direction of enlightenment and self-improvement, but in obedient channels converging to swell the tide of the priests' prosperity.

A new power—or, rather, an old power in a new environment—has been gathering force in Ireland during the latter decades of the nineteenth century; and before this rising sun all classes of people in Ireland are bowing themselves down in worship to a greater or less extent.

This new power, this rising sun, is the sacerdotal organization of the Roman Catholic Church, the Church to which I myself and the majority of Irishmen belong.

The framework of society in Ireland has, by virtue of the growth of this power, undergone a complete reconstruction; and events have been moving so precipitately that the condition of things which confronts the statesman of to-day is almost entirely different from the circumstances which arrested Mr. Gladstone's attention when he introduced his first Home Rule Bill in 1886. "Rome Rule," as it was called, was then, in the opinion of many Roman Catholics, myself included, an unsubstantial chimera. To-day "Rome Rule" is, in a limited but well-defined form, and our chief consolation is that it is not accompanied by what was fallaciously described as "Home Rule," for then its scope would have been unlimited and undefinable.

AN ACCOMPLISHED FACT;

Our Roman Catholic priests, monks, and nuns now possess an effective organization in Ireland which outnumbers the services of the Imperial and local governments combined. They constitute an unmarried and anti-marriage league, apart from the people, and working for objects which do not tend to enhance the common weal.

And so great has their power grown that the popular Press has become a mere laudatory chronicle of their words and deeds, and our poor, popular members of Parliament find their most remunerative employment in securing the redress of sacerdotal grievances, and working for the increase of sacerdotal emoluments.

The Press and the platform find it to their immediate interest to swell the chorus of flattery in which the praises of this great new power—or, rather, under new circumstances—are being chanted throughout the land.

3. Perplexing and interfering with our adult population in every sphere of secular affairs, estranging them from, and embittering them against, the majority of their fellow-citizens in the United Kingdom, imbuing them with disloyalty to the commonwealth of which they are members; the result being that our people are the least prosperous—indeed the only unprosperous—community in the British Isles.

4. Terrifying the enfeebled minds of the credulous, the invalid, and the aged, with the result that the savings of penurious thrift, the inheritance of parental industry, the competence of respectability are all alike captured in their turn from expectant next-of-kin, and garnered into the sacerdotal treasury.

While every new Act of Parliament passed for the general benefit of Ireland is taken full advantage of in those counties where the Protestants are in a majority, in the Roman Catholic portion of Ireland the beneficence of every such measure is perverted to the especial uses of the priests' organization, and the people remain as discontented as if it had never been passed.

From Rev. F. B. Meyer.

AFTER a very pleasant voyage, with calm seas and sunny skies, we arrived too late on Saturday to go up at once to Northfield, so spent Sunday in this marvellous city, which impresses one more and more with its insatiable vigour. It being the summer, we found large numbers of the churches closed. Even where five or six congregations are merged together, the aggregate attendance is very small. I should be very sorry to see this practice in vogue in London, as I am sure that it breaks the habit of attendance at the House of God, and there certainly is a terrible slackening in Sunday-school and other effort.

In the morning we attended the service at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, so long identified with the honoured name of Dr. John Hall. A noble congregation gathered to hear Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, who preached a remarkably fine sermon on Christ as greater than Abraham. Though a terrific thunderstorm broke over the city during the service, it did not break the attention of the people. This was the fifth and last of a course of sermons.

In the afternoon I preached to the great congregation which usually assembles in the tent, but which, owing to the storm, was accommodated in a neighbouring church. In the evening Rev. Johnstone Ross and I went to the Jerry McAuley Mission, where some wonderful testimonies were given of Christ's saving power. One after another told the story of deliverance from lives of degradation, and from the crave for drink. On our way back to our hotel, we came through China Town, with its thousands of Chinamen, thronging the streets and filling the tenements with opium and unnameable sin.

This morning we start for Northfield. I trust that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will pray for me. F. B. MEYER.

Cage Lane Mission.—In maintaining the various agencies of Christian work connected with the Cage Lane Mission, Plumstead, the need arises for an additional helper. Mrs. Kate Anderson writes that an ex-colporteur is available for the position, but the means for his support are not forthcoming. "We are having great encouragement in every branch of our work, particularly in our large Sunday-school; but further assistance will be indispensable before the coming winter, as years are telling upon some of us."

Quaint Texts from Queer Places.

By Mr. CHAS. COOK.

THE scene, a suburb of our great city! The time of the year when "summer sales" are on, and it was evidently intended to be used by the proprietor as a means of making known the "bargains" to be had, for huge posters were displayed, announcing "Tremendous bargains," and "Immense reductions."

The hoarding was quite new, and had been run up on a piece of waste land adjoining this "Bon Marché." Evidently, the warning was intended to hinder the many "fly-posters" of the neighbourhood from stealing a good position for a cheap advertisement.

"I say, have you heard about our brother, Mr. ——? My word! there'll be trouble when it gets known; I'm not surprised a bit, however; I believe——

"Stop! Before you say any more put on your hat. I'll go with you, and we'll ask the brother himself about it; come along."

"Oh, dear, no! I wouldn't for the world; and please don't mention my name."

"I certainly shall mention your name, and hope it may be of service to you." "Bill-stickers beware!"

> For many a shaft at random sent > Finds mark the archer little meant;
> And many a word at random spoken
> May wound or soothe a heart that's broken.

Better to be bees that gather honey than wasps that sting.

"Set a watch, O Lord, upon my mouth; keep the door of my lips," is good for others besides the Psalmist to pray. It is so much easier to criticise than to sympathise. During a "bye-election," a bill-sticker will stick up the bills of both candidates. He is impartial, to a fault. I have known other wielders of the brush bespatter friend and foe alike; but this was in a non-spiritual sense.

"Speak evil of no man," is the command; but some of us talk too glibly of the (supposed) faults of our brethren, and speak most unkindly of those who may be dear to their Lord.

"Bill-stickers beware!" It may have been thoughtlessness on our part, but if it has injured a good brother, prejudiced a work which God is blessing, and dishonoured the Master whose name is behind it, it is no trifle, and God will deal with us about it sooner or later. "Bill-stickers beware!" "We do but bespatter our own garments when we injure another, and our character is soon known to others by our soiled and paste-stained clothes.

To one addicted to slander was given a bag of feathers, and he was told by his king to scatter them to the winds as he went on a certain journey. On his return, the monarch bade him retrace his steps, and gather up the feathers. This he could not do; nor can we recall the unkind words which spring from "envy, malice, and all uncharitableness," that we have scattered to the injury of our brother and the grieving of our Lord.

Some foolish men seem to take a delight in washing dirty linen in public, and exposing everybody's faults save their own. "A faithful spirit concealeth the matter," and the world does not need the Church to emblazon their brethren's failings on the city walls.

One would like to affix to the shutters of the business premises of these friends our text—

BILL-STICKERS BEWARE!

> Speak a shade more kindly than the day before,
> Pray a little better, love a little more.

Home Missions.

Triumphs of the Gospel.

YEAR by year the work of the Evangelization Society continues to be richly owned of God, calling for praise and thanksgiving, not only from those directly associated with it, but also from Christian churches throughout the length and breadth of the land who have benefited by the existence of the organization. It is not an easy matter in the present day to arrest the attention and secure the interest of large numbers of men and women, but such records as the annual report of the Evangelization Society go to prove that it can be done, and is done with blessed results.

A FRUITFUL RECORD.

The year witnessed an increase of work and funds, as well as undoubted instances of Divine blessing. Comparatively few men are called of God to undertake the office of an evangelist, and care is exercized that none are sent forth but those who are adapted for the work, and who in loving spirit, earnest tones, and solemn entreaty, seek to persuade men and win them to Christ. That the efforts of the evangelists have been successful may be gathered from the hearty testimonies which daily come to hand. An Oxfordshire correspondent, writing of a series of services, said:—

To my great regret Mr. L.'s mission has closed to-night, and I do not feel that I can go to rest without sending you a line of heartfelt gratitude for sparing him to us for three weeks, instead of fifteen days as at first arranged. The evangelist always was wonderfully good, but now he is, we think, more useful than ever. It has, indeed, been a three weeks' spiritual feast, a time of refreshing for God's people, and a time of awakening for others. Many showed their appreciation by coming to every service, and also by bringing others, with the result that each meeting was fuller than the previous one. We have had the building packed, though the room is a large one.

In reviewing a mission held at Bristol, a correspondent, after speaking of the ability and self-sacrifice of the evangelist, says:—

The addresses have been plain, Gospel and heart searching, not calculated to stir the feelings or awaken the emotions only, but full of truth which we believe has gone home with mighty power to the hearts and consciences of the unsaved, and calculated to awaken slumbering, self-satisfied professors and others. Many have been aroused to a sense of responsibility, and we feel that real success has attended the mission.

DRIVING TWENTY-EIGHT MILES TO A SERVICE.

From the far north of Scotland a minister writes:—

The services of Mr. G. have been much appreciated. In spite of the severe weather at first, the people came each night a distance of from one to seven miles over the moors; in fact, some drove over twenty-eight miles to attend the services. Had it not been that the Spirit of God was at work, we could hardly have expected this. Many have professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. We have had indeed a time of awakening, and are glad to say that we expect it to go on further, for there are many still anxious, and we are looking forward to dealing with them personally. The Christians have been greatly refreshed through your evangelist's visit, and we could have wished that he could stay longer. During the closing nights of the mission the church was crowded. Many will bless God for Mr. G.'s visit.

One of the greatest sources of satisfaction is that the Society is permitted every year to start into life various agencies to carry on the work of God. Often the outcome of a mission is the formation of a Y.M.C.A. or Y.W.C.A., Bible-classes, and in some cases, even Sunday-schools.

The tent work also had encouraging results. Many of the localities visited proved to be eminently prepared for the missions, and the outcome was such as will bear fruit in days to come. All classes attend—the well-to-do and poor alike have come within sound of the Gospel. This season again nearly fifty tents are at work, and, in spite of cold and wet weather and festivities, some richly-blest missions have been held, concerning which a report will be issued in October. The Society will inevitably spend £4,000 in this aggressive work between May and September, and during the four months of its year, viz., April, May, June and July, a good increase in the work can be reported.

North of the Tweed the tent missions were not less successful than those in the south, and whenever the Gospel has been preached with manifest sincerity of purpose, faithfulness in exalting Christ crucified as the only Saviour of sinners, the appeal to the unsaved has not been in vain.

The hon. secretary is Mr. John Wood, who may be addressed at the office of the Society, 21, Surrey Street, Strand, W.C.

Homes of Hope.

IN grappling with one of the most urgent and painful evils existing in our midst, the Committee of Management of the Homes of Hope are engaged in a form of service which appeals with unfailing urgency to the Christian public. It is to be regretted that such deep and marked necessity exists for the exercise of sustained Christian benevolence towards a class, doubtless blameworthy, blind to their own well-being, and dangerous and destructive to those who are found to consort with them. Their salvation, however, becomes none the less compassionate; and the numerous instances in which it is found that their fall was brought about by cruel temptation and deceit awaken feelings of anxiety and pity on their behalf.

THE FIRST OFFENCE.

The first fall is regarded as the most promising time to affect measures of restoration, and it is found that the period when the young woman who has been led astray discovers herself about to become a mother, or realizes that her first infant has been born into the world, to be the most crucial time in her life. She will then either be dragged further into immoral depths, or rescued once for all from continued and confirmed evil-doing.

Among the many who found succour in the Homes of Hope during the year may be mentioned G.I., aged twenty-eight, born and brought up in London. Her mother was an invalid, and in order to obtain a living she took in needlework. Living at home and caring for her mother, she eventually became engaged to a mechanic in her own position in life. After a long and apparently honourable courtship, she was finally deceived and deserted. She was admitted into the Homes, where she remained several months after her confinement, and was afterwards sent to a suitable situation in a country town. Her mistress was kind enough to write after seven months' service:—

I feel I must write you a few lines to tell you how very satisfactory in every way G.I. is. I have nothing to say but praise of her, and I feel sure it is deeply due to the instruction she received while under your teaching at the Homes. She is leading a good Christian life, and I am grateful to you for sending a servant who in every way answers to your description. I think in these days, when servants are so difficult to secure and when secured are often so unsatisfactory, an institution like yours is worthy of all support, particularly as you teach them to see life from a Christian standpoint.

RESTORATION AFTER SUFFERING.

A singularly pathetic case is that of S.M.I., twenty-four, who was left an orphan at an early age, and was sent by some ladies from a country town to the Homes of Hope. The lady who corresponded in reference to her admission stated that the girl bore a good character when in service, but was unfortunately led astray under promise of marriage by a groom at the same establishment. The man left his situation and disappeared when he knew her condition, and she was so unhappy about the circumstances that she, in her despair, attempted to drown herself, being rescued with great difficulty. She was weak and ill for some time. She remained in the Homes until she was quite strong again. Her baby was adopted, and she was placed in a suitable situation.

Numbers of similar cases are being dealt with week by week, and happily the result is invariably encouraging. The institutions are open also to every class of young woman who earnestly desires to escape the sorrows and snares of a life of sin, and the work of rescuing young girls from falling into an evil life is constantly being carried on. While so many influences in modern life tend to make the path from purity to unchastity easy, it is more than ever essential that such a ministry as that of the Homes of Hope should not be allowed to languish through lack of support. It is to be regretted that the work is passing through so serious a crisis that unless the sympathy of additional friends is forthcoming, the committee fear that the doors will be closed at the end of the year.

Copies of the annual report and any further information will be given by the Secretary, 4, Regent Square, W.C.

Distressed Reservists.

"THE sword of war," writes Rev. W. Carlile, of the Church Army, "has been beaten into the ploughshare of peace; but, unfortunately, there are not enough ploughshares to go round. In other words, many of the Reservists, time-expired men, wounded and others, who have returned from the front, are thrown upon an already overstocked labour market, and Mr. Colin Campbell, the hon. sec. of the Church Army Labour Homes, is at his wits' end to find them shelter and employment. It would be most serious for these poor fellows, who only need a helping hand for a time, if for want of funds they have to be turned from our doors. At one of the leading Military Employment Bureaux we were told last week: 'We don't know what we should do without the Church Army.'

"A pressing need is a special home for old soldiers and men of good class, whom it would be at once cruel and unwise to place with the tramps and ex-convicts with whom we so largely deal. As evidencing the prevalent distress the following reports from members of our staff will be of sad interest. The officer in charge of the Morning Post Tramps Embankment Home, which we manage, writes: "I find more destitute men out at night now on the Embankment and in the vicinity than ever before, and I regret to say that I am unable to find accommodation for the number I get hold of. I can only attribute this to the great number of men returning from South Africa.'

"Pardon our asking your assistance for men who have deserved better treatment at the hands of the Empire."

No Cloud Between!

"Make Thy face to shine upon Thy servant" (Psa. xxxi. 16).

"No cloud between," our hearts are crying dumbly,
With spirit-pathos, unto God to-day.
No cloud between to hide our Saviour's presence
Whilst still we journey on life's homeward way!

No cloud between, to stay the glad in-shining,
The bright revealing of His glorious face;
No cloud of sin to cause unhallowed darkness,
A sense of distance from the King of Grace.

No cloud of care; of faithless rash and worry,
To chill us with its cold and gruesome shade.
Nay, Lord; we fain would banish such for ever
With Thine own question, "Wherefore be afraid?'

No cloud of secret wrong; no sad repining,
At some mysterious heart-afflicting "way,"
Oh, send the rushing wind of Thy good Spirit
To scatter all such "earth-born clouds," we pray!

Thou didst not bring them; we confess most humbly
We caused them to arise, and we alone;
Forgive and pity in Thy tender mercy,
And grant us pardon for the evil done.

Then lead us on beneath Thy gracious favour;
Inspire us with Thy perfect peace and love,
Until we reach the land beyond the shadows,
The fadeless glory of Thy home above.

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

WALKING WITH CHRIST.

NOTES OF A BIBLE READING,

By Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

We pass now directly to practice, to the daily life we are called to live—not as, in Galatians, we judicially placed ourselves at the foot of the Cross, in order that we might reap the benefit; nor as, in Ephesians, we endeavoured to place ourselves with the Lord Jesus Christ, at the right hand of God the Father. In Philippians, we come to our daily life in the world that now is, in that position in which we are called to walk in human flesh, with unceasing temptations, peculiar trials, and circumstances which seem so remarkable and difficult that it is impossible for us to live the high, holy, and heavenly life connected with our calling.

We like to theorize, to read the words of Paul, and to think of what he says to the Hebrews of our heavenly calling; but there is also an earthly calling to glorify God in the body, and then in the spirit. The Apostle is looking upon men and women placed in the midst of the darkest possible trials, impossible to face in their own strength, but which he is prepared to show them they can face and overcome, glorifying God in them, because the life of the Lord Jesus is not only granted judicially, nor possessionally in heaven; it is the living of that life upon earth that I understand to be the special subject of the Epistle. If there is a key text, it is i. 21, "To me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Then, having spoken of himself, and recognising that others might not be able to take up the position of an Apostle, on the ground that they were not so favoured, he says (iv. 19), "My God shall supply all your need."

THE VEIL LIFTED FROM EXPERIENCE.

Our difficulty is the simplicity of this Epistle; but the more simple the direction, the more deep, the more marvellous, the more profound are the truths offered. We may well take up the words of Dr. Moule, who says, "To careful and loving Bible students, this Epistle is one of the fairest and dearest regions of the Word of God." I pity the man who cannot see that. No man among us can say he is under such difficulties as Paul. Yet everyone feels that the Apostle has been led to lift the veil from his own experience, and to give us the experience of a faithful servant of God, to tell us how in the power of the Spirit of God he was enabled to find in Christ an ample supply for all his possible needs.

The first chapter brings us face to face with "the Gospel," and we may safely affirm that that is the key thought of the Epistle—i. 5, 7, 12, 17, 27. What a wonderful chain of thought is that! As he exhorts them in i. 27, he reverts to the same idea in iii. 20, 27; iv. 1. Our conversation is to be as becometh the Gospel. The Gospel is that our conversation is in heaven. In this we are called to stand fast in the faith of the Gospel.

THE PERSON OF CHRIST.

The sphere or element in which we are called to live and work is the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. Notwithstanding what people think to be the piecemeal teaching of the Epistle, there is a continuity of the teaching of His person. No less than nineteen times do we find Christ Jesus or Jesus Christ, eighteen times Christ alone; and the difference between the usage of these two expressions is that when he wants to bring out the wonderful Person in Himself, he either mentions Him as Christ Jesus, coming from heaven to men, or Jesus Christ, going from men to God; but when he wishes to bring out the experimental power which the Lord Jesus Christ brings to bear upon an individual man, he always uses the expression Christ (i. 21). It is always Christ when he thinks of Him as his personal Saviour and power.

So he is able to say that God has given Jesus name above every name—(ii. 9)—"not the name of Jesus, but the name which Jesus specially bears." Some think that is the unknown name mentioned in the Revelation. Herein lies the splendid secret of pervading power, and the beauty of this apparently simple Epistle. It is Christ, Christ, nothing but Christ, as the Lord in His Majesty, who is my own, my eternal prospect in the day of His glory.

When connecting himself with Christ the Apostle brings forward the preposition "in"—as it is "by" in Galatians, "with" in Ephesians. No less than twenty-four times do we find him enlarging on the fact that we are in Christ Jesus the Lord—a beautiful truth never to be forgotten or left out of consideration. I regret the English reader will not find this: it is needful to refer to the Greek. While he sometimes says "in Christ," there are eight times where we find the beautiful expression "in the Lord," and we remember He is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. In each of these passages he is dealing with the practical daily experience of himself and others.

LIFE WORTH LIVING.

Turn to the apostolic position. He is chained to a Roman soldier in the Emperor's palace, waiting for the verdict of Nero. The solitary prisoner looks back over the past, and remembering those whom he has been privileged to bring to God, he recalls his life in Philippi, one of the most precious to his memory, how he had been permitted to realise that faith which exhibits itself in action. There would come back the memories of a well-established church, and one considerably developed in numbers and spiritual life. Now, writing with a chain round his wrist, he has to speak practically, and is speaking practically to us. "Is life worth living under the conditions in which I am placed?" Bringing forth the treasures of God, he offers to you this, the Epistle of Joy, and it is to the life of joy we are called in the daily experiences which most darken our spiritual experience.

Five times we have the noun "joy," nine times the verb "rejoice," twice, rejoicing with others, so that sixteen times we have the doctrine of joy brought out in the most remarkable manner. But it is idle unless we can exhibit grounds on which joy must permeate our being. In circumstances of pain and suffering it may not be possible to be jolly, but we ought always to have joy. So far as the remarks of our Master are concerned, there is no mention of joy till the night before He died. Again and again in those wonderful chapters that close His wonderful revelation to the Apostles (John xiii.-xvii.) we have this word coming in. It is an absolute acquiescence in the will of the Father, a delight in the will of God, whatever that may be. He was being made perfect through suffering, and had learned obedience through the thirty-three years. He bows His face before the Father; and, though it costs Him all the anguish of sin-bearing, He says, "My Father, Thy will be done"—and that is joy. It should be joy upon earth to do His will, and the Saviour has left the blessed example.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF HIS SUFFERINGS.

This is what Paul means when he writes in the Epistle of joy that he himself was learning joy by the things which he suffered, entering into the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ (i. 29; ii. 17). Why? Because by the mercy of God he was allowed to fill up that which was lacking of the sufferings of Christ, and to know the fellowship of these sufferings is something infinitely higher than to sit down on pink clouds of glory and sing hymns all day.

Another key-word is phronein, "to have the mind"; eleven times we find him making use of this verb, to show that man ought to carry out the will of God. May you find your joy, not merely in being saved, but in suffering. Saved by Christ, suffering with Christ, and satisfied with Christ—that is the order in which we have to pass from the degradation of sin to the dignity of the eternal glory.

The Apostle opens the third chapter apparently with his closing words, and reverts to the same words again in iv. 4; but between these two there falls a wonderful autobiographical sketch. Turning to his own past experience, he tells us what it was he found when he took Christ. The man who abandons what the Galatians were called to give up, is a man who is to count all things but loss (iii. 8). Notice the "all things," because this is what gives us such a glorious power. Until we have counted all things but loss there is no fair start in this race.

THE CALL TO CONSECRATION.

By Rev. EVAN H. HOPKINS.

"Present yourselves unto God, as alive from the dead" (Rom. vi. 13, R.V.).

Matthew Arnold said that "The object of religion is conduct." Another, correcting him, said, "The object of religion is character." What is of far greater moment than what a man does is what he is.

Character is built up of conduct, and is gradually formed in the process of its becoming. But, we ask, what is the secret of that becoming? It is a right condition of soul, and, preliminary to the process of becoming, is a right condition of being. The sanctification of character is a process that is gradual and progressive; but the spiritual adjustment of the inner being may take place in a moment.

A THREEFOLD ASPECT.

It may be that you are a Christian, but out of a right condition of soul; you may have been in it and departed from it. A return thereto is brought about by the act of consecration. Consecration assumes that you have an experience of spiritual life, for it is only those who are "alive from the dead" who are to "present themselves to God." This consecration, then, belongs to believers only. Let us look at it in connection with three things, (1) the Light of God, (2) the Will of God, (3) the Power of God.

1. In relation to the Light of God. "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." The light searches, penetrates into the innermost recesses of our being. Perhaps you are not ready for this. Perhaps parts of your being are in the twilight, if not in darkness. Perhaps some doubtful things are hidden away, and you are not quite prepared, not quite willing, for them to come right into the light; for then, their character being clearly revealed, they would be doubtful no longer.

PROTECTION OR BARRIER?

What a wonderful organ is the human eye! Its function is to receive light. God has provided a protection for it, in the lid. That protection may be a barrier to the light, and behind the lid is the human will, that can open or close it. You say, "Yes, I understand that." Well, in your spiritual being is something very like it. Perhaps there was a time when you lived in the light. God created you for it. It is the element, so to speak, of your new creation. But you can "close the shutters." This is the reason that "men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." Are you willing for the devil and sin to be discovered? Can you pray, "Search me, O God, and know my heart . . . and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting"? That is consecration, or a condition of thoroughness towards God.

BETHEL AND PENIEL.

(2) In relation to the Will of God. The Lord's invitation is, "Come unto Me, and rest." You say, "Yes, I have done that." But there follows, "Take My yoke upon you." Not only take the gifts, but also the will of the Lord. What an illustration we have of this in Jacob. His life is divided into three parts:—(1) The man of the world. Then came a crisis, and at Bethel he became (2) a man of grace. Then came another crisis, and at Peniel he became (3) a man of the Spirit. As a man of grace he knew the way; he saw the ladder. He understood the way of aspiring; he saw the angels ascending. He knew the way of blessing; he saw the angels descending. He was a man of grace. Yet, how much of the carnal spirit there was; he was a man of expediency, of living by his wits—there are many like him. So God had a controversy with him. In spite of the Bethel blessing, he was resisting the will of God, and God was continually drawing him towards the right path. At last come crisis and conflict. What is Jacob doing? Wrestling. Not praying, mark you, but opposing God.

Do we understand the lessons of this conflict? While Jacob resists, the struggle must last. Next, God is overcoming, Jacob's thigh is touched and his resisting power is gone. In the next stage, Jacob is not wrestling, but clinging. Then it was that he had power.

Do you understand? You are not consecrated; God puts His finger upon you, but you resist. If you want the blessing, yield. You say, "I have no power to yield." No power? You have too much, and it is self-will; but when you come and leave self, you first yield, and then cling to God, accepting His will.

FAITH IN FETTERS.

(3) In relation to the Power of God. Here is a man asking God for power. For what reason? He is an evangelist; he wants to attract crowds, to influence men, to dazzle the multitude. Yes, we ask for power, so that we may wield it. But God will not give it so. If He did we should be more like Satan than Christ, for Satan has power without humility. Until we are controlled by the mighty hand of God, it is not safe for us to have power. Consecration is needed.

And what does consecration secure? The emancipation of faith. I meet Christians who make desperate "efforts to believe." Why? Because they are unconsecrated, and their faith is in fetters. How can you believe when your eye is not single? You are putting man before God. Consecration, too, secures the manifestation of Divine power. "The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to shew Himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him." Do you say, "Perfect! Then the pursuit is hopeless"? Stop, see it in Deut. xxvii. 6, "Thou shalt build the altar of the Lord thy God of whole stones." Mark that little word "whole"; it is the same word as "perfect" in the previous text, so that it will read, "whose heart is whole towards him." It is consecration, and there must be no reserves. You know what it is to give up all but the one little thing you are holding on to. He will show Himself strong, will manifest His power, but only if we fully yield.

A RIGHT ATTITUDE TOWARDS GOD.

What you need to understand most is that it is not a question of gifts, but of right attitude. There is power in plenty. I go to a large factory and see activity in all directions. It is the result of power. I look away from the machinery and go to the engine-room. There is power in plenty. So, where there is whole-hearted consecration, there is power for us. Consecration will secure the attitude of receptivity. People say sometimes that they have "lost the blessing." But the river of His power is still flowing! Away from the river, they are bound to be powerless.

Looking back on past conventions, I note the special emphasis laid on the absolute importance of bringing the people into an attitude of thoroughness. If they get taken up with anything else—social conversations, or even Bible-readings, or obtaining gems from one meeting and another to use in their work—then they are in the wrong attitude. We do not come for these things, but to find out the secret of holy living. "Present yourselves;" the tense used in the Greek points, not to a process, but to an act. You can come to it instantaneously. If you have received the blessing, you need to see that you get it deepened; for unless, following on, we advance, God will cast us aside. And the attitude needs to be confirmed. Let us see to it that it is right every morning towards God, so that He can pour His blessings upon us, like a channel receiving and pouring forth—"having nothing, yet possessing all things." Guard this attitude jealously. May God bring us all into this attitude of thoroughness toward Him, "presenting ourselves unto God, as alive from the dead," to be His alone and His wholly—and the power of the Holy Ghost shall come down upon us.

Christ's Prisoners.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

THESE two words, when read together, sound like a singular pair of bedfellows. For to be behind the bars of a gaol in our day commonly indicates an accomplice of Satan. But in apostolic days imprisonment often was a badge of honour. The chiefest of the apostles, when he wrote a letter to his Colossian friend, Philemon, signed himself, "Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ." The old hero is Christ's ambassador in Nero's fetters—a prisoner not for evil-doing but for well-doing. His manacles are badges of honour; and while his scarred body is bound, his soul is rejoicing as Christ's freed-man from the yoke of sin, and there is not a happier man in Rome.

The essence of imprisonment is to be confined to one place, without the permission or possibility of going where one chooses. In this sense there are a great many good people who are Christ's servants, and yet are prisoners. They are shut-ins without their own consent. Some of them are unable to get into God's house on the Sabbath, though the Lord of the house comes to them. Some have been confined within the walls of one room for long weary years. During my pastorate I used to visit, year after year, a lovely and cultured young lady who knew nothing of the out-door world, except the glimpse she got from her bedroom window. What sermons that brave girl used to preach to me on the beauties of Christian patience! I learned from her what a sweet rest there is in the "Everlasting Arm." She never uttered to me one syllable of discontent during the whole fourteen or fifteen years of her imprisonment in that sick chamber! When I read to her some cheering passage from God's Book, or gave her a sip of honey from that inexhaustible honeycomb, a joyous smile passed over her face (which was sadly distorted by long disease), as if she were saying "Oh, how good that tastes!" If there was one room in Brooklyn that the Master "oft-times resorted to," it was that in which this bright, sunny-souled girl spent all her youthful years as a "prisoner of Jesus Christ."

PERMISSIVE PROVIDENCES.

Just why it is that the all-wise and loving Master permits some of His choicest servants to be laid aside from all active service, and to be tortured often by sharp bodily pains, I cannot understand. When every voice is so needed to teach and to preach His Gospel, why are so many doomed to silence? When every hand is needed in His service, why are so many of His soldiers destined to lie helpless in the hospitals? It is not my business to explain all these mysteries. But there are some explanations that give me partial relief.

One is, that the Christian life is a school for the promotion of that vitally important thing—Christly character. And some of the most beautiful traits can only be got through suffering. Hot furnaces often make the brightest Christians. It is not those whom He hates, but those whom He loves, that He thus chasteneth. The Master sits as a refiner beside the furnace of affliction. He heats it until the metal melts, and the dross of selfishness and impatience and unbelief runs off. He often keeps His silver in the furnace till He can see His own face reflected in the clear metal of the heart, as in a mirror. Then the affliction is doing its appointed work, and Jesus has made the vessel unto His own honour. During my pastoral experience I have discovered that some of the most attractive and well-ripened Christian characters belonged to those who had been schooled by intense bodily sufferings. Perhaps when such reach heaven, they may be more than content that in this world they were among the Lord's shut-ins.

THE USES OF AFFLICTION.

The prisoners of Jesus Christ may be among the most useful of His servants—I mean useful to others. Paul did some of his best work when a prisoner. A gaoler locked him up at Philippi; but in a few hours he had that very gaoler at his feet, crying out, "What must I do to be saved?" At Rome he preached the Gospel to those around him, until there were many converts in Cæsar's household. He wrote seven of his inspired Epistles while he was Nero's captive—one of them was the letter to Philippi, which is the special Epistle of gratitude for divine mercies, and of exultant joy under sharp afflictions. As canary birds sometimes sing when their cages are covered to prevent it, so this old hero, when caged at Rome, furnished to the world some most sublime melodies of faith and victorious courage.

I need not remind my readers of the case of John Bunyan, who would probably never have written the immortal "Pilgrim's Progress" if he had not been an inmate of Bedford Gaol.

Miss Charlotte Elliott composed that wonderful hymn, "Just as I am, without one plea," and some others of her exquisite songs of the soul, while she was imprisoned in a sick chamber. An invalid lady, who could no longer be a tract distributor in her district, spent her time in folding and directing leaflets of awakening to the impenitent, or consolations to the troubled—and these she sent through the post or by a special messenger. You may imprison a body, but you cannot imprison a soul that is luminous with the light of Jesus, and vocal with the inspirations of His Spirit.

Election and Perseverance.

By Rev. RICHARD GLOVER, M.A., Wootton

HOW may I know whether I am one of the elect? To answer this question, ask another. Have I elected God? Have I chosen Him? If I have, then most certainly He has chosen me. If I love Him, He certainly loves me. "We love Him because He first loved us." Had He not done so, we should never have loved Him. For such grace was never the spontaneous product of any naturally sinful heart, which was my heart. "Do men gather grapes of thorns?"

Do sinners by nature hate sin? And do they by nature love Him who hates it? If I have been renewed in the spirit of my mind—if I have been born again (and real affection for God and the things of God is the certain proof of that), then it must be because I was "born of God"—"born from above."

Or ask another question: Do I follow the good Shepherd? If so, I am sure He follows me. "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord for ever." I should never have followed Him if He had not called me, and inclined my ear unto His word (Acts xvi. 14), and given me grace to obey it, seeking and following Him.

And as to the question of my perseverance to the end, or rather as to His perseverance in the work that He has begun, is not His word enough for me, "My sheep shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand"? And is not the assurance of the Apostle enough: "He that hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." Nay, is not all this wrapped up in His very name? "His name shall be called Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sins." Only slur not over the words, "His people," nor these, "from their sins."

Grace all the work shall crown,
Thro' everlasting days;
It lays in heaven the topmost stone,
And well deserves the praise.

Persecuted Hindu Widows.

(WITH PORTRAIT).

By W. G. KING, C.I.E., MADRAS.

THE absence of freedom endured by women in zenanas in India, and the opinion that degradation of their sex is thereby incurred, have resulted in various expensive missions on the part of the British and American public to alleviate the lot of Mohammedan women, who are the chief sufferers. Such missions are doubtless not without utility, more especially if the ladies who devote themselves to this special work possess medical knowledge; but it must usually require much eloquence to persuade the inhabitant of the zenana that her state represents a condition of servitude, or that she has any more reason to be unhappy than the European lady who, to her mind, is so grossly indelicate as to expose her face, ride astride wheels, and haunt places where men "most do congregate."

Advance of education and the less rigid observance of seclusion in Constantinople will in time bring about more freedom for Mohammedan women throughout the world. In the meantime it is extraordinary how little attention has been excited in charitable circles to the condition of a section of Hindu women, who undergo degradation and constraint of a character infinitely worse than confinement within the four walls of a zenana can imply. These would rarely require the persuasion of a missionary visitor to admit that their lot is indeed miserable; and, if a conservative and bigoted minority be excepted, would receive emancipation with intense gratitude.

The British found in India the practice of "suttee," that is, the burning alive of the Hindu wife upon the funeral pyre of her husband. This abomination, the occasional "accidents" below the procession cars of gods, human sacrifice by way of obtaining prosperous harvests, and the comparatively harmless feat of hook-swinging, are practically the only matters with which, in respect to religious customs, it has been the policy of the Government of India to interfere. But although humanity prompted the decision that burning alive shall not be the fate of widows, that Government has not thought it necessary, up to date, to say how they are to be disposed of; this is, neces sarily, a social problem that Indians must deal with in their own manner. Their verdict has been, hitherto, that no Brahmin widow is to be allowed to re-marry. This, in itself, is a restraint of the liberty of women that would seem worse than condemning to a zenana life, but might not appeal to the philanthropist strongly enough to prompt monetary efforts; the case would be judged rather one to fight on the platform of the "rights of women," than to be dealt with by a charitable organization.

But it must be remembered that these women are not "widows" in the sense that would be accepted in this country. A ceremony which is equivalent to the European idea of bethrothal, in that the child continues to reside with her parents, constitutes a marriage tie, involving, on the death of the so-called husband, a state of widowhood. A girl of four or six years old may thus be irrevocably bound to a boy of equivalent age, or to a man of so advanced years that he might be her grandfather. In either case, the chances of the husband dying before the wife can take her place in the household are necessarily considerable.

When "suttee" ceased to dispose in a summary manner of the increment of widows, the question of re-marriage of virgin relicts forced itself upon public attention. After much careful consideration of the subject, in consultation with learned and orthodox Hindus, the Government of India, in 1856, declared that, whatever mere custom might dictate to the contrary, there was nothing in the Hindu religion which forbade the marriage of widows, and passed an Act legalizing such marriages. With this Act in force, it might reasonably be thought that all difficulties would fall to the ground. But the Brahmin priests, notwithstanding the clear exposition of the facts of the Hindu religion which accompanied Act xv. (India) of 1856, have done their utmost by subtle strategy to nullify its application. In consequence, neither love nor money can secure a bridegroom; the Brahmin girl widow must live the life of a nun—nolens volens.

A LIVING DEATH.

So far, there may be nothing here stated that the average philanthropist can do more than deplore; celibacy has its own reward and its own charm. While the statement of cruel restraint might move genuine lovers of liberty to take an interest in the question, the matter is not one that would demand their help as a matter of philanthropy. The European mind would naturally regard the compulsorily unmarried daughter as the victim of an undesirable system, but having the compensation open to her of passing a life of utility and comfort as an honoured member of the household, the right hand of her mother, and the stay of her old age; and, in return, it might well be thought she would receive the love and sympathy of the household. Nothing can, however, be further from the fact than such a natural supposition; the widow may not die by "suttee," but the priest decrees that her fate shall be a living death. From the moment the decease of her betrothed occurs, she is made to feel that for her existence is a mistake; and on reaching a marriageable age, definite means are taken to make her feel that it was also a mistake to let her husband die first. No haphazard scheme is trusted to; the system to which she is subjected is admirably contrived to debase her morally and physically.

THE INGENUITY OF CRUELTY.

In the first place, her hair is shaven off, and she is kept in that condition. Parting with this "glory of a woman" must be rather a rude shock to a young girl, who should have all the joys of life before her; but this does not suffice. If a Hindu woman has any feminine weakness more fully developed than her European sister, it is in the direction of jewellery; therefore, she is allowed to wear no jewellery.

Lest she find solace in wearing flowers—these are also interdicted. Then her wardrobe is regulated. No longer must silken cloths of well-blended hues, in which the native female finds delight, show off the well-proportioned figure. She must rigidly confine herself to a single uncoloured cotton cloth of poor quality, which must be kept clean by her own hands. But priestly wisdom recognised that the disfigured girl might be capable of exhibiting a healthy and happy face, in spite of deprivation of much that women hold of no light value. The obvious remedy was to keep her in a half-starved condition, and expend any animal spirits that might survive the ordeal of deprivation of all recognised methods of enjoyment, by causing her to undertake the most harassing and menial work of the household.

Hence, it is ruled, and is strictly adhered to in orthodox Brahmin households, that the widow shall eat food of the plainest character—and this but once in twenty-four hours—and that she sleep on the ground and not upon a bed; while the washing of soiled clothing, the sweeping of the house, and every dirty menial work that would, in a family not provided with a widow be relegated to a woman of low caste, falls to her lot. Further, she is debarred from attending marriages and any occasion of social merry-making.

But under such treatment a contented, if not healthy and happy, face might still beam from under the widow's cloth. The priests are, however, equal to the occasion. The wretched girl is made to feel that not only has she fallen from her position as the daughter of the household to that of an ill-fed and ill-clothed, and often, overworked, drudge, but that she is the embodiment of bad luck—a thing to be abhorred and avoided! Did a man meet so ill-omened a creature as this luckless widow on first going into the street in the morning, he would desist from launching any new undertaking; did she dare approach married women during a festival procession, they would shrink from her as the harbinger of evil.

In Indian Villages.

MISS ELIZABETH CLAY, who is at present in England, but who hopes to return to Khutrain Amritsar District, Punjab, at the end of September, has issued a leaflet descriptive of her mission. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, very capable and devoted workers, have joined the staff. Miss Clay writes: "Mr. Thomas has been headmaster of a branch school, and in Government service, but he resigned in order to devote himself to evangelistic work. Mrs. Thomas is a qualified doctor, with diploma from Agra Medical School, and has for several years been in charge of a Lady Dufferin Hospital. Mr. Thomas takes the services in our little church; he also visits the men, and preaches in the bazaars.

"Mrs. Thomas is winning her way among the women, who come in large numbers to the dispensary. During her first three complete months the attendances were 3,821. All these patients hear the Gospel message from her.

"For evangelistic work among the village women my Bible-women and I are still unaided, though a former valued assistant would gladly return if finances would allow. In Khutrain there are fifty villages, some of them really towns, within a radius of four or five miles, which we can visit for a day's work. In the next district there are twenty-six. My register shows that during six months we gave Gospel teaching to groups of varying numbers, in 683 courtyards, in 156 village visits.

My three special objects in a brief visit to England are:—(1) To obtain an English fellow worker who would help in ordinary village teaching, and also inaugurate and superintend a few little primary schools, and eventually be my successor. (2) To seek help towards the support of the medical mission. (3) To become linked with some missionary prayer-meetings, to which I could send occasional information."

Native Work in Shanghai.

In a recent letter, Mrs. Dyer, after telling of a time of severe trial among the native Christians of Shanghai, adds:—

"During all this time the attendance was good, and this year we have been crowded at our morning meetings. We have been obliged to bring all the seats we could find, and still were often uncomfortably full. The meetings have been full of interest, and the Spirit seemed a very real presence. The Christians have been spiritually built up, and inquirers led into the light. Ten men were examined and received. They were baptized after a most satisfactory profession of faith in the Lord Jesus. They vary in age from twenty to forty-eight, and are all fairly well-to-do for Chinese, so they cannot be called rice Christians. One of them told us at the examination that he was a seeker before my dear husband was taken; but what kept him back was pride of heart. The Sunday following the baptism we had a very blessed time at the Lord's table.

"We have for some time been wishing and praying for a hall and buildings where all the various kinds of work can be carried on. This is a real difficulty; but the native members are beginning to realize that it is not too hard for the Lord. About three weeks ago the pastor had a talk with me on the subject, and I told him I thought we could not look to the foreign branch for much help. What I said seemed to be a means of blessing to him. He told me he knew that some were prepared to give liberally. The following morning we had a large gathering, and the pastor took 'Prayer' as his subject, especially believing prayer. He pointed out the duty and privilege of expecting answers to such prayers when asked in deference to the will of God and in the name of Jesus. When the service was finished he told the scholars and non-members that they could leave, and asked the others to stay for a second meeting. As soon as quiet was restored, a little to my surprise the pastor rose and told the conversation he had with me the previous day. He said he knew we were of one mind as to the need of more room for our worship and general work. The need was great, and the difficulty was like a mountain, but that even that mountain might be overcome by prayer and faith. He read a portion of Exodus xxxv. and xxxvi., after which there was a number of short prayers. Then the Deacon Pau stood up and told of the way in which he had been blessed since he had consecrated himself and all he had to the Lord, and offered to give 500dols. towards a new hall. Next to him the new member who had confessed to so much pride of heart, offered 300dols.: a third, also one of the new members, 100dols. After these three, one after another promised in offerings varying from 50dols. to 2dols., until we had about 1,330dols. promised."

Pioneering in Tibet.

AMONG those who in remote places arranged united gatherings for prayer for the King, in connection with the Coronation, was Miss Annie R. Taylor. Writing from Yatong, she says:—

On the 27th of June I had twenty-three of the people to a tea, and gave cake, biscuits, sweets, &c., to about fifty more. After tea I got them to say all together, "God bless the King of England," and then we sang a hymn and had prayers. I had five flags up in the courtyard, and one on the top of the house, which made the place look quite gay.

The Chinese want to close this place to British subjects, and then the whole of Tibet will be closed to the Gospel. My being here prevents this, and that is why they are not very friendly. The bungalow here, that belongs to the Indian Government by treaty, has now been proclaimed Chinese property, and the Chinese flag has been put up by the Commissioners of Customs.

Continue to pray for this dark land. God can open it up, for nothing is too hard for Him. I need a change, but cannot leave here at present.

The Indian Famine.

ACCORDING to The Times:—"The agricultural situation throughout the whole of Bombay is extremely critical. The rainfall has been everywhere deficient, and the young crops are withering. Unless abundant rain falls soon, the kharif harvest will fail. Over a wide area the cotton crop is impaired. Everything hinges on the progress of the monsoon during the next ten days. The meteorological conditions, however, hold out no hope of early rain."

In many districts, however, famine conditions prevail. Referring to the distress in Rajputana, Palanpur, and Gujarat, a worker writes to the Bombay Guardian from Deesa, Rajputana: "Daily we come into contact with famishing men, women, and children. One feels grieved at the ignorance of officials who report, 'No famine.' I would say, 'Come over and see for yourself.' The mistake made is that subordinate officers, often natives, are entrusted to go into districts, and to give their report. Many of these have little or no interest for the sufferings of their countrymen.

"How can it be said, 'No famine,' when poor children ask in vain from door to door for a piece of bread, or look in the dust for wheat seeds to satisfy their hunger? I have known of two children climbing trees to eat nimbolis, and while thus engaged falling from the tree and breaking their arm. This happens in a village where no good Samaritan, no doctor, is at hand who can put it right. These poor children remain maimed, or nearly so, for the remainder of their life-time, thus adding to hunger the burden of a broken limb.

"Other poor boys and girls literally fight with dogs. In some places bunyas, who are very generous to animals and birds, feed these dogs daily, and these children prefer to be bitten rather than let the prize go, often leaving the battlefield with a great open wound.

"Men leave their wives and children, and the poor women, unable to feed their little ones, try to sell them, specially girls."

Rev. James B. Hanna writes from the Mission House, Dohad, Pauch Machals: "I heartily thank you and your readers for the help sent. It came at a most opportune time, as our famine fund had run down. Many Bheels have no grain, but the majority just enough to sow a part of their land. We have had enough rain for sowing, but unfortunately there has appeared an insect that eats the grain as soon as it shows above ground. From our outstations I learn that the Bheels who had sowed a little have now lost the greater part through insects, so this means re-sowing. I am quite sure that if the kind friends who have given could but see the joy brought to the famine-ruined Bheels, they would be rewarded."

Rev. J. C. Lawson, of Aligarh, continues to receive encouragement in his labours in this country of raising funds for his mission. Mr. Marriage Allen writes to him, "I shall be pleased to give you a cheque for £10. I look back with pleasure to my visit to Aligarh."

A CALL TO PRAYER.

The rainfall over a large part of India is deficient, and unless rain comes in ten days, scores of millions will be in want. But let all the Lord's people pray in faith, and it will come. Elijah prayed (after three years' drought) and it rained. Radstock.

Seamen at Jamaica.—The Sailors' Reading-Room at Kingston, Jamaica, opened two years ago through the efforts of Mrs. Denniston, has proved so acceptable and useful that it has been removed from her private residence to 147, Harbour Street. Besides the reading-room, there is a temperance bar and refreshment room, where the men are catered for without being brought into the undesirable company of those who visit the rum shops. Every month the number of sailors frequenting the rooms for the purpose of writing their letters, reading, and enjoying social converse, increases. Germans, Swedes, Norwegians, and English are alike appreciative of the efforts thus made to meet their spiritual and temporal needs while on shore. Mrs. Denniston is the widow of a minister, and her means are not sufficient to carry on the work without assistance.

Priestly Wrath in Chili.

RECENT news from Chili is encouraging; (1) from the frantic endeavours of the Roman priests to stem the tide that slowly but surely is sweeping away the superstition and ignorance in which they have enveloped the people; and (2) because the people themselves seem to be awakening to the oppression that priestly domination always means.

The native pastor at San Bernards was recently thrown into the common prison, along with his young wife, charged with the "crime" of distributing tracts on the streets. They met the people coming from Mass, and had already given away quite a number of booklets and tracts, when a priest came along, and in a loud voice warned the people against receiving anything from the "condemned Protestant." He snatched the tracts and tore them to pieces, in which he was immediately followed by those of the "faithful" whom his eyes detected in possession of those incriminating proofs of their lack of obedience; then passed from insults to blows! Both the pastor and his wife were struck, the priest hounding on the people until there was quite a commotion in the street. Just then a policeman came on the scene, and the priest immediately handed the pastor over to him for "disturbing the faithful at public worship"!

Both in San Bernardo and Rancagua the services have been held in the face of opposition, and in each place the opposition has been used for "the furtherance of the Gospel." News has been received of the proposal to hold a great public meeting in Santiago, the capital, "to protest against the clerical invasion." The writer adds that they have statistical proof of the presence of 100,000 priests in the country, 40,000 of whom are foreigners. The mere fact of this proposal being entertained and mentioned publicly is a most hopeful and encouraging sign for the future of the country; the battle is half won when the people begin to see the need of bestirring themselves.

A few weeks ago, a poor man presented himself to the priest of a country town for an order for the burial of his mother-in-law. Having paid the cost of the order, the priest remarked, "And have you no money to give for masses?" "No, sir," was the reply, "I am very poor, so poor that I could not pay to get the coffin made, and had to make it myself, buying the wood with the last six dollars I had." "See what a stupid man!" cried the cura; "do you not know that the soul is more than the body? You should have buried her in a sack, and brought me the six dollars for masses for her soul. I will not give you the order for burial until you give me something for masses." "Sir," said the poor man, "I have not one cent more; I have been a long time sick; you can see my miserable condition, and I have a numerous family." "Do not come to me with excuses! I will teach you to be a good Catholic!" All that day the poor man waited, until in the evening the priest, seeing it was hopeless to expect anything, threw him the necessary order for the interment of the body.

The Stranger within Thy Gates.—It is much to be regretted that owing to want of funds the Medical Mission of the French Reformed Evangelical Church in London has had to be discontinued, for the institution was not only of great value to the poor foreign Protestants, but was also a great help in the efforts for the evangelization of certain districts in which the foreign element predominates. It is to be hoped, however, that its resumption may soon be made possible. The cosmopolitan nature of the mission work of the French Church in the Metropolis is evidenced by the fact that at the recent annual gathering of the school children the little ones were divided into ten nationalities. Many of these young people settle down in after life in Great Britain and her colonies, and, as Rev. Du Pontet-de la Harpe says, "become more British than Britons themselves." The mission reaches large congregations of all sorts and conditions of men from many lands, and to each hearer the same one glorious Gospel is preached by which they can be saved. Is it not a pity that such a work should be thus limited for want of funds?

In an Algerian Home.

By Miss H. DUVAL DAY.

UP at the top of a long, narrow street, in the Arab quarter of Cherchell is a house which we visit often. According to native custom, being women, we do not knock at the front door, but walk in, and find ourselves in a passage with an old sack hanging as curtain to shield the women from the sight of their neighbours' husbands between the time when they have heard the call "Trik" (make way), and are vanishing into their rooms, dropping curtains over their doors. In this house are four rooms, each with a different family. We cross the courtyard, enter a nice, clean room, and step eagerly forward to the bedside. The bed is high, on a level with our shoulders, and seems almost like a small room, separated as it is by pretty muslin curtains.

But these muslin curtains are now thrown back, for a little woman is on this bed who has heard our footsteps, and is eagerly watching us. We climb on a chair and kiss her, but she is most anxious that no time shall be lost before we unroll a big bundle that is by her side, and kiss, too, the little pink-and-white face, which does not look at all mummy-like, though the body does, wrapped as it is in swaddling-clothes. From the front of the bed, suspended by cords, hangs a gay cradle with a long string attached, and whether she is up on her bed or sitting by the fire cooking, she can rock the cradle with it.

Gamina is this happy mother, and she needs much prayer and sympathy. The coming of baby, instead of drawing her relatives nearer to her, seems to have separated them more and more. They were angry that she would not call in Mohammed to help her, and to repeat the "witness":—"There is no God but Allah, and Mohammed is his prophet." Her elder sister told her she deserved to die.

ALONE FOR CHRIST'S SAKE.

Instead of going in to see her, and taking her little things for herself and baby, they have left her alone, although they knew her husband was out of work and that she had nothing laid by. We have done what we could to replace them and cheer her up; as a rule we give little to her outside Christmas and such like presents. But at such a time all other considerations must be laid aside, and we have done our best to provide for her and nurse her back to health and strength. It is doubly a source of joy to us to see her and the baby getting strong, for had it been otherwise people would have said, "It is the curse of God." Her sister Cherifa, who was "almost persuaded" some years ago, has been frightened back by them into all her old beliefs.

They were all very much annoyed because Gamina named her baby Abdallah, instead of Mohammed as is the custom for the eldest sons. Sometimes even fervent Mohammedans give all their boys that name, varying it in pronunciation to make them distinguishable. Yet Abdallah is a beautiful name, meaning "servant of God."

In all things not touching the faith we encourage Gamina not to oppose her mother-in-law, in dress, food and general manner of life; so baby's hands and feet are dyed with henna paste (which has antiseptic and healing properties) because it is the custom; but when a charm, copied from the Koran, was tied round his neck to keep him in health, Gamina cut it off again. They gave the customary fête on the occasion of baby's first bath, when he was seven days old, before which he had only been rubbed with oil. It might be thought strange they should give a feast of couss-couss and meat with the father out of work, but it is not expensive, as each guest makes a small offering in money to the mother to cover expenses, and also to the nurse, and these offerings help to pay her.

She brings a lot of sweet-smelling wild plants, lavender, peppermint, rosemary, nettle-balm which they boil, washing the baby in the water. On the bed is a dish of corn, eggs, and a candle, which is also the nurse's perquisite. I asked the meaning of these certain things in preference to others; the eggs are that his heart may be white like the egg-shell, that he may be as beautiful as light, and the corn that he might always live in plenty.

Fifteen more days and he will only be bundled from the waist, except at night; two months more and he will not be a bundle at all, and his mother will give him a daily bath.

His mother already tells him that when he can walk he is to come to Nemple every Sunday and go to the French school, and learn to read and write, and then be a colporteur and evangelist. She can anticipate no higher honour.

Among the Fellaheen.

By W. J. FAIRMAN, North Africa Mission.

FOR the purpose of beginning work among the Fellaheen of the Eastern Delta of the Nile, Mr. Fraser and I set out on our bicycles from Shebin el Kan for Sheblanga. We had a fair road as far as Benha, but for the remaining six miles the road was indescribably rough, and we were considerably jolted. Every few yards a small shallow trench had been dug to allow water, pumped up from an adjacent stream or well, to flow over the fields. Over some of these trenches we rode with a crash and a bump; but such heroic treatment was impossible with all, and we were continually alighting and remounting, until we reached our destination.

There was no inn in the village where we could put up, nor anyone willing to let us a room. There was nothing for it but to give instructions to the station-master to send on our boxes of books, &c., to the next station, and for us to mount our iron steeds and make the best of our way there. Fortunately the road from Sheblanga to Minieh El Kamp was decidedly smoother. I filled my bag with books and went into the town, intending to visit first of all the American school, and then to do what I could in the way of preaching Christ and distributing portions of the Word of God to the townspeople. The schoolmaster gave me a warm welcome and showed me round the boys' school, which is attended by some eighty boys; and the one for girls, where the attendance is smaller—fifteen. He seemed a capable man, and holds a prayer-meeting every Wednesday evening in his house, with a service on Sundays to which he invites his friends.

Walking down one of the main streets, I sought for an opportunity of getting into touch with the men. Outside a little general dealer's shop I noticed four or five men talking. Making my way up to them and saluting them, I asked if they could read, and if so would they care to look at my books. One of them could read, and room was immediately made for me to sit down in their midst. I produced a copy of the Psalms, and he immediately began to read with a loud voice. He had scarcely read through the first Psalm, however, before he returned the book, saying, "We do not want this book; this book is for Jews and Christians. We have the Koran." Taking up this point I commenced dealing with him, as I had done with others who had made the same objection; and was succeeding in persuading him and the others that it was the duty of all to read the books of God.

SUCCESSFUL OPPOSITION.

Our discussion by this time had attracted a number of other men, who were now standing around us, and listening attentively to all that was being said, and their presence was attracting others, so that my congregation was rapidly assuming respectable proportions. Unfortunately among them was a dirty and correspondingly ignorant, and therefore bigoted, Fikeh. As soon as I was fairly into the Gospel message, this man chimed in with a flood of Arabic eloquence, and quotations from the Koran and the traditions, to the affect that although the books I was showing them had originally been revealed from heaven, yet the Jews and the Christians, for purposes of their own, and out of spite to Mohammed who had rebuked them for their evil practices, had corrupted and falsified them to such an extent that Almighty God had had to abrogate and supersede them by a new revelation—the Koran—which book, besides being a further and fuller revelation from God, also contained all that was vital and essential to the Law and the Gospel.

Furthermore, I was an infidel, and all who listened to me or read my books were fast going to the evil one. In a very few moments he had completely destroyed all the good I had done. I endeavoured to stem the torrent of his words, and to get in a word here and there; but unsuccessfully. By this time a large crowd had assembled, and effectually blocked the street, and were pressing in on me in a way that was far from pleasant. I noticed a policeman had been attracted by the unusual sight, and was making strenuous efforts to pierce the crowd and get at me; but no one would give way. At last, seeing that the people were getting very excited, and a neighbouring tailor having arisen in wrath, not unmingled with fear, declaring I was ruining his business, I thought it best to make my way back to the Lokanda (inn). I was marked as a notorious character, and when I made my appearance in the streets, it was to hear loud whispers of, "Look! that is he!"

I had a more successful time in the afternoon, when I cycled back to Sheblanga. Seating myself outside a shoemaker's shop, and taking off one of my boots to have a little repair executed, I preached Christ to an audience of about 100 men, Moslems and Copts, for about an hour. One or two of the Copts (native Christians) publicly objected to my preaching to Moslems. Some others, when I had finished, invited me to go with them to a café, and talk with them there. I ordered coffee for them, and as I found out from their responses to my questions that they were living far from satisfactory lives, I had some very plain straight talk with them, and disposed of a Bible, a Testament, and several small portions of Scripture.

The following day Mr. Fraser accompanied me to Sanafeen, where, though we did not find a very wide open door for the preaching of the Word, we had a very interesting time. The Sheikh El Balad (the head sheikh of the town) was a young man, and could talk English fluently. He accepted a copy of the New Testament from us, and promised both to read and explain it to the inhabitants, expressing his willingness to read to them anything we might care to send him at any future time. We left several portions of the Word of God.

Opportunities in China.

WRITING recently on the changes apparent among the people of North China, Rev. S. Lavington Hart (London Mission), Tientsin, calls special attention to the spread of the English language, and the increased desire on the part of a large number to learn English:—

"This is, of course, a very large opportunity for English and American missionaries, and we are altering some of our methods in order to seize it. We are, for instance, starting on our L.M.S. premises a college in which those Chinese who wish to learn English may have their wish gratified, and at the same time, we trust, learn what they need to know. To help on this 'fishing for men,' we are hoping soon to establish a reading-room and book depôt where Chinese and English books may be sold.

"It is imperatively necessary for someone to provide good Christian literature now that this new army of readers is being formed, before they get to know other and evil literature. Happily there is still time for us to be first in the field, if we can but move at once.

"Friends at home kindly made it possible for me to build the reading-room and book depôt. Others will, I hope, respond to appeals which we are now sending home on behalf of the funds required to stock the reading-room. The book depôt ought to be soon paying its way."

Leaning.

I lean, I lean upon Thee, Saviour Christ!
None, none have satisfied as Thou;
And all the past of idol-worshipping
Shall make me lean the harder now,
Nor trust the leaning, but my King.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, August 24. Joshua xxiv.

ONCE more Joshua tells the story of Israel's past, beginning, where God began, in the land beyond the Euphrates, that he might emphasize the fact that the original stock was as much given to idolatry as any of the peoples around. Abraham and his seed owed their distinguished position to nothing but the grace of God. And as the story proceeds through Isaac, Jacob, and Esau, the plagues and the Red Sea, Balak and Balaam, the entire stress is laid on the same grace—I took; I gave; I sent; I brought; I delivered. Everything is attributed to the ultimate source of all things—the supreme will of God. We can never get behind that. Whenever we stop to look back, it is ever by the grace of God that we are what we are.

It would appear that the people secretly practised the worship of household gods, like those which Rachel stole from Laban. These germs of evil might at any moment manifest themselves in some terrible outbreak, so Joshua pleaded with them to put away their idol-gods (14, 23). In their reply, the people acknowledged that they owed everything to Jehovah, expressing their fixed determination to serve Him.

We have made vows like these and broken them as often. Clearly we need another than Joshua; we need Thee, O blessed Son of God, who dost indwell the soul, and work there the perfect obedience which Thou dost demand.

MONDAY, August 25. Judges i.

The Book of Judges is full of interest as the link between Joshua and Samuel. We are reminded continually that there was no king in Israel, and that every man did what was right in his own eyes. Anarchy and defeat were the inevitable result. The life which rejects the headship of Christ is doomed to similar experiences. Nothing is more perilous than a divided heart.

I have been reading the inner experience of an illustrious man that bears this out exactly. He had everything that the world could give him, but had no God, and for very misery he was set on committing suicide. "I remember," he says, "one day in early spring, I was alone in the forest, bending my ear to its mysterious noises, and my thought went back to the quest of God. 'Why do I look further?' a voice within me asked. 'He is here; He, without whom one cannot live. To acknowledge God, and to live, are one and the same thing. God is what life is. Well, then; live and seek God.' After this, things cleared up within me, and the light has never wholly died away."

Judah, according to all the prophecies which had gone before on him, was chosen to lead the conquest. He and Simeon drove out the Canaanites from their highland fastnesses, but were unable to dislodge them from the valleys, because of their iron chariots. Not that God would not have given them the victory, but that they could not believe that He would. The same story of failure is told in many following verses. Probably it has its counterpart in some who read these words. Each of us has some valley with its iron chariots, which fills us with dread, and causes incessant failure. Yet God is with us and within our heart. To hand the conflict over to Him would ensure victory. Jebusites and Amorites may be too strong for us, but not for Him.

TUESDAY, August 26. Judges ii.

This chapter, and the first eight verses of the next, deserve attentive study, because we are taught the inner principles which governed the Divine dealing with Israel during the troubled years of the next two or three centuries. The heart of the mischief lay in Israel's practical repudiation of Jehovah, and insensate adoption of the deities of Canaan, Baal and Astarte, which were worshipped with very impure rites—such as were calculated to sap the courage and strength of all who practised them. These sins at once broke the blessed bond of union between God and His people, and He left them to the mercy of their foes.

Repentance brought immediate deliverance (18); but the deliverance soon vanished, as they returned again to their old sins. We have had the same experiences repeatedly. While we have been careless as to our separation from evil, we have had no power whatever against our inward lusts and temptations.

It is the life of separation which is strong and victorious. Thomas Elwood, who was Milton's secretary, has set us an example in this respect. "By this divine light," he says, "I saw that though I had not the evil of the common uncleanliness, debauchery, profaneness, and pollutions of the world to put away, because I had, through the great goodness of God, been preserved from those grosser evils—yet I had many other evils to put away and cease from; some of which were not accounted evils by the world, which lies in wickedness, but by the light of Christ were made manifest to me to be evils, and as such condemned me." We must separate ourselves from all complicity with the flesh, if we would be delivered from the power of temptation.

WEDNESDAY, August 27. Judges iii.

We have the story here of the judgeships of Othniel, Ehud, and Shamgar. In each case there was sin in Israel, then repentance and confession, followed by the Divine deliverance through the appointed Judge.

The narrative of Ehud's interview with Eglon is very graphically given. The dagger girt on the right side rather than the left, the certainty that it was a message from the Almighty, the imperturbable courage that could lock the door and carry off the key, the celerity with which the Ephraimites arose to intercept the flight of the Moabites to their own country—these are touches which mark the deliberate forethought of the deed.

Each of these judges was doubtless conscious of the uprising of that same Spirit within him that has been realized since by the Luthers, the Foxes, the Wesleys, and many others. Scattered throughout the prophetic writings are expressions which speak of some strong and irresistible impulse coming down on the messenger of the Divine will, determining his attitude towards the events of his time, constraining his utterance, making his words the vehicle of a mind above his own. Take, for instance, those words of Ezekiel, "The hand of the Lord God fell on me;" "the hand of the Lord was strong upon me." Let us surrender ourselves to Him. He still needs men wholly devoted to Him, through whom He may realize His purposes, and there is no limit to what He will do by those who know no will but His.

THURSDAY, August 28. Judges iv.

Twenty years of oppression before Israel awoke to discover that their sins were the cause of their sore miseries! Do you, my friend, groan under some mighty oppression? There may be instant deliverance, through the grace of the risen Lord, brought to you and into you by the Holy Spirit. Remember those words of Bunyan: "And now did my chains fall off my legs indeed; I was loosed from my afflictions and irons; my temptations also fled away. Now could I see myself in heaven and earth at once; in heaven by my Christ, my Head, my Righteousness, though on earth my body and person. Christ was a precious Christ to my soul that night; I could scarce lie in my bed for joy, and peace, and triumph through Christ."

What a blessed thing it is that in Christ is neither male nor female. Deborah is the type of many, many noble women, who have led the Lord's hosts forth to victory. How much such may do to encourage the actual combatants by their quick perception of the time of the Divine movements, of the agents of the Divine will, and of the certainty of ultimate deliverance! Ah, it is easy to fight, when we have the assurance that the Lord is gone out before us! "The Lord discomfited Sisera." A supernatural panic seems to have befallen his army, and this was accompanied by a terrific storm (v. 20, 21). How far is Nature sentient of human sin, calamities, and woes!

In acting as she did, Jael was contradicting all the customs of Eastern hospitality. The inspired writer narrates the story, but passes no comment. It is a sad episode! But all these are stages in the upward movement of men towards the Divine ideal of Matt. v.

FRIDAY, August 29. Judges v.

This magnificent ode shows to what a noble pitch of inspired imagination, the elect spirits in Israel, even at that time, were capable of rising. In these burning couplets we have the graphic story of Israel's agony and deliverance.

First, the desolation and destitution of Israel—the highways deserted, shields and spears confiscated, war even in the gates. Then the arousal of a new spirit among the governors and leaders of Israel, who rode on white asses and sat on rich carpets, and whose acts would be rehearsed around the wells of the country, when they were no longer exposed to the bows of the archers. Then the assembling of the tribes, preceded by the coming down of the Lord (13). To the rendezvous came the soldiers of Ephraim, who dwelt near the Mount of the Amalekites, a small quota from Benjamin, valiant leaders from Machir, Zebulun, Naphtali, and Issachar; Reuben finally elected to remain by his water-courses, Gilead beyond Jordan, Dan and Asher by their ships.

After this there is the description of the fight on the historic Plain of Esdraelon, the terrific storm, beneath whose downpour the waters of the Kishon was swollen to a torrent; the overthrow and flight of the host; the curse of Meroz, a little village in the direct line of the rout, which refused to join in the pursuit; the murder of Sisera by Jael, and his mother's disappointment at his failure to return. Notice the closing words. So shall God's enemies perish, while those that love Him shall be as the sun which goeth forth in his strength (Matt. xiii. 43). Always in life and history there are these two words, Depart, ye cursed; Come, ye blessed. Always we must be classed among those who fight against the Lamb, or who love Him; who help His enemies by doing nothing, as Meroz did, or who hazard themselves as free-will offerings (9).

SATURDAY, August 30. Judges vi.

The extreme desolation to which the hosts of Midian had reduced Israel is indicated by Gideon's use of a flail instead of oxen, as was usual for winnowing corn, and of pursuing his work under a tree, and on the bare ground, to deaden the sound.

This Angel was apparently the Christ, who often appeared as the Angel of the Covenant else how could it be that the Lord looked on him? Hast thou ever heard Him say to thee also, who are as insignificant in thine own sight as Gideon in his, "Go in this thy might, for thou shalt deliver. Surely I will be with thee"? Oh, with what invincible strength does that soul become inspired which hears such words as these, spoken deep into its depths!

We are all tested in the less, before being honoured to undertake the greater. Gideon must first deal with the idolatries of the home, before he can confront the rooted evils of the fatherland. God help us to be faithful in the very little; then the gates of iron will open before us, and the gates of brass shall not be shut.

The movement of the Midianites and Amalekites was signalised, in Gideon's case, by a new spiritual baptism. The Spirit of the Lord clothed Himself with Gideon's personality (R.V. marg.), and he became infilled and inspired by His super-eminent force. There could be no impossibilities to such a man—the more so as the reduplicated sign of the fleece revealed to him the mind and will of God, pledged on his side.

About Fishing-Nets.

I SUPPOSE most of you are at the seaside by now, and are interesting yourselves in all you see about the shore. Among other things, it is worth while, when you have an opportunity, to examine the large nets the fishermen use. I remember how eagerly I used to watch the fishing-boats come in, and imagined I was helping a great deal when I joined with others in hauling them ashore. Once a fisherman gave me a fish for my pains, but I am obliged to confess it was a very small one. Still, I enjoyed what little there was of it when it was cooked, and was rather glad my brothers were not there to claim "shares"!

These nets are furnished along one side with pieces of cork, so that they may not sink; and along the opposite side with pieces of lead, which carry down that part of the net deep into the sea. Thus the net is stretched out, so that, when it is drawn in, it may enclose (so the fishermen hope) "a multitude of fishes." I wonder if it was this sort of net that Peter and James and John used in the Sea of Galilee.

Now you can easily see that if the net had only corks and no weights, it would float on the surface of the sea and be useless for catching fish; on the other hand, if it had weights and no corks, it would sink, and be of no use that way either; but having both corks and weights rightly placed, it is stretched out, and does the work for which it is intended.

I knew a good minister (who is now dead) who was fond of describing this to older people as an illustration of the joys and sorrows of their life; and I daresay many of your parents will appreciate it from that point of view. The kindly providence of God wisely arranges that our joys shall be mingled with sorrows; else we might spend our life idly and uselessly, dancing as it were upon its sunny surface. But with our sorrows He also mingles joys, so that we may not be cast down and discouraged.

To us younger ones it may show us the uses of Play and Work. This is holiday-time, and all our lesson books are put away for awhile. I expect most of you like holidays better than school; but if you think a moment, I am sure you will see that if all our life were play, it would not amount to much, either for ourselves or for those around us, and we should not be fitted for the place in the world for which God has appointed us.

On the other hand, life would be very tedious if it were all work, with no playtime or holidays to look forward to. You know, a great many boys and girls in our large cities have to go out and sell papers, and do other work, before and after school hours every day, and with no chance to enjoy themselves at the seaside. We cannot help feeling very sorry for them, and I hope some of you have given your pennies and shillings to some fund to give such children a peep at the sea or at God's beautiful country, if only for a single day.

I want you to enjoy your holidays, and all your play, for all you are worth. Enter into your games with a will, and with all the heartiness and good temper you can throw into them. God taught the Wise Man to say (Eccles. xi. 9): "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thine heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth; and walk in the ways of thine heart and in the sight of thine eyes." And the Apostle Paul says (Col. iii. 23), "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily."

But let all your play fit you the better to work when you go back to school. Do not live a useless, worthless life. If you are to be, as Jesus desires, "fishers of men," you must be willing to have your life and ideas expanded, stretched out, by the weights of your work, to develop your character, and broaden your Christian sympathies. And so the Wise Man goes on to say: "But remember that for all these things (that is, your enjoyment and your play), God will bring thee into judgment." That does not mean that he condemns you for being happy and lively—far from it—but that He will judge or test your life, to see what it is worth; in the same way as, at the end of term, you have examinations, to show what benefit the previous weeks of teaching have done you. You cannot teach others unless you have learnt yourself; and you cannot set your playmates a good example unless you have taken Christ's yoke upon you, and have "learnt of Him."

So take the fishing-net as a type of what He wishes your life to be, using both the corks and the weights, the play and the work, the pleasures and the sorrows, as all parts of God's kind purpose. Do not murmur, but rejoice, even in the duties of life; and by-and-by you will know that He had led you by a right way.

My Path.

Deeper and yet deeper still
Shadows on my pathway fall,
Yet they graciously fulfil
Wisdom guiding, ruling all,
And in deepest shade I feel
Love that woundeth but to heal.

Deepest grief my heart bows down,
Yet in its strong grasp I see
Greater love than yet I've known,
Claiming still my all for Thee,
Winding all about Thy rod,
Love, I see my gracious God!

Deeper, deeper in my heart
Let that love, O God, abide
Till my very inmost part
Be to Jesus sanctified,
Leave not Thou Thy work in me
Till Thine image there I see.

Stronger, stronger o'er my will
Let Thy Spirit have control,
Chastening, guiding, ruling still,
Bend to Thee my heart and soul,
So each secret thought shall be
Sanctified, my God, to Thee!

My Prayer.

Lord, dost Thou need a human heart
Through which to love
The erring ones on this sad earth,
And thus to prove
That One who died for them long, long ago
Still lives above?

Lord, dost Thou need a human voice
Through which to speak
In tones so tender, soft and sweet,
With manner meek,
A message that shall win the hardest heart
Its God to seek?

Lord, dost Thou need a human life
Through which to live—
A life that for the world around
Its all doth give;
Poured forth for others, that Thy love Divine
They may believe?

Beloved Saviour, Master, Friend,
This boon I crave:
Accept my heart, my voice, my life,
Raised from the grave,
Thus, one with Thee, oh, wilt Thou not through me
Thy lost ones save?

Christian Endeavour Topic.

God's Freed Men (Ex. xxi. 1-6).

THE poor Hebrew peasant, oppressed by the wandering Bedouin, or ruined by a repeated series of bad crops, was only too glad to leave his little patrimony and become the bond-servant of some rich land-owner, so securing food for himself and his family until brighter skies spread themselves above his head. It is often so, under the stress of awful need, that we first come to Christ.

Here are some cases of the urgent stress of need beneath which souls are bound. Goethe, the great German philosopher, says: "At the bottom my existence has been nothing but pain and burden; and I can affirm that during the whole of my seventy-five years I have not had four weeks of genuine well-being."

Bunyan also describes his feelings before conversion by saying: "I was sorry that God had made me a man. How I blessed the condition of the dog or horse, for I knew that they had no soul to perish under the everlasting weight of hell or sin, as mine was like to do!"

Count Tolstoi also has described himself as seeking to save himself from a wild beast by jumping down a well; but seeing a dragon at the bottom waiting to devour him, he catches hold of a wild bush growing out of one of the cracks of the well, the roots of which were being gnawed by a white and black mouse representing the days and nights.

If any of my readers are suffering under such dire stress as these experiences delineate, let them go at once to Jesus Christ, and ask Him to take them into His home. The motive by which they are actuated may not be a very lofty one, but if it only brings them to Him they will find redemption from their awful sin-cursed condition. This is the experience of one such: "'Oh, help me, help me,' cried I, 'Thou Redeemer of souls, and save me, or I am gone for ever. With one drop of Thy blood, Thou canst atone for all my sins.' At that instant of time, when I gave all up to Him to do with me as He pleased, and when I become willing that God should rule over me at His pleasure, redeeming love broke into my soul with such power that it seemed to be melted down with love, the burden of guilt and condemnation was gone, darkness was expelled, my heart filled with gratitude, and my whole soul, that a few minutes before was groaning under mountains of death and crying to an unknown God for help, was now filled with immortal love, soaring on the wings of faith, and crying out, 'My Lord, and my God!'"

This is the first experience of the soul-life, and after some time has passed it is succeeded by another. We are no longer under the fear of hell and wrath; but stay with Christ, because we love Him for Himself, and life apart from Him is to be dreaded worse than anything in the universe. This experience is well set forth by the decision of the Hebrew peasant not to exercise his liberty of going forth from his master's house at the end of six years, but to remain with him for ever. He gladly lays down his liberties at his master's feet, to take them back again as his servant—enslaved to be truly free.

So we find it. We have been the servants of sin, but have now become the servants of Christ. His service is our perfect freedom. Serving Him we are delivered from all the old tyrannies that dare not intrude within the charmed area, where He is the supreme King and Master.

The Hebrew peasant was not allowed to act on impulse, but compelled deliberately to face the ordeal of having his ear bored to the doorpost of the master's house, in the presence of the magistrate. The Psalmist insists that something of this experience has befallen himself, and that God had bored his ears to the door of His service (Psa. xl. 6). Nay, did he not in those words impersonate the Lord when He yielded Himself to be nailed to the cross? Thither, also, if we will, the Holy Spirit will bring each one of us, and bind us to the altar by inviolable bonds. Then, as we live only for the Lord Jesus, we shall discover that we are for ever free from the miseries of a divided heart and double life. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

A C.E. Convention has recently been held in Spain, and was so hopeful and well-attended that it is being spoken of as one of the most important Protestant gatherings ever held in the history of the country.

* * *

The latest statistics of world-wide Endeavour show that there are now 62,471 societies in the world, with an enrolment of 3,600,000. In foreign lands the outlook for Christian Endeavour was never more encouraging than it is to-day.

* * *

During the last half year the C.E. movement has been making magnificent headway in Italy. In Rome a National Union of Christian Endeavour has been formed. In Florence, Turin, the Waldensian Valleys, societies are being formed, and widespread interest aroused. The Tavola, the highest executive board of the Waldensian Church, has agreed to call together all the young people of the associations in the valleys. This conference will probably be held at the approaching gathering of the Synod in September.

The Brazen Serpent (Num. xxi. 1-9).

Golden Text.—John iii. 14, 15.

"THE space in which we came from Kadesh-barnea, until we were come over the brook Zered, was thirty and eight years, until . ." &c. (Deut. ii. 14, 15). Of this long period we have few incidents; (a) the stoning of a man for Sabbath breaking; (b) the rebellion of Korah and his confederates; (c) 14,700 slain by plague; (d) the budding of Aaron's rod; (e) the death of Miriam; and (f) the bringing of water out of the rock at Kadesh (xxiii. 1-13); (g) the refusal of the Edomites to allow the Israelites to pass through their land; and (h) the death of Aaron on Mount Hor, a short while after his sister, and seven moths before his younger brother Moses (34, 38). Chap. xv. to xxi. This brings the history to the early part of the fortieth year after leaving Egypt.

Index Lines.

Israel. { Praying and conquering. / Murmuring and dying. / Looking and living.

Praying and Conquering.—When the people heard the condemnation of Jehovah pronounced upon them for their rebellion, and saw His judgment on the faithless spies, instead of turning to the Lord with tears of repentance for their sin, they made a determined and presumptuous rush for the Land of Promise, and determined to force their way into it by sheer power of self-will. The result was inevitable and complete defeat, for the Amalekites and Canaanites drove them back as far as Hormah (xiv. 32-45). Hence, when the same enemy confronted them again thirty-eight years later (xxi. 1), having learned this time wisdom by former defeat, they took up the only safe position—"on praying ground"—and sought the strength of the Lord wherewith to meet His enemies.

Murmuring and Dying.—Edom's refusal forced the Israelites to find another route, which meant directly away from the promised land instead of towards it, so as to come round Edom by way of the "Sea of Sedge," or Eastern arm of the Red Sea. This disappointment roused the old spirit of murmuring, on the old lines; but the Lord used prompt and drastic means to rid the camp of more of the grumblers, and bring the people to a right mind. The evil words of unbelief often get what they dread; and the word of faith always gets what it claims (Matt. ix. 29).

Israel Looking and Living.—The judgment of Jehovah brought Israel to repentance. If we will not be won by His blessings, God in mercy drives us by His judgments. They had to come to the very man they had maligned to beg his prayers on their behalf. "Fiery," intolerable burning, unquenchable thirst, and speedy death. Moses made the serpent of brass by God's command; who destroyed it? And why? (2 Kings xviii. 4).

Jehovah's directions were deeply significant. A wonderful type of Christ and illustration of the way of life, the serpent of brass was at the same time an expression of God's love to sinners, and his judgment on sin. The people had sinned by unbelief; God demanded unquestioning faith in His appointed means, as a condition of recovery.

I. The plague was not removed, but God provided (a) an antidote; (b) in life form; (c) and only one (Gal. iii. 13, Heb. ix. 22, 26; Phil. ii. 7, 8, 2 Cor. v. 21; Acts iv. 12).

II. No curative power in the serpent of brass; the power of God to heal came forth to meet the look of faith given in obedience to His Word. Jesus "is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him" (Heb. vii. 25 and Isa. xlv. 22).

III. (a) The bitten ones were to "look," and (b) only those who looked, each for himself, were saved. Are we bitten by sin? (c) Rom. iii. 23; vi. 23; v. 8 and 9 R.V. "Hath" (John iii. 36). "Me" (Gal. ii. 20; 1 Tim. i. 15). "To-day I must abide at thy house" (Luke xix. 5, 6).

IV. To hear of the remedy was not enough—"when he looketh." It was within reach of all—"If any man sin." To neglect or refuse, or even waste time asking how and why meant death (Heb. ii. 3).

V. The opportunity of life was given, but the people were not forced to look. In Jesus there is healing and salvation for all who come to Him.

VI. Lift up the standard; say, "Behold the Lamb of God;" witness for Jesus, "that taketh away the sin of the world."

Lessons.

1. "I will have my own way, at any cost," says the self-willed child; and the result is always disastrous. "Teach me to do Thy will," at any cost; and though the cry goes up to God 'mid blinding tears, the answer will always be, "The peace of God, which passeth understanding shall garrison your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus (Phil. iv. 7).

2. We are no match for "the principalities and powers in the heavenlies" (Eph. vi. 10-18) in our own strength; but "strong in the Lord" (Heb. iv. 16), with full surrender (1 John iii. 22; Ps. lxviii. 28), "more than conqueror" (Rom. viii. 37).

3. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick," but it is only sin harboured in the soul that breeds the spirit of rebellion, hinders prayer (1 John iii. 21, 22), and dishonours God. "Search me" (Ps. cxxxix. 23, 24).

4. The bread of heaven is sweet only to the heaven-born soul; and it is a bad sign when the child of God longs to taste again the pleasures of the world.

5. The promise in Psa. iv. 15 is true to-day for each scholar, therefore each may say Psa. lvii. 2; and, though they are "in a solitary way" in the wilderness, may sing of the redeemed even on earth, as in Psa. cvii. 4-7.

6. There is no limit given to the number of times we may come to the throne of grace for help (Heb. iv. 16). As often as we come to the Cross of Jesus in repentance and faith, so often shall we find Him "faithful and just to forgive us our sins."

7. Sin and sorrow are not taken out of the world, but Jesus is a Saviour from sin, and His grace is sufficient for all trouble (2 Cor. xii. 7-9).

8. It is by looking to Jesus dying on the Cross for my sin that I am saved, not by looking at the wood that bore Him. "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world" (John i. 29); and believing comes from looking to Jesus; and both mean salvation and life (John iii. 15, 16, 17).

DIRECT TO GOD'S EAR.

Complaints are made at times that at telegraph offices the messages, as handed over the counter, are not forwarded, as intended, exclusively to the desired destination. The method of sending a telegram is well known to many people, and often, when a message is being transmitted, certain of the public who may be listening can tell exactly what is going by the ticking on the instrument. But when a prayer is offered to the Lord, it reaches His ear without any interference in the delivering, and when the Israelites were troubled by the Canaanites, and taken prisoners by them, they cried to the Lord in their trouble. The Lord hearkened to the voice of Israel, and delivered up their enemies (verse 3).

THE REBOUND OF SIN.

Whenever the aboriginal natives of Australia give a display of their prowess, one of the most remarkable of their weapons used is the boomerang, which a black can manipulate in a wonderful manner. He will throw the curved weapon at any object, and it will invariably rebound to the thrower after the mark has been hit. Sin, like a boomerang, rebounds on the sinner, and he often suffers on account of his transgression. The Israelites murmured against God and Moses, and the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people, and much people of Israel died (v. 6). Thus were they visited as a result of their iniquity.

LIFE FOR A LOOK.

A young man of our acquaintance has suffered for some time past from lupus. Recently, a doctor who was interested in the case secured for him the privilege of undergoing treatment by the "light cure," which has benefited so many sufferers from lupus. The young man, having secured the order to be treated, has but to "look and live;" but owing to a prejudice, and the trouble of attending the hospital, he is failing to take advantage of the wonderful cure; and to-day he is slowly, but very surely, becoming worse from the effects of the "wolfish" disease. If he would but look at the light he could live, but he refuses to accept the offer. The Lord said, "It shall come to pass that everyone, when he looketh upon the fiery serpent, shall live" (v. 8). The look of faith saves us from our sin.

TO ANY AND EVERYONE.

At present there is trouble in connection with a certain hospital because of a recent case of neglect. A little girl was run over by a heavy van, and a doctor who happened to be passing helped to move the child to an ambulance. When the little sufferer reached the hospital, the authorities would not admit her because a private doctor had assisted, and it was not until some hours afterwards, when a letter of introduction had been obtained, that she was given a bed at the institution. How different was God's treatment of the people of Israel? It came to pass that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass he lived (verse 9).

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

EDINBURGH CASTLE, E.

INTEREST and enthusiasm continue to mark the progress of Dr. Henry's mission at Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E. The three services held each Lord's Day, and the Thursday and Saturday evening meetings, draw together large audiences, and the results are very encouraging.

Thursday evening last the address was a lucid setting forth of the transformation of faith (Rom. xii. 2); and on Saturday Dr. Henry gave a helpful exposition of Christ's Intercessory Prayer (John xvii). On Lord's Day morning the speaker took as his subject, "Spiritual Satisfaction," as exemplified in Psa. xxiii.

Some 1,500 men assembled at the P.S.A. in the afternoon, to whom Dr. Henry made a striking and forcible appeal from Isa. i. 18: "Come now, let us reason together, saith the Lord." From a famous signal used at level railway crossings in America, the arm of which bears three imperious words, Stop! Look! Listen! many suggestive and pointed lessons were drawn. In the course of a powerful address, he emphasized the two words, "now" and "reason." He proceeded to show the momentous significance of the fact that (1) we are to live for ever; (2) life here is preparation for hereafter; (3) to perform one's duty (i.e., what is due to God and man) is the principal thing; (4) the performance of duty begins with the acceptance of Christ as the personal Saviour. The service in the evening was an impressive occasion. Dr. Henry spoke of Christ as the Tried Stone. He had passed through the fires of criticism and conduct, and the more He was tested the more striking did the matchlessness of His winsome and attractive qualities appear.

So far as the drink question is concerned, the most wholesome thing that could be done for our country would be that those who have died through drink should have their graves marked with a slab on which should be engraved the form of the intoxicating cup, and underneath should be inscribed the words, "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven." That record is written in heaven, and the world will one day know how many thousands have gone down through drink.

During these services, Dr. Henry had the valued assistance of Mr. T. Armon Jones, whose powerful and cultured voice was used in singing the Gospel.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Till Aug. 30, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; Aug. 31, Lincoln; Sept. 4, Louth; 6-9, Taunton; 10, 11, Newport, Mon.; 12-14, Taunton; 15, 16, Llanelly; 18, 19, Dunfermline; 21, Free St. George's, Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Whyte's); 22-24, Dunfermline; Sept. 26-Oct. 3, Alloa; 4-17, Perth; 18-31, Greenock; Nov. 2-Dec. 4, Ireland (Nov. 2-5, Cork; 6-9, Limerick; 10, 11, Athlone; 12-14, Wexford; 15-25, Belfast; 26-Dec. 4, Dublin); Dec. 6-16, Worcester; 21, Brighton; Jan. 9-15, 1903, Motherwell; 16-29, Lisburn.

God, Giver of All.

"Out of the depths" we cry to Thee, (Psa. cxxx. 1.)
Hear us in our extremity;
When from the night of sin we wake,
O pardon, Lord, for Jesus' sake,
And, "God of Grace," give grace. (1 Pet. v. 10.)

When joy seems buried in the past,
And all our future overcast;
When we discern no light ahead
And gloom's dark veil is o'er us spread,
"Father of Lights," give light. (James i. 17.)

When disappointment's chilling blast
Has swept our life, until at last
Our every earthly hope has fled,
And e'en desire itself seems dead,
O "God of Hope," give hope. (Rom. xv. 13.)

When life's sad shocks our souls distress,
And sad bereavements sore oppress;
When we are overwhelmed with grief,
"God of all Comfort," send relief, (2 Cor. i. 3.)
And "God of Peace," send peace. (1 Thess. v. 23.)

For grace, light, hope, and peace we pray
Supply our need from day to day;
Thus, "Heavenly Father," let us prove
Thou art in truth the "God of Love," (1 John iv. 8.)
And Giver of all good gifts. (James i. 17.)

Prayer-Force.

AN EXTRACT FROM A LETTER.

"I will give you the early and the latter rain."

"As the early or former rain which began to fall in Palestine in October caused the seed which had been sown to germinate, so the first out-pouring of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost germinated or started the infant church; and that the next great out-pouring of the Spirit, called the latter rain, will come as the latter rain did in Palestine to mature the grain for the harvest, and that it will mature or prepare the Church for Christ's second coming. As the first out-pouring of the Spirit was brought about (from the human side) by the united Prayer-Force of the whole infant Church—so also the great latter out-pouring of the Spirit will be brought about by the united Prayer-Force of the whole Church. When the Holy Spirit shall have completed this great Prayer Union throughout the world, then the Church will be able to put forth sufficient spiritual force to bring down the great 'Latter rain' of the Spirit. The latter out-pouring of the spirit will be as much greater and more universal than the first out-pouring, as the church now is greater and more universal than it was at the time of the first out-pouring.

"Prayer is as truly a force in the spiritual world as electricity is in the natural world, therefore I infer that prayer, being a force, is subject to laws just as any force in nature is, and that the laws of prayer are as capable of being studied as the laws of nature are, and with the same certainty of result. I believe that the Bible is a perfect text book for studying spiritual law scientifically, and that the children of God lose immensely by not studying it in this way.

"We are talking about God's wireless telegraphy. You will remember I told you something of Mr. Marconi's wonderful plan for keeping his messages secret from the outside world, and securing that only those should understand them to whom they were sent. It is by what he calls "tuning," that is, the instrument on one side of the Atlantic is so arranged that it sends out exactly the same number of vibrations as the instrument on the other side. Thus the air and light waves coming from one point correspond with those from the other so exactly that they meet and fit into each other, as it were the tongue speaking into ear ready and listening for the word to be uttered. How this is done is explained in an article in a recent magazine which I read with deep interest. We shall later understand better the mechanical part of this clever instrument; but, thank God, we can understand the spiritual part of it to-day. It means that if our ears are open, and our hearts right with God and tuned by His Spirit (like the piano to what is called concert pitch, to be exactly in tune with some other delicate instrument), we shall hear, see and understand what the outside world does not recognise, and so be able to hold conversation with God over deep seas and mountains of obstruction or sorrow, when others, not acquainted with the system of His wireless telegraphy, are lost in doubt or darkness."

Ten Thousand People and no Beerhouse. —The village of Walkden, which is chiefly devoted to mining—there are a few weaving sheds in it—and embraces a population of 10,000, does not contain a single beerhouse in its area, and there are only three fully-licensed houses in the district. The lord of the manor is the Earl of Ellesmere, who will come into his great inheritance next year, when the Duke of Bridgewater's trust expires. Walkden has lately been made the headquarters of the trust, and is rapidly developing into an important township, into which large numbers of Manchester people are now drifting, there being an excellent train service between Walkden and Cottonopolis on the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, and a moderate service on the London and North Western Railway. It is being rumoured that applications for permission to build another hostelry will be made when the property is transferred to Lord Ellesmere, but, locally, doubts are expressed as to the success of the application.

Obituary.

REV. PAUL JAMES TURQUAND.

AN impressive figure of a bygone generation, and formerly one of the best known Congregational ministers in London, Rev. Paul James Turquand passed to his rest on the 13th inst. Trained for the ministry at New College, Hampstead, he was the pastor for nearly forty years of York Street Chapel, Walworth (where he succeeded the well-known Nonconformist divine, Rev. George Clayton), where Robert Browning was christened, and where his parents attended for a number of years. It is now worked as a Congregational settlement, under the direction of Rev. F. Herbert Stead. Mr. Turquand resigned the pastorate in 1890, when he removed to Clapham. For many years he was secretary of the Surrey Congregational Union, the secretary of the Congregational Fund Board, and the financial secretary of the Board of Congregational Ministers. He died suddenly from heart disease.

MRS. J. HOOD WILSON.

On July 24 last Mrs. Wilson, the wife of Dr. Wilson, of the Barclay Church, Edinburgh, was called home without a moment's warning. To her to live was Christ. She was distinguished by Christian intelligence and by the keenness and variety of her practical Christian sympathies. She was specially interested in home missions, temperance, and foreign and Jewish missions. She was one of the founders and chief supporters of the Temperance Home for Women in Peeblesshire. She wrote several poetical pieces. Two of her hymns, with her initials, "M. C. W.," have had a wide circulation. The first verses of these hymns are:—

If washed in Jesus' blood,
Then bear His likeness too;
And, as you onward press,
Ask "What would Jesus do?"

We know there's a bright and glorious home
Away in the heavens high,
Where all the redeemed shall with Jesus dwell,
But will you be there and I?

She had, in an eminent degree, the grace of missionary affection, and death surprised her in the act of preparing a present for a mission station. Her removal will be a great loss to a very large circle of Christian workers in home and foreign mission fields. In common with many friends in all the churches they will deeply sympathize with her husband in his loneliness.

The Christian's Homeward Voyage

The Christian's bark is anchored
With a cable firm and strong,
And he trusts his chosen Captain,
Tho' the voyage may seem long;
When he meets the howling tempest,
Then he draws the canvas in,
And he rides the rolling billows
With the peace of God within.

Thus he fears not wind or weather
As he stems the rising gale,
For the Lord is round about him,
And His mercies never fail.
As his eye looks thro' the cloud rifts
He can glorious sights behold,
For he sees the distant haven,
And its streets of shining gold.

Then, as the clouds are scattered
When the storm is spent and gone,
Still he trusts the Heavenly Captain,
Who will steer the vessel on;
With the sunshine on her canvas,
And a ripple far behind,
And her pennon floating lightly
As it courts the genial wind.

Then his heart is filled with gladness,
And his lips with songs of praise,
As he nears the longed for haven,
And his bark the helm obeys:
Then he casts abroad the anchor,
As the sun sets in the west,
And he cries with joy exultant
"I have reached my Home of Rest!"

The Y.M.C.A. and Volunteer Camps.

BEFORE our work among the Volunteers is over, friends will be glad to hear some of our experiences in the various camps. The results have far exceeded our most sanguine anticipations. On Salisbury Plain, from August 2 to 9, we were working amongst the men of the South Lancs. Brigade, consisting of Volunteers from Liverpool, Ormskirk, Southport, St. Helens, Prescot, Earlestown, &c. Volunteers from the other brigades also made use of our tent. Since August 9 we have had an additional marquee, and both tents have been literally crammed by the men of the North and East Lancs. Brigade and the 14th Middlesex (Inns of Court).

From the time the "reveille" sounded at 5 a.m., until "last post" at 10 p.m., we scarcely had an idle moment. Officers and men have warmly appreciated the work. Col. Pilkington, Lieut.-Col. Cooke, and Major Thomas, of the 2nd South Lancs., Major Stewart, of the 6th Liverpools, and many other officers have borne striking testimony to its value. The chaplains have heartily co-operated with us. The men have shown their appreciation by putting £9 4s. 7d. in the contribution boxes. Such remarks as these were frequently heard:—"Well, this is Christian work, and no mistake;" "I've been coming to camp for fourteen years, but this is the best thing I've ever seen." Another said: "If there'd been a place like this at home

I'D HAVE BEEN A DIFFERENT MAN."

From the sergeants' mess of the 2nd South Lancs., coffee was brought to us at five o'clock every morning. The men brought flowers, too, to decorate the tables. Up till last Saturday 3,402 letters had been written and posted in our tent alone. We supplied the men with pens, ink, and blotting-paper, also specially printed writing paper, envelopes, and postcards. We sold stamps, sent telegrams, wrapped up parcels, and did everything we possibly could to be of service to the men. Dozens of them commissioned us to purchase presents for their children. We gave away 250 Testaments and 700 copies of John's Gospel; also a large amount of literature. More than fifty signed the temperance pledge. The singing was greatly appreciated, as well as the free and easy character of the meetings. This is undoubtedly one of the most hopeful and fruitful fields of work that the Y.M.C.A. has ever entered upon.

HAY TOR, DARTMOOR.

In a camp of 3,700 volunteers, and our tents with a staff of six, we have had a remarkable work. We have experimented this year with an additional tent for selling cups of tea and coffee, and eatables, at a charge of one penny for each article. We have reached many more men than ever before, and have secured the active co-operation of the Brigade staff.

We also made an impression upon the canteens, that brought some opposition. But the sergeant-major of one battalion stationed near us, and the battalion which has always borne a bad name, called at the close of camp and heartily thanked us, saying that, most exceptional for his battalion, there had not been a crime to deal with, and he put it down to our tents.

In running this new venture we did not allow the other agencies to suffer; they rather improved, for we had double the staff of previous years. We worked out every detail and watched it closely; we felt that we were experimenting for the whole country, and so left nothing undone that would tend to give it a fair trial. It meant that B., myself and another, had to rise at 4.30 every morning and retire to bed not earlier than 12.30 next morning. In the trial it was necessary, and with our crude equipment preparation was slow. Another year work can be minimised by labour-saving machines, which we had not on this occasion. By strenuous effort our purpose has been attained, demonstrating that the Temperance canteen, well conducted, is the best agency of all for the Volunteers.

We are quite confident that no Y.M.C.A. tent in the future will be complete without it. It is unwise of us to give to a man a good Gospel address, put him into a thoughtful mood about religious things, and then let him go off to the canteen, before turning in, to get his drink. Much better for us to supply it, and so have him go straight from good influence to his tent. We took £60, chiefly in pennies, in this department. SECRETARY.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

A DEEPLY interesting tour in Iceland has been made by Mons. Charles Fermand, of the Central International Committee, Geneva. With the hearty co-operation of the Lutheran Bishop, four additional associations were formed, and the whole constituted as a national group, with headquarters at Reykjarik.

The work in Rangoon is rapidly developing, particularly among the boys of the city. Mr. Frank Anderson is sustaining in Bombay, with much devotion, a heavy dual responsibility. In addition to his work among students, and the anxiety of settling upon a suitable site for the new building, he is also bearing the burden of the secretaryship of the Bombay Association, until a qualified worker can be sent out to relieve him.

From the last issue of the "Foreign News Letter," it is evident that the efforts of Mr. J. J. Virgo, organizing secretary for Australasia, are already bearing fruit. Recently Mr. Virgo has been devoting much time and energy to Melbourne, in the hope of again securing for the Association in that city a suitable building of its own. The annual meeting of the Adelaide Association was a distinctly successful gathering. His Excellency the Governor-General, Lord Hopetoun, who was in the chair, spoke in terms of warm appreciation of the work being accomplished by the associations throughout the world.

An esteemed correspondent writes:—"The Western district of Associations has done good work among the volunteers asembled on Salisbury Plain from the counties of Gloucester, Somerset, and Wilts. Right in the centre of the camp on East Down the Association had obtained permission to erect a large tent, and on the arrival of each battalion the men noticed in large letters, "Y.M.C.A. Reading and Writing Tent." On entering it was seen there were four long tables covered with green baize; two of the tables being set apart for writing, one for various games, and the other well stocked with all kinds of literature for the men to read. At the evening gatherings the tent was crowded with men, and the hearty manner in which they sang some of Mr. Sankey's hymns was quite inspiring."

Welsh Notes.

ANOTHER symptom of the advance the Roman Catholics are making in Wales is furnished by the announcement that they purpose issuing a Roman Catholic hymnal in the Welsh language.

A number of leading Welsh theologians belonging to both Anglican and Nonconformist churches have been asked to contribute to a new Welsh Biblical and Theological Dictionary. The Bible dictionaries which have appeared in Wales are, in nearly every case, the work of individual authors. For that reason, as well as because of the fact of their being, in some respects, out of date, the new project is likely to meet a real need.

The annual Conference of the English Presbyterian Church of Wales is to be held next month at Wrexham. The chief Conference sermon is to be preached by Rev. Hugh Black, of Edinburgh. In accordance with the custom which has obtained for some years the second Conference sermon is to be delivered by one of the ministers of the connexion. This year the preacher will be Rev. John Hughes, M.A., of Liverpool.

At the quarterly meetings of the North Carnarvonshire Congregational Union, held at Cwmyglo, on August 12, a resolution was passed heartily approving of the action of the Carnarvonshire County Council in publicly declaring, by deliberate formal resolution, its determination not to put the present Education Bill in operation in the County of Carnarvonshire, unless due provision is made for the effective control by the public of institutions entirely supported by public money.

The Welsh Congregational Chapel of Grove Street, Liverpool, is at present being renovated, and will shortly be reopened for public worship. The church at Grove Street may be termed historic, if only because of the eminent ministers who have been its pastors. The names of two of them were household words in Wales, and their memory is still cherished and revered—Revs. W. Nicholson and Gwilym Rees, D.D. The latter was known throughout the Principality as preacher, lecturer, poet, and hymn-writer.

The World's Young Women.

AT the Geneva Conference of the World's Young Women's Christian Associations, of which we gave an account in our last issue, each day was opened by a devotional meeting, conducted by M. le Pasteur Sauvin. Given in French, which was the prevailing language of the Conference, his addresses were translated in private to members unacquainted with that tongue, in order that all might receive the same inspiration for their deliberation and their work. The subjects were remarkably appropriate. The pastor drew out first, what he called the programme of the Christian life, from the words, "Like Christ," and showed how any lower standard was inconsistent with the Christian calling. He called his next address, "For Christ." This, he said, was the ideal of the Christian life; and as so many visitors came to his beautiful Swiss mountains and never ascended them, he expressed the hope that the delegates listening to him would not fail in climbing up to the ideal of Christ, which is to be always everywhere "for Him." The last step he described, using many apt Swiss illustrations, from the words "Through Christ," finding in them the secret of realization—"I can do all things through Christ."

The reports from various countries were full interest. In the United States it appeare that in 1898, there were 352 student associations, with a membership of 15,716; n there are 419 associations, registering 21,2 members. The national secretaries have visited Student Associations in sixteen states. In most of the colleges visited, evangelistic meetings have been conducted, committee problems have been solved, interest in summer conferences has been awakened, courses in mission and Bible study have been suggested, young women considering their life work have been advised, and numerous interviews regarding the spiritual needs of the students have been held. During the past four years decidedly advanced steps have been taken in the student department.

At the Cape, travellers' aid work was intensely interesting, a constant stream going to or coming from Europe or America, women of all grades and ages, missionaries, teachers, others in business or looking for situations, others again looking for health, workers and non-workers, and their needs as various, to be arranged for and seen off by land or sea; students from the different seminaries up for a few days, with dentists, oculists, &c.; other strangers wanting to be put into personal contact with their respective consuls.

Irish Notes.

THE annual Convention for the deepening of spiritual life has just been held in the Methodist Church, Bangor, Co. Down. The principal speakers were Revs. J. Wilkinson, of London; S. Allen, of Manchester; Dr. Robertson, of Knock; and Mr. James Barton, of Dundalk. The attendance was good, and the services were seasons of much blessing to many.

Under the title of "Carrick House," a new model lodging-house, erected by the Corporation of Belfast, has been opened by the Lord Mayor of that city. It is a fine airy establishment, and is the first municipal building of the kind opened in Ireland. It provides at moderate cost comfortable and clean lodgings for those who have no home of their own, and promises to be a boon to such persons.

The General Assembly's Committee on Temperance has taken a new departure, and has appointed Rev. Vernon M. Corkey school lecturer and general organizer in connection with the temperance work of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Corkey is well fitted for such a position. His father, Rev. Dr. Corkey, of Glendermott, Londonderry, is a most earnest advocate of temperance, and one of the greatest authorities on the subject in Ireland.

The Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church has received through the demise of Mr. John Thompson, of Belfast, property to the value of at least £800 a year for the purpose of employing native pastors in India and China. The bequest is one of the largest ever left to missions by any one individual in this country.

Evangelists at Work.

The Australian Revival.

WRITING from the mining town of Eaglehawk, near Bendigo, a correspondent gives some particulars of a time of great blessing during the simultaneous mission when Mr. Shanks, from America, was the preacher. During the fortnight of special services, the largest building in the town was filled to overflowing, and over 300 young people decided for Christ. All the ministers joined most heartily in the work, and every church had a measure of blessing. In the church services and Sunday-school work after the mission had concluded blessing continued to be manifested.

From other private sources tidings come of large accessions to church membership as a result of the special missions throughout the State. An elder of one of the Melbourne Presbyterian Churches tells of joining the congregation. Another letter from the country tells of 100 young communicants in a little church.

Mr. Edgar Geil took a prominent part, and with much acceptance, in the Mission at Adelaide. At the opening meeting in the City Hall, Mr. Geil related the "Parable of the Factory," which recently appeared in the columns, and a number of the ministers present were deeply affected by it.

A great crowd assembled in the evening at the Wool Bay, Port Adelaide, it being estimated that there were several thousand people present. The place is capable of holding 25,000 bales of wool, and a large area was curtained off, and presented a very bright and animated appearance. The subject was 2 Kings iii. 4. Great interest was awakened in the service. The descriptive power of the preacher was clearly shown, and a splendid meeting was the result. The keenest interest was maintained throughout the whole service. Scores of men and women went into the inquiry-room, and three-fourths of the vast audience remained to the after-meeting.

On Sunday, June 15, the rain was falling in torrents at the time of the afternoon meeting in the Exhibition Building at Adelaide, but there were at least 4,800 men present. Mr. Geil spoke on Social Purity. The Southern Cross says:—"The evening meeting was announced to take place at 8.30, but by shortly after seven a crowd had gathered. It was interesting to notice leading business men from the city assisting in the seating of the quickly gathering crowds. Before long the outer gates were closed, and an overflow meeting was held in Chalmers Church, presided over by Rev. H. Howard, assisted by Mr. J. H. Sinclair, solicitor. Leading business men occupied seats on the Exhibition platform. It is interesting to notice how some extremely cautious men are beginning to show themselves openly; timorous at first, their courage seemed to assert itself as the meetings grew in size and influence."

Mr. Geil's subject was "The Ten Lepers." About 3,000 remained to the after-meeting, when many sought Christ. The meeting was prolonged, as a large number of people stayed for conversation and instruction.

A REMARKABLE AWAKENING.

On the following day three meetings were held. The morning gathering was well attended; in the afternoon the lower part of the Town Hall was filled, and the dress circle and gallery also.

Seldom in the history of the Exhibition Building has there been such a multitude on a week night as in the evening. The seating capacity was taxed to the utmost, between 4,000 and 5,000 people being present inside. The after-meeting was the largest that has ever been seen in Adelaide, fully 4,000 people remaining to it. The majority of the audience in both meetings were men. Perfect order having been secured, the evangelist said, "It is now ten minutes to nine, and I will let you all away in half an hour, if you want to go. I am going to ask you now to do a manly and heroic thing. I give you notice beforehand, so that you will not be taken unawares. I will presently ask any man, woman, or child in this vast audience who will lead a clean, pure, heroic life, with faith in Christ as the Saviour, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, to stand up before these thousands." Perfect quietness followed, and the evangelist led in prayer. He then gave the invitation. "Now," said he, "is there anyone in this crowded gathering who will rise to his feet and say, 'I will' in response to the question I have put?"

One after another arose, chiefly men, until in all parts of the house numbers, by this simple act, had expressed the purpose of their hearts. Large numbers had to leave at half-past nine, but a great many remained behind for conversation. One of the workers saw a blind young man (who had confessed Christ on Sunday evening) bring another blind man, who at this meeting rose and said, "I will." The correspondent of the Southern Cross had eight miles to go, and did not reach home until midnight; but, he adds, "I would gladly do the same many times over to see such a sight as was witnessed on this evening in the Exhibition Building."

One prominent Christian worker said that of all the meetings he had ever been at in his life, in the old country or in Australia, this one, in solemnity and results, completely surpassed them.

SIDELIGHTS ON THE MISSION.

"A Christian woman" thus describes some of the scenes: "One night Mr. Geil had for his subject, 'Jehu Driving Furiously.' Before he began, two well-dressed men of the fashionable world came in, and pushed their way up to the front seats with an amused smile on their faces, evidently intent on making sport of it all. As they passed our seat the smell of alcohol was very pronounced, and one of them—a particularly nice-looking young man—could not walk steadily. At once it was laid on our hearts to pray for him, and all through the meeting we pleaded on his behalf, that he might be brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. Shortly after the meeting began the other tried to persuade this one to go out, but to our great joy he would not, and so the other had to go alone. Afterwards our hearts leapt for joy as we saw him led into the inquiry-room by one of our workers, who, for a long time pleaded with him, and read passage after passage of God's Word. Knowing it would be a difficult case, two of us knelt in prayer on his behalf, asking God to save his soul. In a few minutes both worker and penitent were on their knees, and when they arose there was a bright, glad look on both faces, though the tears were still on the penitent's cheeks. Then he told us he had had a praying mother, and he still had her Bible in his box; but he had sunk very low in sin, drink, and gambling. He said, now that he had made up his mind to lead a new life, he must get out of his present lodgings, as it was a regular gambling den, and he wanted to cut his old connections off at once. One of our workers offered to go with him, and help remove him into a respectable boarding-house, and, although it was now after 10 o'clock, this was accomplished that night."

THE TWO STREET ARABS.

"What shall we do with these little rascals? They are up to such mischief to-night!" whispered the leader of our band of workers; and immediately one of the ladies said, "I will take charge of them"; and going to the planks at the back of the hall, she seated herself in the midst of a row of little street Arabs, some of them as dirty and as poorly clad as any to be found in the London slums—and all of them full of mischief, fun, and life, and evidently there for the purpose of having a good time.

But our worker loved the poor neglected boys, and so, with a smile to one and a kind word to another, she seated herself between them, and soon quietness reigned in that corner—for no one is so quick to detect love and just treatment as the street-boy, and not many respond to kindness more readily than he.

The after-meeting is announced, and presently one after another of the boys rise and go, all but the two ringleaders. Behind the dirt and rags the worker sees two bright, intelligent boys, and she addresses herself to the bigger of the two. And when she asks if they would like to come to Christ and give their hearts to Him now, both yield. Then she prayed with them, commending them to God. And they were there the following night—dressed in the same rags, it is true, but with clean, shining, happy faces. Next morning both came to see her, clean and tidy, and looking so different to what they had been. Then they told her they had both decided to live for God. After providing them with a few necessary clothes, and giving them a nice warm breakfast, she had an earnest talk with them about their future. They said they were going to bring some of their mates with them to the meeting that night, and so when we saw them march to their seats leading three other boys with them, we knew that God had indeed worked a marvellous change in them. They were now put in charge of the rowdy boys beside them, and both behaved and looked like little gentlemen. At the close one of their mates also decided for Christ.

DR. TORREY AT MARYBOROUGH.

The meetings at Maryborough were held in the Town Hall, a beautiful and commodious building, with balconies, capable of seating, comfortably, 1,200. From first to last it was filled to overflowing, and the interest aroused was so great, and the throng of people so vast, that separate meetings had to be held for women and men. Meetings for women began at seven, and at a quarter-past eight the men's meetings were held. The place was densely crowded. On the closing Sunday night the rush of men was so great that the balustrading of the stairway to the balconies was broken off with the pressure. A huge throng of men gathered in front of the Hall a little after seven on Sunday night, when the women's meeting was in progress, and the opportunity was seized by the Rev W. Presley and others to hold an open-air meeting. Never in the heat of electioneering has a bigger crowd of men assembled, and the order outside and in the building afterwards was all that could be desired. At a quarter-past eight on Sunday night the hall was packed with men, and hundreds of women and men were outside. Overflow meetings were held in the Presbyterian school-hall, and an open-air meeting for the women and men who were outside. In the hall the missioners had a great time, and scores of men surrendered publicly and confessed Christ.

"In all its previous history, Maryborough has never been so profoundly moved. From centre to circumference the town was roused to thought and action. Men and women whose minds were filled with opposition came right over on the side of Christ. Lethargic ones were so stirred up that they had almost to look in the glass to see if they were the same people. Blasphemers ceased to blaspheme, and King Jesus had scarcely an active rebel in the town and district. People came in by scores, and even hundreds, from the surrounding places, and special trains were run from Dunolly and Avoca. The mission will always be remembered in Maryborough as the Great Revival. It is the highest water-mark yet reached by the floods which the Lord has poured upon the dry and thirsty land."

Nor is New South Wales by any means behind. In connection with United Tent Missions, three separate evangelistic tours are at present being conducted through the State, under the auspices of the Hon. E. Vickery, of Sydney. They are under the conductorship of Rev. D. O'Donnell, Mr. R. Robertson, and Mr. Will H. Scurr.

The Open-Air Mission at Whitley Bay.

The Open-Air Mission have had four evangelists (Messrs. Alexander, Gray, Heath, and Parker) preaching the Gospel on the links and sands at Whitley Bay for fourteen days. The meetings have had encouraging results, many souls having received blessing and Christians much refreshed. The services were held at eleven a.m. on the sands, and seven p.m. on the links, Saturdays excepted. Afternoon meetings were held in the neighbouring villages. Rev. F. Humphrey, Baptist minister, and other Christians took great interest in the work.

Mr. A. T. Towers at Kendal.

Under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. a five weeks' mission has been conducted at Kendal by Mr. A. T. Towers, of the Evangelization Society. A large tent, which holds about 600 people, was well filled every night, and each evening during the five weeks a number of seekers were pointed to the Saviour. On August 10 the tent was packed, many having to stand, and the after-meeting was one which will long be remembered by those who shared the blessing. Not only has the mission been encouraging regarding the numbers brought to their Saviour, but there has been an uplifting in the hearts of many Christians that must bear good fruit after Mr. Towers has left us.

Tent Work at St. Helen's.

We have just had a second visit of the Evangelization Society's tent to St. Helen's this season. The first visit was in connection with the local Y.M.C.A., and proved a time of great blessing; but the second has been a time of wonderful power. The tent was erected in a very rough district, and the evangelist was at first subjected to much annoyance. Before long, however, the influence of the mission was too strong for the opposition, and the Lord has marvellously blessed His Word. The attendance at all the meetings was good. The children's services were particularly helpful, both to old and young; while at the evening meetings between eighty and ninety people accepted the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. Many of God's people praise Him for sending to this district such an earnest and faithful servant as Mr. McLean has proved to be.

W. S.

Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Oatts at Blackpool.

The local committee of the Y.M.C.A. have been fortunate in obtaining the help of some acceptable speakers at their Alhambra Theatre Gospel services on the promenade, morning, afternoon, and evening. On Sunday last Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Oatts, of Glasgow (world-wide missioners for the Y.M.C.A.), were the speakers, and rendered great help in the preaching of the Word to some 3,000 people. In the afternoon meetings for "Men only" and "Women only" were arranged, and the results fully justified the step. Mr. Oatts spoke to some hundreds of men in the theatre; and Mrs. Oatts, in the Congregational Church adjoining the theatre, to a large gathering of women.

As is seen by the crowds who gather at the services, the use of the theatre for this purpose is proving a counter attraction to the Sunday concerts. Next Lord's Day the speaker is Mr. J. B. Wookey, deputation secretary of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, who will be accompanied by some of the boys.

Rev. James Lyall in New Zealand.

In reviewing the recent missions conducted by Rev. James Lyall in the Antipodes, a New Zealand correspondent, writing on July 18, says: "After a series of successful missions held on the West Coast, embracing Wanganui, Hawera, Stratford, and New Plymouth, Mr. Lyall arrived in Auckland to commence a series of missions in the principal Presbyterian churches under the Auckland Presbytery. Last week the first mission, that in St. Daniel's Church (Rev. W. Gray Dixon, M.A., pastor), was concluded with a remarkable meeting for testimony, &c. This week, Mr. Lyall is holding a mission in St. Andrew's (Rev. H. B. Gray, pastor), the oldest church in Auckland, with many tokens of blessing. Mr. Lyall is also holding afternoon Bible-readings in the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, his subject being 'The Baptism of the Holy Spirit—What it is not, What it is, and How to obtain it.' Great interest is being taken in these fresh and powerful addresses. They are largely attended by Christians particularly. On Sunday evening, after his work in the church, Mr. Lyall gives an address in the large City Hall in the centre of the town. Large audiences are gathering who are deeply interested. The work Mr. Lyall is doing will have far-reaching results. After the missions in Auckland are concluded, Mr. Lyall goes to the East Coast, where at Napier, Gisborne, and Wellington preparations are being made for united work. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander are visiting Auckland in September when they hold a united mission for ten days.

In Devon Villages.

For a third summer Pastor John McAuliffe, of Tunbridge Wells, has conducted an evangelistic campaign in East Devon villages.

Mr. McAuliffe believes that he visited "every village, hamlet, and almost every house in this eastern part of Devon." "We commenced," he writes, "at Cullompton, where we received much kindness from the respected vicar, Rev. G. Forrester. From thence we proceeded to the village of Bradninch, which has a population of 1,650 people. We tarried here for a month, visiting from door to door, holding nightly meetings in our tent, in addition to village meetings in the neighbourhood from our Bible carriage, and kitchen meetings in farmhouses.

"Colportage visits were paid to hamlets and lonely places within a six-mile circuit of each of our centres. The proprietor of the Western Daily Mail has large paper mills near Bradninch, and by his courtesy and that of other paper mill owners, we held noon meetings among the workpeople.

"Had our tent been three times as large it would barely have found room for the people coming to the Gospel meetings on Sundays. In both these centres we formed a Prayer Circle and a Bible-Reading Union among our hearers. In each of them also we held three days of meetings for Christians.

"Our band consists of six workers—four brethren (one of whom is a Cambridge undergraduate, and another a Harley House student) and two sisters, who visit and also sing in the tent services. We are making for the towns and villages of Dartmoor forest."

Tent Mission in Glasgow.

Work in tents in the summer time has not been for a number of years past so plentiful in Glasgow as it is this year, and everyone in love with the advance of the Kingdom of God among men cannot but rejoice at such multiplied effort.

At Shettleston, in the extreme east of the city, Mr. C. G. Rogers, of the Evangelization Society, is now hard at work in one of the Society's tents, and though the mission has only been some days in progress at date of writing, everything points to a successful mission. The week-night attendances are large, which, added to the eager way in which the preaching of the Word is listened to, points to a season of blessing.

At Anniesland, in the extreme west, Mr. Malcolm Ferguson has pitched his mission tent for a month's special services, and he is being helped by different preachers, who, amid diversity of style, unite as one in setting forth the grace of God that bringeth salvation, and interest grows as the work goes on.

In Govan, in the south-west of the city, Mr. Musa Bhai is preaching in a tent capable of holding something like 500 people. The tent overflows on Sunday nights, and on week nights is full. Precious souls are being led to Christ, and the workers are full of lively hope for greater things.

In Maryhill, in the north, Mr. Wm. Murray is conducting a mission in a tent pitched in Gairbraid Street, and here, as elsewhere, the Gospel of the grace of God is being held forth as the balsam for every human ill.

In the Overnewton district, on the site of the old Drill Hall, and within sight of the ruins of last year's great show, Mr. J. W. Moodie, soldier-evangelist, has been hard at work for nearly two months, in one of the Evangelization Society's large tents. Souls are being saved, and the power of the Gospel is being established afresh.

Next month will witness an extension of tent-work, as a large tent, capable, it is said, of seating 3,000 people, is to be erected in the Bridgeton district for Rev. John McNeill; and in connection with St. George's Cross Tabernacle a tent is to be placed, near by New City Road, in Clarendon Street, in which Mr. Richard Hill and Mr. Harry Young will declare the message of salvation. A Cycle Journey Through England Into Scotland.

Some of the readers of The Christian who prayed for blessing on this journey would like to have a short report of it. With the exception of two wet days, when I had to go by train, I travelled about forty-seven miles a day. I was able to preach and give Bible-reading eight times in the following towns:—Leicester, Doncaster, York, and Newcastle; in three of them I have heard of blessing.

In Leicester especially did I feel the need of preaching the Gospel. I was moved by seeing masses of people, most of them wending their way to hear the music in the park. All sorts of evil suggestions at once came to me, and I confess my faith failed. I was very tired. I had been travelling most of the day. I was not dressed properly. I had no one with me, and no music, and lastly, perhaps I could find someone else preaching, and could come in at the back of somebody else's crowd. I walked about two miles to find this, but failed, and I might have saved myself the trouble, for I had to stand forth as I was and preach "Jesus and the Resurrection" if I was really to follow the direction of the Spirit.

I found a corner of a short street, and looking up, opened my pocket text and began to read; then spoke a short time on some evangelistic tours I had made in India. The first thing I noticed (and it was too obvious not to notice it) was a united yell from a few factory girls. However, it was the means of announcing to others that a cyclist was speaking, and it drew more people, of course. A crowd of about 150 or 200 were soon around me. The second thing I noticed was a policeman listening for a moment, and then going back to his "point duty" in the street opposite. The fact is, I thought he was going to send me off, but he did not.

I spoke about three-quarters of an hour, and after a few words with one or two people who thanked me, the policeman asked if he might speak to me. I soon found that he was a Christian, and that he was cheered and helped by what he had heard. He greatly lamented that so few came to preach the truth in the streets of his town, where there are such abundant opportunities. After showing me what he had had given to him that day (a volume of "Grace and Truth"), we separated, both of us greatly cheered.

At Doncaster, I had some good work amongst railway men and their wives. In this town there are some 6,000 men employed on the line. I passed on to York, where there are quite as many men employed by more than one company. I had an interesting Bible reading, to the encouragement of some young believers. The fine day following allowed me to journey on to Darlington, where I found some Christian friends who had known me many years ago. Here I rested a day or two, and then on again to Newcastle, where I had an opening to speak to believers and to preach the Gospel.

Then on again through honeysuckle and rose-hedges to the small, but pretty town of Wooler, where some Christians took me in, and where we had some sweet Christian fellowship; and then on to the Border country, about twenty miles distant.

I was often reminded of Gospel illustrations. "Which is the way to ——?" "Oh, keep straight on," would generally be the reply. How many testimonies would be brighter if Christians would keep straight on the line of His Word day by day. I asked one man the way, seeing the sign-post was broken. "Yes, that is the way, but the sign-post fell down the other day." So it is with many Christians, they fall down into the world's ways of sin, and are often engrossed with pleasure, so cannot be any longer guides to others. Herbert R. Francis.

The Tent Campaign conducted by Mr. Thomas Payne at Busk, Oldham, has attracted large congregations. A correspondent writes:—"The tent has been well filled with people who do not usually attend a place of worship. After listening most attentively to the preaching of the Gospel, a number have come forward in penitence, seeking salvation."

A most fruitful open-air mission has been held in the township of Golcar, under the auspices of the "Golcar Free Church Council," from July 19 to the 31st. Rev. Jesse Mayo was the missioner. There were large gatherings each night, and many heard the Gospel who seldom enter a place of worship. A number of young people were led to confess Christ, and throughout the meetings were of a high character with increasing interest. W. Gay, Secretary.

Evangelists' Engagements.

 This column is intended for Missions of some days' duration, not for engagements of a single day. The evangelists ask prayer for their respective missions.

Messrs. Weaver Brothers.—Aug. 24-Sept. 2, Wingate; 7-19, Elgin, N.B.

Mr. F. Beveridge, who is highly commended by ministers and others at Tottenham as an evangelist, is at present open for engagements. He has conducted open air services, arranged by the Free Church Council, with evident appreciation.

Requests for Prayer.

For the Holiness Convention to be held at Ramsgate, August 24-30.

For the Holy Spirit's blessing in connection with tent services near Convoy, co. Donegal, commencing 17th inst.

For Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, who has been suffering from heart weakness and prostration, and his eldest daughter, Beatrice, who is lying dangerously ill in India.

For a mission to the men employed on the new railway works at Gerrard's Cross, August 23-September 1, to be conducted by Mr. W. H. Holt (Nanny Mission Society) and others.

Request for Praise.

The prayers of readers were asked on behalf of the attempt to hold a mission Bank Holiday week at South Street Baptist Church, S.E., by Messrs. W. Olney and Spencer Johnson. They are now asked to join in praise for the successful issue. It was a time of gracious awakening among God's people, and the gathering in of a rich harvest of souls.

Religious Journals in America.—Two well-known Christian weeklies, The Evangelist and the Christian Work, have been amalgamated, the former having been especially the organ of Presbyterianism. The Congregationalist (Boston) has also embraced several smaller weeklies, and the tendency is increasingly to merge the interests of distinctively denominational papers into those of a more inclusive type. We may hope that this may also indicate a breaking down of the dividing barriers that have been keeping the churches apart.

About Books.

"THE STORY OF JOB."

MRS. PENN-LEWIS, in the volume before us, The Story of Job (2s. 6d. net. Marshall Bros.), proves herself not merely to have intellectually and intelligently comprehended the book, but to have entered spiritually and experimentally into its inmost thought, and to have in spirit passed through in some degree the sorrows of the patriarch.

The object of the book is to convey to the saints of God light upon their experiences. Their fear of God and desire to please Him brings upon them the active animosity of the Adversary of God and man. The trial of the suffering saint is intensely aggravated by the brethren who come to comfort him but entirely fail to understand the actings of God, of Satan, or of Job. The only comfort they imparted was when they sat down with him for seven days and nights in silence, for they saw that his grief was very great—the only thing they really saw; but when they opened their mouth it was only "to pour vitriol into his wounds."

Discriminative faculty is shown in describing the characters and speeches of the three friends and of Elihu. Troubled souls may recognize in these some of their own visitors. Light is thrown upon the Lord's words to Job, and on the thought conveyed in the mention of each of His wondrous works. From first to last, the terrible experiences of the sufferer, and the restoration and the joy at last, are shown to be the dealings of the only wise God our Saviour with His child whom in love and faithfulness He afflicted and exalted.

These illuminative pages contain not so much a study as a meditation. Though full of thought and of Christian experience, they come from, and appeal to, the heart rather than the intellect, and yet there is more enlightened and enlightening intellectual discernment than in many commentaries.

The reader will be convinced that this most ancient of the books of God was written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. It has fulfilled its purpose for the children of God, under painful and perplexing discipline, during 4,000 years, and is still as fresh, as instructive, and as comforting, for us upon whom the ends of the ages are come.

Only one who had passed that way could have thus rehearsed the story of Job. It will lighten the path for others who are passing or yet may pass that way.

The publication of a popular edition of Rev. T. A. Birks' Horæ Evangelicæ (3s. 6d. C. J. Thynne), edited by his son, places within the reach of modern readers a book which half a century ago came as a welcome and valuable help in the study of the structure and origin of the Four Gospels. The subject never can lose any of its interest, and long as the work has been out of print its place has never been quite supplied by any other publication.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson has abundantly exemplified already his belief that the mission of Methodism is "to preach, and to preach to the people." In The Bane and the Antidote (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly), he has provided the thoughtful reader with the basis for many a quiet hour of profitable meditation. Only men who combine a deep and humbling personal experience of the grace of God with a broad-minded outlook on the needs of their fellows, can minister in such helpful fashion to hungry thirsty souls treading the dusty road. There is much about sin, its power, its malignity, its deadly blight on soul and body—but there is also sounded out loud and clear the glad note of deliverance through Christ. Preachers and teachers will find much that is suggestive; but the plain man will also find all practical and within his own reach.

Christian workers are eager to meet and observe fellow labourers whose work has been conspicuously successful. With a feeling akin to this, those who are specially-interested in the great Wesleyan Missions will welcome God's To-Morrow (2s. 6d. Marshall Bros.), by Rev. J. Gregory Mantle. Here we have sermons preached in the ordinary course of ministry at the West London Mission, St. James' Hall, during the past two years. They are typical of a style of preaching of which we can say at least this, that it still draws men and women to hear and to accept the Gospel: and what higher eulogium can be passed on the work of a Christian man? The truth is plainly pressed forward, yet presented from ever-varying points of view. The language is that of a man with a profound belief in the power of the Word of God, and in the continual working of the Holy Spirit through it. A wealth of illustration, wisely used, makes the simple message yet more easily understood.

The Churches.

Church of England.

Rev. S. J. Hersee, B.A., Metropolitan Association Secretary of the Irish Church Missions, has been appointed Incumbent of Smithills Chapel, Bolton-le-Moors.

Canon M'Cormick's open-air pulpit at St. James's, Piccadilly, W., will be dedicated next month. The churchyard will accommodate more than a thousand persons, and the Canon trusts that large numbers will attend the open-air services.

The money derived from admissions to Westminster Abbey during this week will go to augment King Edward's Hospital Fund. The Abbey will not be restored by the State authorities to the Dean and Chapter of Westminster until October.

Rev. Canon Procter, in an appeal on behalf of the Bishop of St. Albans' Fund for East London-over-the-Border, says that "Between 1891 and 1901 the diocese of London has increased 333,000, or just over 10 per cent.; the united population of the five largest provincial cities—viz., Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, and Sheffield—has increased 255,000, or an average of 12 per cent.; while 'London-over-the-Border' has grown 260,000, or over 60 per cent.

Prebendary Bevan, Rector of Chelsea, in his sermon at the recent consecration of Bishops at St. Paul's, remarked: "Those who have worked in the West of London know that even now what 'Society' bitterly resents is the smallest practical interference with its own self-chosen ways. Mere pulpit satire and abuse—if clever enough—it tolerates and even enjoys; but bring the matter home (if you can) to the social conscience, and you will find that the Gospel is still a 'sword.'"

Congregational.

The last traces of old Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars Road, where Rowland Hill conducted his famous ministry, are shortly to disappear. The octagonal building will doubtless now be demolished. The site of the old schools and the manse in which Rowland Hill and Dr. Newman Hall lived is included in the ground for sale.

Those who propose to attend the Ministers' Holiday Conference at Oxford, September 8-12, will be glad to know that return railway tickets will be issued to members of the Conference at a fare and a quarter on production of the usual voucher, which may be had on application to Rev. J. Hilton Stowell, Aylesbury.

Several important additions have been made to the provisional programme of the Congregational Union for the forthcoming meetings in Glasgow. Rev. Dr. A. Goodrich, of Manchester, will preside and deliver the address at the communion service in Trinity Church. At the people's meeting, over which the Lord Provost will preside, the three speakers will be Revs. C. Silvester Horne, J. Morgan Gibbon, and Bernard J. Snell.

The anniversary of the cause at Great Northern Street, Huddersfield (the youngest offshoot of Rev. Dr. Bruce's Church), was held recently, conducted by the pastor (Rev. E. Slater). There are now some eighty names on the Church roll, which was formed in 1897, and, in addition to the Sunday services, there is a very successful women's meeting of over 300 members, and a large average attendance; also a men's with 142 names on the register.

The historic Bond Street Church, Leicester, will celebrate its centenary in October next. A series of services will be held during the first three weeks of the month, in which several leading Congregational ministers will take part, including Drs. McClure and Fairbairn, and the Revs. R. J. Campbell, R. Harley, A. N. Johnson, and Arnold Thomas. In connection with the event a memorial volume will be published, containing a history of the church and a record of the commemoration services.

The worshippers at the Congregational Church, Newmarket, on Sunday morning, witnessed a tragic scene. Two years ago Rev. Alfred Moon left Newmarket to take up the pastorate of Kelvedon Congregational Church. Last Lord's Day he visited his old congregation, and died in their presence. The morning service was proceeding, and Mr. Moon, in addressing a few words to the congregation, alluded feelingly to those who had died during his absence. A few minutes later he was seen to fall forward, and several persons hurried to him, and he was carried to the vestry. At the conclusion of the hymn that was being sung, one of the church officers made the solemn and sad announcement that there would be no sermon that morning—the preacher was dead.

Baptist.

Opening services have been held at Alvaston in connection with a new Baptist mission. The preachers were Revs. W. A. Richards and P. A. Hudgell. Rev. J. H. Rushbrooke explained that the growth of Alvaston has long constituted a strong appeal to Baptists to open a chapel in or near the village.

Mr. T. E. Soddy, B.A., of Regent's Park College, London, has accepted a most cordial invitation to become assistant pastor to Rev. J. Baillie at Tredegarville, Cardiff. The church and its mission stations have grown so rapidly in recent years that an assistant pastor has become an imperative necessity. Mr. Soddy begins his work at Cardiff at the end of September.

According to the interesting manual of Gorse Lane Church, Swansea, Rev. W. Thomas, M.A., has had much encouragement during the two years of his pastorate. The membership has increased by more than half its number. Last year the church was able to set aside over £100 as the nucleus for a new building fund, and is hoping to secure at least half the money required before commencing to build.

At Bedfont, Middlesex, a large assembly recently gathered to witness a baptism in the river. By permission of the Duke of Northumberland the ceremony took place at the "Two Bridges." Rev. S. Gentle-Cackett, pastor, conducted the service, and the address was based upon the words of Jer. vi. 16, "Ask for the old paths and walk therein and ye shall find rest for your souls, but they said we will not walk therein."

Methodist.

Rev. Thomas Mitchell, president of the Primitive Methodist Conference, is fully engaged for the whole of his presidential year. As secretary to the Church Extension Fund his visits to various parts of the Connexion are likely to bring considerably increased support to this Fund.

The visit of Mr. W. Sampson, the Cornish evangelist, to Porthleven, was an awakening time. Early on Sunday morning, bell in hand, Mr. Sampson aroused the sleepers in all parts of the place, announcing his services for the day. There were large congregations, and seekers at each.

Rev. Joseph Johnson has commenced his ministry at St. George's Hall, Primitive Methodist Mission, Old Kent Road, S.E. The congregations were good and the services impressive. The officers and members of the mission have held an "At Home," on which occasion a hearty reception was given to Mr. Johnson.

The report of the Belfast Wesleyan Mission states that over 100,000 persons have attended the Sunday evening services held in Grosvenor Hall, while the morning and afternoon services have also been well attended. Rev. Dr. Crawford Johnson, the head of the mission, has been laid aside by illness throughout the year.

Rev. T. Waugh has revisited Lodge Lane Wesleyan Church, Liverpool. In the afternoon he preached to a large congregation, and in the evening spoke on "Manliness." The address was marked by all the striking characteristics of Mr. Waugh's best deliverances, and was heartily appreciated by a large congregation.

At the Bible Christian Conference Rev. W. R. K. Baulkwill, who has worked most assiduously and unsparingly in the interests of the New Century Fund, stated that the sum aimed at—£25,000—was within sight, only £500 remained to be raised to complete the effort. As the result of his appeal, £470 were then and there subscribed, so that the fund is now practically complete. Mr. Baulkwill received the enthusiastic thanks of the Conference for his noble and successful effort.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse paid a visit to Peterhead on Sunday, August 10, and preached three times to large congregations. The following day he gave a Bible-reading in the afternoon, and afterwards held a reception in what he described as a "shed" or "lean-to" behind the chapel. Afternoon tea was served to a goodly company, and here Mr. Pearse told some of his interesting Cornish stories. His lecture on "Christian Socialism" roused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. The collections were in aid of the much-needed Sunday schools and class rooms.

Presbyterian.

For the proposed new church in Ellesmere Road, Sheffield, the Home Mission Committee has made a grant of £630, being one-fifth of the cost of the site. The remaining four-fifths must be raised locally before this amount is available. The fund was only inaugurated this year.

A new hall has been opened at Luton for the Railway Mission by Mr. Halley Stewart and Mr. R. Nixon. The collections secured the last £30 of the cost.

Mr. D. C. Joseph (lately from Palestine) is now working in the evangelization of Jews in the metropolis. The centre of his work is the Gospel Hall, 70, Sidney Street, Commercial Road, E.

Fallen Asleep.

At the advanced age of ninety years the death has taken place, at East St. Kilda, Victoria, of Rev. THOMAS FULLAGAR, the oldest Congregational minister in the Australian States. Mr. Fullagar left London for Australia in the ship California in 1853, and arrived in Geelong at the end of the year. During his long life in Australia he did much pioneer work for the advancement of the denomination to which he belonged.—Mrs. TONGE, a devoted worker in the Congregational Church at Westhoughton.—Mr. WILLIAM WOOLLEN, of Sheffield, one of the United Methodist Free Churches' oldest and most faithful members. He joined Hanover Chapel, Sheffield, over thirty-eight years ago, and ever exercised a great influence for good by his Christian devotion as teacher and superintendent in the Sunday school and as class-leader. He was also a distinguished temperance worker.—At Belfast, Mr. SAMUEL GLASGOW, one of the lecturers of the Irish Temperance League, and an earnest and devoted Methodist local preacher, aged seventy-one years.—Rev. A. J. MOFFETT, B.A., a most promising minister of the Irish Presbyterian Church, has passed away at Edinburgh.

Personalia.

Having been led to seek freedom from pastoral work for the purpose of devoting himself wholly to evangelistic effort, Pastor ALBERT E. SIMS hopes to hand over to others on September 30 the sphere at Wesley Central Hall, Portsmouth, as well as the oversight of the Hope Gospel Mission. Mr. Sims joins the staff of the Evangelization Society.

Strangers' Rest, Ratcliffe Highway.—At a recent gathering of sailors at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, some 170 seamen of various nationalities were entertained to tea. A most impressive Gospel service followed, at which many testified their willingness to accept Christ, and have since given evidence of a true change of heart. Readers will rejoice to know that the Lord has been giving much blessing at the meetings which are held nightly at the Rest.

Aldersgate Noon Prayer Meeting.—The usual mid-day gathering on Monday at Aldersgate Y.M.C.A. of evangelists and other Christian workers, and business men, was an occasion of refreshing and happy fellowship. Not only was there much supplication, but also numerous requests for praise to God for gracious answers to prayer on behalf of workers at home and abroad. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and a telling and helpful address was given by Dr. J. Q. A. Henry on Christ's prayer to His Father to preserve and glorify His followers (John xvii). Mr. Armon Jones, of Wrexham, added much to the impressive nature of the gathering by his effective rendering of "He leadeth me," and "Calvary."

The Peace Society.—The annual report of this organization shows that the Society has steadily maintained an active and vigorous campaign during the year, both in favour of the principles of peace and in opposition to war. It is pointed out that the tone of public opinion has to some extent been softened, and the course and incidents of recent wars have quickened the sensibilities of the universal conscience. The attention of multitudes has been directed to the question and methods of international peace by the very incidents which at once revolted and interested them. The decision of the International American Conference at Mexico to give its unanimous adherence to the Hague Convention is regarded as the crowning feature of the year. The Society has strictly observed its policy of not stirring up undesirable passions from which no real gain to peace could ensue. Many meetings, however, of a non-political character have been held, at which the principles of the Society have been advocated as strenuously and unswervingly as ever.

A SAD CASE OF BLINDNESS.

A young girl, of most respectable family, totally blind, whose parents are quite unable to support her. Her mother is a chronic invalid and has just undergone a serious operation, which was only partially successful. The father is delicate, and is breaking down entirely under the continued strain of family sickness. The youngest child, a boy of eleven years of age, is also a great invalid. The girl is now studying, in order to keep herself, as a teacher to the blind. Funds are needed to keep her at school, and to meet the needs of the family, which are very great. The case is a remarkably sad one, as the father formerly held a good position in life.

The Rev. J. PULLEIN-THOMPSON, Hon. Sec. to the National Blind Relief Society, The Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W., will be grateful for donations, which are urgently needed; or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

(INSTITUTED 1886.)

President - - SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS.
Treasurer - - - - F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

HOLIDAY HOME FOR POOR AND SICK CHILDREN.

This Home, situated in the most charming part of Epping Forest, has for several years past been of incalculable benefit to many hundreds of poor little waifs and strays, many of them half famished and pent up in the narrow and stifling courts and alleys the whole year. To continue this much needed work during this season, an earnest appeal is hereby made for help to the Christian public. Last year over 500 were taken for one or two weeks, and over 5,000 for a day. Donations in any form will be gratefully received, and can be sent to the Treasurer, at the Bank, 54, Lombard Street, E.C., to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, or to the Secretary, The Hall, London Street, Bethnal Green, E.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

Notes & Comments

More Missionary Martyrs. As reported in another column, the sad and sorrowful duty devolves on the Church of Christ of adding two more names to the already long roll of missionary martyrs in China. From the point of view of the statesman, it is announced that no political significance is attached to the murders in Chen-chau-fu, which were entirely due to a sudden outburst of fanaticism; but those who are in the front of the terrible conflict against the forces of evil can see in every such event another attempt to beat back the army of the Cross. The deepest sympathies of our readers will go out to the bereaved families and friends, as well as to those on whom rests the responsibility of directing the affairs of the Mission at such a trying time. At the same time, we need hardly ask that there may be much prayer for the reoccupation of the outpost immediately concerned, and that the purpose of the enemy may be yet more signally defeated through a greater strengthening of the missionary position.

India. The reports from our great dependency are of a less disquieting kind; still the number of unhappy people forced to seek employment upon relief works, and to appeal for charity, increases day by day. It cannot be disguised that something closely approaching famine conditions prevails in large districts of the country, but that fact is apt to be ignored or set aside not only by the general reader, but, unhappily, also by those who are responsible for the bodily welfare of our fellow-subjects. To stand still is criminal in face of the fact that without the prompt adoption of preventive measures there may be a repetition of the awful scenes and dread mortality of former famines.

Intemperance in Russia. The fallacy of the modern idea of selling drink in order to reduce intemperance is strikingly illustrated by a recent consular report from Russia, which deals incidentally with the question of the Government monopoly of the sale of corn brandy in that country. Only seven years ago, the Government, influenced by various motives, worthy and unworthy, established its brandy-shop, and suppressed those of the private keepers; and in that short period the consumption of the pestilent drink has gone up 13 per cent., with an inevitable development of crime and vice. Such a result must necessarily follow, as it does in Britain, from the State deriving a revenue from the traffic in that which degrades the people. Monopoly, or no monopoly, it comes to the same thing in the end; an enriched State and an impoverished subject, with a flood of crime, and immorality, and insanity, undermining the national life.

A Happy Result of the Colonial Conference. One of the most significant results of the Colonial Conference is the clear pronouncement of the Colonial delegates against being dragged into the "vortex of European militarism." They will not encourage the Mother Country to enter into competition with the Continental nations in that direction; "defence, not defiance" is the motto which best expresses their temper. The British Empire has never rested on the mere size of its armies, and it is encouraging to find that our children in the colonies are not minded to increase the ruinous competition which has turned Europe into an armed camp for a generation, and is sapping the industrial credit of half-a-dozen nations. This is all the more significant in view of the splendid self-sacrifice so cheerfully volunteered by our colonies in the late war.

Prospects in South Africa. The settlement of the Transvaal appears to be proceeding satisfactorily so far. In one district as many as 400 families have already been put into possession of their farms, with 12,000 cattle and 500 horses. The chief trouble lies in the scarcity in the supply of native labour on the one side, and the increased cost of living on the other; while the disbanding of the Irregulars has flooded the market with unemployed white men. These difficulties are inseparable from the situation; often some of the worst sufferings caused by a great war come afterwards. But so far as the prospects of final settlement are concerned, there is every promise that Dutch and English will work amicably, and pave the way for a real amalgamation of interests. It will be a happy day for South Africa when the long racial rivalry which lay behind the recent struggle is forgotten, and a true national feeling replaces it.

Soldiers of the King. A contemporary writer has sarcastically remarked that for many of those who fight the nation's battles, matters resolve themselves into "a toss up between a soldier's grave and the workhouse." Unhappily, the accuracy of that view is being illustrated day by day, now that the ephemeral enthusiasm of the war period is dying away, and the voices which shouted about the glory of fighting for the flag are hushed in the sweet silence of national peace. Several Boards of Guardians have already complained of the large increase in the number of inmates since the men came home from the war, and the Press teems with stories of those who, a little while ago, were the heroes of the newspaper paragraph and of the popular song, but who now are reduced to semi-starvation and to sleeping in the streets.

The Turf and the Church. Now that there is a healthy feeling against lotteries and bazaars held for religious purposes, it is quite startling to learn from a statement which has appeared in several newspapers that four churches at Yarmouth receive portions of the profits upon the race meetings held in that town. Seeing that gambling is prolific in evil results, and that betting is rivalling drink in its vile fruitfulness, it might reasonably be expected that the answer to an offer of funds from such a source would be on the lines of that given by Peter to Simon (Acts viii. 20). The fact that in the instance in question it was not so is a painful one, and it is to be hoped that the case is as exceptional as it is dishonouring to religion.

The Canker of Betting. The new Betting Blue Book bears remarkable testimony both to the ingenuity with which bookmakers evade the law in the pursuit of their calling, and to the widespread hold which betting has taken on the community. There are secret offices all over the country, the Post Office unconsciously aiding and abetting their continuance by its regulation as regards the re-addressing of letters. The Chief Constable of Manchester recently raided the offices of a bookmaker who worked ostensibly from an address in Guernsey, and in this way has netted £5,846 in the short space of five months. The fines incurred by illegal practices are paid with a smile out of enormous profits, and one bookmaker gave a magistrate £5 extra for the police-court poor-box! Ladies, newspaper boys, even tradesmen, often act in this capacity, and—horribile dictu!—fathers of boys at Harrow have been known to act as their tipsters, sending them their winnings by post. Betting is responsible for most of the frauds, forgeries, and defalcations by employés, and the evil is rapidly increasing among all classes and ages.

What is the Cure? According to the Betting Commission, there are only two remedies that promise to be effectual. The first is legal. Nothing short of the forcible suppression of starting-prices and tips in newspapers, is likely to remove the social temptation to betting. So far there is only one morning and one evening paper that has voluntarily discontinued all betting news, and the success of this experiment is still uncertain. The second remedy is the inculcation of sound views on the question among the people. In the present state of opinion, this is a Herculean task, for the betting reformer has to meet the passive opposition of most of the newspapers, and the violent resentment of all who are addicted to the vice. The legal remedy is, therefore, the most promising point of attack, but here again there is a great host of difficulties to encounter.

Milk for Babes. Possibilities arising from the Education Bill, if that measure should ever pass into law, are certainly pointed to in the following paragraph which appeared recently in the Church Times:—

> We have received from the Community of All Saints reproductions of a crucifix painted by Sister Catherine Ruth. The Redeemer is extended upon a tall cross, enclosed within a larger decorative cross, bearing above the crucifix itself the Dexter Dei, and the Holy Dove, and in the arms of the cross the words Jesus ex Deo genitus, and Jesus Maria natus. It is scarcely necessary to add that the treatment is most devotional. The reproductions are in carbon, photogravure, and lace print, while for schools a large print in collotype has been prepared.

Such a quotation points clearly enough to the insidious influences which are already at work in many village schools.

A Kingdom of this World. Another striking illustration of the wealth of the Orders whose members have in large numbers recently settled in this country, is shown by the fact that the Benedictine monks who have quartered themselves in the neighbourhood of Ventnor, are in treaty for the purchase of Norris Castle and Lord Ampthill's estates, which adjoin those of Osborne. This hardly fits in with the fervid writing in the Romanist journals as to the poor monks whose self-denying lives are being so ruthlessly looked into by the French administration. Doubtless those misleading writers will deem it wise to abstain from giving publicity to the fact that the monks of the Chartreuse have, in fear of the new legislation bearing upon their funds, ceded their liqueur manufactories to a company for the sum of £320,000! The Pope, deploring the smallness of his Peter's Pence, is crying out for funds for mission work, but it goes without saying that the Benedictines will not come to the rescue in the pressure of their ever-widening political needs.

Parasites of Heterodoxy. These are days in which we have to mourn a widespread declension from the "old paths" of Evangelical truth and doctrine, and a certain, though disproportionate, accession to the ranks of those who deny or demur at the beliefs of our fathers. We say disproportionate, because, while some of the seceders may commit themselves conscientiously to a particular aspect of "broad" theology, a great many lapse into indifference. Of those, for instance, who deny the Deity of our Lord, comparatively few have arrived at that conclusion as the result of really serious thought, or honest study of the subject. They follow like sheep where others have led, because they consider it "smart" and "up-to-date" to do so. It is not that they have found a new truth, but simply that they have lost the old one. They are the hangers-on, the parasites, of heterodoxy. This is why bodies like the Unitarians are such an insignificant force in our midst. At the best of times, mere denial is sorry stuff, either to live or work upon.

Critic v. Priest. History has often attested the fact that extremes of thought tend to follow each other. Germany just now is an example of this. Side by side with the rationalism which has been a leading feature of German thought, there has recently been a curious revival of Romanism and its superstitions. The pilgrimage to Aix-la-Chapelle, according to the Romanist organs, has done much to deepen religious feeling in Germany. In proof, reference is made to the simplicity of the people, their trust in the words of the priests, their worship of saintly images, their faith in miraculous healings in answer to prayers to the Virgin, &c. This is claimed to be the state of things among the cultured and the educated, as well as the common people. Is this the fruit of a "Bible in tatters"? The ultra-critic seems to have been playing into the hands of the priest.

Slain Children. During the last half-century, owing to wise legislation and a consequent improvement in the surroundings of the population in large centres, the general death rate of the country has fallen from 22 to 18 per thousand. Unhappily, however, these figures do not apply to infant mortality, the rate of which remains as it was fifty years ago. As Dr. Milsom-Rhodes has pointed out in a recent essay, 15 in every 100 children born "never live to see an anniversary of their birth." This to a large extent is a result of the industrial conditions established by the factory system, as is evidenced by the fact that while the death rate in the agricultural county of Rutland is 79 per 1,000, in Lancashire it is no less than 180, and in Manchester 198, that is, one in every five. The causes of the dread mortality may be localized even further, for it appears that in some districts of the cotton metropolis the rate is 255 per 1,000. Beneficial as the Factory Acts have been in sweeping away the evils which once characterized the working of the factory system, there is still room for further Christian legislation, which, in protecting the mothers employed in mills and other work, will also save the children.

Two Kinds of Power.

I.—ABANDON.

By Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE.

IT is a commonplace to say that hearers are affected quite as much by the condition of mind of the speaker as by the words he speaks; the speaker counts in some cases for far too much. But the fact of his personality being so influential makes it important to inquire wherein power lies, so far as the man only is concerned. Sometimes it is in abandon, sometimes in reserve. I am not now speaking of the power of the Holy Spirit, who uses all types of mind, from the most ardent and enthusiastic to the most phlegmatic; but only of that natural quality which is suitable for a certain kind of work. Abandon in public address has an enormous power over certain types of character. They like to see a man mastered and borne along by his theme.

The prophets seem to have had wonderful influence, owing to their being filled, possessed with their message, and manifestly overpowered by it. In the rush of their indignation, pity, anger, love of their nation, and zeal for God, they spared no sin, whether personal or national, and fearlessly rebuked all classes and conditions—kings, priests, nobles, and "my people." They might be hated, persecuted, and even put to death, but their vehement sincerity compelled attention. It saved them from that last reproach of a man who professes to be a servant of God—neglect. They might be thought to be fools or mad, but people could not pass them by. The last of the prophets, and even more than a prophet, John the Baptist, was as unrestrained in manner and language as a man could well be, and all Jerusalem went out to hear him. The voice crying in the wilderness rang through the streets of the cities, and penetrated into the rooms of palaces and made kings tremble.

So entire was

on the day of Pentecost to the influence that came down upon them, and to the searching message they had to proclaim, that the scoffers said, "These men are full of new wine." For while abandon excites attention, and in some quarters produces favourable impressions, in others it excites derision; it opens some doors, while others it closes with a bang. "You are too strenuous, sir," said a royal personage to an able and influential public man. Yes, but the strenuousness made him a great power.

The impassioned soul who represses himself in order to win the cold, the supercilious, and the critical will end in losing them and everyone else. The feeling which is true and natural must have outlet; like the overflowing of the Nile, it will leave fertility behind. Or, changing the metaphor, a soul which has the word of the Lord burning in it like a fire is only true to itself and to its message when it permits the message to flame forth. "Is not My word as a fire and as a hammer?" saith the Lord.

The words and writings and deeds of the Apostle Paul give one the impression of utter abandonment to the thought that possessed him. He is always in the forefront of the battle, contending for the truth. One of his judges thought him mad; some of his converts considered him "a fool." His thoughts, as expressed in the epistles, frequently rush along with the impetuosity and apparent confusion of a torrent—thought rolling over thought. If this was a weakness, it was the weakness of strength which has made itself felt through all the Christian ages. The noble carelessness of the man about himself or his reputation has impressed itself upon them, and won at least their admiration.

The beloved Apostle John seems to have had times of peculiar elevation and enlargement of soul, the advantage of which we are privileged to enjoy in his "Revelation." He was "in the Spirit on the Lord's Day." He was carried away; he was shown things to come, and he tells without reserve what they were. And it is this opening of the soul and all its secret treasures which produces such a captivating and subduing effect upon certain natures. They like to see and hear one who dares to speak freely the things that are in him, who is ingenuous enough

TO SPEAK AS HE FEELS.

The only perfect One, the Christ of God, often manifested forth this complete venture of Himself upon the stream of His impulses. He would launch forth upon the full tide of His tenderest compassions, as when He wept over Jerusalem; or throw Himself upon the wings of indignation, as when He looked round upon the cold-hearted Pharisees with a flash of anger. Where the nature is perfectly sincere and true, its freest and fullest play is its natural and most effective operation.

The faculty of abandon has a temperamental basis; it is found in orators like Chatham and Whitefield. One of lesser note, and therefore a better example, was Dr. John Brown, father of the author of that delightful collection of essays, Horæ Subsecivæ—"a strong, intense, and vehement nature, with masculine intellect and unyielding will, he accepted the Bible in its literal simplicity as an absolute revelation, and then showed the strength of his character in subjugating his whole being to this decisive influence, and in projecting the same convictions into other minds." It is said of him that his earnestness of nature pervaded all his exercises. "A man of great capacity and culture, with a head like Benjamin Franklin's, an avowed unbeliever in Christianity, came every Sunday afternoon, for many years, to hear him. I remember his look well, as if interested, but not impressed. He was often asked by his friends why he went when he did not believe one word of what he heard. 'Neither I do; but I like to hear and see a man earnest once a week about anything.'" The same consuming and commanding ardour characterized the grandfather of that preacher; and of him David Hume made the remark when he had heard a sermon from him, "That's the man for me—he means what he says; he speaks as if Jesus Christ was at his elbow."

How impressive is the observation, "It was not what the preacher said, but the manner in which he said it." Coldness, apathy, unconcern, leave the impression—and quite naturally—that the message is a matter of small moment; but the manner which is earnest, persuasive, convinced, is used of God to produce a corresponding state of mind in the audience. The remedy for the faults and sins of a worldly age may largely lie in a ministry which, while intelligent, has a fearless earnestness and urgency.

The Moral Consciousness of Jesus.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Clifton.

"We need not fear," the late Dr. Dale wrote in one of his latest works "that the world is weary of hearing about Jesus Christ. It wearies of everything else, but it never wearies of Christ. Every attempt to tell the story of His life over again stirs the human heart as nothing else can stir it." We might well mark in the fact itself a witness to the historical and spiritual significance of Jesus of Nazareth. In an age of flux and change, when all the old landmarks are being shifted, an age marked by critical and analytical thought, it is something—it is very much—that there is One supposed Figure in history which is so essentially and broadly human, so free from the specialized characteristics which are due to evolution and environment, that He can stretch hands across the ages, and across the wide interval of thought and ideal which even yet separates East and West, and speak with meaning and attractiveness to the active minds of our own land and day.

Systems and churches, and even civilizations, are being attacked with a destructive energy which will spare nothing on the ground of its ancient or traditional character. Yet the very process seems more and more to bring to the front of human thought, and even human admiration, One Solitary Exception to the universal presence of failure, One Supreme Instance of a life in correspondence with the very highest ideals, One Marvellous Personality who makes goodness attractive by the power of His love, and inspires hope and not despair by the very fact of His moral isolation.

THE SECRET OF HIS POWER.

Wherein lies this singular power which Jesus Christ exerts even over those who are beyond the reach of the ordinary, present-day influences of modern Christianity? The answer undoubtedly lies in His character as revealed in the Four Gospels. When men have exploded the theory of His miraculous birth; when they have demonstrated the à priori impossibility of His miracles; when they have dissected and exposed the inconsistencies of the various narratives as to His supposed resurrection; when they have brought Higher Criticism to bear with success upon the Old and through the Old upon the New Testament; when they have discounted the evidence for the early date of the Gospel records—there is still something left, something which fascinates and charms, and calls forth at once our wonder and our love; and that something is the character of Jesus of Nazareth.

For there are certain features about that character which we cannot gainsay or resist. It is truly historic. It is intensely human. It is, though perhaps reluctantly men are brought to this, incontestably Divine.

I. The Character of Jesus is Historic.—Whatever have been the sources of the tradition which has handed it down, there can be no doubt about the character itself. It is at this moment the most powerful moral magnet the world has ever felt. It could not be so were it not for its unvarying self-consistency. That self-consistency would, under the circumstances, be impossible, except on the supposition of a historic origin. By common admission, the picture of Christ's character offered us in the Gospels is derived from a tradition or traditions manifold in origin. It is depicted and drawn out by several minds. Yet it is faultlessly at harmony with itself. The moral intensity, the human tenderness, do not appear in one single instance as conflicting or contradictory aspects. There is no attempt at reconciliation, and it is not necessary. They are essential parts of the same meshwork of character. They appear side by side in the very same scenes. They are mutually correspondent and complementary. They actually enhance the personal unity.

II. And the Character is Intensely Human. No novelist ever had to face a task comparable in its difficulties with those which would have confronted the authors of a mythical Christ; yet what novelist ever made his best character live for one year in one land alone with a moral force comparable to for 1800 years, upon all lands alike? For the character is not in the remotest degree the outcome of environment, but rather a protest against many of its most powerful factors. It has never once been reproduced in history, even though men have had the help of the pattern being before them. It is unique in its moral consistency, its moral sympathy, its moral intensity, its moral majesty.

Christ appealed, Christ appeals still, to men as men. In Him is the representatively Human. He is archetypal Man—man, that is, independent of the special influences of East or West, of nationality or custom, of education or birth. Yet in His own special relations to one age and one people, Christ is steeped with the influences of Judaism, might stand for pattern in the spirit of national patriotism with which He is stirred, and is the Eastern who of all sons of the lands of the morning, has by His bright imagery in proverb and parable and allusion made the East live to Western minds. The twofold fact is a witness to the reality, and at the same time to the uniqueness of Christ's historic humanity.

III. Again, He is Divine. For to say this is not to leap forward upon insufficient evidence to a conclusion for which our minds are prepared, and which we long to reach by any way that seems sufficiently specious. It is to find oneself shut up by to one only possible conclusion which accounts for all the facts. The conclusion may be very startling. It may carry with it a tremendous condemnation of the religion of to-day which bears His name. It may go near branding many of its professors as conscious or unconscious hypocrites. But all these considerations lie apart from the fact itself. Christ is historic. Christ is human. Christ is Divine.

But why? Because I find an element in Christ's human consciousness which differentiates Him from all other human beings, not only in degree, but in character; an element utterly unexplainable, except upon that supposition; an element not merely accidental but essential. That element is sinlessness. It is not a somewhat artificial addition to His character, such as might have grown up with the traditions; a pious fraud in fact, the first of a very long series which still continue. It is an element emerging unconsciously everywhere from the first moment that I meet His Figure to the last. There is no moral growth, though there is the plainest growth both physical and mental. "Wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business?" There are from the very first upon moral subjects. "He knew what was in man." In this respect there is nothing to alter, nothing to revoke, nothing at life's close to regret. There is no confusion as to moral issues. All is unspeakably clear.

His moral intensity, rather even than His love, is the most tremendous and significant feature about Jesus Christ. He weeps aloud over the doomed city. But the tears are for its rejection of Himself, and, strange to say, the doom actually falls forty years after. His "meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me, and to finish His work." This meat (John iv. 34) satisfies Him even in an hour of utter weariness. The zeal for His Father's house consumes Him. He has a baptism of death before Him, and is "straitened till it be accomplished." In aim, in activity, in aggressiveness, there is nothing in the history of the world to compare with

CHRIST'S MORAL INTENSITY.

For it ever has an aim beyond itself, not concerned with its own salvation. It does not slack till the solemn cry is wrung forth at Calvary, "It is finished."

Side by side with this moral intensity is His moral calmness. There is no impatience, no doubt as to final result, no want of sympathy with erring or ignorant men. He is conscious that His presence among men brings about a "crisis" (John iii. 19) of moral judgment; that it will accomplish "the vital analysis of faith and unbelief"; that He is "like a refiner's fire and like fuller's soap." But, having revealed eternal verities in their true light, having aroused that which was latent deeply in man, having vindicated the supreme and eternal value of character, Christ leaves the issue with His Father.

It is, however, in His contrast to ourselves in this moral consciousness, that we find the most marked feature of His Divinity. Christ is devoid of an element universally present in man's religious life. ("The Christ of History and of Experience"—Forrest, p. 17, &c.) His moral consciousness is not dual but single, whereas with man universally it is always dual. The sense of harmony to the ideal we strive to reach, and of divergence from it, are "two permanent sides of the one spiritual experience," and we never can get beyond this. With Him it is otherwise. He is never haunted by misgivings of what might have been (Forrest, pp. 17-31). Again, He never prays with His disciples. His sinlessness is not merely negative but strongly positive. His moral consciousness is as unique in its claims as in its nature. There is finality, authority, self-assertion, of the most imperative kind about it. Yet He is all the while human. But "in the heart of the intimacy (with His disciples) there remained a great self-withdrawal, an unshared loneliness continually declaring itself; yet in such wise as only to deepen their reverence, not to chill their affection.

> Like aught that for its grace may be,
> Dear, and yet dearer, for its mystery."
> (Forrest, p. 131.)

Those facts are explainable upon one supposition, and one only: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God."

Faith and Works.—Faith is a lively and steadfast trust in the favour of God, wherewith we commit ourselves altogether unto God; and that trust is so surely grounded, and cleaves so fast to our hearts, that a man would not once doubt of it, though he should die a thousand times. And such trust, wrought by the Holy Ghost through faith, makes a man glad, strong, cheerful, and true hearted unto God and all creatures. Whereby, willingly and without compulsion, he is glad, and ready to do good to every man, to do service to every man, to suffer all things, that God may be loved and praised, Who has given him such grace; so that it is impossible to separate good works from faith, even as it is impossible to separate heat and burning from fire. Therefore take heed to thyself, and beware of thine own fantasics and imaginations, which to judge of faith and good works will seem wise, when indeed they are stark blind, and of all things most foolish.—William Tyndale.

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

A PRACTICAL EPISTLE.

NOTES OF A BIBLE READING.

By Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

IN the Epistle to the Colossians you will observe that the Apostle is able to speak (i. 4, 5) of the three great graces as found in his converts—faith, the starting-point of all; love, the proof that we are in Christ Jesus; hope, which is working in us. This wonderful Epistle is addressed "to the saints and faithful brethren in Christ which are at Colosse"; and if to them, we may be perfectly sure also to the saints and faithful brethren in all ages and countries—because we have that remarkable sentence in iv. 16, "likewise read the epistle from Laodicea." That, as is generally accepted, is spoken of what we understand as the Epistle to the Ephesians; and in it we have the direct invitation of the Apostle to make his letters circular. So we boldly take the Epistle as addressed to ourselves. If in any part of God's Holy Word there be power for daily life, we may affirm that it is here, and we have powerful words of exhortion whereby we may be able to glorify God.

The Gospel according to Paul is summed up in i. 18—"that in all things He might have the pre-eminence." Dr. Moule records that when Charles Simeon was preaching on this text he said, "He must have it, He will have it, and He shall have it." These words made the deepest possible impression on the audience, who were struck with the blessed conviction that the purpose of God must be fulfilled, and that the purpose is summed up in these words. Dr. Moule adds: "As in creation, so in redemption; as in the natural, so in the spiritual; He, the Christ, should in all things hold the primacy." The aim and object of the Epistle is that "in all things," in our faith, love, and hope, Christ Jesus the Lord, may hold the primacy, or "have the pre-eminence."

GOD'S PURPOSE OR REBELLION.

It lies with us to go forth into the battle and journey of life once more and say, "Who is to be the Lord, the Guide, the Master, in our existence?" Paul says in all things He should have the pre-eminence. The question is whether God's purpose is to be fulfilled, or whether we are to be rebellious. We have been rebellious. We have not given Him His rights, I fear; and that is why we are gathered here. There would be no need of this convention if the Church of God carried out the purpose of God in their daily life. If the Lord were given the pre-eminence, the world would be the better for the Church from day to day. Christ would be receiving the glory that is His right, and His Kingdom would very speedily come to pass on the earth.

Notice in i. 16-20 that in the Greek no less than twelve times is the word autos (He Himself) used, a most unusual fact, as all scholars are aware. Generally speaking, the verb is given without a pronoun, when the person is not of any particular prominence. In this case, in regard to the verbs and the whole purpose, it seems needful, in the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, to bring out the Person of the Lord Jesus in the fullest way.

That we may give Christ His glory, not only thrones and dominions, but principalities and powers are said to be worked out by, for, through, and with reference to, the Lord Jesus Christ—i. 16; ii. 10, 15. He is made the Head of all. He is for us the Head of all. He has taken away the power of all other principalities. They no longer have force against Him, or can injure those who belong to Him. They are in the lower heavenlies, He is in the upper heavenlies, far above all principalities and powers that are against us. Such is the purpose of God for Christ, that He should be the centre, the body, and the ultimate end and aim of all creation.

We shall not understand the power of Christ until we see the deep force with which the Apostle writes (i. 19), "It pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell." Then look at ii. 9 and iv. 12. The prayer of Epaphras was that they might stand perfect and complete, filled unto all fulness. We are filled unto all fulness in Him; but there remains the filling out of the Body which is the Church, in submission to the will of God. The one aim and object of the Epistle is that the Christian Church may learn obedience and be submissive to God, and glorify Him by the obedience of faith.

The Apostle turns from praise and gratitude to prayer. Notice the purport of the prayer—it is that this may be fulfilled in us that you and I are gathered here. "Filled with the knowledge" (i. 9), is another key-word of the Epistle; "increasing in the knowledge" (i. 10; ii. 2; iii. 10). This word knowledge (epignosis) is not the knowledge of the student, but of experience, progress, advance, passing on to full and perfect knowledge, or acknowledgment of the mystery of God. The one great cry of the true minister is, "O my God, I pray without ceasing that they may be filled with knowledge"—of His will (i. 9), of God (i. 10), of the mysteries of God (ii. 2).

In Ephesians we were in the heavenlies with Him, but here He is the Head of the Church serving Him in the earth; and He is the Head in the sense that He is to have the pre-eminence, governing the body here upon earth. It is the it asks you whether you are prepared to make Christ the true Head of the body in all the fulness of that solemn word (i. 18; ii. 10, 19). Notice the use of the word "body" (i. 18, 22, 24; ii. 9, 11, 17, 19, 23; iii. 15). We, the body, the corporeal representation, are here upon earth. What does the head do to the body? It dictates every motion, orders everything that concerns the frame. It has a right to say what the body should do according to possibility and capacity.

The practical purport of the Epistle is for every member of the body to remember his humble position (1 Cor. xii. 21-27). Christ Jesus cannot say, "I have no need of you." He wants you, He wants your free action, He wants command of you. What a thing it would be if the feet were to say, "I refuse to do your bidding." I do not say much to my hand to make it obey my will; according to my power it acts. The hand and foot obey the head. Let the body recognise its lowly position, and no other headship or lordship, no dominion, no principality, but that of the Christ of God as the head, who dictates to the mortal members of the body upon earth. The government is upon His shoulders. Shall He have His right, to say to every member, "Go, do the will of your Lord and Master"? Then shall we increase in the knowledge of the mystery, in the knowledge of Him.

RITUAL AND SPIRITUALISM.

Having traced the fulness of the Gospel, and stated His purpose at the end of the first chapter, the Apostle recognises the presence of danger for that beloved flock (ii. 4, 8, 16, 18). In our modern times the dangers may be summed up in (1) ritual (performances and ceremonial), as if that was of value in the sight of God, without real faith in Christ; and (2), on the other side, in dealings with angels, trying to enter into the unseen. They sought to spoil the members of Christ's body, and they are seeking to do it to-day. The souls of men are in peril unless they recognise that Hebraism has no place now in the Church of Christ. Hellenism also is a danger at every point of our existence. There is mortal danger, and I warn my hearers against them. Give the Lord His due, and from this hour recognise that wonderful word which is the key of all apostolic preaching, the summing up of all I wish to say, "Christ is all and in all" (iii. 11).

Let it be so to you and to me, and then what will happen? You will observe how the Apostle turns from hearsay to apply the Gospel to every part of life. In "wherefore" (ii. 20) you have one of the "therefores" in Greek, and so is "then" (iii. 1). What are the two "therefores" put together. "Therefore if ye be dead; therefore if ye be risen with Christ"—look to your souls and see if the Gospel is a reality to you. "If ye be dead"—then you have done with legality. "Are you risen with Christ?"—then you have done with human wisdom. "Voluntary humility"—your unseen is Christ, not angels and spirits. You have done with sciences which take you into communication with spirits below the King, the Lord who is to command you.

"DEAD . . . RISEN . . . MORTIFY."

If ye died and your life is hid, then (iii. 5) mortify your members. They did die in Christ, now make them die. Take heed, my brethren, against the flesh. By God's grace put them to death. "Ye have put off the old man with his deeds" (iii. 9); now (8) "put off all these." Judicially it was done for you; put them off. You have put on the new man (10); "put on, therefore" (11). You will have peace (15) as a characteristic of your life.

Christians are called (16) to let the word of Christ dwell in them richly. Half of my people come to church without Bibles. They are going to walk in the park after, and they could not be seen with Bibles. Keep yourselves to your Bibles, and let yourselves be known as Bible Christians, to read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest. Then of all practical lives we shall have the most practical. So we shall have practical Christianity, and like Epaphras for the Colossians so this poor man prays earnestly that ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God.

BACK TO BETHEL.

(Genesis xxxv. 1.)

By the BISHOP OF DURHAM.

Some of you have been, it may be again and again, to Keswick, and are now preparing for a farewell at the end of another Convention. This closing night appeals to the heart to look back, and yet looking for all our Father has to give in the promise of His Spirit to them that ask Him. It may be we may somewhat specially—such of us as have thus to look back for the fulness and vision of His blessed power and presence—come again to Bethel ere we part.

You remember the occasion. Here we have chapter xxxv., which points back to chapter xxviii. There we have the wanderer with the sun gone down, and he is in a desert place. The stones are around him. It was, as we now know, not a desert land, but a land of cities and peoples. But there are desert places among the thronging towns and villages. I know in the county of Durham there are very desert bits where a man can be lone enough. In some such lonely spot the wanderer was. He was in a desert in more senses than one. His soul must have been in a desert state. He had been a wanderer from the presence of God, and had been grasping the lines of his own providence. I am sure he could not be happy.

There he was, destitute and alone. In the wonderful freedom and arbitrariness of his life God gave him a great vision. He saw the glory of God. The ladder stood up upon the earth, and its top reached to heaven. The Lord stood above it, and the angels were upon it, going up and down, busied about that man. Then he had a time of solemn transaction with God, receiving into his heart the promise and presence of this indescribably gracious God—not, as it has sometimes been interpreted, a selfish transaction or bargaining. He saw in that wonderful vision the marvellous promise which undertook that he should be provided for then and there. His heart went up in simplest gratitude, and said that God should be now and ever his God.

Jacob had a very chequered history. Years passed, and he had his dealings with Laban. There was the growth of his worldly gear and wealth; and the unhappinesses of his multifold family, culminating in terrible discoveries of vile passions and violent spirits nursed under his own eyes. The man who had deceived a brother and a father was now being paid in his own coin.

However, all the chequered experiences were passed. Now, after a very dreadful time of family crisis, he was thrown more than ever upon himself. Then did God speak to him again, and told him to go back to Bethel; and, amid the surroundings of Bethel, to begin again, and to build an altar, to do fresh homage and make fresh surrender of himself there; in the spirit to see again the ladder and the angels and the glory, and, rising up out of the dust and ashes he had made around himself,

TO BEGIN AGAIN WITH GOD.

Jacob, you remember, obeyed. He went, and God watched over his going. He went and he called his most unsanctified household with him to repentance, and to renewed dedication to the God of purity and truth. There was a great renewal of things again at Bethel in the latter days; and the place was solemnly denominated Bethel. That had been a private name before between Jacob and God. Now it was made a public name; and there was given to Jacob a confirmation of that strange name he had received—Israel. I am led to take this second visit as a message first to my own soul, and then, if it please God, to all who need it.

Many may remember a time of vision, a crisis when we awfully found out ourselves, and wonderfully found out God; and it was to us a Bethel, a house of God, the place where He recorded His Name, where He made covenant with us, and we with Him. Ever since that day He has been faithful. His Word has been unalterable. There He has been, the God of grace and peace, the God of purity and power; and all for us. The atoning blood has all that time spoken for us. The Advocate with the Father has been for all that time the propitiation for our sins; and we have given Him a great many occasions for being actively our Advocate with Him who is upon the throne. All this time the Spirit of God has been faithful, and ready, as our hearts have been opened up to Him, to write thereon the will of God.

All that has been equally true in provision for us every moment since that Bethel long ago. Have we been quite true? Was Jacob then, between visits to Bethel—have we now, between visits to Bethel been—true to the grace of God? Have we not sometimes been as those who received it in vain? Is it not time that we should go up again to Bethel, and dwell there, and make an altar, and heap fuel upon it again as if the flame had never burned before? What was it which we were led in His grace and goodness to engage, in His blessed Name at that wonderful time, which perhaps found us awfully discouraged and beaten down by ourselves in our spiritual life?

Do you not remember there, at whatever to you represented Bethel, feeling that your Christian life had got cold and pale, and dull and hard? You were half conscious that coldness since the early days had been creeping into every department of your life. You knew you were not glorifying God in the immediate circle in which you lived. People had not been taking knowledge of you that you had been with Jesus, though perhaps His name was not seldom on your lips.

This the God of Bethel saw, and gave us some experience of, sleeping on the stones. Then He opened the heavens, and we saw the glory of the open communication between Him and us. We saw all that life of obedience, believing, following in the Deliverer's steps; and oh, it was a blessed time. But has it been so altogether since, along the days and months and years? We probably then surrendered our hasty temper and restless will to Him who was able to overcome them in us and for us. And it was so. It was not a dream. We went out into life and service. We met the old temptations which could make worry and trouble, and which sometimes exasperated us; and though they were the same, God was in us, and there was a wonderful change. The Holy Ghost was there making Jesus Christ a living bright reality in the heart; and the servant was very strong where he had been weak.

Probably we made also a very special surrender of the tongue, so lately used not according to his will. There was a great revolution in our conversation about other people. We could not talk as we had been doing, because we would not, and we would not because the God of Bethel was making His abode within our hearts. But have we on our side been quite faithful in that respect to Him? Is there no occasion for our going up to Bethel and beginning again with God?

It may be that we faithfully, and as far as we knew, entirely surrendered ourselves to Him. As far as our possessions were concerned, we determined that a tithe should always be paid to our King; and, as He should lead us, our freewill offerings should not stop there. Have we been equally faithful to the covenant?

THE OUTCOME OF SURRENDER.

Altogether we were led to a most delightful consciousness of surrender out and out to the Lord. We entered into the realization of the perfect freedom which comes out of the perfect and simple "Yes" to His claim upon us. We found how delightful it was to be bond-slaves of the Lord. We found there was a boundless power in the soul to grow into the image of God in surrender to the Owner, absolute and unreserved, everywhere and every when. Has it been consistently so since that long-ago visit to Bethel? Has there been no more or less unconscious taking back? Has love been exhibited in any degree to ourselves? Have we got fonder of being in the eyes and thoughts of men? Have we come to be rather kind and chary to our own name, and liking to see it mentioned? If so, there is need that we should go again to Bethel.

When that vision revolutionized our sight of self and of God, we recognized that we existed for another Person, that that was the truest way of existing in ourselves, that being thus given over to Him He was able in wonderful ways to manage His own surrendered property. In that attitude of the spirit we did find wonderful surprises in the Author. We found our varied imaginations purified and straightened. We found that we could live a life naturally lying along the lines of the nature God has made, and yet a life supernaturally delivered from tyrannies which had once seemed unbreakable and without hope. In proportion as we have ever been tempted to forget the magnificent fact that we belong to Him, in the proportion in which that has been at all let go, in which we have not presented the paper to Him for His pen, in that proportion there has been a lack of writing on the heart by His will as against our own, and we have need to go back to Bethel again.

NO FROWNS GREET THE RETURN.

It is possible that with some there may be a need of going and helping one another back to Bethel. Let us remember from this story of Jacob's experience, with gladness, that our Master does nothing to frown upon returns to Bethel. It was at His invitation that the broken and inconsistent man went back there. It was His will that Jacob should go, and we may be sure that the God of Bethel did not say to him, "So you are here again, but you should never have been away." He was welcomed; and, as he looked round upon the familiar place, he realized that he had changed, but the God of Bethel was the same. There he was at the same place, to demonstrate that God was ready to be the same to him once more.

So let us go back. If we specially need anything let us go not only in tenderest penitence, but not discouraged. Never does God discourage anything but the heart while it remains unwilling to return to Him. Let it return, and over Bethel the glory shall be shining, the glory and the presence of God will be found to have grown no older with time. He will restore to us—wonderful word, something better than blot out—the years which the locust of self had eaten. But let us do it to purpose. Let us build an altar there, and let us put upon it whatever, in the light of the Holy Ghost speaking to conscience, comes to hand as a really called-for sacrifice. Above all, let the sacrifice be made as if it had never been made before.

SELF-DISCOVERED AND HUMBLED.

In the early days of my observation of this movement, I was much struck by a young friend who had been at some meetings of the kind. He said afterwards, "I see, the very heart of the question is the surrender of ourselves to God." Well, practically it is so, the surrender of ourselves to Him, the writing across our lives in the largest capitals of the words, "I am not my own. I am bought with a price. I am conquered by Another. I have held out both my hands to put them between His; and I do again, as if never before, surrender myself to God." It is upon the altar so built and so heaped that the fire of God delighteth to come down. It is a very quiet sober thing, with remarkably little excitement about it.

Once more, let me point out the unchangeableness of the Promiser. Jacob was an older man, and a greatly more self-discovered and humbled man when he went to Bethel the second time, than the first. Grey hairs were upon him; indeed, he was an old man. He was a man full of change, and full of time; but God was in nowise altered. For He is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." "I AM that I am," was true then, and it is true now. We sigh and we think that such a time was in our Christian spring; and the autumn, if not the winter, is come now. That is from your point of view, but God is the spring of the soul, and can make all things fresh and new. He can renew the covenant, and build the altar, and begin again. It is a renewal of the Christian spring; and if we will dwell at Bethel, it will always be springtime there, until it break forth into the perfect summer.

The Way.

(Isa. xliii. 16.)

The depths of the sea
(Sorrow's wide anguishing sea),
Thou hast made a wonderful way;
The redeemed pass over it singing to Thee!

The depths of the sea
(Sin's trackless and treacherous sea),
E'en of this Thou hast said, "Fear not,
Fear thou not, with My hand I have covered thee."

The depths of the sea
(Death's dark, inscrutable sea),
A way for the ransomed to pass
Thou hast made, and sorrow and sighing shall flee!

Washington, D.C.

National Protestant Sunday.—The setting apart of the first Sunday in November as "Protestant Sunday," to which we referred in a recent issue, was arranged by the National Protestant Federation (15, Imperial Buildings, Ludgate Circus, E.C.), four years ago, and has been well received throughout the country. It is hoped that special interest will be aroused this year, and various new and helpful features have been introduced.

The Tyndal Bible School has been organized for the purpose of promoting regular and diligent study of the Scriptures. Classes are carried on by postal correspondence, both for adults and for children, and numerous testimonies have been received to the value of the help thus afforded to private study. In a letter just received, a member writes: "I can never express how much I enjoy the study, and how I thank God for leading me to join the school." The autumn term of Bible study will shortly commence. Particulars will be sent to any reader upon receipt of a halfpenny stamp.—Address—Miss MASON, Tyndal Bible School West Norwood, S.E.

The Protestant Governesses' Home, 22, Chatham Place, Brighton.—The annual report shows that the helpful ministry of this Home continues. The house is a resting-place for struggling governesses, and elderly gentlewomen who need a temporary home while awaiting engagements. There is a fund for pecuniary help and clothing. It is obvious what a boon such a Home is for desolate ones. Weary in body, sad in mind, most gratefully they welcome the opportunity offered of perfect rest, good food, and freedom from anxiety for the time being. The privilege of a sojourn in the Home can only be extended to a few until funds considerably increase.

Persecuted Hindu Widows—2.

By W. G. KING, C.I.E., Madras.

THE Madras Presidency contained, accord- to the census of 1891, over nine millions of women who are, under this bigoted priestly ruling, forbidden to marry. Of these, 3,620 were of the age of four and under, 16,270 from five to nine, and 87,785 were from ten to fourteen years. Need it be said, leaving out of the question the right to marry, that to escape from the condition of degradation and servility to which these young lives are subjected is a hope cherished by large numbers of the sufferers. Many there are, doubtless, who accept the lot laid down for them—with cruel exactitude by priestly influence—as a duty to their caste or religion; but there are others who find such a life intolerable. The only way of escape is to take advantage of the Act legalizing widow re-marriage. The fact has been recognised by native social reformers, and some efforts have been made by them to put their theoretical estimate of liberty into practice.

PRIESTLY HINDRANCES.

But reform in the face of priestly influence cannot be undertaken lightly. On the platform these reformers gain the applause of educated men drawn from so large a number of Hindu families that it might be imagined the feelings of whole communities were with them, and that henceforth widow re-marriage would receive no opposition. Associations have been formed, in the enthusiasm of the moment, the members of which have bound themselves to give full moral and monetary support to their fellow caste-men who would carry theory into practice by actually marrying such so-called widows. One such association was formed at Rajahmundry, in the Presidency of Madras; but it had not apparently recognized the force the Brahmin priests could array against this reform. The first marriage had no sooner been effected than its members (Brahmins) found themselves excommunicated from their caste. This means complete social effacement, and often involves, as a sequel, financial ruin. Consequently, the members were only too glad to defray the expenses, and certain not over-cleanly methods of purification, necessary for re-admission to caste. With such a weapon at hand priest-craft triumphs, notwithstanding any Act of Government.

THE POWER OF PREJUDICE.

Nevertheless, a few brave spirits have struggled against persecution, and have endeavoured to secure the freedom of the women of their country from such baneful and tyrannical dictates, so that now a fair start towards practical reform has been made in Rajahmundry by the re-marriage of twenty-three widows. Each couple that has thus dared the priests have found themselves excommunicated. If they presented themselves at the houses of their parents they would be required to limit their entrance to the position accorded to pariahs. Eating with their parents, or any fellow caste-man, is out of the question; excommunication would follow in the case of all who shared in a meal when these persecuted people were present. They dare not even enter a temple for worship; although in all respects as to caste observances pure and qualified. Although it is questionable if giving certain forms of aid would involve excommunication, prejudice against those under the ban is so great that in practice the wife can reckon upon no kindly office from any person of her own caste. If she is too ill to carry water from the village well, no one will undertake it for her, even if paid for the service; on her sick bed no one will offer aid or comfort.

What such a struggle means, a glance at the photograph (see last issue) of one of the sufferers (the wife of one of the most energetic and practical of the reformers) will readily demonstrate. The expression is that of pitiful distress; yet this is not the result of a theatrical effort, but a perfectly unconscious pose, exhibiting the influence on the physiognomy of a wife, in all respects happy in her home, of daily contact at every step beyond that little sphere, with the innumerable petty annoyances that go to form the net around the excommunicated family woven by priests unsurpassed for subtlety. This, then, is the fate of those virgin-widows who dare to exercise the right of re-marriage that the law of the land recognises as legal, and that the Brahmin priest cannot prove is contrary to the Hindu religion. But there is of the question that can but be lightly referred to. The girl-widow who will honestly submit to the wretched lot prescribed for her by the priest is not always love-proof, and, as amongst other nationalities, it is the woman who is called upon to make the sacrifice. The temptation to throw prudence to the wind, in exchange for a brief season of happy memories of mutual love, must be heavy to bear where every effort has been made to deprive a young life of the most innocent pleasure. To such affaires de cœur there can be but one ending—the sufferings of excommunication; to be an outcast for ever from home and kindred—or suicide. Accidental drowning in open wells and tanks must necessarily be expected in a country where hand-drawing of water is largely pursued, but the frequency of such "accidents" to the girl-widow may not uncharitably be regarded as due to her determination to leave the fame of her family unsullied.

Against unreasoning and cruel priestcraft of this description, to aid the efforts of men who deliberately have undergone persecution, that they might thereby weaken the fetters that bind the women of their country, seems to the writer an object worthy of the true philanthropist and Christian. For, let it be remembered that although monetary and other inducements may have at time had influence, the majority of widow re-marriages that have occurred up to date have been made with the prime object of securing reform. Indeed, in the case of certain of these reformers, the writer has been told that the necessity for self-sacrifice was first forced upon them by Christian missionaries pointing to the sufferings so heroically borne by early Christians, and thus arousing their enthusiasm in attempting to overcome a form of persecution that both Christians and educated Hindus of the present day condemn as cruel.

WHAT IS WANTED

to aid this urgent reform is: (1) A small "Widows' Home," where child-widows who wish to re-marry can be received temporarily, and where others who do not wish to marry could secure an education that would fit them to work for their own living after leaving their homes where life has been rendered miserable. (2) In connection with this institution, "rescue" work could be accomplished in cases where women have committed the error of loving "not wisely but too well," by bringing pressure as to marriage upon the deceiver, and thus saving both infantile and adult life. (3) To aid in supporting such widows of the reformers as are left in poverty,* and who by excommunication have been deprived of the help of relatives and caste-men.

For the management of such a "Home," Christian ladies would be necessary, and although religious pressure as to Christianity should be avoided, and the movement should be conducted on the basis of pure philanthropy, it need not be said that the opportunity offered for teaching Christianity both by word and deed should prove of infinite value to the cause—more especially in respect to influencing the highest castes, which have hitherto exhibited very little tendency to be moved in this direction. In course of time there would spring up amongst Hindus a population with the prestige of origin from the Brahmin caste but free of bigotry, which could not fail to produce an influence for good that would permeate throughout Hindu society. Communications on this subject would willingly be received by Mr. N. Kothendaramayya, manager, office of the Municipal Council, Rajahmundry, Godavery District, Madras Presidency—a man who, with the hope of encouraging reform amongst his countrymen, and well aware of the persecution that he would undergo in consequence of his act, deliberately refused an advantageous marriage that would satisfy the narrow-minded Brahmin priests, and elected to marry one of the victimized class whose cause he has for years actively espoused—or by the Editor of The Christian.

* One of the most active of the early reformers was Mr. P. Ramakristayya, who, on his death, left the sum of Rs.10,000 for the aid of such cases. The interest of this sum affords Rs.2½ (about 3s. 4d.) per month for twelve widows.

The Flight of a Priest.

ONE cold day last December, a young priest set forth from his parish in Italy, leaving home and friends behind him for ever. Months of great mental conflict had passed, and his conscience no longer permitted him to remain in a Church which sold her sacraments and made merchandise of her pretended gifts. Having but a slender purse, he decided to make his way on foot to Brest, and thence to sail to America. The bitter weather tried his delicate frame, but he tramped on to a central town in France. Here, at the lodging-house where he slept, his money was stolen, and he was left with only 30 centimes.

His faith was put to the severest test. Being without means to proceed to America, God turned his steps to Switzerland. He was exposed to great hardships. Sometimes, when unable to satisfy his hunger, he was forced to soothe his cravings by eating the snow which covered the ground. But God's "good hand" brought him at last to a place where Swiss Evangelical friends supplied his need and "taught him the way of God more perfectly." Now this converted priest is preaching the Gospel daily to thirsty hearts in Italy, his chief study God's Word, his one desire to manifest Christ.

Had our young friend only known of the Home-Refuge for Priests in Rome, what might he not have been saved? This Home has existed nearly three and a half years, and received many priests and seminarists. Two are under training for Gospel ministry. In more than one case brilliant prospects of advancement in the Church of Rome have been given up for the "greater riches" of "the reproach of Christ." At the outset, almost all have had to forsake home, friends, every thing, for His Name.

Do not such men need the prayers of God's children? Numbers of applications are received from priests and monks, but most have to be refused, as only seven can be received in the Home at one time. It is a bright, airy apartment, but at present consists only of the larger part of one floor, quite inadequate for the needs of the work. The lack of funds causes much anxiety. The committee is formed of ministers representing different evangelical churches in Rome, Rev. Dr. Comm. M. Prochet being president and Rev. Dr. W. Burt hon. sec. and treasurer. The latter is now practically directing the Home, an ex-priest acting under him.

Further particulars of the work may be had from the hon. sec. for England, Miss Ward, Gottesruhe, Montalt Road, Woodford Green, Essex.

South Arcot, India.—Miss (not Mrs.) de Noë Walker is the treasurer in England for Miss Reade, of the Highways and Hedges Mission, Punrooty, South Arcot. She may be addressed—21, Gunton Road, Clapton, N.E.

Scriptures for India.—When gratefully acknowledging a parcel of ten Bibles sent out under the above scheme, Rev. W. J. Abigail (C.M.S. High School, Karachi) mentions that seven of the boys to whom they were given are Hindus, one Mohammedan, and two Jews. These, who already knew something of the preciousness of God's Word from the daily Bible lesson, were all greatly pleased with the volumes, and will, it is believed, make good use of them.

Zambezi Industrial Mission.

FORMED in 1892, the history of the Zambezi Industrial Mission affords an object lesson of the highest value of the possibilities of such efforts. Five years ago a deputation went out to visit the field of operations. Forest land was being cleared, and coffee plantations formed. Wattle and daub houses had been built by and for the missionaries. Evangelistic work was being carried on from a number of centres with encouraging success, but no schools or places for worship had been opened. The careful survey made, however, confirmed the belief that the Mission had been established on right lines, and that a future of great usefulness lay before it.

A great change has taken place in the second quinquennium. Extensive tracts of forest have given place to productive coffee plantations, and a successful experiment in the growing of cotton has been made on a hundred acres of the land. Wheat and other products have been successfully tried, and in these industries thousands of natives find employment, while at the same time their spiritual interests are ministered to by the missionaries. The first houses have given place to substantial, commodious, and well-equipped brick buildings. Schools have been opened at every station and outpost, in which about two thousand children are being educated. Churches and hospitals have been built, and an industrial training institute established.

The property consists of the Michiru estate of about forty square miles, bought from a native chief through the British administration, with five plots of a thousand acres each given by H.M. Consul-General. A typical station is that of Mitsidi, a recent report from which shows that the Lord's Day services are well attended, and also those in the five or six villages that are visited; while there is a Bible class of about fifty-five members, all Christians. During the week, a sewing-class is held for women, when as many as fifteen are present; and 200 is the average attendance at the week-day Gospel service. The schools are thriving, and the scholars get more than free education. In one month no less than 193 people, suffering from various ailments, were attended to; 197 natives have been working on the plantation, cultivating coffee, cotton, wheat, chilis, and potatoes.

At Ailsa Craig about 130 acres of land are under cultivation; 126 native workers have been busy hoeing, digging, making drains, weeding coffee beds, pruning the trees, and sowing wheat. Morning and evening prayer meetings are held each day, and on Wednesday morning a little Gospel service is held. All the villagers at Maliya came one Sunday to a service at the station. The average attendance at the class for candidates has been twenty-three, of whom seventeen are seeking baptism.

Chiole station reports 169 members on the church roll, and 180 candidates seeking baptism, with a Christians' Bible-class averaging 362. Forty villages are visited every Sunday, and thus the Gospel reaches 1,400 or 1,500 people.

From other centres the reports are equally favourable, and the possibilities of expansion are very great. It is hoped that the profits of cultivation and trading will be sufficient to carry on the work on its present basis; but there is much more to be done for the uplifting and evangelizing of the extensive districts surrounding the present centres than can be undertaken without outside help. Many schools could be used if funds were provided for their erection, and for the support of the necessary teachers. The present staff is not able to undertake more work than that now in hand, but if it could be strengthened by evangelists, school inspectors, and nurses, the influence of the Mission in British Central Africa would be greatly increased. As, however, the income derivable from the industrial operations at present being carried on would not be sufficient to support any such increase, it would be necessary to raise their support among friends at home. Friends interested may communicate with Mr. R. Caldwell, secretary, 6, Colonial Avenue, Minories, E.C.

Deaf and Dumb in India.

THE other day a booklet was handed to me by a young lady. As I read: "Ephphatha, or Work for Christ among Deaf and Dumb Children in India," the vision of a beautiful spot in a tropical clime came before me. It was in Tinnevelly, the most southerly district of the Madras Presidency, formerly notorious for its demon-worship, now remarkable for the great number of professors of Christianity.

On a radiant March morning we drove from the station to Palamcottah, the stronghold of the C.M.S. The sky was cloudless, the landscape with its mountain ranges (the Western Ghats) charming. We stopped in the front of a bungalow which, with other buildings, formed a spacious square. A group of girls, occupied in sewing, raised their heads, glancing at us curiously; then a lady with a smiling face came forward to bid us welcome. It was Miss Florence Swainson, the founder of the Palamcottah Deaf and Dumb Institution.

The C.M.S. has several educational establishments here, and also 450 primary schools in the district of Tinnevelly. The Mission is doing thorough work, purging especially the Christian communities. Thoroughness is essential among a people whose motives for becoming Christian are sometimes far from being spiritual. To give an example: We were told that two castes, having had a violent quarrel with one another on account of precedence at one of their temples, brought their case before the law courts. While the proceedings were going on, one of the parties decided that should they be losers in the strife they would all embrace Christianity. They lost their case, but have not become Christians yet. Repentance of sin would be far from the mind of such.

Miss Swainson came out primarily to teach in the Sarah Tucker College for girls. Three deaf and dumb little ones being put into her way, she wondered whether a school for such could not be found somewhere. Great was the disappointment when on inquiry she and her co-workers were informed that in the vast Empire of India there only existed two small schools, one in Calcutta under the Brahmo Somaj, and one in Bombay under the Roman Catholics. Hindus, though by nature of an affectionate disposition, have never been taught to sympathize with the afflictions of others; they look upon them as the consequence of sins committed in a former life—a necessary and deserved punishment which must be submitted to. To them the deaf and dumb is more or less an idiot, and they would never dream of educating him. It falls to the lot of the professing children of God to follow their Master in doing good, and though they cannot restore sight or hearing, they can do much towards making their lives useful and happy.

The need and helplessness of the three little ones so appealed to Miss Swainson, that she opened a separate class for them. As soon as it became known, children were sent to her from other places and institutions. She had not the heart to refuse them. The first boys who came lived in the Blind Boys' School of the C.M.S. until a friend's kind gift enabled her to rent a little house and to engage a Christian man and his wife to live with the boys and teach them.

The present premises are large and airy and well adapted to their purpose. What strikes a newcomer most are the beautiful order and neatness everywhere. The children, boys and girls, about seventy in number, learn nearly all the subjects the other classes do, and go in for the same Government examinations. Miss Swainson's method of teaching is quite unique, as she had to learn it by herself and to invent many of the letters, foreign to the English vocabulary, so that she has really a code of her own. It seems, however, simple and admirably to the purpose. While watching the telling of the story of Elijah, we felt that we would soon learn to communicate in this kind of language. What a difference between these happy and intelligent-looking children, as with expressive signs and animated faces they told the Bible narrative, and a little new-comer just taken in. The latter had an expression like that of a hunted animal.

Industrial work, such as weaving and carpentering, is being done between school hours. Girls are taught sewing and fancy work. The teachers are all natives, and one or two are deaf and dumb themselves.

There are about 200,000 of these afflicted ones in India. Applications for admission to Miss Swainson's school come from various parts of the country, proving the great need of multiplying such institutions without forgetting to support and encourage the existing ones.

Whosoever heareth, let him take of the Water of Life freely. These dear children do not hear, but they see the Water pointed out to them and take it.

Miss Swainson relates that one Sunday, when her pupils were learning for the first time about the sufferings of Christ, there was a look of horror on their faces, and they asked: "Why was He thus treated after all the good He had done?" While the teacher explained that He had died instead of us, the tears were on the cheeks of one girl as she went over the story to the others, and she showed clearly that she had grasped the lesson. On the death of a child, dearly loved by her companions, there was not a thought of sorrow in them. Pointing upwards, they said, "Bessie has gone up there; and she is not deaf and dumb now." Another incident to show how God can use even little dumbies in the work of evangelizing.

"We had gone one Sunday evening," says Miss Swainson, "into a heathen village where we hoped to get a number of people together to talk with. For some reason, though they came, we could get no attention; and after waiting some time, we feared we must give up and go. I told one of my little dumbies (pet-name) to write a text on the sand, which she did in a minute with her finger, and then signed, 'God is love.' The people were much surprised to hear she was deaf and dumb, and yet could read; and when she got out the little wordless book, and signed so clearly the meaning of each page, which I interpreted for her into the speech language, how thankful I felt that God has given me this work to do."

The support of a child costs £3 a year. The mission may be helped in many other ways.

The Outlook in India.

MORE favourable reports are to hand concerning the famine-threatened regions of India. For some days there had been high winds in Bombay, the result not of cyclonic disturbances but of strong monsoon conditions. Most places are reported to have rain, though northern Gujerat was again benindhand.

Lord Radstock writes:—A week ago fifty to a hundred millions in India saw nothing but famine and gaunt starvation before them, and the Meteorological Department gave no hope. In The Christian, August 21, there was a call to prayer for rain. "Before they call I will answer." Telegram from Bombay says: "Good rain; crops saved, Bombay and Central Provinces." Probably to-day (August 23) thirty to forty millions are almost singing for joy. Now pray for the rain by which millions of souls can and may be saved. Send gospels—the message of salvation to three million children and twenty million adults, who can read but who have not one copy. "Ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full."

Professor Newell's Bible Lectures.—The ministry of Professor W. R. Newell enlarges as the seasons pass. His winter course of Bible Lectures has now been fixed up, and week by week he will unfold the Scriptures in the following cities: Detroit on Mondays, Toronto on Tuesdays, St. Louis on Thursdays, and Chicago on Saturdays. Only by a large amount of night travelling will he be able to overtake the work that lies before him. The meetings are being convened in buildings holding from one to four thousand people. Professor Newell will value the prayerful sympathy of Christian friends in his undertaking.

Twenty-one Years in India.

REV. J. C. LAWSON AND HIS WORK.

AMONG the missionaries in India whose ministrations to the famine-stricken have brought them prominently before the Christian public is Rev. J. C. Lawson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Aligarh, who with Mrs. Lawson is labouring to ameliorate the distress of the natives of our Eastern dependency in these days of her visitation. Mr. Lawson has been spending a few weeks in England, and his appeals at conferences and other gatherings have evoked heartfelt sympathy in many quarters.

Twenty-one years ago Mr. Lawson sailed for India from America. The first ten years were spent in pioneer work at Gitapur. In common with other missionaries our friend was called upon to face much opposition, and, when preaching on one occasion at a heathen fair, he had a narrow escape. A baptism had just taken place, when a mob gathered round with angry threatenings. The service had to be abandoned, and the workers endeavoured to make their way through the crowd, and meeting another company of Christians who had also been preaching, were compelled to flee together for safety. On reaching the foot of the hill leading to their tents, the party was pressed by the infuriated mob, who, with their short bamboo canes were striking left and right. After trying again and again to rescue a new convert, the crowd returned to the fair. Mr. Lawson cites this as one of many such instances, when deliverance has been wrought in direct answer to prayer.

Since 1893, Aligarh, N.W.P., has been the centre from which Mr. Lawson has laboured. Numbers of new stations have been opened up in the surrounding district, and as a result of his untiring efforts seven circuits have been formed, and are in charge of native preachers, who have workers under them. Besides the regular preaching of the Gospel, they maintain Sunday and day schools, and carry on a wide distribution of the Word of God and tracts. The district of which Mr. Lawson is presiding elder (or chairman) has now 7,000 native Christians to be nurtured and trained for evangelizing their heathen brethren. From the area of the Conference to which he belongs, the heathen have been coming to Christ during the past ten years at the rate of twenty per day, and there are now over 60,000 native Christians in the bounds of the Conference of the North-West Provinces.

The efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Lawson in recent years have been directed to relieving and succouring the famine sufferers and organizing industrial work. During the famines of 1896 and 1900, hundreds of children and widows were gathered in and taken care of. Those who are able to work at all are taught industries, such as carpentering, boot and shoe making, tailoring, and weaving. Arrangements have been made for two skilled workmen to proceed to Aligarh to instruct the boys in their various trades. While under the care of the missionaries many of these poor famine people have become soundly converted to God, and large numbers of the boys and girls who came raw heathen are now able to read the Bible in their own language. Every year special revival services are held. Last October, when Bishop Warne conducted the meetings there were remarkable manifestations of the power of the Holy Spirit. On every hand boys and girls were seen to be mightily convicted of sin, and ultimately yielded themselves to the Saviour.

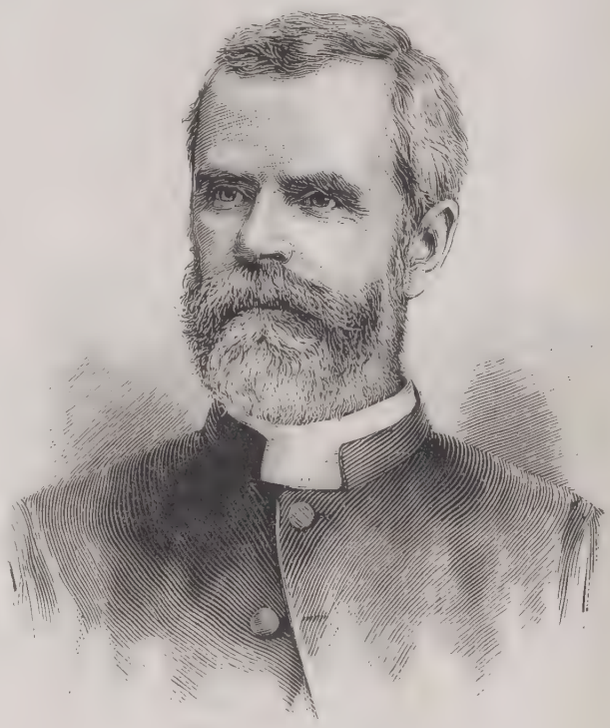
A third cruel famine is in progress, and sufferers are being gathered into the Aligarh Orphanages and Widows' Home, and are thus being saved from physical and spiritual starvation. The famine victims now under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Lawson number over a thousand, and additions are being constantly made. It is almost impossible to form any adequate idea of the heartrending scenes which have to be witnessed daily by the missionaries. Writing last month, Mrs. Lawson gives a pathetic account of the present distress:—

"My heart is breaking, because now the widows and children are calling for help, and we have no money to take in more than a few. We ought to have a man there daily to gather them in. Then we need to build new barracks for them. What will we do with the children—and no room! If we overcrowd it means sickness and death. Do ask the dear people of England if they are willing these little ones should perish."

The distress across the Jumna River in the famine regions is severe, and the missionaries, moved by the spirit of humanitarianism and Christianity, are devoting themselves to the work of gathering in the sufferers. A letter received last Thursday tells of the continued hopelessness of the situation.

All over India there is a demand for native skilled workers, and the institutions in Aligarh are destined to meet this need. The influence of the industrial work will be felt in the future in the support of native churches.

While in Great Britain Mr. Lawson has been greatly encouraged by the warm-hearted and liberal response which has been given to his appeal. His work is commending itself to Christians on both sides of the Atlantic. The following letter to Mr. Lawson from Mrs. M. A. Marriage Allen, Maryland, U.S.A., is only one of many similar testimonies:—



REV. J. C. LAWSON.
From Photograph by Mr. Finlayson, 187, New City Road, Glasgow.

"I have carefully read your appeal respecting your famine children and work for the widows, and shall be pleased to give you a cheque. I look back with pleasure to my visit to you at Aligarh, N.W.P., India, and have often said it commended itself to me more than any missionary work I saw in India, and as I stayed several days it gave me a good opportunity of judging. These famines are indeed terrible! I have sometimes thought it is one of the ways the Lord has for the evangelization of India, as these thousands of children are brought up under Christian training and care, free from the bondage of caste and heathen ideas, which are such an immense hindrance to those who become Christians in later years. Thus the Lord over-rules and brings good out of suffering. May His Church see the opportunity and help."

One of the most touching instances of the sympathy awakened by his visit to this country was the offering to his fund made at Mr. Quarrier's Orphan Homes, Bridge of Weir, where the children contributed largely of their earnings, and a sum of £22 10s. was handed to the missionary. Having sailed for India last week, communications for Mr. Lawson may be addressed to our care.

Anglo-Indian Evangelization.

AFTER travelling for more than a year in India, Ceylon, and Burmah, as an honorary member of the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society, Mr. Reginald A. Studd is anxious, during a visit to this country, to enlist wider sympathy and support for this effort on behalf of our fellow-countrymen in isolated districts. Many of these have no opportunity of attending any form of Christian service, and in some cases are not visited by any minister for so long a period as five or seven years. Young men proceeding to India are surrounded by greatly-increased temptations, and the absence of home restraints calls for even greater Christian privileges.

The members of the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society hold services, and visit from house to house, in parts of the country far removed from Christian ministry. Mr. Studd was deeply impressed with the usefulness of the work that was being done, and with the appreciation with which the opportunities for hearing the Gospel were received by the English community. The Society has only twelve workers wholly engaged, with a few occasional helpers; and it is earnestly desired that funds should be provided for the maintenance of at least TWENTY MORE PERMANENT LABOURERS.

Mr. Studd hopes that a speedy response will be made to his appeal, in view of his return to India in the autumn.

As illustrations of the need, attention is asked to the following facts: In a district in the province of Mysore there are 150 Europeans, in the Travancore Hills numerous planters, but no minister in either locality. Along the entire length of the East Coast Railway, from Madras to Calcutta, there is no regular minister. In the East Indian coalfields, where many Europeans are employed, no regular services have been held for years. In Ceylon, in the district of Haputale, where 100 Europeans are living, there is a church without a chaplain. In Assam, there is a district in which ten European doctors reside, but not a single minister.

Europeans residing in some of these districts are prepared to contribute towards the support of a minister, if one can be sent out. If the work can be placed on a sound basis now, much of it will be self-supporting. In every Presidency in India the number of chaplains to the troops is inadequate. Additional workers are sorely needed, and would be heartily welcomed.

Communications may be addressed to Mr. Studd, at 2, Hyde Park Gardens, W., till he leaves for India, about the end of September, or to the organizing secretary and treasurer of the Society, Mr. W. Stewart Thompson, Ivybank, Wardie Road, Edinburgh.

The Joy of Harvest.

(Isaiah ix. 3.)

THE joy of harvest is a seemly thing!
The husbandman hath toiled and waited long
'Mid storm and sun and shower to rise and sing
His triumph-song!

The joy of harvest is a little thing
Compared with that sweet joy God's children know,
Who o'er a promise tried and proven sing—
Made long ago.

The heart grows sick and faint with hope deferred,
Then cometh the desire; and to God's own
The dearest joy is that He kept His word
Upon His throne.

Let patience have her perfect work in all,
In lower things or higher, small or vast;
For while God's rainbow gleams there must befall
Sure joy at last.

WINIFRED A. IVERSON.

A Heroic Lady.

THE BARONESS VON LANGENAU.

THE sudden and tragic death of the Baroness von Langenau at Bangor, a short time ago, removed an earnest Christian and generous philanthropist from the scene of her earthly activities. The Baroness had been staying at Bangor for the benefit of her health, and, while bathing in the sea swimming baths, was seized with a fit, from which she never rallied. The coroner's jury declared that the cause of death was syncope following a sudden immersion in the open sea. The deceased lady was the widow of Baron von Langenau, formerly Austrian Ambassador to the Court of St. Petersburg. Her death will be a great loss to the little Methodist community in the Austrian capital, of which she was a devoted member and a most generous supporter.

The following account of how she was led to identify herself with a body of persecuted sectaries, as the Methodists are regarded in Vienna, is based upon her own words as recorded some few years ago. It was in 1870 that a German Wesleyan minister, by name Mr. Dieterle, introduced Methodism into Vienna. For two years he worked quietly, and gathered some ten members around him. Then he rented a hall and began to preach in public. All kinds of petty persecutions dogged his steps. Again and again the hall was closed by the authorities, the small Sunday-school which had been formed was dispersed, and the Methodist preacher fined because he had dared to pray with members of the State Church. For years the work was carried on in spite of such disheartening circumstances, and at length, in the year 1887, the police seem to have grown weary of the task of harrying the faithful band of men and women who met to hear the Gospel preached. The services were held in the minister's house, and for a time they were undisturbed. It remains to be told in what way Baroness von Langenau was brought into contact with this persecuted company of Christians.

When the work commenced, she was living in Russia, her husband being at the time Ambassador at the Court of St. Petersburg. Her life had been a brilliant and a happy one, as the world counts happiness. But in 1873 a great sorrow clouded her life, and this titled lady found that the gay life of Courts brought no comfort to the heart that mourned. Her only child, a gifted boy, was suddenly snatched from her, and her life henceforth became a blank. She sought comfort in religious observances and good works. But while she toiled for others, her heart was still sad. The sense of sin brought her almost to the verge of despair, and she found no peace through her own efforts to do good. But deliverance was near. It was at the beginning of 1889 that the Baroness heard, through a Lutheran deaconess, of the Methodists, and of their new minister, whose sermons were said to be very helpful to earnest souls. She lost no time in discovering the place of meeting, and was soon led into the enjoyment of salvation.

Her experience ought to be told in her own words: "For years and years I had been told that Jesus was the Saviour of the world, that He was always willing to save, but here I was told for the first time that He will not save us without our own consent; that He invites and entreats, but we must decide; that our will must be put on His side; that He will not take possession of our hearts unless we are willing to receive Him. Be willing now, now, now, was the burden of all the sermons I heard there. At last my eyes were opened, I surrendered my will, I trusted, and was saved."

The Baroness at once threw herself wholeheartedly into various forms of Christian work. With the aid of the minister she was able to start a large Sunday-school, an orphanage, a Deaconess' Home, and a mission among postmen. She also planned a home for servant-girls. But persecution, which had slumbered for awhile, now broke out more violently. The accession of a lady of rank to the despised worshippers alarmed the authorities. Complaint was lodged against the dangerous teaching of the Methodist preacher, and on December 13, 1891, the hall was closed. Still the services were not suspended. For fifteen months the heroic band of Methodists found a Bethel in the back dining-room of the house of the Baroness. As in earlier days, when "the doors were shut for fear of the Jews," the windows and shutters were closed, so that the singing might not reach the ears of the detectives that watched the house night and day.

Let it be said to the honour of these faithful successors of the early disciples of our Lord, that during those weary months not one of the members of that little church proved unfaithful. At length, in answer to prayer, deliverance came, and the hall was once more opened for the preaching of the Gospel. On November 1, 1895, the little Methodist Society in Vienna, numbering fifty-eight members, held a jubilee festival, because the first quarter of a century of its existence had passed away. The hall was often crowded with hearers, and the Sunday-school, composed of some 120 boys and girls, was held in the house of Baroness von Langenau, as her private school, because the laws did not permit of the Methodists, as a Church, giving religious instruction to children. The Children's Home and the work of the deaconesses were supported by the generous gifts of the Baroness, and were the objects of her personal interest and loving care.

The Methodist work in Vienna was until two or three years ago under the direction of the English Wesleyan Conference. It was then agreed to hand over the mission to the Methodist Episcopal Church of America, which seemed from some points of view to be better fitted successfully to carry on Methodist work in Germany and Austria. Bishop Vincent, who recently visited the English Conference, has charge of the European branch of the missionary work of the great American Church. We may well sympathise with the Methodists of Vienna in the great loss they have suffered by the so sudden death of their benefactor and friend, the Baroness von Langenau.

The Baroness did not confine her sympathies to philanthropic and religious work in her own land. She was also deeply interested in the work of the West London Mission, and conceived a great admiration for the splendid services of the Sisterhood connected therewith. Some years ago, she presided at one of the Mission anniversary meetings, and presented to the Sisterhood a valuable pearl necklace which had been a gift to her from her late husband. The necklace was afterwards sold for £1,300, and the proceeds devoted to the support of the Sisters at work among the misery and vice of West London. This munificent gift was but an illustration of the lavish generosity with which the Baroness supported the cause of Christ.

Not only her material possessions, but her rich mental gifts and social influence were laid upon the altar of service. In addition to the distinctively spiritual work already referred to, she took a warm interest in all movements for the social welfare of the working-classes of Austria. She was the president of the Austrian branch of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union. The Baroness was also an accomplished linguist, and translated volumes of Rev. H. Price Hughes's sermons into French and German. We may be permitted to quote a beautiful tribute to her character by Mr. Price Hughes, who was privileged with her friendship. "She was a woman," says Mr. Hughes, "of extraordinary mental vigour and great strength of character. Her humility was unrivalled in our experience. . . It was difficult to realize that this modest and unobtrusive woman was personally acquainted with the great personages of the European Courts, her husband having been Ambassador at The Hague before he was appointed to St. Petersburg. But it would come out unexpectedly and unintentionally while she talked freely of men and things. Her goodness was so deep and pervasive that it seemed quite natural and inevitable that she should lead so beautiful and unselfish a life."

It was fitting that the remains of this noble Christian worker should be buried in this land of religious freedom; and on Tuesday, August 12, the Baroness von Langenau was laid to rest in a little cemetery on the shores of the Menai Straits. The utmost simplicity marked the obsequies of one who, in early life, had freely moved amid the pomps and vanities of this fleeting world, but the glory of immortality is assured to her as a true saint of Jesus.

Kept.

(Isa. xxvii. 3.)

A pebble at the source may turn the stream another way;
A tiny atom in the eye may hide the light of day;
A broken string upon the lute may mar its sweetest strain;
Upon the weakest link depends the strength of all the chain;
A hidden leak may sink the ship that else all storms might weather;
The whispered word may break the tie that binds two hearts together.

And like the pebble in the brook, one thought may hinder grace;
One wish, like atom in the eye, may hide thy Father's Face;
Like passing chord, one word may mar the joy that God hath given;
One act, like broken link, prevent thy leading souls to heaven;
One sin indulged, like hidden leak, may wreck thy life for ever;
And unbelief, like slander's tongue, love's golden cord may sever.

O Lord, in utter helplessness I bring my heart to Thee,
All its unguarded entrances Thine eye alone can see;
I have no power to stand against the smallest thought of sin,
And even as I kneel in prayer some secret foe glides in;
But the sands of time fall one by one, and moments make each hour,
Then every moment as it comes, Lord, keep me by Thy power.

A Sunday at Northfield.

HOW can I describe it for those who have never seen this lovely spot? I think if I were dying, and could be brought here, that it would revive me, and give a new lease of life! Perhaps there is something in its associations. Hardly a spot in it is not somehow connected with D. L. Moody. How often have we seen him driving along these roads, and sometimes making straight over mound, hillock, and ploughed field, to reach his destination. Over that landscape his eye used to range as he sat in the portico of his home, looking westwards to the distant mountains in which the noble Connecticut River seems to rise. Each of these great buildings has arisen at his impulse, and received his fostering attention. And for many years he was the life and soul of this Convention, surrounded by men like Gordon, Needham, Whittle, Bonar, and Macgregor, all of whom have joined him in the presence-chamber of the King.

The Lord's Day never breaks, for me at least, so sweetly anywhere as it breaks here. These woods in their dark and stately grandeur, these green and beautiful fields, the far-away hills, the noble stretch of the valley, the gleaming Connecticut—all parts of a great, silent orchestra; all so peaceful and blessed; nothing to disturb the heavenly peace nor violate the Sabbatic calm.

We begin at 6.30 a.m. by a prayer-meeting, with a succession of prayers, without break or pause. At 9 a.m. Mrs. Howard Taylor speaks with unusual sweetness on, "I believe; I belong." At 10, whilst the vast auditorium is filling, a praise-service is conducted by Mr. Towner and Mr. Stebbins. As I walk to the Auditorium at 10.30, all the roads and fields are filled with vehicles of every description, by which the country people have come from a circumference of ten miles. The horses are left in the shafts, tethered beneath the trees, and stand patiently, switching off the troublesome flies and mosquitoes. The immense Auditorium is crowded, and many are standing; Rev. G. Campbell Morgan leads in prayer, Dr. Scofield reads 1 Cor. xv., after which I preach on Phil. ii. 1-10. I am not often more conscious of God's presence in preaching, and the whole congregation remains absolutely still until the close, when the words Jesus Christ is Lord are repeated by the people in the area, then by those in the gallery, then by those in the deep chair-seats—all joining at last in saying, "Jesus Christ is my Lord, and my God."

In the afternoon, the venerable Dr. Weston, who, to quote the late Mr. D. L. Moody's judgment, runs liquid gold, speaks on Acts iii. 1-12; Mr. Whittemore gives an address on Round-Top Hill; and finally Rev. Campbell Morgan delivers a Spirit-anointed message to a vast audience, which leads to a large number rising for prayer, and several genuine conversions.

This convention is more largely attended than any. Every house is crowded, and there are large numbers of tents. On Saturday the Convention sent a message of congratulation to H.M. King Edward, which by royal command was graciously acknowledged by a cablegram on Monday. I am happy to say that President Roosevelt is including Northfield in his round of presidential visits, and is to spend a night here on Labour Day, September 1.

Mr. W. R. Moody is showing his wonted courtesy and ability in conducting this great Convention, and all who love the Lord Jesus should unite in praying that all the grace and wisdom which he requires for his very responsible work should be given. But it is a happy thing to be able to say that so far from any signs of slackening, there are many symptoms that all the work which gathers around Northfield gives signs of development and deepening. Rev. Campbell Morgan has been giving some very brilliant lectures on the Minor Prophets, taking one book each morning.

There are many illustrious men here. Dr. Mabie, Dr. Broughton, of Atlanta; Dr. Underwood, of Korea; Dr. Clough, the veteran Telugu missionary; Rev. Payson Hammond, Dr. Howard Taylor, Mr. Varley, Secretary Baer, and many remarkable men and women, whose names would fill a column of this paper—but all are one in Christ, and the Lamb is the light.

The Message of Hosea.*

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

NOW, if I were going to preach on those verses (xiv. 5—7), I should have three divisions, and, following a habit of mine, I should divide it around simple words. I would say first, I; second, he; third, they. Now, divide those verses around those words and see what you get. First, I, God, will be as the dew unto Israel; second, he, that is, Israel—well, what about Israel?—"shall blossom as the lily, cast forth his roots as Lebanon; his branches shall spread; his beauty shall be as the wine of Lebanon"; third, they. Who are these? Israel? Oh, no, the surrounding nations. And what about them, the "they" outside the "he"? "They that dwell under his shadow"—that is what God meant the nations should do—"they that dwell under His shadow shall return; they shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine; the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon." That is the picture—I, he, they. That is the perpetual order of Divine relationship. That was God's purpose in making this nation. Not that He should make a little nation and build a wall around it and take care of it, while the outside nations went to the devil or anywhere else.

I want to get rid of that awful heresy. It is heresy held by Christians about Israel, and heresy held by too many Christian people about themselves. No, this is God's order—I, he, they—and His mind is always on the "they," and when Israel is in right relation to God, and the dew of heaven falls on Israel, the dew of God—remember, it is not "I will send you dew," but "I will be the dew." It is Israel bathed in God; that is the picture; and when that is so, what happens? Why, Israel has a grand time then. It blossoms as the lily; it casts forth its root as the cedar, and its branches spread. All right. The roots go out before the branches. When you have taken deep hold upon things, you can spread out in such shade that other men will shelter under you.

THE PERMANENT MESSAGE.

The message that the prophet delivered to his age gathers around three words—sin, judgment, love. While dealing incidentally with different forms of sin, he learned and declared its essential nature. The people chosen of God for Himself, upon whom He had lavished His love, had turned their backs upon Him, and were spending the very gifts of His love in lewdness. What this meant to God Hosea learned by the tragedy in his home and in his heart, and with fierce anger he denounced priests, kings, judges and people alike. Carefully emphasizing the fact that judgment is the necessary result of sin, he declares those judgments in all their awful force and completeness, and yet shows clearly that for the sin man had no right to entertain the faintest hope of pardon, and should only look to the carrying out of the sentence to the last iota. Notwithstanding the greatest fact in his message, love's ultimate triumph, he clearly discerned and emphatically declared that the triumph of love was postponed, and that the generation that he addressed would be swept away in the flood of judgment. Yet the great note is the love note.

SIN: JUDGMENT: LOVE.

Leaving all the local colour, which has faded with the passing of centuries, the prophecy of Hosea has to this age teaching about sin, teaching about judgment, teaching about love.

The most hideous sin of which man is capable is that of infidelity to love. This is the sin of all such as have been brought into relationship with God, and then violated love's covenant. Compared with a sin like that, the animalism, the brutality, and the corruption of heathen nations is as nothing. That is the great lesson.

Such sinning as the prophet touches, generates the form of judgment that follows it. Judgment is not a stroke of God inflicted upon a man as apart from a man's sin. It is the outworking of the sin itself. If you will only follow that you will catch what I mean. And yet the love song of Jehovah continues. Even though the pathway of love's triumph lies through suffering. Love moves right onward to the goal, and sings the song of the victory that is to be.

These seem to me to be, as hurriedly stated, the great facts taught to-day by the prophecy. The application of this prophetic message to the present age can only fairly be made to the whole Church. I cannot, I have no right to make, an application of this message to churches or to a local church. As the message was not to a tribe, but to the nation, one tribe only being referred to perpetually, because it was the leading tribe and the most guilty sinner, so the permanent message can only be applied to the whole of Christendom, if you will allow me that phrase. The causes of the Church's failure are those of the failure of Israel of old. Spiritual adultery is evidenced by the paganism which has become associated with the things of God, or, shall I rather say, which has become admixtured with the things of God?

CAUSES OF THE CHURCH'S FAILURE.

Witness the Roman and the Greek churches and in all other communities which are of the habit and spirit of these—Ritualism, formalism, self-centred satisfaction that will excommunicate those who differ from them. Do not be too angry with the Pope in Rome so long as you are a pope yourself. That is the spirit. And then, once again, the harlotry of worldliness in all the churches at this present moment. Thousands who name the name of of Christ are taking possessions which have been bestowed by God, and are spending them in the pursuit of worldly ambitions and pleasures. Blood-bought souls are at this hour inflaming themselves with carnality under every green tree. And through these things the testimony which could be borne to other nations is silenced, and the name of God is being profaned among the heathen.

The judgment of God is already upon the guilty people on whom His love is set. The first form of judgment is already operative in Christendom at this moment. What is it? The judgment of the moth and the judgment of rottenness. It is everywhere. But how is it manifested? By our weakness for all Divine purposes. It is enough to sadden the heart, the fact that the Church of Christ hardly seems able to speak any authoritative word to the councils of the nations, that the Church of Jesus Christ is mourning in her conferences the dearth of conversions, is discussing in her religious papers and is wondering at the depletion of her churches.

It is just as certain that God will cast off the Church itself as He cast off Israel, unless the Church fulfils its function. I am not talking about eternal purposes now. Israel will yet be restored, and God will yet carry out His purpose in the Church, the great Church; but we, unless we repent in dust and ashes of our harlotry and our adultery and our worldliness, we will be abandoned from service. The solemn word will come to all of us, "No more in the stewardship."

THE FINAL REDEMPTION.

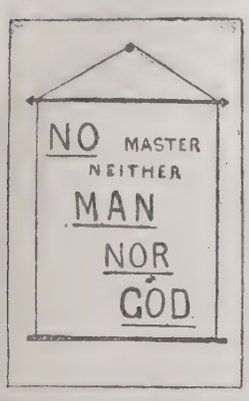
Over all the failure, heartbreaking and desolating though it be, there still sounds the music of Jehovah's love, and the assurance remains that He has not exhausted His methods, but another crisis is coming, and that beyond that and through it He will realise His triumph. "I will redeem; I will bring back!" Nothing can prevent it. And why? Because Jehovah is God, and not man. May we, to whom has been delivered the message of the Gospel, whether in the pulpit or in the Sunday-school, or anywhere else, Christian workers, may God grant that we catch the notes of Hosea's great message, sin, judgment and love, and laying emphasis upon them all gather the perfect harmony of the message and tell it to the age in which we live.

* Notes of an address delivered at Northfield.

Quaint Texts from Queer Places.

By Mr. CHAS. COOK.

A BAND of music! A crowd of ill-dressed men and women, headed by a large banner! What does it mean? The West End invaded! Hyde Park besieged! Traffic disorganized! The workers hoodwinked! The Lord's Day desecrated! Above all, God dishonoured! And why?



This is a free country with free speech permitted, and this is a "demonstration" of the people, organized by those who would hoodwink them, and engineered by Continental Anarchists and Socialists.

"Wake up, England!" Rome is invading thy Parliament and thy Peerage, buying up the fairest of thy estates for her monks and her monasteries, and will soon have the educating of thy children; and lawlessness is laying hold of the masses of thy people.

Is it true that our churches do not cater for the great mass of the artizan class? that our evangelistic agencies and our mission halls do not reach the fringe of the masses? Who is touching the millions of the working-classes? Answer! The Sunday League, which despatches tens of thousands on the Lord's Day to the sea-side; and provides secular music in the open air on the same day; also the many Sunday Societies doing similar work, and which this coming winter propose opening municipal buildings and theatres and halls for concerts, &c., which are anything but religious, and certainly not spiritual.

Lawlessness is progressing by leaps and bounds. Until recently only working-men would hire a break and drive out on the Sunday, returning in the evening with songs, and shouting some music-hall ditty; now it is a common thing to see loads of men and women returning late at night, in vehicles illuminated with Chinese lanterns, and poisoning the moral atmosphere with language too gross to hint at. If the recently-published statement, that "not three per cent." of the people of London attend a place of worship, be true, where will the churches presently get their congregations from?

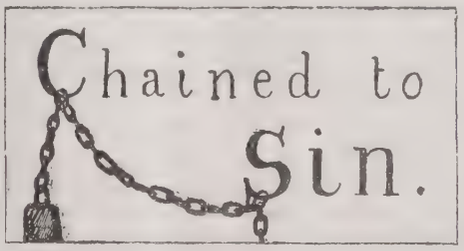
WORLDLINESS, INDIFFERENCE, LAWLESSNESS

—these are claiming the great mass of our fellow-sinners, and soon, very soon, there will be no raw material for the churches to work upon. Are not these things so?

Most Christian workers agree that it is more difficult than ever to get the unsaved to an indoor Gospel meeting, and even in the most favourable out-of-door places, like Hyde Park, we have rivals who cater for the ears of the people. Roman Catholicism now dares to advocate her claims near by our own meeting; while humanitarianism on one hand, and blatant, ignorant infidelity on the other, bid for the attendance of that valuable commodity, the human soul, the military band drawing nearly 30,000. Oh, that they were listening to the Gospel! Alas, for that they have no taste. One almost dreads the coming winter, and wonders what new amusement and attraction will be provided for the people on the Lord's Day. The people are ready for anything! The great trades' organizations have their own machinery for drawing the people together, whether by music or lectures, &c.

Surely the spirit of the above awful text, "No Master, neither God nor man," seems to animate the people in these latter days. What next? Who knows? Why not the Lord from heaven—to put down all lawlessness, and right the wrongs of all the ages?

Yet there never was a time when there was a greater need of a man with a message! "A prophet boiling over!" A minister, "a flaming fire!" With lips "touched as with a live coal from off the altar!" "A burning and a shining light!" One, out of whom "shall flow rivers of living waters." God send such a man with an awakening cry! to "sound an alarm," to arouse those "who are at ease in Zion," to disturb this sleep of death, to counteract this lawlessness, and to prepare us for His coming.



Such was the title of a melodrama advertised at an East-end theatre; but methinks the huge placards and sensational pictures told more of the tragedy that is seen in the lives of some men than of the drama.

When the physicians told Theotimus that except he abstained from drunkenness and licentiousness he would lose his eyes, his heart was so wedded to his sins that he answered, "Then farewell, sweet light!"

There is a story told of a man walking on a lonely sea shore as the tide was rising, who inadvertently stepped on the links of a huge chain which for some purpose was secured to the beach. His foot went through the link and he was unable to get it out. The ankle swelled, and despite his cries no one heard him, and he was drowned.

The Word speaks of some men who, "being past feeling, have given themselves over unto lasciviousness."

Acts become habits, and thus character is formed, until we may find ourselves like one of old, who "found no place for repentance though he sought it carefully with tears."

Last night, at the close of our service, a man said to me: "I am an Oxford M.A., and am separated from my wife through my drunken habits; I shall walk the streets for I have no bed—but I cannot cease from sin —" He left me under the influence of drink.

Cowper speaks of some who were thus ensnared by Satan and enslaved by sin in the temple of impure delights:—

> These, hardening by degrees till double-steeled,
> Take leave of Nature's God and God revealed;
> Then laugh at all they trembled at before,
> Till joining the free-thinkers' brutal roar
> Swallow the two grand nostrums they dispense
> That "Scripture lies," and "blasphemy is sense."

If this be so, then we write our own death warrant if we come not to the Great Deliverer, who alone can save us from our sins. We may, like Saul, forsake God until we cry like him, "God hath forsaken me," and no wonder that so many are doing what he did—applying to the Witch of Endor.

Continuance in wrong-doing brings with it an awful Nemesis! Sinning against light and knowledge brings an awful judgment! "His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself, and he shall be holden WITH THE CORDS OF HIS SINS; he shall die without instruction, and in the greatness of his folly he shall go astray."

Most ministers could tell of men they have met with who have been thus "chained to sin," men unable to cease from sin. "A short life and a merry one!" "Enjoying life!" "Sowing their wild oats" are some of the expressions used by such.

Thus men continue in sin, putting off decision for Christ, thinking they can turn when they like, but their hearts are growing harder, their wills are becoming weaker, and their destiny is becoming fixed, until they are unable to choose the right, having sinned away their moral strength, and are thus eternally

"CHAINED TO SIN."

The Open Air Mission.

IT is cheering to report that the summer work of this mission is proceeding amid signs of abundant blessing. Notwithstanding the changeful and often very trying weather, tens of thousands have been gathered within the sound of the Gospel, and have listened with the deepest attention. Among them a great number have been convicted and converted, and it has been most cheering to receive our "convert cards" day after day by post, from many different parts of the country, where they have been signed after missions held by our evangelists. Often these have come to us in batches—more than thirty from Handsworth, Birmingham, for instance, after a week's mission there; more than twenty after a similar period at Hereford, and so on. The names and addresses of these converts being thus made known by the cards, these young believers are being well shepherded by local friends.

During this month the seaside missions of the Society are being held at several great resorts with blessed results. I write from Great Yarmouth, where we have grand times every day, and the crowds are large, especially at night. They often listen as if spellbound. God's presence is mightily felt by saint and sinner alike. Tears are seen falling from the eyes of many penitent ones, and a day rarely passes without coming to our notice. The fellowship of Christians gathered from all parts is very real —like a miniature "Keswick."

Only last evening, at the close of the service on the beach, a young Christian came to me begging prayer for her unconverted sister, who had been deeply impressed by one of our little books, but had not attended our meetings. The promise to pray was readily given, and the young lady ascended to the parade, where, to her astonishment, she beheld this very unconverted sister, together with a friend, in the hands of a devoted lady worker, who was pointing them both to Christ. One was in tears, and both were on the point of decision. They promised to sign the "convert cards" that very night. What an instance of "Before they call I will answer, and while they are yet speaking I will hear."

At Douglas, Isle of Man, many have been gathered in, and the work there, as here, is still proceeding. Other resorts, such as Torquay, Morecambe, Whitley Bay, and Llandrindod Wells have been or are being visited.

Doncaster Races, from September 7 to 12, loom before us, and will, God willing, be the occasion of a great effort for the Master's glory. Nearly twenty evangelists will be concentrated, and great supplies of Gospel literature will be secured for distribution among the immense assembly. Funds are needed for that, and for the other heavy expenses involved in this and other campaigns, and we earnestly invite Christian friends to become partners with us in a glorious soul-saving work by their prayers and gifts. "Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, August 31. Judges vii.

GIDEON took the name of Jerubbaal, which means, "Let Baal plead." Let us be avowed in our opposition to the enemies of the Church of God! The well of Harod was situated not far from Gilboa, in the territory of Manasseh, and the Midianites lay somewhat lower down the slopes towards the Jordan. It should be remembered that the invasion of Canaan by these Arab hordes was as alarming and desolating as the irruption of the Huns into Europe. It was the severest scourge ever inflicted upon Israel, and both it and the deliverance which Gideon wrought, lived for centuries in the minds of the people (Psa. lxxxiii. 10, 11).

How interesting it is to see the sort of instruments of which God makes use in His mighty deliverances. The host must be thinned down to 300 men, and these must be such as retain in all emergencies the alert and soldier-like bearing. Those that cast themselves carelessly on the banks of the brook, though, for aught they knew, the enemy might be anywhere near, were not the kind of material which He could employ. Let us remember that we must never be off duty, never ungird our loins, never let ourselves go. We must always remember that we are in the enemy's land, and that it becomes us to watch and be sober.

The next episode is equally interesting and inspiring. As Gideon stood in the outskirts of the encampment, he heard a soldier compare him to a loaf of barley bread—the coarsest grain, which was the food of the poor. Yes! God even chooses the poor, the things that are despised and are not, to bring to nought the things that are.

In every conflict, remember that Gideon is not alone. It is always the one sword wielded by the two hands—Divine and human. And let the Church remember that the flashing torch of testimony, the cry and challenge of faith, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, are irresistible by the armies of the evil one.

MONDAY, September 1. Judges viii.

Gideon was in full pursuit of Midian, but he found several of the towns and villages apathetic. How strange it must have seemed to him that they should be so, when so much depended on instant decision. But let us not blame them too vehemently, lest we condemn ourselves; for in that yet greater fight between Christ and the armies of hell, are not too many of us, sometimes as Ephraim in our sensitiveness to personal affront, and sometimes as Succoth in our supercilious indifference? But if Gideon avenged himself on these false friends, how certain will be Christ's rebuke of us, when the great fight with evil is finished!

In their gratitude for the wonderful deliverance achieved through Gideon, the men of Israel offered him the crown. But this he very nobly refused. True to the theocratic spirit of the Hebrew polity, he urged that none should step in to occupy the supreme place of God. But surely we may appropriate their words, addressing them to the Lord Jesus. Surely we may say to Him, "Rule Thou over us, for Thou hast saved us. Thou art worthy, for Thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God."

The people gave Gideon about £3,000 of earrings, of which they had despoiled the dead bodies of their foes. With this Gideon made an ephod for the use of the magistracy of his city, which was not forbidden, but was likely enough to incite to sin, and it did. But Christ is worthy to receive riches. As we turn from this chapter, let us take with us that remarkable expression of the captive princes (21). It is character that makes strength. As the man is—O Son of God, give us the strength of pure and holy natures filled by Thee.

TUESDAY, September 2. Judges ix.

This chapter is full of the iniquities of Abimelech. Strange that such a father should have such a son! Yet probably towards the end of Gideon's glorious rule, he permitted the intrusion of idolatry and other evils, which deteriorated the health of his own family and of the nation (viii. 27).

It would be manifestly unfair to judge Gideon by our own standards, but it is evident that he yielded to the sin, which has always tempted kings, and especially Oriental monarchs. "He had many wives" (viii. 30); and the result of polygamy appeared throughout the years that immediately followed his death. Anarchy and confusion, jealousy and murder, filled the land.

The compact between wicked men does not last long. Misunderstanding and distrust came between Abimelech and the men of Shechem, as Jotham had predicted (vv. 19 and 22). The men of Shechem especially, who had made a compact with Gaal, suffered terribly (45, 49).

There is a Nemesis in life. As men do to others, it is done to them. With what measure they mete, it is measured to them again. Even in this life, God requires and requites (56, 57). This probably is the reason why this long chapter is permitted to fill so much space in Scripture. Already men stand before the judgment-seat of Christ, and receive according as they have done. God is in history. Behind the shifting scenery of things temporal, the things eternal are slowly unfolding. Look not at those, but at these!

WEDNESDAY, September 3. Judges x.

Tola and Jair were probably rather civil rulers than warriors, and performed the duties of magistrates, as Samuel did in after years. But, evidently, the religious condition of Israel was constantly deteriorating (vv. 6, 7). How easily the heart of man forsakes the living God for what appeals to the outward sense! It is as though the eternal light soon wearies our unaccustomed eyes, and the demands of holy living were too transcendent. Let us watch against the insidious and deteriorating influences, which are ever at work upon our own souls. We may not be aware how many grey hairs are upon our heads, each one significant of our waning vigour.

"Israel was sore distressed." There are some tribulations which come on us from the hand of God, to break down our pride, to make us humble and tender; but there are others which we bring on ourselves by our waywardness and rebellion. Well is it for us then to return to God with our confessions, to go back to the point where we dropped the thread of obedience, and with bitter tears cast ourselves at His feet.

At first it seemed as though God would not receive their confessions and entreaties: "Go and cry unto the gods that ye have chosen." This was only an apparent unwillingness. All the while His heart was yearning over His people, as in after days. But there was an apparent unwillingness, only to draw His people forward to a more drastic repentance and self-renunciation (15). What infinite pathos and beauty there are in verse 16! Backslider! it is for thee! Only come home! When thou art a great way off, thy Father will see thee!

THURSDAY, September 4. Judges xi.

We must not forget that in Heb. xi. Jephthah is expressly mentioned as one of the heroes of faith; yet when he is introduced to us first, he was leading a freebooting life beyond the Hebrew frontier, on the north of Gilead. He was the Robin Hood or Turpin of his time. This was largely due to the rejection which he had experienced at the hands of his fellow-countrymen. Does it not teach us to believe that noble qualities may lie in the heart of men with rough and forbidding exteriors, only waiting for the touch of love to evoke (see v. 9)?

Amid the awful pressure of the Ammonite invasion, all eyes were directed towards him as the only person who was qualified to preserve the country from being permanently overrun and alienated from Israel. How often we treat God so! How often we turn away from Him when all is going well with us, and in our distress come back to Him! But does He ever refuse our penitent appeal?

Jephthah's first act was eminently wise and humane. He sent an embassy to deal with the claim of right advanced by the Ammonite monarch: (1) The land was conquered by the Israelites not from the Ammonites, but the Amorites, (2) that Israel had by 300 years of undisputed possession established a right to it, and (3) the lands had been given them by Jehovah. Notice the solemn appeal to the God of Battles (v. 27).

One could wish that it were possible to believe that the life of this beautiful and glad young girl had been spared; it is more likely than not that it was sacrificed out of a zeal which was very imperfectly acquainted with the true nature of God. But the question may well be asked if any of us have even gone to equal lengths, or could, even though we have Calvary to look to.

FRIDAY, September 5. Judges xii.

The feud raised by Ephraim against Jephthah was a very foolish one; the more so when the greatness of the victory proved that it had not been due to the prowess or number of Jephthah's soldiers, but, as he said himself, to the direct interposition and gift of God: "The Lord delivered them into my hand."

It is not to be wondered at that the Gileadites became indignant at the taunts of Ephraim. To hear men denying us the right to call ourselves of the congregation of the Lord, to be denounced and ostracized, to be refused name and place in the Church of Christ, is to experience something of the same kind of treatment. But we must not retaliate. We know that these people who put us outside their pale cannot pronounce Shibboleth correctly, but we must not cut them off. To do so would only double the wrong already done. No, we must ever pray for them, carry our cause into our Father's presence, and leave Him to vindicate it. It is for Him to bring out our righteousness as the light, and our judgment as the noonday. Notwithstanding all, we may turn to Him, saying, "Thou art our Father, though Abraham knoweth us not, and Israel doth not acknowledge us."

SATURDAY, September 6. Judges xiii.

How much mothers may influence the whole future life of their children by their personal habits! Abstinence on their part will send a blessed impulse for purity and self-restraint into all the future of their unborn children; while indulgence of any kind will predispose them to similar laxity. Such is one deep lesson to be learnt from the angel's message to Manoah's wife. To save the children, we should begin with their mothers, and grandmothers.

There are many beautiful traits in this story—the perfect confidence and love existing between Manoah and his wife, which made each the confidant of everything that happened to the other; the humble prayer of Manoah for further teaching, which was so graciously answered; the desire of the couple to entertain adequately One who had so deeply impressed them with the Divine, a circumstance which led to such a marvellous revelation of His true nature; the angel's reverent refusal of sacrifices which belonged only to God. Yet surely He was the Son of God in human form, whose name is Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God (v. 18 marg., and Isa. ix. 6).

What naïve common-sense there was in the woman's comfort to her husband! It could not be, as he feared, that death was imminent, else how would God have done so much? These words are full of comfort still; past mercies are assurances that the future will be equally full of mercy and loving-kindness? Would He have given His Son, and His Spirit; would He have arrested and converted you; would He have led you thus far, and now cast you away? F. B. M.

Foreign Mission Week.

AMONG SPANISH CHILDREN.

AFTER reading a little notice in The Christian a year ago, of the work of evangelization in Spain entrusted to our eldest son (when God took his father to Himself in April, 1901), a ind friend sent enough to provide for the maintenance, or one year, of the orphan lad mentioned in it. This ad's mother is the widow of a teacher, and was most nxious that we should take her boy into our school, ut could not afford to pay for him herself. You will e glad to hear that the lad is doing well, and we ope that he may turn out a useful labourer in the Master's vineyard. I am glad to add that his mother oes what she can, keeping him decently, and occasionlly lightening our housekeeping cares by simple gifts.

In the middle of July my son carried me away from he sweltering heat of Madrid for a flying visit to eautiful, green Asturias, the Switzerland of Spain. Ve were most kindly received by a farmer, known in ll the countryside as "the Protestant of Besullo," and few of his friends, who form the little Evangelical ongregation of that mountain village. His wife eeps school during the week, and he gathers his ieuds around him on Sundays to read the Scriptures, nd strengthen themselves in the faith. All the week e works hard in the fields. He has no children of is own, but he has taken two little fatherless ones nto his house. I wondered how it was that all the ttle ones in the village seemed to come to him with heir griefs, and to stop crying as soon as they had old him their trouble; at length I found out that a andful of nuts, or a few apples, was his

EFFECTUAL WAY OF DRYING THEIR TEARS!

One day he was reasoning with a poor woman for colding her little niece, whom she had sent out egging, but who had returned home without receiving nything. Our friend took the little one's part, and urned the tables on her aunt for sending the child to eg. On making inquiries, I heard a very sad tory, which has haunted me ever since. The little ne, with her tiny sister, had been born in Madrid, nd brought to the village a few months previously y her mother. On the death of the mother, the aunt ook charge of them. When the elder one is not out erding, or begging, and the tiny mite of four is not caring the fowls from the cabbage plot, they come to chool, and their kind teacher gives them a meal when ne thinks they are hungry. I would fain have brought hem back with me to our orphanage, but did not venture o propose it without knowing where the means for their upport were to come from. I do not doubt that their unt would gladly let them come to us if the way could e opened.

It was a great pleasure and encouragement to our ith to see how this little band of Protestants hold ogether, and hunger to know more of the Word of od. The farmer's house is their centre, and his ard-working wife is kept busy teaching the children nd helping the needy who come to her for food. obody is ever turned away from her door, and they lways say "Thanks be to God," or "The name of ne Lord be praised," when they enter the house, stead of the usual Roman Catholic benedictions.

On the first Sunday evening after our arrival the choolroom was crowded, and there was a good deal of oise outside. We heard next morning that the priest ad gone to the Alcalde (the mayor) to ask him to top our meetings; but, though a Roman Catholic, e steadily refused to do this. Three of his sons tend the little Evangelical services in Gijon.

In regard to the work in Madrid and other parts of pain, undertaken by my dear husband, and now carried n by our sons, we can humbly, and with deep gratiude to God, declare, "The banners of the King go rward." Jeanie E. Fliedner.

The Great Search.

THERE is one thing in the world that people desire more than anything else; indeed, all other things, such as wealth, power, friends, amusement, are only sought for as leading towards the one great object—happiness. At the opening of every year, what we wish for each other is "A happy new year"; when our birthdays come round those who love us pray that we may have "Many happy returns of the day"; when our schools break up and we go to the seaside or the country with father and mother and brothers and sisters, everything is done by our kind parents to ensure for us "a happy holiday," and, finally, the year closes with that most joyous season of all, "a happy Christmas."

The time when we are young is the happiest period of life; as we grow older, we find out that though everybody is seeking for happiness, there are only few who enjoy it. The reason for this is very simple; people fail in their search because they look in the wrong place.

Have you ever joined in a game of hide-and-seek, while someone played on the piano to let you know whether you were near or far from the object hidden? As you drew closer to the spot the music became louder, but if you went in the wrong direction it died away. Just so in the great search for happiness; when the seeker's steps are in the right path, his ears are filled with heavenly music, sweeter than any that earth can produce; but when he strays into the byways of sin or indifference, there is neither sweetness nor harmony in his life.

Children, you are just starting on this voyage of discovery; see that you look in the right place for this hidden treasure—this treasure which everyone is seeking for—this treasure of happiness (Prov. iii. 13).

26th Prize Competition.

May to August.

RULES.

☞ Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following rules is strictly observed, especially Nos. 5, 7 and 10? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions, if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right twelve times out of seventeen.

2. Competitors will be divided into Four Divisions:—
   I. Those under ten years of age.
   II. Those over ten and under thirteen.
   III. Those over thirteen and under fifteen.
   IV. Those between fifteen and eighteen.

3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "Prize Competition," and the Number of the Division to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom," as usual.

4. At the top of your paper write very clearly your Division, your Full Name and Address, and Age last birthday.

5. The questions must be answered in the Right Order—except Nos. 12 and 13, which Divisions I. and II. may do first. The answers must be written on either Foolscap or Quarto size sheets, and on one side of the paper only. Number your Answers exactly to correspond with the questions.

6. Every paper must be signed by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.

7. No Concordance and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. ☞ Competitors must not help each other.

8. The last day for answers to reach the office is Wednesday, September 10. The results will be announced on September 18.

9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, &c., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.

10. Chapter and Verse must be given wherever possible.

11. No papers can be re-examined. And don't forget Rule 5!

☞ Any seniors who are over Eighteen years of age may do the Competition, and have their names included in the lists, but will not be eligible for the prizes.

QUESTIONS FROM FIRST BOOK OF KINGS.

(for all divisions.)*

1. (a) What difficulty arose as to David's successor? (b) How was it settled?

2. Give instances of Solomon's (a) generosity; (b) severity; (c) inconsistency; (d) wisdom.

3. (a) What were the dimensions of the Lord's House? (b) How long did it take to build? (c) What peculiarity was noticeable during its erection? (d) How may we contrast it with a building referred to in Luke xiv.? (e) Name the different kinds of workers engaged that are mentioned.

4. (a) What part of the Tabernacle (See Book of Exodus) corresponded with "the oracle"? (b) What did each contain?

5. (a) Describe briefly the dedication service (Chron. viii.). (b) What promise, and (c) what warning did God give in response? (d) How were either or both fulfilled?

6. (a) What do you consider the three greatest mistakes of Solomon's life? (b) What were the direct and indirect results?

7. (a) What had Pharoah's daughter to do with Solomon? (b) Why did he build her a house? (c) What do you understand by the allusion in 2 Chron. viii. 11?

8. (a) What impression did Jeroboam first make upon Solomon? (b) How and why did it change? (c) What oft-repeated phrase describes Jeroboam's later career?

9. (a) Describe and (b) give reasons of the dividing of the kingdom.

10. (a) What lessons do you draw from the story of the disobedient prophet? (b) What two sentences of his indicate the stages of his temptation? (c) Give in a few words your idea of the characters of the three persons named in this chapter, as distinguished from each other.

11. (a) What kings of Israel and Judah are named in this book? (b) Over whom did each rule? (c) Say of each whether he was good or bad; and (d), where stated, how long each reigned.

12. Say what you know about the following phrases:—(a) provision for a day; (b) whips and scorpions; (c) O, altar, altar! (d) A league between thee and me.

13. What do you know of—(a) Hiram? (b) Cabul? (c) Hadad? (d) Queen of Sheba? (e) Ahijah? (f) Adoram? (g) Dan and Bethel? (h) Maachah? (i) Jezebel? (j) Naboth? (k) Micaiah?

*[The maximum marks for correct answers to above questions is 150. Do as many as you can. Divisions I. and II. had better take 12 and 13 first. To win First Prizes Division IV. must gain 140; Division III., 115; Division II., 90; Division I., 70. Second Prizes and Certificates will be allotted in proportion.

Twenty-five additional marks will be allowed for writing, neatness, and general intelligence (making a possible total of 175). Age will be considered in allotting these also.]

FIRST EPISTLE OF JOHN.

(Divisions III. and IV. only.)

14. (a) What claim does John make to warrant his writing this book? (b) Quote a similar declaration by Luke. (c) How does John sum up his message?

15. What are the conditions or tests of (a) holy walk? (b) acceptance by the Father? (c) possession of the Holy Spirit? (d) What modern heresy does this last confute?

16. State in three words the great lessons taught as to the Christian's attitude (a) to God; (b) to fellow-believers; (c) to the world.

17. How are we to measure (a) backsliding in others? (b) steadfastness in ourselves?

18. Quote verses which corroborate our Lord's words—"By their fruits ye shall know them."

19. What is said in regard to the future life?

20. (a) What allusion is made to a prominent Old Testament character? (b) What lesson is taught by it?

21. (a) Give a verse which enjoins practical charity. (b) Also one from James to the same effect. (c) Can you recall acts in the earlier lives of these Apostles contrary to these? (d) What intervening occurrence wrought the change in them?

22. How is the truth of God attested (a) in heaven? (b) in earth?

23. What conditions are given for (a) successful, and (b) unsuccessful prayer?

[Division III. omit Nos. 15, 16, 17.]

Communion and Transfiguration (Ex. xxxiv. 29-25; 2 Cor. iii. 18).

We all, in the latter passage, is in evident contrast with the fact that, of all Israel, Moses alone saw and reflected the glory of God. The Apostle desires it to be understood that this privilege, in our dispensation, is not confined to a Moses or an Apostle, but is the common privilege of every believer.

You will notice the alteration made in R.V. The A.V. reads, "With open face;" with R.V., "With unveiled face." Again, there is a contrast. Moses veiled his face for two reasons, first, because the light that his face had absorbed and gave out was so brilliant that it dazzled the people, and drove them from him; secondly, because he did not wish them to see the end of it, in dimming fading radiance. We in the present age have no need for veiling. There is no danger of our likeness to Christ being too intense, and there is no necessity either that the glory of the Lord, which has once smitten us, should ever dwindle away.

But let us specially notice another clause. The A.V. reads, "Beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord," and we have commonly taken that to mean that we were to see in Christ's face the mirror where God's glory was reflected, and seeing it should be changed. But R.V. reads, "Reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord." We are to live with our faces towards Jesus, always endeavouring to reflect Him—that men may see in us how He would have done, how He would have spoken, how He would have treated men. Just as you do not notice the surface of the mirrror, but only what it reflects; so men ought not to be attracted by us, ought not to fix their minds and thoughts on us, but ever turn to Him whom we reflect, lost in the unutterable love and beauty which irradiate His face.

Then notice that the word "transformed" is the word used by the Evangelists, Matthew and Mark of the Transfiguration, so that it might be rendered, "We are transfigured." Every believer should be with Jesus on the Holy Mount, his face shining as the sun, his garments of common life transfused with light, while he holds converse with spirits of just men perfected. It is the word used in Rom. xii. 1, 2, where we are bidden to be transfigured. The word image is also often used in Scripture, as when Jesus said of a coin, "Whose image is this?" Manifestly then the image stamped upon us should be that of our King. It is also the word used in Rom. viii., where we learn that our Father God has predestinated us "to be conformed to the image of His Son," that He might be the firstborn among many brethren, who, like the brethren of Gideon, should evidently resemble Him as the children of a King.

Notice also these words, "From glory to glory." Here is a contrasted allusion to the waning glory that died off the face of Moses, as light dies from the year when the leaves begin to fall. The glory of Christ-believers, which shines on your faces, young brothers and sisters, need not fade as you grow more mature, but rather increase. The Apostle in his mature life said, "As the outward man decayeth, the inward is being renewed day by day."

You see there are clearly three things for us to do. First, we must catch Christ's face. This can only be done by sitting in His presence, and taking a sun-bath. Second, we must reflect Christ's face. We must endeavour to act so that people may see Christ in us. Third, we must count on growing transfiguration. Perhaps, however, when we are making most progress, we shall be least conscious of it. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTE.

Christian Endeavour has made such headway in the Society of Friends that it has now become possible to hold a "Friends' International C.E. Convention." The first of these has just been held at Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana. It is fully expected that this convention will result in closer co-operation among the young Friends of America, England, and Ireland.

For the Children's Sake.—To provide a country holiday home for poor children has long been the ambition of the superintendent and workers of the Howard Street Gospel Mission, Sunday and Ragged School, S.W. Happily the attainment of the project is within sight. Mr. John Soames, the superintendent, writes:—"We have been enabled, by God's help, to buy a large piece of freehold land at Burnham-on-Crouch, Essex, and all we require now is £325 to complete the fund for building the houses. We have several promises by various sums, but conditionally. One friend has promised to give £10, if four others will subscribe a similar sum." Mr. Soames may be addressed 94, Grantham Road, Clapham Road, S.W.

The Prophet like unto Moses (Deut. xviii. 9-22).
Golden Text.—John vi. 14.

Deuteronomy, "the people's law-book," is a repetition of much contained in the three previous books; and a record of the last exhortations from Moses to the new generation of Israelites which had grown up in the wilderness. The three chief addresses given by Moses within the last two months before he climbed Nebo for his last look into the promised land, were first, Deut. i. 6 to iv. 40; second, Deut. v. 2 to xxx., including directions for the people's renewal of their covenant with the Lord (xxvi. 5, 17) and erection of an altar to the Lord on entering Canaan (xxvii. 2-8); third, xxxi. 1-13; closing with Moses' charge to Joshua (xxxi. 7), the committal of his written book of the law to the Levites (xxxi. 24, 27), and his Song of Witness, written by the command of the Lord (xxxi. 19) and solemnly given to the people (v. 30, and xxxii. 45). The blessing of "the man of God" is recorded in xxxiii.; his death in xxxiv.

Locality.—"The valley over against Beth-peor" (iv. 5, 6), in the land of Moab (xxix. 1). The lesson for to-day is taken from the second address.

I. Abominations Denounced.
II. The Greater "Prophet of Nazareth" Promised.
III. False Prophets Exposed.

I. All divination had been absolutely prohibited by Jehovah as unworthy of a people whom He had separated to Himself (Lev. xx. 27; Titus ii. 14). It was invariably associated with idolatry, and the Lord had shown His displeasure against all such forms of evil, and the unspeakable vices that grow out of them, by driving the inhabitants who practised them out of the land (Deut. ix. 5), devoting them to utter extermination (vii. 26). He also required His people not even to inquire concerning the practices and worship of the nations they had conquered (xii. 30, 31) lest they should be "snared," and fall under like judgment (Lev. xviii. 28). Nine of these heathen practices are mentioned as special abominations to Jehovah: Child-sacrifice by fire to Moloch (penalty, death, Lev. xx. 2, 4), with various forms of divination, witchcraft, sorcery, and necromancy, each of which has its counterpart to-day in fortune-telling (and hearing), palmistry, astrology, and spiritualism (the latter being only a newer name for necromancy, or inquiring from the spirits of the dead by the medium of demonic spirits, through planchette writing, table-rapping, &c.).

"Touch not the Unclean Thing" (2 Cor. vi. 17), neither to "hearken" or "inquire" about it (Deut. xii. 30, xiii. 3), "that ye be not snared," or share in 2 Thess. ii. 11. Such vanities are useless, for "God holds the key of the future" (Mark xiii. 32), and sinful, for they are contrary to His will. "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God, but those things that are revealed belong unto us" (Deut. xxix. 29). We need light for the future, not on it; light concerning, not into, the unseen world; and God has met this, our need, to the full, by His prophets in His Word, and especially by His Son, our Lord Jesus Christ by His Holy Spirit (Matt. xi. 27, John xvi. 13, 14).

The people of Jehovah must be perfect toward Him (v. 13), sound in heart to love Him; in ear to hearken; in lip to pray; and in worship for praise and commune, compare Deut. vii. 6 with Titus ii. 14, "a peculiar people." Note Ez. xiv. 7, solemn warning. "I the Lord will answer him by myself" (8) (Why? 11).

II. The greater Prophet of Nazareth promised. When sin had entered into the world "the voice of the Lord" struck terror into the hearts of our first parents (Gen. iii. 8), but God's love found a way through which the sin-severed souls could listen again to His voice of pardoning grace. "The Lamb slain from before the foundation of the world" (Rev. xiii. 8). In type, from Gen. iii. 21 until Matt. xxvii. 50; and since by the "Living Way" of reconciliation, even Jesus the Christ (2 Cor. v. 18-21, Heb. xii. 25, John iii. 16).

At Horeb the people cried, "Let not God speak to us lest we die" (Ex. xx. 19); and Moses was appointed by Jehovah as His prophet toward His people Israel (Deut. v. 23-31); and was the first of a long line of prophets by which the Lord met the need of human infirmity, and by which from time to time He revealed His name and purposes to men. No prophet after him was like to him save Him of whom Moses was the type—the Lord Jesus Christ, by whom God's revelation of Himself to mankind was perfected and completed. "I have declared unto them Thy Name, that the love wherewith Thou has loved Me may be in them" (John xvii. 26, xv. 15, xiv. 23). "No man knoweth the Father save the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal Him" (Matt. xi. 27). "He hath declared Him" (John i. 18, 1 John iv. 9). The voice of the Judge is a terror to the criminal, but a welcome sound to his own children. If "the Judge of all the earth" (Gen. xviii. 25) is your reconciled Father in Christ Jesus (Col. i. 20-22), then you can say "Abba Father" (Gal. iv. 6, 7), and you are "an heir of God and joint heir with Christ" (Rom. viii. 15-17).

Some points of resemblance and contrast between the type and anti-type :—

1. Birth, lowly parentage (Ex. ii. 1, Matt. xiii. 55).
2. Preserved during infancy in Egypt (Ex. ii. 9, Matt. ii. 14, 15).
3. Divinely called (Ex. iii. 10, 15, Matt. iii. 17).
4. Rejected of his brethren (Num. xiv. 4, Isa. liii. 3, Luke xvii. 25).
5. Meek (Num. xii. 3, Matt. xi. 29).
6. Zealous (Ex. xxxii. 19-27, John ii. 13-17).
7. Direct communion with God (Ex. xxxiii. 10, 11, Deut. xxxiv. 10, John x. 30, xi. 42).
8. Made glorious revelations of God (Ex. xix. 19, John xvii. 21).
9. Signs and wonders (Ex. vii. 3, Luke xxiv. 19).
10. Mediator (Deut. v. 5, Ex. viii. 19, 1 Tim. ii. 5, Heb. vii. 25).
11. Led the people out of bondage (Ex. vi. 5, Heb. ii. 14, 15).

From Egypt to Canaan ; from earth to heaven.

CONTRAST.

Moses—"sinner saved by grace," proclaimed the law, mediator of the Old Covenant (Heb. viii. 9).

Jesus the "Prophet of Nazareth," "without sin" (Heb. iv. 15), proclaimed the Gospel, mediator of the New Covenant (Heb. ix. 15). "Hear ye Him" (Mark ix. 7), remembering Luke x. 16,

III. False prophets exposed.—Prophets of demons and self-appointed. Jer. xxviii. 16, xxix. 30-32 (the dreamer). Test the outcome of their prophecy. Whereas the prophecy of God never fails (Ez. xii. 26, 28 ; 2 Pet. 1-19).

Illustrations on S.S. Lesson.

CLEARING AWAY THE WEEDS.

The Salvation Army colony at Hadleigh is situated in a part of Essex where the land had been for many years previously out of cultivation. One of the difficulties with which the colonists have to contend is the great growth of weeds resulting from the former wildness of the district, and from time to time huge bonfires have to be kindled to effectually destroy the weeds. In like manner the doings of the wicked nations made them an encumbrance of the land of Canaan, and before the people of Israel could possess the country it was essential, because of these abominations, the Lord should drive them out (v. 12).

A MAN RAISED OF GOD.

When William I. of Prussia was crowned emperor he felt that God had entrusted to him a great responsibility. He therefore wrote out the principles on which he would govern his own life, and vowed that his companions should be godly, true-hearted, upright, and sincere. Above all, he determined that every morning of his life should be begun with devotion to God. In that spirit the Emperor undertook the task of uniting Germany, and his grandson to-day aims to imitate his worthy forefather. Similarly, the prophet whom God would raise from the midst of Israel, like unto Moses (v. 15), should be taught of the Lord to know the future, and become in truth a prophet or seer, able to keep the people of Israel united in the fear of God.

THE WORD OF GOD IN THE MOUTH.

In some of the large offices of London, where a deal of correspondence has to be transacted day by day, a phonograph is brought into use, and proves very suitable for the purpose. A busy man, on arriving at his office, replies to the letters he has received by speaking into his phonograph. Later on, a shorthand clerk can set the phonograph in motion, and it will repeat the answers which are to be despatched to the correspondents concerned. The words of the master are heard from the phonograph ; and in a like manner the Lord said he would put his words into the mouth of the prophet, and he should speak all that God commanded him (v. 18). We may also become the mouthpieces of the Lord if we will allow Him to use us.

GOD'S WORK ALONE TO BE SEEN.

Michael Angelo is said to have worn over his forehead and fastened to his cap a lighted candle for use in his work. The candlelight shone brightly upon the canvas and prevented any shadow of the artist himself from falling upon the picture. The prophet of the Lord was to be a man who should presume to speak only the word which God had commanded him (verse 20), and the Lord would not permit any shadow of the prophet himself to mar the canvas where the work of God alone should be seen. The Lord is often unable to use us in His service because we stand in His light and prevent God's work from being seen in its entirety.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

EDINBURGH CASTLE, LIMEHOUSE.

A REVIEW of the month's mission held by Rev. J. Q. A. Henry at the People's Mission Church, Edinburgh Castle, leads to the conclusion that this is the most successful visit paid by him to this East End centre. Never before has so high a spiritual level been reached throughout a series of meetings.

By special desire of the people, Dr. Henry devoted two occasions last week to the discussion of the Biblical aspects of the temperance problem. The addresses consisted largely of Bible readings, comparing and contrasting the use of the words "Wine" and "Strong Drink" in places where they receive the divine commendation, and also where they receive the Divine condemnation. The only way by which such passages can be reconciled, and the consistency of Biblical teaching vindicated, is the acknowledgment of two different uses of the same words. It was shown that, according to the latest scholarship and the best interpretation, that it was impossible to identify from the Scriptures these three things—intoxicating beverages, their use by man, and God's approval of the same ; and it was maintained that until these things can be intelligently and successfully established we are justified in holding to the Bible as a total abstinence book.

On Lord's Day morning, Dr. Henry preached on The Effusion of the Holy Spirit, the Supreme Need of the Christian Church, taking for his text Num. xi. 29—"Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and the Lord would put His Spirit upon them." At the evening service his discourse dealt with young people and national sins, basing his words on Hab. i. 8, "More fierce than evening wolves." It was noted that these words were used to describe the enemies of the Israelitish nation. Among the wolves seeking to devour the national life mentioned were intemperance, immorality, gambling, and infidelity. It was shown that we shall never be able to deal successfully with these national iniquities until we can persuade the generation of young people to eschew them. These evils win young people chiefly through the abuse of the evening hour, hence the necessity for its redemption by devoting it sacredly and heroically to the things that pertain to the kingdom of God.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Till Aug. 30, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, E.; Aug. 31, Lincoln; Sept. 4, Louth; 6-9, Taunton; 10, 11, Newport, Mon.; 12-14, Taunton; 15, 16, Llanelly; 18, 19, Dunfermline; 21, Free St. George's, Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Among Hampshire Hop-Pickers.

IT is now forty years since the late Mr. Chinn began to visit the hop-gardens, and to hold meetings among a then much-neglected class. Twenty-eight years ago the first tent was erected as a centre of religious influence among these people; now for many seasons five have been stationed in the places most frequented by hop-pickers.

The work is still needed. Last season seventeen workers were engaged during the days and evening of the busy hopping season. The abundant crop of hops brought many more people, and the season lasted six weeks. A year after Mr. Chinn passed away a man was heard to say, "My life has been different and that of my family for the last seven years, and it was all through Mr. Chinn."

We work and plead on behalf of these poor wanderers, so that when the labours of each are ended many others may be enabled to say their lives have been benefited. We are looking forward to another season's effort, if God so honour us. We have among our helpers members of the St. John's Ambulance Association, who were able to be of service in several remote places. Books and picture cards will be gratefully received. AURELIA CHINN.

Caring for Working-Lads.

THE many-sided Christian and philanthropic work carried on at the Working Lads' Institute and Home, under the superintendence of Rev. Thomas Jackson, continues to prosper. A medical mission opened three months ago has assisted upwards of 1,000 poor patients. A Gospel service conducted for women only, and held on Monday afternoons, has several self-help clubs connected with it, and upwards of 400 poor women attend the meetings. Forty of these women have decided for Christ, and are now in Church fellowship.

Orphan lads continue to share in the Christian ministry of the Home. Among the most recent admissions was a lad of sixteen, whose father died on board ship of enteric fever when returning from South Africa. The news so distressed the wife and mother that she died within a week from shock. The lad was left without a relative or friend to care for him. With the little money he had he came from Lancashire to London, but failing to get work he was soon penniless. He was admitted to the Working-Lads' Institute, and is now in a respectable situation. Another orphan lad had tramped from Nottingham to London, and failing to get work had been unable to pay for lodgings, and had slept out for several weeks. In the greatest destitution he found a home in the Institute. The kindness shown to the lad, and Christian influence of the Home, led him to give his heart to Christ, and he is now rejoicing in a new and glad experience.

In the work at the Whitechapel Institute Christ has the pre-eminence. The workers believe that the most effective antidote to the vice and misery of the East End is the faithful presentation of the Gospel of the grace of God. A number of men who frequent the lodging-houses have come under the influence of the Mission, and have not only signed the total abstinence pledge, but some have regained a home of their own, and are giving evidence of a thorough change of heart and life. A most valuable and helpful addition to the Institute agencies is the Home of Rest at Southend-on-Sea, in which accommodation is provided for forty persons. The respectable poor of Whitechapel, and poor lads in membership at the Institute, are admitted to the Home of Rest on making a small payment according to their means. In their arduous toil among the poor and unsaved of Whitechapel, Mr. Jackson and his earnest band of helpers desire the sympathy and prayers of the Lord's people.

The Racecourse Mission.

NEWTON ABBOTT (Devon) Babbacombe Regatta and Stockton Races have been visited during the present month by workers of the Racecourse Mission, whose efforts were attended with definite and gracious manifestations of the Holy Spirit. At each place we had the joy of pointing penitent seekers to Christ, but it is impossible in cold black type to give any real impression of the work further than to say the power of God has rested upon us.

The special feature of the Racecourse Mission work is the inspiration that it gives to the workers on the return to their own sphere of labour, and in some places mission bands have been organized, who carry on soul-saving work all the year round. The Revival that commenced at Newton Abbot is still going on, resulting in conversions (one of whom has been used by God to bring other relatives to the Saviour).

Doncaster and Totnes are the next two meetings, September 9 to 12. We shall value the prayers of God's people on behalf of our work and needs in general.

Rev. Philip B. Robinson, M.A., has been appointed general organizing superintendent of Irish Church Missions, and Rev. Henry Fisshe has been appointed superintendent of the Dublin Mission.

Progress in British Guiana.

AN interesting story of progress in British Guiana is told by Rev. H. J. Shirley, who two years ago resigned his charge at Fulham Congregational Church in order to undertake the pastorate of Mission Church, New Amsterdam. Mr. Shirley has just arrived in England for a short season of rest. Great blessing has been vouchsafed during Mr. Shirley's ministry. Last year there were some sixty additions to membership, although candidates were not in any way sought after. The sacerdotal notions concerning church membership, and the frequency of lapses owing to the low moral standard obtaining in the colony, have been combated with good success. Social work includes a flourishing Provident Club, a Young Men's Auxiliary Band, Mutual Improvement Society, Young People's Guild, C.E. Society, and a prayer meeting which is always largely attended.

New Amsterdam Church is the parent of three dependent churches and three meeting houses, visited for service and communion monthly. The dependent churches are shepherded by an assistant minister and two catechists. The Congregationalists were the first to carry the Gospel to the slaves in the colony, through the venerated John Wray. Mr. Shirley inherited splendid traditions at the Mission Chapel, which has ever stood as a centre of influence on behalf of the black people. Intensely loyal to the British throne, the population have been the victims of gubernatorial indifference and folly through long years, and have been grossly neglected in the matter of sanitation and the cultivation of industries. Finding such things, Mr. Shirley spoke and wrote against the inequalities subsisting as between the black and white subjects of the British Crown, and was for a time sadly misunderstood, even by the Government. The present Government secretary and the new governor, Sir A. Swettenham, have recognised that Mr. Shirley is a power for good among the people, and now he has been placed on the Board of Health on the nomination of the Governor. The Commission of Public Education also called Mr. Shirley to a seat, and he also has a place on the Poor Law Board at New Amsterdam.

The establishment of The People, a newspaper owned by a limited company, the capital being largely held in single shares by black Christians, has proved influential for good. Mr. Shirley was appointed editor (without remuneration), and for nine months his incisive and facile pen has expressed the needs of the colony in its columns. High honour from the churches has also fallen to Mr. Shirley's share, the Congregational Union having elected him chairman for the year; and he is now in this country seeking rest and strength for the labours of the visitation connected with the position, as well as to plead for financial support to the Native Theological Institution, conducted by Rev. A. W. Wilson (L.M.S.). Three or four very promising young men are waiting for an opening for training, and as their support has to be guaranteed by the colonial churches, Mr. Shirley will be glad of opportunities of addressing meetings of sympathizing friends.

Personalia.

Rev. John More, who has been prostrated by a severe illness, is now convalescent, and is hopeful of soon resuming his aggressive work at Woolwich.

Mr. Eugene Stock, editorial secretary of the Church Missionary Society, was married a few days ago at St. Saviour's, South Hampstead, to the Hon. Mrs. Fiennes, widow of the late Colonel the Hon. Ivo De Vesci Fiennes.

Rev. W. H. Murray is obliged for the present to postpone his return to Peking. He has now been joined by Mrs. Murray and their seven children. Unfortunately the second girl met with an accident before leaving the ship, which necessitated a surgical operation on arrival in Edinburgh. Mr. Murray's address for six months will be 15, Esplanade Terrace, Joppa, Edinburgh.

More Missionary Murders in China.

NOTWITHSTANDING the progress which has been made in many directions in the settlement of affairs in China, the painful news has just been received that on the 15th inst. two members of the China Inland Mission—Rev. H. R. Lewis, of Cumberland, who had been in China for three years; and Rev. J. R. Bruce, a native of Australia, who has been in the field since 1896—were murdered by a native mob at Chen-chau-fu, in the long-hostile province of Hunan.

It is not thought that these murders and other recent disturbances in China are evidence of any renewed general anti-foreign or anti-missionary movement. In the present case the directors of the mission at Shanghai believe the murders to be the result of a widespread epidemic of cholera in the district, for which the foreigners have been held responsible. The two murdered men were the only members of the Mission in the vicinity, there being very few foreigners yet in the province. Chen-chau-fu is one of the most recently-opened stations of the Mission, work there having been commenced just before the Boxer rising. It was then temporarily abandoned, and the victims of the latest outrage had only lately recommenced work in the place.

Although for some time past there had been some uneasiness about Sze-chuen, none whatever had been felt about Hunan. On August 21 a telegram was, however, received stating that trouble had occurred in Chen-chau-fu, and that the worst was feared for their two missionaries. Another missionary immediately proceeded from Chang-te, the nearest station, 100 miles to the north-east of the scene of the trouble, to inquire into the facts. On his return he telegraphed confirming the original report, and adding that the mob had been excited by rumours of the missionaries having caused the cholera epidemic by poisoning the wells. The gunboat Snipe was also at once sent in the direction of Chen-chau-fu.

Recent letters received by the China Inland Mission are of a most conflicting character. From the West particularly there is general evidence, since the suppression of the Boxer movement, of an increased desire for Western knowledge and civilization; but in Chih-li, Honan, and Kwang-si disturbances have occurred giving rise to some alarm. It is understood, however, that the Central Government is now determined to suppress these troubles, even to the extent of removing local officials; and it is not anticipated that the difficulties will become in any sense general. The Chinese are still greatly incensed at the heavy taxation imposed for the war indemnity.

Oxford Notes.

THROUGH increasing infirmity, Dr. Randall, suffragan Bishop of Reading, has resigned the Archdeaconry of Oxford.

On Saturday the Bishop of Oxford unveiled a beautiful brass tablet in the cathedral of Christ Church, to the memory of Oxford soldiers who have fallen in the war. The address was an exquisite exposition of true unselfishness. "There is no true freedom," said Dr. Paget, "save in the service of God."

Rev. W. Bradfield, senior Wesleyan minister of the Oxford Circuit, has left for Cambridge. He is succeeded by Rev. Arthur Hoyle, late of Bath.

Bible Teachers' Training School. — On account of a law of the State of New York, the provisions of which could not be complied with, it has been found necessary to alter, as above, the name of the institution familiar to our readers as the Bible Teachers' College (New York). Besides the regular studies, the new syllabus includes courses each on (1) Prayer and the Holy Spirit, (2) Missions, (3) How to Teach the Bible, (4) Bird's-Eye Views of Books and Biographies, (5) Lectures on the Theory and Problems of the Christian Life, (6) Practice in teaching before students and professors with criticism, (7) Practice in Dining-room Bible-class Teaching, (8) Study of a Mission, Settlement, or some notably successful feature of Church work each week, (9) Individual Work for Individuals.

From Mr. Spencer Walton.

THE attention of your readers has been turned from time to time to the work of God through our Mission in Swazieland. No doubt they will remember that at the beginning of the war, much to our sorrow every missionary was ordered out unless he became a burgher. This, of course, necessitated the closing of all these stations, and for two and one-half years Christian Swazies have been left like sheep without a shepherd.

The declaration of peace has enabled our missionary, Mr. Baillie, to visit the stations and the people; this entailed a ride of 300 miles on horseback. His report is now to hand, and our hearts have been both gladdened and saddened. He found the majority of the Christians standing true to God. The Swazie evangelists have been faithful to their charge, conducting services Sunday after Sunday, as well as looking after the people. This has rejoiced us, and shown us how truly the work is of God. By reports we have received we were expecting to find all our stations wrecked. One mission house and church were in ruins; the others, with the exception of Hebron, had been looted, but the buildings all standing. Of course the white ants, our great enemies, have had it pretty well their own way, and we found damage both by weather and this mischievous insect.

The report of the faithfulness of our Swazie Christians will encourage our friends in England. Their heartfelt and practical interest in days gone by has not by any means been lost. Doors are opening on all sides. The harvest truly is "white," but, alas, how few are the labourers! Join us in asking our Father to thrust forth many more. On all sides our hearts are rejoiced, receiving continually the good news of the work of God among the soldiers, sailors, Europeans, and heathen in this country.

The Y.M.C.A. and Volunteer Camps.

ON the termination of their season's efforts among the volunteers encamped on Salisbury Plain, the workers of the Lancashire Y.M.C.A.'s have received unstinted praise from the commanding officers, as well as the expressions of heart-felt gratitude from the rank and file. That the undertaking has justified itself all are agreed, and it is hoped that in the near future no military centre will be without this boon.

Among the many who have expressed their appreciation of the Y.M.C.A. tents at Salisbury Plain was Colonel Eaton, C.B., commanding the 3rd V.B., Manchester Regiment, who said, "I do not know that I have ever been so much struck by the admirable work being done by the Y.M.C.A. as by my visits to your tents and seeing your work here. The influence for good must be incalculable. May God prosper you now and all your workers hereafter."

Captain Charles Rigby, I.V.B., writes: "The work done by the Y.M.C.A. has been of the kind most useful to volunteers. Hitherto a man in camp had few options but the canteen, or the various publics in the town where they were specially catered for; now a counter attraction is at his door of a most inviting nature. Only from the remarks of the men in their own lines can the work done by the Y.M.C.A. be really gauged. From my own personal knowledge I can truly say the entire work of addresses, hymns, &c., has been of the highest and most beneficial nature, and the seed here sown will be gathered in future time."

Numbers of such testimonies have been received, indicating the high possibilities and usefulness of a work that has for its aim the spiritual advancement and moral protection of our troops, at a time when such attention is particularly needed. The results prove that large numbers of the men are ready to listen when the Gospel is taken to them.

Obituary.

MISS ELIZABETH ALEXANDER.

AFTER being confined to bed for almost half a century, Miss Elizabeth Alexander, of Peterhead, entered into rest a few days ago. Her long-continued suffering was borne with sweet resignation, her life being a living glad testimony to the keeping of the Lord's own people in perfect peace. She laboured fervently in prayer, especially for those in the foreign field; and corresponded with not a few. Many of the Lord's servants who visited these northern parts came to have fellowship with her in prayer and the reading of God's Word.

MR. JOHN LEVERMORE.

At the age of seventy-seven years Mr. John Levermore (father of Pastor S. Levermore) has been called to the higher service. He was well known in many of the villages and towns of Surrey and Middlesex as an earnest preacher of the Gospel, having laboured in that way for about fifty years. He was known and respected by the late C. H. Spurgeon and Gawin Kirkham, and had assisted the Evangelization Society and the Evangelistic Mission in past years. He was a most affectionate husband and a model father. In the day of rewards there will be many of those who heard the Truth from his lips to arise and call him blessed.

REV. J. A. FAITHFULL.

On Sunday last the sad news was made known that Rev. James Arthur Faithfull, rector of Whitechapel, had been called home at the age of fifty-nine. He was the only son of the late Rev. Jas. G. Faithfull, formerly vicar of Cheshunt, and, as a strict evangelical clergyman, had held livings at Leicester, Scarborough, and Islington. Since 1898 Mr. Faithfull has been rector of the large parish of Whitechapel, and in this office has exerted an influence which has been felt throughout East London. The poor were loved by him, and he by them, and many are mourning, with a sense of personal loss, the closing of so noble and useful a career.

MR. DANIEL FRIEND, BRIGHTON.

By the death of Mr. Daniel Friend, at the age of eighty-five, Brighton loses one of its best known and most active workers in the interests of Sunday-schools and Congregationalism generally. For a long period he was associated with the London Road Congregational Church, and was practically the founder of the church at Preston, of which, at the time of his death, he was senior deacon. While every branch of Christian service had his hearty sympathy, the feature of his life was his unflagging devotion to Sunday-school work. For upwards of forty years he carried on, with distinct success, a Bible class of young men. Many of its members are now filling prominent posts in India, Australia, Africa, Canada, &c., and to the last Mr. Friend, by correspondence, kept in touch with his old pupils.

MR. DAVID PRATT.

Mr. David Pratt, who was suddenly "called home" a few days ago, has been for a great many years closely identified with earnest Christian work in Glasgow, latterly as assistant-secretary to the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association. He was brought up in the fishing village of Crail, on the Fifeshire coast; and was one of a large family, several of whom are zealous and useful workers for the Master. Like others of his brothers, Mr. Pratt had an excellent artistic gift, which he turned to splendid account in connection with Gospel ministry, specially to the young. Few men have more filled out the Nathaniel ideal of character than David Pratt, in whom it may truly be said "there was no guile." Although in failing health for some considerable time past, the end came suddenly on his return from a prolonged season of rest by Loch Fyneside. On Sabbath, 17th inst., the services at Tent Hall, where our brother was so well known and so much beloved, were of a memorial nature. Mr. Pratt leaves a widow and several sons and daughters. D. J. F.

MR. THOMAS SEPTIMUS MARKS.

The passing to be with the Lord, a few days ago, of Mr. Thomas Septimus Marks, recalls many memories of a consecrated life. Educated at Christ's Hospital, he came under the influence of a godly master, Mr. Henry Francis Bowker, who was known to many of our readers as chairman of the Keswick Convention from 1883-1888. On going to business in London, Mr. Marks was one of the early members of the Y.M.C.A., and was widely known in the city as superintendent of the fire department of the Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company. For twenty years, while living at Hackney and Clapton, he was associated with the Open Brethren's meeting at Paragon Road. For a like period he lived at Oakleigh Park, and during the last two years at Highgate. He had a heart wide enough to take an interest in the labours of all who loved the Lord at home or abroad, and was specially identified with the establishment of the Gospel printing press by Mr. George Lawrence at Barcelona. Many will mourn the loss of a wise and trusted counsellor in spiritual things, whom practical business experience had rendered familiar with the difficulties and temptations besetting business men.

MRS. JOHN INNES-WRIGHT.

It has come as a shock of surprise to a wide circle of friends to learn that this zealous worker has been suddenly cut off in the midst of her abounding labours at Sukhia-Pokhri, on the borders of Nepaul, where she and her beloved husband have been for years pioneering in the hope of eventually opening up a permanent work in that closed land. We first made Miss Rebecca Johnston's acquaintance in Dumfries more than twenty years ago. She was daughter of a well-known Christian banker in that town, and was earnestly engaged in various departments of soul-saving work. Coming to Glasgow later, she was soon full of happy service for the King, in which she made the acquaintance of her future husband. For a short time she did work as a missionary in China, where she still has several sisters labouring. Only the other week we had a deeply interesting account from our friends of their work for the dark Nepaulese. They were full of thankfulness for wonderfully opening doors, and increasing acceptance with the people, especially with the officials. Now comes these sudden and most unexpected tidings! No particulars are yet to hand, but merely the intimation of our sister's sudden summons home. Many hearts will help to bear Mr. Innes-Wright's burden of sorrow at this time, and to ask that he may be wisely guided in the future of his lonely service. D. J. F.

About Books.

THE NEW BIBLE DICTIONARY.

BY the completion of the Hastings Bible Dictionary* a work of marvellous comprehension is placed within reach of students. Conceived on a plan at once large and practical, the undertaking has been carried through in a manner which reflects great credit upon the editor and those who have laboured with him. Quite a host of scholars, British, American, and Continental, have co-operated in the production of the Dictionary, which, whatever its limitations in some directions, assuredly represents the learning of our day on the many subjects dealt with. While still cherishing a warm regard for Kitto, we cannot but feel thankful to Dr. Hastings for furnishing us with this great and useful work.

Many of the articles in this Dictionary are full and valuable treatises on their specific subjects. Others are virtually digests of literature that is not within the reach of ordinary students. In some instances the analytical spirit is too dominant; sometimes one comes across views and judgments that are more critical than Biblical. Taken as a whole, however, the work is essentially practical. This is particularly true of the concluding volume, which contains a full share of articles of prime importance.

Among the greater contributions to this volume, of a thousand large pages, are:—Predestination, by Professor Warfield, of Princeton; Prophecy and the Prophets, by the late Professor Davidson, of Edinburgh; Resurrection, by Canon E. R. Bernard; The Book of Revelation, by Professor Porter, of Yale University; The Epistle to the Romans, by Dr. Robertson, principal of King's College; Sacrifice, by Professor W. P. Paterson, of Aberdeen; Sin, by Canon Bernard; The Son of God, by Canon Sanday; and the Epistles to the Thessalonians and to Timothy, by Prof. Lock, of Oxford. Several distinguished Continental writers appear:—Prof. H. L. Strack deals with the Text of the Old Testament, and Prof. Eb. Nestle with that of the New. The latter scholar also supplies papers of extraordinary precision and detail on the Septuagint and the Syriac Versions. The Vulgate is described by Rev. H. J. White; and Dr. F. G. Kenyon, of the British Museum, contributes the article on Writing.

The summaries of literature on the various subjects will be specially welcome to some. The many short articles by the editor, on words and things of minor importance but deep interest, are the result of much thought and research.

A NEGRO BENEFACTOR.

ON both sides of the Atlantic Booker T. Washington is rightly regarded as one of the greatest benefactors of the coloured people in America. His life-story, as told by Mr. G. Holden Pike—From Slave to College President—is a biography of absorbing interest. Mr. Washington was born in what was undoubtedly the darkest period in the history of the slaves of the Southern States. The negroes of the plantations grew up quite illiterate, and it was a punishable offence for a slave to learn to read or for anyone to attempt to teach them. With genuine sympathy Mr. Pike relates how the present head of Tuskegee College began life in bondage, gave proof of a unique intelligence, and with persistent energy worked his way through the seminary, and, having finished his course with honour, set himself the formidable task of founding the training institute for negroes. In that institute there are now instructed some thousand students in ordinary branches of education, as well as useful arts and handicrafts. More than this, the narrative shows that Mr. Washington's work has demonstrated how the perplexing problem of the relation of black and white people in America may be solved, for the aim of his great undertaking is to bring two races together, one being able to help the other, because both have interests in common. (1s. 6d. Fisher Unwin.)

The Edenvale Leaflets, Booklets, Cards, &c., are now amalgamated with "Newness of Life" series, and to be obtained from 21, Mount Sion, Tunbridge Wells.

A Memoir of the late Rev. Edward White, by Mr. F. A. Freer, is in the press, and will be issued shortly by Mr. Elliot Stock. The work will trace the public life of Mr. White from its commencement at Hereford down to the time of his death in London.

A timely booklet is Spiritualism—What it is, and What it Leads to. By Rev. E. W. Moore, M.A. Many are being distressed by modern developments in sorcery and witchcraft, and to such these pages will be instructive. The booklet also administers a serious warning. Evangelists at Work.

The Australian Revival.

BOTH in solemnity and results the meetings at Adelaide have equalled the gatherings in other towns in the Antipodes during the present revival. In reviewing Mr. Geil's mission the Australian Christian World says :—

At first the Adelaide people were slow in recognising the power which has endued this man, and also his unique personality. Steadily, though slowly, the people woke up to the fact, and one proof of this was the constantly growing attendance of business men at the midday meetings in the Town Hall. Towards the close of the second week the crowd was becoming too large for the building. During last week the Exhibition Building was crowded every night, and this crowd was larger every evening, and so eager were people to get in that the police had to be called in to keep out the people who sought to force their way into the packed and crowded auditorium.

The heavy showers that fell nearly every night not only did not thin down the audiences, but did not drive away the people who could not get in, and who waited patiently until the first meeting was over in the hope of gaining an entrance to the after-meetings. And these after-meetings afford another test of the marvellous power of the services. Usually about one-half of the people leave when the first part is over; this was not so here, as 90 per cent., and at some meetings 99 per cent., of the people remained, and at the last meeting of the series all stayed. Adelaide, it is quite safe to say, has never been so deeply moved; everywhere this mission and the missioner are the chief topics of conversation.

Many in Adelaide to-day thank God for Mr. Geil's visit, and will never forget him nor the great blessing they have received. His farewell at mid-day was a meeting that will be in the memories of many as long as they live.

A GREAT MISSIONARY MEETING.

The largest foreign missionary demonstration ever held in South Australia was conducted by Mr. Geil on the last day of his mission in the Exhibition Building. It was timed to begin at three o'clock, but long before that hour the vast hall was crowded. The first speaker was Rev. Jos. King, who remarked that the meeting gave a completeness to the mission services held both in Port Adelaide and Adelaide. He hoped no one would call these meetings "Geil's Mission;" they had been missions of the Spirit of God.

In the course of a telling address, Mr. Geil gave some of the results of his observations of missions in the Pacific Islands, and for upwards of an hour kept the people deeply interested. As an illustration of what the natives of these islands can do, he said in the island of Tutuila under the American flag, the London Missionary Society built a Girls' School costing 10,000 dols. in gold. This school was out of debt, paid for by the natives of the Island. There was one island where the income was 3,000 dols. in gold, that is, about £600, and in one year the natives gave 2,000 dols., that is £400, for a girls' school. Where were the people who said that the native races, even when humanized, civilized, and Christianized, would not provide their own institutions of learning?

On the Sands at Margate.

Mr. Newton Jones (S.S.U. evangelist) has been holding successful services since July 9, twice and three times daily on the Margate sands. Large numbers have assembled to listen to the chalk talks, the speaker using a blackboard 10ft long. The illustrated addresses on bells, the magnet, &c., drew particularly large gatherings, while the daily Bible-readings from 12 to 12.45 have interested many, and found several valuable workers. Wednesday last week a large crowd stood to see the Museum Service, prizes being awarded to the five best: (1) A model of the two buildings Matt. vi.; (2) John the Baptist's head on charger; (3) Forty pieces of silver; (4) A nutshell with John iii. 16 packed within; (5) White of an egg. Many have been the tokens of blessing received by young and old. The indoor lectures on "The Potter and his Work," also "Faces and Places I have seen in My Tour Round the World," were well attended. Crowds assembled on the beach at night to see the Gospel by limelight. The evangelist closes the seven weeks' campaign on Tuesday next.

Rev. Dr. Powers at Ardrossan and Saltcoats.

Rev. H. Powers, D.D., brought his five weeks' mission at Ardrossan and Saltcoats to a close on Monday, August 25. This is the ninth mission conducted by Dr. Powers in this place. All the meetings have been largely attended, and many young people have decided for Christ. Mrs. Powers, Miss Powers, and Master Cliffe Powers have rendered valuable service in singing and speaking the Gospel. The Earl of Eglinton, the Hon. Thos. Cochrane, M.P., the Provost of Ardrossan, and others have kindly contributed to defray the expenses of the doctor's work.

Mr. James B. Wookey at Blackpool.

Bright Gospel services were announced for Sunday last at the Y.M.C.A. Alhambra Theatre services, Blackpool, and some 3,000 persons responded again to the invitation for the three "hourly services" through the day. Mr. Wookey is a powerful advocate of social purity, and a most telling and effective preacher of the Gospel. The spirit of hearing manifest and gracious influence pervading the meetings was sufficient to touch the heart and stir the emotions and purposes to greater activity.

The services are being continued through the week-days in the Abingdon Street Baptist Church by Mr. Wookey and Dr. Barnardo's Musical Boys, and again next Sunday in the Theatre. The meetings will close with a special lecture on Monday next, illustrating the work of Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

Carrubbers Close Mission.

Under the auspices of the above organization a successful tent mission has been conducted at Ratho by Mr. A. Y. McGregor The tent, which holds between two and three hundred, was sometimes full; and it was evident that God was speaking to many hearts. A number of conversions took place, and seed was sown which we believe will yet bear fruit to the glory of God. God's people were much revived, and turned out well to the work, parading the one long street of the village with banners, on which were inscribed in bold letters: "Worthy is the Lamb," and "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life."

Miss McLaren, of Edinburgh, proved a great help by her singing of the Gospel, which we are sure was as heartsearching as Mr. McGregor's plain preaching. At the closing meeting a good number testified to the Lord's saving grace. C. S.

Mizpah Hall, Glasgow.

Mizpah Hall is under the wing of the United Evangelistic Association, and a hearty work is carried on in it, but its situation is not in its favour. Though encircled with buildings of one kind and another, the immediate surroundings are almost a desert so far as a resident population is concerned. Yet the workers not only bravely "hold the fort" all the year round, but they go out to where a passing crowd can be got at, and endeavour from the crowd to win some for Christ.

In the summer time the hall is closed, and the workers betake themselves to Cranstonhill, about half a mile distant. For some years their summer work was carried on in a tent, but for two seasons the large hall of St. Mark's United Free Church has been the place of gathering. Though well situated and commodious, it has not the charm that a tent has, making the work stiffer.

This year, since June came in, the preachers have been Mr. Samuel Mackenzie and Mr. C. G. Rogers, and meanwhile Mr. Wm. Thomson, jun., is busy at work. With the expiry of this month the workers, under the superintendence of Mr. J. C. Blackater, who has been the leader for years, will return to their own hall, and the special work will be continued there for a few weeks with Mr. James W. Moodie as evangelist. During the mission some have heard to profit and believed unto life eternal, and further results are looked for. J. C.

The Boy Preacher.

It is a daring thing to attempt an evangelistic mission at Scarborough in August. The season is then at its height, and the conditions decidedly adverse to religious revival. Many of the most earnest workers in the churches are so absorbed in business during August, rising early and sitting late to meet the requirements of visitors, that even ordinary church work suffers from their absence. Then the majority of visitors do not come to "Scarborough the beautiful" with any thought of special services.

Despite all this, such a mission has been held in August, the preacher being Master Jack Cooke, who has been ably assisted by his colleague, Rev. J. Russell Coutts. The mission has been held under the auspices of the Free Church Council, but has been in no way exclusive, workers in the Established Church, notably those connected with the Y.M.C.A., having heartily co-operated. This effort in mid season has been justified by the good success which has been realized. The Empire building and the Circus have been crammed with hearers on the Sundays, and very large congregations have assembled in the churches on the week days. The youthful preacher has astonished his hearers by his knowledge, his thrilling delivery, his fearlessness, and his mastery of audiences. Best of all, the hand of the Lord has been with him, and, to the joy of the prayerful, groups of souls have moved out of the impressive after-meetings into the inquiry room, and have realized the salvation of God. The services were commenced on August 10 (having been preceded by five evening meetings for prayer) and concluded on Sunday last. On the closing day the people thronged in thousands to hear the young preacher deliver his final addresses. Time will never wholly efface the memory of the great closing meeting when, after a powerful evangelistic address, many rose for prayer, and inquirers were guided into the way of peace.

Robert Wood.

Mr. George Bennett writes from Aberystwyth :—The wet cold weather has greatly interfered with the attendances at the children's services here; but there have been evidences of blessing nearly every day. Sometimes quite a number have professed decision for Christ.

The mission of Mr. John Hawkins at Wolverton opened under the most favourable circumstances, and on the first Sabbath evening no fewer than thirty-six came out in token of their desire to accept Christ. At the dinner-hour services for working men the tent was crowded with railway employés, and much blessing has resulted.

The Victoria Park Onward Gospel Band is holding large and most successful open-air meetings in the Roman Road (Old Ford). The meetings, which are held three times weekly, Sunday, Wednesday, and Saturday evenings, attract large and attentive audiences. Chiefly owing to the thrilling and deeply-interesting Gospel addresses which are given by Mr. H. J. Phipp (Gospel temperance worker), whose labours are being much blessed. Several open confessions having been made after his addresses, the converts now attend the meetings as helpers in the singing of the Gospel.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Requests for Prayer.

For the all-Ireland Conference to be held in Dublin Sept. 2-4.

For Gospel services held daily at Southend, near the Kursaal, by Mr. Swanston Smith.

That the light sown "for the righteous" may shine upon the path of one at present in darkness.

For a mission to be conducted at Skegness by Mr. William Forbes, commencing on Monday next.

On behalf of Gospel meetings in the village of Whitletts, Ayrshire, conducted by Messrs. Batters and Stark.

For a series of special services to be conducted at the Mission Hall, Blandford, September 14-30, by Mr. C. A. Bompas.

For a special mission to young men, conducted by Mr J. J. Sims, of Canada, under the auspices of the City of Dublin Y.M.C.A., on Sept. 28-Oct. 10.

For a mission to the men employed on the new railway works at Gerrard's Cross, being conducted by Mr. W. H Holt (Navvy Mission Society) and others.

For a spiritual revival in the work of God at the Spurgeon Memorial Mission Church, Erskine Road, Walthamstow, and the ingathering of souls.

That a minister of the Gospel, suffering from the effects of an accident, may soon be restored to health, and that he may experience the Divine presence in his affliction.

That a young man, under twenty years of age, who is beginning to contract habits of intemperance, may be saved from drink, and become an honourable, strictly sober, and Christian man.

That the burden of responsibility resting upon Christians, in view of the forthcoming Simultaneous Open-Air Mission, may be fully realised, and that there may be an outpouring of the Spirit on workers and work.

Prayer is asked that a fully-qualified lady medical missionary may be led to offer her services for an important post in the Punjab, in connection with the Church of Scotland Women's Association for Foreign Missions.

From Our Readers.

Family Worship.

MY DEAR SIR,—The recent correspondence under the heading "Do we know our Bible?" must have exercised many about their ignorance of the Word of God. It is an equally sad thing to notice the decay of family worship in our homes.

I have been speaking on the subject to my father, who is a pastor, and he says that during the last thirty years he has travelled up and down England and Wales, and has visited hundreds of homes of ministers of the Gospel and other Christian men, and he only remembers family prayers being conducted in three homes. He adds that his father would have missed his breakfast rather than fail to gather the members of his household around the throne of grace. His grandfather, who was a farmer, early in the morning during the harvest time, would cease work in the field, and, surrounded by farm labourers and sheaves of corn, read a portion of God's Word, and kneel down on the grass and pray to his Father in heaven. What a beautiful sight, and what a contrast to the rush and tear of business men to-day! Men seem to be too busy to pray now, but the man who is too busy to pray is busier than God wants him to be.

Is it any wonder that the people of our land are becoming more and more indifferent to eternal realities when family religion is so neglected? It will be a sad day for our country when our homes fail to teach their children to remember their Creator in the days of their youth. What grander sight is there than at the beginning and close of the day for the good old Bible to be brought to the table, and father and mother, brothers and sisters, to unite in worshipping the God of their fathers! Surely God specially reveals Himself to such families.—Faithfully yours,

J. R. Edwards.

Treffgarne, R.S.O., Pembs.

"The Name above Every Name."

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent "Reverentia" writes in favour of the use of the name of "Jesus" without the title, and points to the Book of the Acts for instances in support. May I on the other hand refer to chap. xix. In verse 4, Paul speaking by the Holy Ghost, exhorts the people of Ephesus to believe "on Jesus." But they, when converted, "were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus."

Again, in verse 13, the sacred writer says that the "exorcists took upon them to name . . . . the name of the Lord Jesus," saying, "I adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth;" and in verse 15, "The evil spirit answered and said unto them, 'Jesus I know and Paul I know, but who are ye?'" The result of all this was that "The Name of the Lord Jesus was magnified" (v 17), and the "Word of the Lord" grew mightily, and prevailed.

Now this passage seems to clear the whole controversy, and to establish the following rules:—

(1) That the use by the Spirit of God of the untitled Name, as in all the four Gospels, though wholly appropriate and becoming in Him, affords of itself no guide as to our use of it.

(2) That the use of the untitled Name by exorcists and evil spirits affords no precedent to be followed by God's people.

(3) That the writer of the Acts being careful to distinguish himself from these by the reverent use of the title of "Lord," thereby puts us under like obligation.

Your correspondent refers to two well-known hymns, and the use of the untitled Name by godly persons, as affording sanction for the practice which so many deplore; but may I not pass over this argument, and appeal to Scripture itself for sure leading? "Reverentia" does so when referring to Saul's conversion, but he fails to observe that, though our Lord, in great condescension and grace, named Himself "Jesus," Saul addresses Him as "Lord."

But let us search the Gospels for an instance of any godly or believing person using the Name by itself, and what do we find? Not a single case. The demon cried, "What have we to do with Thee, Jesus, Thou Son of God." If the blind man cried "Jesus," he added, "Thou Son of David," in true reverence. The Greeks in their unconverted state said: "Sir, we would see Jesus." But never, so far as I can discover, did anyone, even of the nearest and dearest of His disciples, address or speak of Him as "Jesus." The two who were to prepare for the Passover, when claiming the use of the ass's colt, said not "Jesus," but "The Lord hath need of him," and did so by His own direction, and there are between thirty and forty cases where they called him "Lord," and many more where they spoke to others of Him as "the Lord."

This is an age of irreverence. It applies to civil authority, social life, and, sad to say, to the home. Subjects towards the sovereign, servants towards their masters, and children towards their parents, seem to shrink from the rendering of honour. It is the duty of ministers and of all, to seek to revive the spirit and expression of homage where homage is due. And to whom may we say, if not to the Saviour of the world, that homage, honour, and reverence are due? Most cordially do I recommend to your correspondent and readers generally Sir Robert Anderson's little book on this subject, "For His Name's Sake, a Plea for Reverence," in which all that is needed is briefly and unanswerably (as I think) set forth.—Yours faithfully,

George F. Trench.

[We have also received similar letters on this subject from Mr. W. Hoste (Brighton) and Mr. W. Bloxsidge (Notting Hill).—Ed.]

Among the Churches.

Church of England.

Towards the deficit in the fund of the C.M.S., £11,089 has been received by the Dean of Peterborough.

Rev. W. H. Egerton, rector of Whitchurch, Salop, for fifty-six years, who has been ill for some months, is slowly gaining strength. Mr. Egerton is in his ninety-first year.

The proposed abandonment of the Men's Shelter in connection with All Hallows, London Wall, has brought forth much practical sympathy. The rector is appealing for a sum of £300 to accomplish the project.

The complete report of the Church Pastoral Aid Society has now been issued. It shows that during the year under review the Society made grants for 750 curates, 154 lay assistants, and 102 women workers, the total amount voted being £60,494. These grants were distributed over 695 parishes, which contained an aggregate population of 6,086,367.

Considerable damage was done to Swanscombe Parish Church, near Gravesend, last week by a fire which originated through the building being struck by lightning. The church dated back to the sixth century, and was restored about thirty years ago. The six bells were melted, and a Norman font destroyed. The chancel and organ were saved, and the safes containing the parish documents and a register going back to the time of Cromwell were rescued from the flames.

The energetic vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury (Rev. R. Catterall), is working hard among the young people of his parish. A special Sunday afternoon service is held in the church for those who do not attend Sunday schools. Mr. Catterall has written to some of the large City firms, asking that any of their employés who lived in Highbury might be told that a welcome would be given them at St. Augustine's. A Union of Communicants has been organized, and already it has several hundred members. One of the rules of membership demands "prayer for oneself, for others, and for the needs and work of the parish." The fourth rule asks members "to undertake, if it be possible, some definite work for God."

Congregational.

Dr. Parker, who is staying in Buckinghamshire, is steadily progressing towards convalescence. He confidently hopes to resume his City Temple ministry on September 25, by a Thursday mid-day service.

The historic Baddow Church, Chelmsford, has called to its pastorate Mr. T. Rees Richards, of Cheshunt College. The church is an important one, and has an enviable history, dating as far back as 1672. Mr. Richards' college course does not expire for nearly a year.

The latest reports concerning the health of Principal Scott, the chairman of the Union, are still reassuring. During the last month he has had a slight pull-back, but this was purely temporary. His intention is as strong as ever to be present at the Glasgow meetings.

Arrangements have been made by Rev. Andrew Mearns for Rev. G. Campbell Morgan to conduct a series of special mid-day services during September at Westminster Chapel, S.W. Mr. Morgan is to preach at the City Temple on Sundays, September 7, 14, and 21, and the Westminster Chapel services will be held from 12 to 1 o'clock on the Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday in each week.

Now that peace has been proclaimed in South Africa the London Missionary Society is seriously considering the advisability of making a number of alterations in connection with its labours in that portion of the mission field which principally comprises Bechuanaland and Matabeleland. It is likely that the educational work will undergo considerable development in the near future, a great demand having arisen for books in the Sechuana and Sentaba languages.

Rev. James Cregan, of Albert Bridge Church, Belfast, has accepted the pastorate of Edge Hill Church, Liverpool. Mr. Cregan came under the influence of the late D. L. Moody in one of his evangelistic tours. Four years later he entered Harley College, London, and having preached at Albert Bridge Church, while on a holiday in Ireland, he received and accepted a unanimous invitation to the pastorate. The church has made remarkable progress during his twenty years' ministry, and Mr. Cregan has been a great spiritual force in Belfast and neighbourhood.

Baptist.

Rev. John McNeill has been drawing crowded congregations at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, notwithstanding the absence on holiday of many of the regular worshippers.

Rev. F. Neal, who has been pastor of the church at Kingsthorpe, Northampton, for the past six years, has accepted a hearty invitation to the pastorate of the church at Boxmoor, Herts.

The health of Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, secretary of the Baptist Union, has given his friends cause for anxiety for some time past. He has greatly benefited from his month's sojourn in Switzerland, and is now in Scotland, whence he returns to duty at the beginning of September.

Considerable alterations are at present being carried out at Upper Holloway Chapel, London, which will be reopened in the first week in September. Rev. J. R. Wood, President of the Union, will then resume his ministry. The congregation is at present worshipping in the Holloway Hall.

Under the auspices of the Baptist South African Colonial and Missionary Aid Society an afternoon service will be held on Thursday, October 9, at Birmingham, during the Autumnal Assembly of the Baptist Union, when a special sermon on behalf of the Society will be preached by Rev. W. E. Blomfield, B.A., B.D., of Coventry.

Designs have been accepted for the proposed London Association church at Mitcham Lane, Streatham, S.W. The first portion of the buildings, which include the nave, tower, vestries, and temporary apse, is to be at once proceeded with. The estimated cost of the complete block is £5,238 without tower, the latter being an additional £440.

Methodist.

The new Wesleyan church and schools at Durham are to cost, with site, about £10,000. The church seats 620. The scheme also includes a ladies' room, suite of vestries, and other necessary buildings. Almost half the cost has been raised.

Brinkworth is one of the oldest circuits in the Primitive Methodist denomination. A circuit gathering has been held on the spot where the first church was built, in 1823. Rev. W. Haddow preached, and Revs. E. Parsons, S. Ainsworth, and others spoke.

With the commencement of the new Methodist year 118 junior Wesleyan ministers receive their first appointments. Of these, rather more than one-third are men who have completed their college course. Taken as a whole there are just over 700 fresh appointments to circuit work.

Within the last ten years there has been an increase of 506 new Wesleyan chapels connexionally settled, and an increase of 173,142 in the sitting accommodation. There has also been a large decrease in the rented places of worship. The actual number of chapels is 8,287, with 2,187,505 sittings.

It will be remembered that at the recent Wesleyan Conference there was an outcry respecting the dearth of suitable ministerial candidates. The result of this scarcity of men has placed many circuits in a very serious difficulty. It is becoming more and more felt that there is not an adequate representation in the ministerial ranks of Methodist young men of promise, notably of those who have had all the advantages of a more advanced education.

King Lewanika, of Barotseland, was interviewed in London by a deputation of Primitive Methodists consisting of Revs. T. Mitchell, J. Slater, R. Bryant, A. Baldwin (returned missionary), and others. Rev. T. Mitchell thanked the King for the support he had given the missionaries, and explained that the only object of the missionary society was the moral uplifting of the people. The King, through an interpreter, asked that more missionaries should be sent among his people.

In the annual "address to the ministers, members, and friends of the Methodist New Connexion," signed by the President, Rev. M. J. Birks, and the secretary, Mr. J. G. Watson, reference is made to the many losses of ministers by death, and to the eminence of some of them in gifts and services. It is stated that "the Connexion has been greatly blessed of God in the ingathering of the year. In England our membership has been increased by 1,186." The address closes with an appeal for holy enthusiasm and work in this age of activities and strenuous life and development.

Presbyterian.

Union Church, Liverpool (Rev. A. Bannerman Barkway's), which has been closed for renovation and the erection of a fine organ, is to be opened on October 26. The Lord Mayor of Liverpool has promised to attend the re-opening ceremony in his official capacity.

The congregations of St. Columba and Cavendish Road Churches, Leeds, have decided to unite, and the church of St. Columba is to be sold by auction. It is a fine building, and was erected in 1852. The church in Cavendish Road, which is to be the meeting-place of the united congregations, is at present closed for alterations and improvements, and is to be reopened on September 21.

Rev. James Christie, B.A., of Carlisle, is attending all ecclesiastical functions in the district in the "Far North," while spending a well-earned holiday. He was associated with the Forres and Nairn Presbytery at its meeting last week, and in acknowledging a very cordial welcome the ex-Moderator of Synod referred to the valuable accessions to its membership which the English Presbyterian Church received from time to time from the sister Churches in Scotland, and spoke in strong terms of the determination of English Nonconformists to oppose to the uttermost the obnoxious Education Bill of the Government.

Fallen Asleep.

The death of Rev. Walter Vercoe, in his eighty-second year, removes a Wesleyan minister widely known in Lancashire circuits.—At Shanrod, Garvaghy, Mr. John Gillespie, for over fifty years a highly-respected Presbyterian elder.—At Kingston, Dublin, Mrs. Gardiner, wife of Rev. H. Stuart Gardiner, Presbyterian minister, and sister of Rev. A. Cuthbert, M.A., Presbyterian minister, Carrickfergus.—At Dublin, Mr. Samuel Griffen, a devoted worker in connection with the Methodist Church, aged eighty-six years.—At Clabby, Co. Fermanagh, Mr. Francis Kirkpatrick, an earnest Methodist class leader, aged ninety years.

Welsh Notes.

AN interesting service took place on August 20 at the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Church at Abercarne. The occasion was the unveiling of a brass memorial tablet to the memory of the late Lord and Lady Llanover. Although themselves Anglicans, Lord and Lady Llanover gave the church at Abercarne over to the possession of the Calvinistic Methodists.

Quite an important event in Church circles in Wales will be the celebration of the 75th anniversary of St. David's College, Lampeter, on Oct. 2. The Archbishop of Canterbury has promised to attend and will preach at the morning service. The Bishops of Bangor, Llandaff, and St. David's are also expected to be present. Invitations are to be sent out to every graduate and member of the College, about 1,200 in number.

At the seventh anniversary of the Temperance Association of the Flintshire Calvinistic Methodist Monthly Meeting the statement was made that seven years ago there were only 5,090 pledged abstainers within the borders of the Monthly Meeting. Now their number is 8,997. In 1900 88 per cent. of the church officers were abstainers. From henceforth no deacon will be received as a member of the Monthly Meeting except he be pledged to total abstinence.

Amongst the pastoral changes to be chronicled this week, undoubtedly the most important in the Welsh religious world is the removal of Rev. B. Davies, D.D., of Trelech, to Newcastle Emlyn, in Cardiganshire. Dr. Davies is one of the foremost of living Welsh preachers, and his fame has extended far beyond the limits of the Congregational denomination, to which he belongs. His published volumes of sermons have had a large sale, and take high rank in the homiletical literature of the Principality.

One of the historic churches of the Principality is about to be restored as a tribute to the memory of its most memorable vicar. The church is situated at Llandingat, Carmarthenshire. For years it was the scene of the labours of the famous "Vicar Prichard," whose fame rests upon his "Canwyll y Cymry" ("The Welshman's Candle"), a book which is a Welsh classic. The nature of its contents may be inferred by the apt description given by a Welsh writer, who spoke of it as containing "little ballads of the soul."

Irish Notes.

THE return of Mr. T. H. Sloan as M.P. for South Belfast is a warning to Mr. Balfour and the Government that the Protestant working men of this country are determined not to stand any truckling on the part of our rulers with Romanism or Ritualism. Mr. Sloan is a life-long total abstainer, a Methodist, and an excellent Christian man.

An effort is now being made to get Sligo workhouse placed under the management of the nuns, and if this project be accomplished nothing is more certain than in a short time all workhouses in at least the three southern provinces of Ireland will be placed under similar management. Thus these institutions, which are supported by the public rates, of which Protestants contribute a large proportion, are in danger of being handed over to the Roman Catholic Church for sectarian and proselytising purposes.

Rev. Henry Montgomery, M.A., whose evangelistic labours are well known, and who some years ago founded the Shankill Road Mission, Belfast, is now giving up his pastorate of the congregation in Albert Street, Belfast, which he has held for the past twenty years, that he may devote his time and strength henceforward to the working of the Shankill Road Mission, which is expected, under his fostering care, to become a great power for good in the North of Ireland.

NATIONAL BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY.

In thanking the readers of The Christian for their kind response in the past, I again bring before them two more cases that require immediate aid.

A BLIND MUSICIAN.—L. A., aged 50 years, has become blind through overstudy. She worked 10 hours per day to gain a gold medal for music in order to support her parents, who died at the age of 92-82. She is extremely delicate, and, owing to a cancer at the back of her eyes, suffers constant pain, and quite unable to earn her own living.

G. S., in whom I am interested, has been blind from lead poisoning since 1897. He was sent to the Exeter School for 2½ years, and then went to the Normal College. He had to leave the latter as the Doctors said the poisoning was beginning to affect his brain.—R. D. C.

The Rev. J. PULLEIN-THOMPSON, Hon. Sec., the Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W., will gladly acknowledge donations, or they may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Notes & Comments

A Romanist Revolt. A sensation has been caused by the publication of an article in the September Fortnightly Review on an alleged movement of revolt in the Roman Catholic body in this country. Mr. Galton, who has left Rome for the Church of England, declares that there is practically a new Reformation at work in the Roman body, and that a large number of cultured Catholics—including 150 English priests—have joined a movement of protest against Ultramontanistic interference and methods. It is a curious thing that the leading note of the movement, according to Mr. Galton, is found in the free English temperament, which is naturally hostile to bondage imposed by foreign bishops and priests. The Roman officials in England have flatly denied the truth of Mr. Galton's statement, and allege that no such movement exists. However, we shall see. The Continental nations are busy freeing themselves from the yoke of clericalism; it would be curious if this movement should find no hospitality among a people whose love of liberty is proverbial.

France in Transition. Doubtless if a Protestant journal had published the letter of a special correspondent, which appears in the (Roman) Catholic Times of August 22, on "The Religious Situation in France," its accuracy and truthfulness would have been impugned. The journal in question, however, credits the writer with special knowledge of France, and an exceptionally good position for giving a fair view of the religious state of the country. The correspondent says:—

> France is no longer Catholic in the strict sense of the word. . . . Frenchmen are born into the Church by Baptism, in their last moments most of them are willing to accept her ministrations, but the immense majority of them live either hostile or indifferent to her authority and influence. . . . So far as living Christianity is concerned, France could hardly be in a more deplorable or hopeless condition. . . ."

Accusing the French people of irreligion, our contemporary either overlooks or ignores the fact that the special correspondent's letter to which it gives endorsement is a terrible indictment of the Church of Rome.

The Religious Situation in France. It is thus frankly admitted that the majority of Frenchmen in that reputed "Catholic country" remain outside the Roman system. The rule of measurement appears to be the number of persons who "make their Easter Communion." Thus in Besançon, the seat of an archbishopric, out of a population of 55,000 people, only 1,500 attend the Easter Communion. In many of the rural parts the proportion is lower than this. Various reasons for this state of things are given, but, quite unconsciously, the writer has stated in the phrase "perform their Easter duty" the secret of the whole thing. The truth is that from beginning to end Catholicism is a performance, from the moment that it is pretended to convey regeneration by means of water to unconscious infants, until that in which a wafer is declared to be the Viaticum on the last great journey. Such pretences as these, being without life, cannot endure, and it is not surprising that men and women throw them over as unreal.

The French Congregations. To those who do not know the inwardness of French political and religious life, the accounts given of the expulsion of certain "religious" may appear to savour of persecution and injustice. Le Siècle, however, boldly faces this question, and shows what the movement really means. Speaking of those who, in the name of liberalism, are denouncing the action of the Government, it says:—

> They call themselves liberals because they want liberty of teaching, that is to say, liberty for the "good Fathers" to teach our children hatred of the Republic, of progress, and of democracy. They want liberty only so far as it will assure the domination of monks and priests, and the submission of society to the Church. Liberty, in their eyes, is only a means of opening a way for the renewed attacks of clericalism. Never for one day do they lose sight of their lust for universal dominion.

Much as we distrust the priests, and heartily as we oppose their pretensions, we only wish fair play for these men as for all others, and if we thought that the action of the French Government was unjust we should be among the first to decry it. But it seems clear enough that the congregations are being beaten with a rod of their own making. When they abandon political intriguing, France will cease to interfere with them.

An Object-lesson for England. Switzerland appears to have taken to heart the lesson of the old fable of the man who took to his breast a frozen viper that, when restored by the warmth, turned and stung him. Following the example of France and Spain, the Federal Council has taken steps to protect the country against the machinations of the Romanist Orders and Associations, and have prohibited the establishment in Switzerland of congregations coming under an article of the Constitution, or the founding of any new convents or Orders, and the re-establishment of such as have already been suppressed. Naturally, most of the monks and nuns who will be ejected under this wise legislation will flock to Great Britain, to enjoy the liberty which this country affords even to those who labour to undermine her spiritual and temporal freedom. It certainly would seem that we have much to learn from France in such matters, for of the eighty-six County Councils in that country all but one have now officially approved the action of the Government in dealing with the Orders.

The Last Straw! Mr. R. P. Wilder, in seeking to stir up missionary interest in the churches of America, called upon a pastor and suggested a meeting, at which he should propose to the church to undertake the support of a missionary. The pastor could not think of such a thing: his people were so heavily weighted already, that he would not lay another feather's weight upon them! The meeting was held, no collection was made, nor any mention of the support of a missionary. But the friends who entertained Mr. Wilder were interested, and he explained his desire for the support of a missionary, or of a station, by that church. They had a Bible-reading on missions, and the interest of the host and hostess deepened. Finally they rejoiced the heart of their guest by voluntarily undertaking the missionary's support.

Camel Still Lives. The pastor, on hearing it, said he hoped that his Church would have the credit of their generous act! If any pastor in any part of the civilized or Christian world should recognise his own views more or less represented in the story, we hope he will be convinced that there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in his philosophy; and that if he and his people will prove God by bringing the whole tithe into the storehouse, God will prove the greatness of His heart by opening the windows of heaven, and pouring out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

Gold from Ophir. It is but seldom that stress is laid upon the obverse side of Foreign Missions, and the indebtedness of the Church of Christ to the heathen emphasized. Rev. Principal Forsyth, D.D., has done this in a powerful way in a recent sermon preached before the Wesleyan Missionary Society. Incidentally he propounds two truisms, deserving careful thought in these days of a passionate rush to the mechanical side of existence, that "the missionary Gospel is the only imperial principle in permanence," and that "not all the pushing premiers of the time can secure our place if we are too energetic to wait upon the Lord. Dr. Forsyth says:—

> The Church may make saints, but it is always apostles that make the Church. When we speak of the great effect of the Church on the heathen, we should not forget the great blessing of the heathen to the Church. The receiving of them has been to the Church itself life from the dead. The Church has more faith in its own Gospel because of its proved power abroad. It is more sure of its own word. And it feels it to be not only a true word and a mighty, but a more pitiful word. Every missionary is preaching to the church that sent him no less than to the churches he founds. When we speak of the action of grace, do not forget the reaction of grace. Deep calleth unto deep. The Gospel's word to the world includes also its echo to the Church.

A Message from the East. Few incidents in connection with the Coronation are more striking than the presentation to the King, by the hand of Sir Harnam Singh Kunwar, K.C.I.E., the Prince of Kaparthula, one of the Coronation guests, of an address from the Indian Christians. The casket which contained it is of sandal wood, and the sections were carved in different parts of the country, so as to be representative of the whole of Protestant Christian India. Around the base are the words, "The King shall rejoice in Thy strength, O Lord. Exceeding glad shall he be of Thy salvation. Thou shalt present him with the blessings of goodness, and shalt set a crown of pure gold upon his head," a paraphrase of Psa. xxi. 1-3, which was used in the Coronation service. So the redeemed of the Lord gathered from the East speak to those from the North (Psa. cvii. 3) a message which, if it be prophetic, and God grant that it may be so, will herald another noble reign.

The Drink Trust. We congratulate the Morning Leader on its enterprise and boldness in dealing with the drink traffic as it is at present doing in a series of special articles. By every legitimate means the iniquity of our national shame must be forced upon the people's attention. We are afraid that the moral aspect of the question appeals now, as ever, only to the minority, and it is this aspect, of course, that Christian people chiefly emphasize. But we are equally concerned with the social and national aspects of it, and it is these that our contemporary is putting in clear light. If it be true, according to the popular proverb, that John Bull's feelings are most sensitive in the neighbourhood of his pocket, then this exposure of one of the most foolish and unjust of monopolies ought to do something to awaken him.

Where is thy Brother? Speaking recently at the Cambridge meeting of the University Extension Students, Dr. Arthur Latham, dealing with the subject of "Natural Weapons against Disease," summed up the non-hygienic conditions under which a large proportion of the population of these islands exist—"bad air, poor and insufficient food, deficient shelter, inadequate clothing, and the manifold potent influences which are concomitant with poverty." He said:—

> Already the diminution in the death-rate effected by better sanitary conditions means a saving of 75,000 lives per annum to this country, or three-quarters of a million every ten years. Consumption kills 40,000 a year, and seizes 200 fresh victims every day, and embitters the lives of 150,000 of our brethren and sisters.

Yet we have been provided with the "sure weapons" of light and fresh air, and healthy food and rest, and the fact that thousands and thousands of those around us are shut out from the full enjoyment of them points to a dread individual responsibility. The evil conditions which underlie Dr. Latham's figures are in no degree part of the Divine government of the universe.

"Blessed are the Merciful." In an able and interesting letter on "Society and the Transgressor," a correspondent of the Daily News deals with the difficult question of the "prejudice, amounting to a superstition," which attaches a lasting stigma to the unhappy persons who at any time have come under the criminal law. Recent legislation has done much in the way of preventing this unhappy burden being laid upon young shoulders, but those who work among discharged prisoners are only too well aware that the instances are almost numberless of men and women, who desire to live honest lives, being turned out of employment owing to their one slip in life following them. To such there often seems to be no escape save into a life of crime. Unhappily, the development of healthy and Christianized public opinion is a slow process, but it is to that rather than to Parliament that we must look for the remedy. As regards the female offender, however, there is perhaps less difficulty, and, as Mr. Reginald Statham says, in referring to women who are driven to a life of shame "by the world's unwillingness to forgive their first lapse:"—

> If those who are concerned for the moral condition of the West-End of London would do their best, by consideration for first offenders, to cut off the supply of recruits, they would find their work very considerably lightened.

The Gospel of Peace. In a recent sermon preached at Westminster Abbey, Canon Hensley Henson, enjoining the duty of facing in a humble and responsible spirit the new situation created by victory, quoted a passage from Edmund Burke's speech of a century ago "On Conciliation with America," which is singularly applicable to our position to-day:—

> Magnanimity in politics is not seldom the truest wisdom; and a great empire and little minds go ill together. . . . We ought to elevate our minds to the greatness of that trust to which the order of Providence has called us. By adverting to the dignity of this high calling our ancestors have made the most extensive and the only honourable conquests, not by destroying, but by promoting the wealth, the number, and the happiness of the human race.

The burden laid upon us for our solemn fulfilment, if we are to make the declaration of peace a declaration of war against all that is evil, was summed up by Jeremy Taylor over two hundred years since: "The best way to make men to be good subjects to the King is to make them good servants of God."

Work for Returned Soldiers. Lord Kitchener appeals to industrial centres and employers to take practical steps to find good wage-earning positions for soldiers back from the war. No good comes of vague talk on this subject. Some definite efforts must be made to enable these thousands of time-expired men to find their way back to civil employment, with as little delay as possible. It would be a poor return to those who have undergone peril and hardship for their country, to throw them on the world without helping them to earn an honest living. It is not possible for them to be absorbed into the industrial life of the country without systematic co-operation among those who have control over the labour market. What is everybody's business is too often nobody's. After the plaudits and jubilation of the past few months comes the call for practical help towards those who have won victory for our arms.

The "Moralization" of Trusts. The alarming increase of irresponsible "trusts" in America, has at last awakened a reaction of feeling against them, which found forcible utterance in one of President Roosevelt's recent speeches. He is strongly in favour of Government control of these huge monopolies. He said:—

> There is clearly need of supervision, and need to exercise the power of legislation on the part of the representatives of the public, whenever, as in this country at present, business corporations become so very strong, both for beneficent work and work that is not always beneficent. . . . Some Governmental Sovereign must be given full power over these artificial and very powerful corporate beings. In my judgment, the Sovereign must be the National Government.

This bold and fearless utterance is the beginning of a new era in commercial life, and the effect of the President's speech has already been noticeable. If it gradually lead to the conviction that irresponsible wealth in the hands of private individuals is a menace to the well-being of the community, and demand a certain moral and legal control on the part of the community that created it, a great and beneficent revolution will be initiated.

An Old Meeting House. Still another landmark in the history of religion in England is about to be removed, as the chapel in Little Wild Street has to be pulled down in consequence of road improvements. Originally erected in 1651 for a Roman Catholic chapel, it soon passed into the hands of the Baptists, who held services there down to 1787, when it was taken down and the present building substituted. Many celebrated men, from Daniel Defoe downwards, have worshipped there, including Joseph Hughes, of Bible Society fame; John Thomas, the early colleague of Carey in India; and John Howard, the prison philanthropist. The St. Giles' Christian Mission has for about thirty years had its head meeting-place there, and it has been the centre of a noble work for the reclamation of prisoners and the salvation of the lost.

"The Religion of a Gentleman." Our contemporary, the Church Times, has lately taken to a novel method of warfare upon "Dissenters" and Evangelicals. The old arguments about "mental inferiority," "lack of education," &c., have had to be abandoned in the face of overwhelming facts to the contrary. Now our irrepressible contemporary is applying to Free Churchmen the variation of an epithet which was formerly applied to Evangelical Churchmen—"Dissent is not the religion of a gentleman." We are both grieved and amused to find a professing Christian paper descending to such a depth as this. It is an appeal to one of the meanest feelings which the human breast can cherish—a feeling which the Word of God condemns with unsparing severity. We are afraid, however, that it will find an echo in thousands of hearts, for to be à la mode is the great end of existence with vast numbers of people. Such considerations as fidelity to conscience and loyalty to the Word of God go for little with men and women whose sole ambition is to be regarded as belonging to the number of the world's elect.

Israel's Return. Reflection on practical questions as well as the study of prophecy has led many a Christian to take an interest in the Jewish problem. With this interest there may well be conjoined a concern for the evangelization of Israel—a work which God has laid upon the hearts of many during recent years. Among workers in this field, Dr. Andrew Moody, of Budapest, enjoys the loving confidence of all who know him; and in a book just issued, Israel's Return, and Other Verses (2s. Morgan & Scott), he affords us some clue to the secret of his devotion and success. Israel has a place in the purpose of God; hence the mission is not only justified but sure of blessing. The book is de luxe—printed on art paper and beautifully illustrated—and those who have feelings of compassion for the "tribe of the wandering foot," still "beloved for the fathers' sakes," will read it to pleasure and profit.

"Who is the Prince of this World?" Two of our readers seem to have misunderstood our Note, August 21, p. 11. Prebendary Webb-Peploe said:

> The Lord Jesus Christ . . . has taken the princedom of earth from Satan, and has cast him out. Now Satan is only "the prince of the power of the air." Christ Jesus is the Prince of this world.

This is true, for, by His death and resurrection, Jesus, the Second Man, the Lord from heaven, has recovered what the first man, Adam, lost. Satan is, alas! still "the god of this world," because the world idolatrously makes him so; and "as a roaring lion he goeth about seeking whom he may devour." But his day is coming. We shall tread Satan under our feet shortly. He will be cast into the bottomless pit when he has filled up his iniquity; the seventh trump will sound, and "the kingdom of this world will become the Kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ."

Two Kinds of Power.

II.—RESERVE.

By Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE.

THE impression is sometimes irresistibly made upon our minds, as we listen to some speakers, or read some authors, that they have a great store of thought and energy and capacity behind all that they let us see. We try to imagine how much more they could do if they tried, how much deeper and stronger is their feeling than they let us know. We are conscious of being under the influence of a masterful nature, and we have at once a sense of awe and satisfaction. There are two ways of carrying an audience—one, as we have seen, by allowing the thought and feeling of the moment to have unchecked sway and expression, not that it masters the speaker, but because he knows the rushing tide will carry his hearers where he would have them be; the other, by curbing feeling, by suggesting more than appears. I have heard a great preacher denounce sin with a lowered voice, yet distinctly audible, and with a calm steady pointing of the finger, which made you feel as if the eye of Omniscience were reading you and the hand of Omnipotence were upon you.

I illustrated the influence and effect of abandon, of strong feeling allowed to go, by the example of Dr. John Brown, of Edinburgh. I may use him again to show the power of reserve. "We all know what he is to speak of; he looks troubled even to distress; it is the matter of Uriah, the Hittite. He gives out the opening verses of the 51st Psalm, and offering up a short and abrupt prayer, which everyone takes to himself, announces his miserable and dreadful subject, fencing it, as it were, in a low, penetrating voice, daring any one of us to think an evil thought. There was little need at that time of the warning; he infused his own intense, pure spirit into us all.

"He then told the story, without note or comment, only personating each actor in the tragedy with extraordinary effect; above all, the manly, loyal, simple-hearted soldier. I can recall the shudder of that multitude as of one man when he read, 'And it came to pass in the morning that David wrote a letter to Joab, and sent it by the hand of Uriah; and he wrote in the letter saying, 'Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the hottest battle, and retire ye from him, that he may be smitten and die.' And then, after a long and utter silence, his exclaiming, 'Is this the man after God's own heart? Yes, it is; we must believe that both are true.' Then came Nathan. 'There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor. The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds; but the poor man had nothing, save one little ewe lamb'—and all that exquisite, that divine fable—ending, like a thunderclap, with, 'Thou art the man!' Then came the retribution, so awfully exact and thorough—the misery of the child's death; that brief tragedy of the brother and sister, more terrible than anything in Æschylus, in Dante, or in Ford; then the rebellion of Absalom, with its hideous dishonour, and his death, and the King covering his face, and crying in a loud voice, 'O my son Absalom! O Absalom! my son! my son!'—and David's psalm, 'Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy lovingkindness; according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions.' Then closing with, 'Yes; when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death. Do not err, my beloved brethren; it is first earthly, then sensual, then devilish;' he shut the book, and sent us all away terrified, shaken, and humbled, like himself."

Pleasant it may be to hear sermons and addresses which are like the sound and motion of a river that runs an ever-varying course—now swift and noisy through the gorge, now slow and murmuring by the side of the meadow, and now musical and quick through the wood—but there is a distinct place for power which lies in designed, purposeful restraint and reserve. Rebuke is sometimes the most terrible because it has no tremor of passion; warning is the most awful because it is spoken with the hushed tone of one who has looked over the precipice and seen the dead lying at its foot. When hearers are apt to think that emotion and imagination play too large a part, then the address which is studied, careful, deliberate, and safely within the mark, will probably have the greater weight.

Such subjects as Sin, the Death of our Lord and Saviour, the Nature and Attributes of the Almighty, and the Doom of the Ungodly ought to be handled with manifest care and awe. The spirit in which the work is done will, perhaps, do more good than the work itself; and the spirit is perceived in voice and manner, as much as in language.

We have the reason to convince, the will to turn from evil to good, the heart to win, the life to mould; and in all this we must leave room and play for those whom we seek. A delicate reserve is necessary in order to encourage the action we wish to see them take. Urgency may hinder where restraint may help. Suggestion may occasionally prove more effectual than statement. It is a noticeable thing that John Wesley, who says he himself seldom or never acted upon impressions, but generally as reason and conscience dictated, made his appeals to reason and conscience, and did so in a singularly calm manner. It was the same with Jonathan Edwards, who, I believe, used to hold his sermon in his hand, and stand and read it. The beliefs of the two men were very dissimilar in some respects, yet in one way their method was the same, and the Holy Spirit used them both.

To take an illustration from secular life—Richard Cobden is said to have been a calm, restrained speaker, who depended upon his facts and arguments to produce impression and carry conviction. True, there was a marvellously winning manner, which expressed a very kind and sincere nature; but his dependence was on mind rather than on heart; and one of his most distinguished opponents used to say that you might as well capitulate to him as soon as he rose to speak, for he was sure to convince you before he had finished.

The Church and the world need the consecration of the gift of reserve to the Saviour's service. We may sometimes have heard the Divine truth set forth in a way that was tantalizing for its studied self-control, but the power of reserve is power. Our Saviour knew how to keep men in awe and how to influence them by being silent, by refraining from gratifying their curiosity and by urging them to do their simple duties. The might of His restraint is as impressive as that of His abandon to His work. He was perfectly self-controlled.

Isle of Man Convention.—The annual Convention for the promotion of practical holiness, held at Castletown, Isle of Man, has been largely attended. Each day's sessions were marked by a spirit of prayerful waiting upon God, and the addresses proved helpful and stimulating. Among the speakers were Dr. A. T. Pierson, Dr. Joscelyn, Rev. J. M. Spicer and Mr. G. Kay. Dr. Pierson's final address on the "old" and the "new" man, was a call for entire consecration.

Obedience and Rest.

"Let us labour to enter into that rest" (Heb. iv. 11). "Let us fear, lest any should seem to have come short of it" (Heb. iv. 1, R.V.).

THIS Epistle abounds with admonitions of a rallying, stimulating kind. "Let us." It is as if the inspired Apostle would remind both himself and his Christian kinsmen that the "middle wall of partition" between Jews and Gentiles had indeed been "broken down," and that henceforth their aims and aspirations, and their responsibilities, too, are the same.

To the Hebrew, most of all, the history and the types of the Old Testament times were familiar and full of meaning. And yet, perhaps, the Hebrew Christian, more than any other, was in danger of misapplying or misinterpreting them. Most clearly, most simply, and oftentimes most solemnly, is the spiritual meaning of the familiar symbols enforced throughout the Epistle, with the leading argument, "How much higher, greater, better," kept well to the front. "Higher than the angels"; "greater than Moses"; "a better covenant"; "blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than that of Abel"—all these and other points are fully proved.

Here, in the fourth chapter, it is a better "rest" that is under consideration, and they are urged not to lose it—not even to "seem" to lose it, through the same fatal unbelief ("disobedience" R.V.) which was the hindrance to the enjoyment of that typical rest to which Joshua was the leader.

"Let us labour (R.V. 'give diligence') to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of disobedience." The unbelief was a fact, and was, indeed, the root of Israel's disobedience;

DISOBEDIENCE IS PRACTICAL UNBELIEF.

Perhaps we have regarded faith chiefly as an emotion, impulse, or principle. It is such, but it is also actively and intensely practical. When we are pledged to "fight the good fight of faith," it is no imaginary and sentimental warfare that lies before us, but actual, close conflict with foes without and foes within. If it should, at first, appear a confusion of terms to speak of labouring to enter into rest, yet it is only in appearance that there is any obscurity. Victory follows fighting; peace is often preceded by pain and unquietude; and rest, the rest here contemplated, is the result of giving "diligence" to grasp and inherit the promises.

Joshua's rest was Canaan. Our rest is a participation in all the blessings of the new Covenant. All the graces, all the gifts, all the glory become one in Him—the Lord Jesus, a name which the writer of this Epistle seems especially to love to use. The title, Christ, so usually given by the Apostles to our Lord after His ascension, occurs but rarely in this Epistle. Of this, Dean Alford beautifully remarks, "To Christ all that is predicated of our Lord belonged officially; but when it is predicated of Jesus it becomes personal fact, realized in One Whom we know, and Who loves us."

Obviously, we cannot earn rest by any merit or any effort of our own. "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest" is the blessed promise, never yet repealed, nor can rest of conscience be obtained in any other way.

Here, rest thee, troubled heart,
Let care and anguish cease;
Take from those wounded hands
His legacy of peace.

But to those who, trusting in the atoning work of the Lord Jesus, receive this free gift from His willing hands, there comes yet this other call: "Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me, and ye shall find rest to your souls." Soul-rest, heart-rest, must be found in doing the will of Jesus. Obedience is one of its primary conditions. As long as we are bent on taking our own way, or doing our own will, we cannot know this heart-rest; but by the yielded will and the obedient, trustful heart it will be found.

Obedience is so closely allied to faith that they are virtual synonyms. The same action is attributed to the one as to the other

(cf. Acts xv. 9; 1 Peter i. 22). Obedience may be said to be the flower of which faith is the root. Obedience is faith in blossom (1 Peter i. 2; Rom. i. 5; xvi. 26). We quickly recognise that it was unbelief which kept the Israelites from entering into their inheritance; but the Apostle here strikes at the heart of the evil, and tells us they "entered not in because of disobedience."

"Let us labour, therefore, to enter into that rest," is the important lesson for each one of us to learn; and "let us fear, too, lest any should seem to have come short of it." Alas! how many still seem, at any rate, to have come short of the rest which the Lord would have His people enjoy. Alas for the

of so many of God's people! Alas for the too eager pursuit of this world's fleeting honours, as if "the land of their inheritance" in Christ had failed to satisfy their cravings. They would shrink from expressing any thought of the kind, and yet to lookers-on it must, at any rate, "seem" as if many a professed child of God and heir of heaven had "come short" of his spiritual birthright.

Should it not be a point of honour with us to avoid bringing any such reproach upon the sacred Name we bear? Shall we not heed the warning voice which rouses us to fear lest we should even seem to have come short of that to which the promise of God is attached?

Let us beware, too, of

in any of its varied forms. To refuse to take the "next step," when it is made clearly known as the will of God, is to bring darkness upon our souls; and many a time it is only by painful discipline that we are won back to our true allegiance.

We are led by widely differing paths, but by one Spirit, and to each of us, surely, at some time and in some form the opportunity will be given to show our love to Christ, and to answer back loyally to the Divine summons to nobler heights of service or of suffering for His name's sake. Or if not called to any one crowning act—to any personal experience of Moriah's swift, stupendous, self-surrendering summons,—yet there are for each one of us undoubtedly the daily test and tension of home life and homely duties, wherein may be found just as really

> Room to deny ourselves—a road
> To bring us daily nearer God.

Let us make it our ambition to be found "faithful in that which is least," and we may then safely leave the greater matters in His hands. Let us fearlessly follow where His finger points the way, and while casting away every fear that He disallows—every fear which brings darkness and bondage to the soul—"let us fear," nevertheless, this one godly fear, lest a promise having been left of entering into His rest (the very rest of God) "any of you should seem to have come short of it."

LUCY A. BENNETT.

A Child of Thine Own.

New life and new hope and new gladness of heart,
Dear Saviour of sinners, 'tis Thine to impart;
Thy blood for the sins of a life can atone,
Now cleanse me, and make me a child of Thine own.

My nature how sinful, my weakness how great!
For Thee, blessed Saviour, I watch and I wait.
By Thee shall I conquer. Thy Spirit alone
Can cleanse me, and make me a child of Thine own.

In darkness or daylight Thy guidance I need,
My footsteps in safety Thou only canst lead;
Thy Gospel the way of salvation hath shown.
Now take me, and make me a child of Thine own.

Thy joy in my heart shall my strength ever be,
For nothing can harm me while trusting in Thee;
Tho' sinful have oft been the years that are flown,
Lord Jesus, now make me a child of Thine own.

Thy light on life's pathway my spirit shall cheer,
Thy voice on the waters shall prove Thou art near;
Thy whispers of love as soft zephyrs have blown,
Now make me for ever a child of Thine own!

The Wesleyan Pastoral.

THE annual Pastoral Letter addressed by the Wesleyan Methodist Conference to the members of the Societies is an important document. Opening by pointing out how loudly the circumstances of the present time call attention to the spiritual conditions and needs of our national and public life, special emphasis is laid on the value of the sense of brotherhood which has developed during recent months between the different sections of the British race—as a force for the organization of missionary enterprise in other lands, and for the solution of the moral and spiritual problems within our own borders.

With the restoration of peace our country is enabled once more to consider those problems of spiritual, moral, and social importance which war of necessity thrusts into the background. It is daily impressed upon us that we are on the eve of momentous changes in many departments of our national, commercial, and industrial life, and that these changes will call for the most earnest attention on the part of Christian men. The vast increase of scientific knowledge, and its many-sided application to the various needs of our practical life, have well nigh annihilated both time and space. The whole world stands in closer relationship to us at the present time than did the various parts of this country to one another in the days of John Wesley. The closeness of our intercourse, the immense powers now possessed for the production and distribution of wealth, and the almost world-wide co-operation and competition for these ends, bid fair to revolutionize the conditions of our industrial and commercial life. We are hastening, as never before, to a goal which no man can foresee. The changes which are taking place greatly quicken the activities of life, increase its pressure, and multiply its anxieties. The progressive nations of the world seem threatened with the sway of commercialism carried on in the spirit of war.

With true spiritual insight the congregations are pointed not only to the need, but to the provision made by the Lord of the Harvest.

The most urgent need of the times is that of a great spiritual movement, issuing from a revival of religion in the broadest and truest sense Evangelical. The greed of gain can only be exorcized by "hunger and thirst after righteousness," the materialism of life by the gift of "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." Evil cannot be cured by negative protests, but must be dethroned by the accession of good.

The foundations for such a movement must be laid in the old fashion. Nothing can take the place of prayer and the preaching of the Gospel.

We entreat you to offer unceasing prayer that God will, of His great mercy, bestow such a spiritual revival upon the world. Such prayer, however, involves the realizing faith which enables us at once to co-operate to the full with the will of God. We are called, therefore, by the most constraining motives to set forth Christ in relation to the pressing needs of the present day. In the first place by strong and courageous teaching. The power of such teaching is not intellectual, but lies in the simplicity and fulness of our experience of Christ as the gracious Redeemer, who, in saving us from sin, satisfies our spirits and calls forth those spiritual powers by which every relationship of life may be fulfilled and every interest of life served—in love, dutifulness, and unselfishness. Thus to proclaim Christ as Lord of the broadest human issues, because He is the Saviour of the human heart, is the great Evangelical message needed for our times.

The tone of the whole address is hopeful and stimulating, with a full recognition of the gravity of the situation. Great privileges impose corresponding responsibilities.

The manifold tokens of God's blessing vouchsafed to us in the recent past are a Divine indication that this evil shall not befall us. But that it may not it behoves us to betake ourselves to God once more, in unceasing prayer for a renewed baptism of the Holy Spirit. And we must resolutely guard those institutions and observances which are needful, if spiritual influences are to be deepened and preserved.

A call to take a full share in great public movements is expressed in terms which appeal to every true heart.

Care should be taken to awaken interest in, and to give support to, the great moral movements of our time, so that the full force of our churches may be enlisted to destroy the danger and disgrace of intemperance and lust. . . . In all such matters we must not shrink from bearing our share of responsibility according to our power.

There is nothing new here. These are but the old truths lovingly expressed in the language of our modern every-day life; but they ring out the call to duty and to faith in God in such fashion as fires men to fresh zeal when it may be they have become a little discouraged.

The Great Day of Beholding.

IN the year of the Diamond Jubilee, one of her late Majesty's Indian subjects—a very aged native Christian woman—expressed a wish to come to England to see the Great White Queen.

"But it costs a great deal of money to go," said an English friend.

"I know—I have the money, many pounds," was the reply. "Day by day I saved it; here a little, there a little, unto the great day of beholding."

She came to London, paying a guinea for a seat where she might sit to behold her Queen, the fulfilment of her chief earthly desire.

Presently, as all eyes turned in one direction, and a mighty roar rose from the throats of thousands of loyal subjects, the Indian woman rose in her seat, and in awed and reverent silence awaited the passing of her sovereign.

"There is the Queen—see, bowing—she is looking this way!" cried the English lady, who sat beside her friend from the East.

"Yes, it is enough; I have seen," was the quiet, almost sad, reply.

The English lady heard the note of disappointment in the voice.

"Are you satisfied with what you have seen?" she asked.

"She is great in name, but to the eye she is small, and of no beauty," replied the Indian, a far-away expression in her eyes.

The woman returned to her native land; they asked her about the great Mother-Queen, and she spoke only of the pageantry of that day.

"But what of the Great Queen herself?" they persisted.

"She fills the heart, but not the eye," was the answer. "One lesson have I learned—'none but Christ can satisfy'; He is all-glorious within; He is the Chief among ten thousand, and the altogether lovely, as I know."

The voyages and the excitement had been too much for the feeble frame; her earthly hope accomplished, she now longed to depart.

"I shall see the King in His beauty!" she cried, when they told her she would soon pass from earth. "No money have I to pay for this journey, no money do I need; Christ my King has paid it all for me."

"You are not afraid to go this journey alone?" they asked her.

"I am not alone—my Father is with me," said the feeble voice. "He has prepared a place for me, and 'when I awake I shall be satisfied.'"

No more disappointments! No ambition which, when realized, fails to satisfy. Nothing and no one but perfect Love to fill the heart and eye on the "Great Day of Beholding."

> "I shall sleep sound in Jesus—
> Filled with His likeness rise,
> To love and to adore Him,
> To see Him with these eyes.

M. B. GERDS.

Atlanta, Ga., U.S.A.—An Infirmary and Home for Helpless Women and Children has been opened by Dr. Broughton in connection with his Tabernacle, to afford an efficient training for Christian nurses, and to supply a great need among the poor in cases of sickness. A faculty of twelve of Atlanta's best doctors has charge of the medical training of the pupils in nursing. Lectures are given twice a week. The pupils are first assigned work in the infirmary under the head nurse. Later, they will be occupied in district work among the poor of the city; but will still continue to attend the lectures. The young ladies in training agree to go when and where assigned. They sleep and eat exactly like those they are working with. The nursing done by them among the poor is without charge. The course covers two years in medicine and the study of the Bible. It is adapted for missionaries intending to go to foreign fields, as well as nurses preparing for Christian work or the regular profession of nursing.

Blankenburg Conference.

A LITTLE word spoken by Dr. Baedeker in the course of a conversation gave the keynote to the seventeenth Conference of the Evangelical Alliance at Blankenburg, August 25-29. Speaking of Church and other differences, he said: "What a good thing it is that we can love one another over the wall."

"Love" was the pass word of the Conference, brotherly love and union the burden of each of the speakers. The Holy Ghost was there, and He was the chief arranger, so that brethren after listening to an unknown language, stood up, and unconsciously carried on the thread of preceding speakers, completing or enlarging the message, or throwing new light upon an old truth.

Among those taking part were Dr. Baedeker, Colonel von Knobelsdorff, Baron von Thuemmler, Pastor Stockmayer, General von Viebahn, Inspector Rappard (of the St. Chrischona Missionary Training School), Pastor Jellinghaus, Inspector Janssen, &c. Pastor Frank Thomas, of Geneva, represented the French-Swiss brethren, and of the English there were Mr. Walter B. Sloan, of the China Inland Mission, as delegate from the Keswick Convention; Mr. W. R. Lane, Pastor Fuller Gooch and Mr. R. C. Morgan, the last two as delegates of the British Evangelical Alliance.

The organizing lay this time mostly in the hands of Pastor Mascher (son-in-law of Pastor Fuller Gooch), who proved himself fully equal to the occasion. The task of providing and arranging for the comfort of guests was fulfilled by the Misses Nordsieck with usual grace and faithfulness. Exquisite courtesy reigned throughout, much appreciated by the visitors.

THE WELCOME MEETING.

At the welcome meeting in the evening of August 25, Dr. Baedeker, after reading Psalm cxxxiii., gave a hearty welcome in the name of the brethren present and absent, to the visitors from far and near, who assembled in this Allianzhaus, not for the sake of its beauty, or because it was a seat of the Alliance, but that they might worship God in the union of the spirit.

Diaconus EICHLER, of Blankenburg, followed with a searching address, after reading Psalm xxxvii. 7, 8. He referred to Elijah on Mount Horeb, how the Lord passed by, and a great and a strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks; but the Lord was not in the wind, nor in the earthquake, nor in the fire. He sometimes speaks with these terrible voices, but more frequently with a still small voice, a faint whisper. In order to hear it we must be still unto the Lord. Search thy heart and remember that he who hateth his brother, in him is not the love of God; that love which is strange to natural likes or dislikes; a love that loves his neighbour for the sake of Christ and His cross; which is not a matter of choice, but of our spiritual birth.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN, speaking for British Christians generally and for the Evangelical Alliance, returned hearty thanks for the cordial welcome given. He assured the German Christians of the love of their English brethren, a love not affected by political or commercial considerations, for love in the Spirit is only possible to the life which is hid with Christ in God. The Church of God is a great Evangelical Alliance, a union of all who have believed and received the Evangel of the Lord our Saviour. What is Evangelical is true; what is not Evangelical is not true. There never was a time when the children of God more needed to hold together in defence of the Gospel from its many enemies. He referred with thanksgiving to God to the deep and wide Revival in the Antipodes, and felt sure they all desired and prayed that it might extend to the European Continent and islands, and throughout the world.

Colonel VON KNOBELSDORFF read in Neh. iv. passages with reference to the building of Zion's wall. The wall was completed. How? By bringing together through the sound of the trumpet all that were scattered abroad. Blankenburg has such a trumpet, and we come together for what purpose? Is it simply to enjoy ourselves? If our hearts are burning with a holy fire, we come here to help in building up the spiritual wall of the spiritual Zion. We cannot do it unless we are united in brotherly love. Where God's children draw together free from prejudice, envy, enmity, and suspicion, there the Lord is blessing their united work. This had been proved at the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Blue Cross (Temperance) Society, recently celebrated in Switzerland.

GATHERINGS FOR PRAYER.

Each day began with a prayer meeting from 7.45 to 9, followed by general meetings from 10 to 12, from 4.15 to 5.30 or 6, and from 8 to 9.30 or 10.

None were more profitable or enjoyable than those for prayer conducted by Dr. Baedeker, who is an object lesson of a Christian brought in middle age to the knowledge of the true God and eternal life, filled with the spirit of love to the brothers whom he has seen, to God whom he has not seen, and to all the world, for whom Jesus died. Every morning his own extensive experience and loving sympathy were communicated to the hundreds who assembled as he urged the claims of the world, civilized or uncivilized, lying in the wicked one, told of the progress of the Gospel and its many adversaries, and directed the stream of supplication to countries and individuals on whose behalf requests had been sent in. Some of the prayers were too long and did not always adhere closely to the subject, but in a perfectly free and open meeting this may be expected. Much of the prayer was marked by love and sympathy for men and faith and hope in God.

"THE EXCELLENCY OF THE KNOWLEDGE."

The main subject of the Conference was—The excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, according to Phil. iii. The chairman, Colonel von KNOBELSDORFF, said that the chapter contained a treasury so great and dazzling that one needed a guide to explain it. Pastor STOCKMAYER was the first to point out the jewels in it. He was followed by Pastor FULLER GOOCH and other men of God, who expounded this chapter every day from 10 to 12.

In the afternoons and evenings free subjects were taken. At the Evangelical Alliance meeting on Wednesday evening there was again a clear sound as to the conditions of a true alliance spirit. Striking were the references to John xvii. Baron THUEMMLER, who presided, began by telling of two Swedish brethren who came to a Christian brother in England with a letter of recommendation. On being told that he wished for another testimony, one of them opened the Bible and read, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." He urged upon each one to ask himself the question: "Am I able to say the same?" The followers of the Lamb must be able to say yes. Their enemy is Satan and not their neighbour. He closed by pleading for a greater and larger union of Christians, so necessary in the conflict with the world. Notes of an address by Pastor FULLER GOOCH, who followed, will appear in our next issue.

Colonel von KNOBELSDORFF, who represented the Berlin Committee of the German Alliance, followed with a speech full of points. Pastor DOLMAN spoke for the West-German branch of the Alliance. Dr. Baedeker urged that brotherly love should go hand in hand with active love, protecting the weak brethren in far-away Russia and other lands. The meeting terminated with an inspiring and very eloquent address from Pastor LAMERDIN, from South Germany.

ONENESS IN CHRIST.

Pastor FRANK THOMAS, of Geneva, who preaches the Gospel in that city Sunday by Sunday, in a rented music-hall, to 1,800 people, began by expressing his pleasure to be at Blankenburg, especially after his visit to Christiania, where, from fourteen different countries, about 2,100 delegates had assembled on the occasion of the Y.M.C.A. Conference, with the aim of glorifying God. Not a word was spoken about church. The theme was the Kingdom of God and of His Christ. To the speaker the work of the Alliance is the manifestation of God's principle in His Word. Christ first, and then His Church, and not vice versâ.

To realise John xvii., it is not enough to be religious, or good and upright in the sense of the world, but it is of tremendous consequence that we should pass through death to self and sin into the resurrection life of Christ and be healthy and vigorous in the exercise of that life. Not a hospital is wanted, crowded with sick and infirm Christians, but a mighty army of valiant soldiers. Unfortunately we have no such army.

We do not hate our brother now, but we indulge towards him sentiments of dislike and prejudice, and at the best, indifference. We are, perhaps, not so pessimistic as we used to be, yet we have nothing of the joy that is in Him—in one Word, we have a Saviour who saves, but does not seem to deliver us from the power of sin. Why is this? Why do we lack the power of conquerors which ought to be ours according to the promise?

A lawyer who died the other day used to say, "If Christianity were true, all Christians would be miracles of grace." Why do they come short of being such miracles? Why do they scandalize the unbelievers, and become a stumbling-block to many? Because they have not, like Paul, seized and appropriated Christ.

In God manifested in flesh are united all the treasures of life, grace, victory, sanctification. The more we possess Christ, and the more we are possessed by Him, the more we shall be like Paul, to whom all things were but dung that he might win Christ (Phil. iii. 8).

In order to possess the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus the Lord, two conditions must be fulfilled — (1) ceasing to believe in our own selves, and (2) believing in none but Christ. A short definition of faith is to distrust oneself and to confide entirely in Jesus. In the first instance natural illusions must be sacrificed—invalid titles, by which we think to acquire merit, and which may be our natural goodness, innate honesty, our religious habits and good works, taking part in ordinances, &c. Saul of Tarsus was all this, yet his eyes were veiled until the Lord Himself interposed.

IMPOVERISHED LIVES.

Even after conversion half of the Christians have their lives impoverished by pride and selfishness. This is the wandering in the wilderness; but it is not necessary (Rom. vii).

In the story of Robinson Crusoe, the stranded man returns every day to the wrecked vessel, and he finds provision for the day, which proves that the story is not true. Equally hopeless it is to return to our old self for our spiritual provisions (Rom. xix).

Not until we have lost faith in ourselves are we prepared to fulfil the second condition, and to come to Christ. He alone can satisfy who has brought under his feet the great adversary; in Christ's death and resurrection we can contemplate the death of our own old self, and our entry into His risen life.

Let me say (1) to those who are contented with viewing Christ: Do not be contented until you have Himself. Notwithstanding all forms and good appearances, you will be lost without Him.

(2) To those who may be looking upon themselves with disgust, as their conscience tells them of the natural state of their souls: Do not be discouraged. Your present condition will be useful to you, if you make haste to get out of it.

(3) To those who may for some time have walked on the sanctified way. It may be that at this very moment He is trying you severely, taking all human props from under you. Be of good cheer; He will not let you fall.

When visiting the Niagara Falls, I remember how I smiled at the thought of a guide. For me, the mountain-child, he seemed superfluous. But when we came into the Cave of the Winds, the effect of the currents almost deprived me of my breath. How glad I was then to feel the hand of the guide upholding me! In our lives we need moments like these in order to recognize the power of Christ and of His resurrection.

Northfield Conference.

From Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE tide was rising all through the week. The audiences have been greater than ever before, and the spiritual power very deep. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan has taken the morning Bible lectures on the Minor Prophets, which have been very brilliant and greatly enjoyed. The eleven o'clock meeting has been addressed by several prominent American ministers, and I have spoken each evening, leading the great audience from step to step in the Divine life, till on Friday evening there was a definite waiting on the power and infilling of the Holy Spirit.

On Sunday, which was an exquisitely beautiful day, I preached in the morning on the government being on Christ's shoulders, and in the afternoon on, "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." Mr. Campbell Morgan at night delivered an impassioned appeal for the recognition of the Lordship of Christ, from the words, "If any love not the Lord Jesus, let him be Anathema. Maranatha." We had great results from the day's services in the after-meeting, which lasted till 11 p.m.

One happy sign of the deep impressions made has been the wiping of the debt of £1,600 off the Auditorium, which is now clear. The original cost was £10,000.

The majority of the people have gone home, but large numbers are still lingering for the subsequent addresses. We had a blessed season at our first gathering. Next week we start by the Lucania for the dear homeland, so that it will be unnecessary to write again, but I do magnify the grace of God which has been so mightily at work among the people, leading to absolute surrender, to many cases of restitution and confession, and to a recognition of the blessedness of a life spent in fellowship with an ungrieved Spirit.

Mr. W. R. Moody has been an admirable chairman, and his mother is much better in health. It is lovely to meet her in the old familiar homestead, fragrant with so many memories of the past.

Soul Winning.*

By Rev. Dr. JOHN BALCOM SHAW, New York.

IF we are the true followers of Him who came into the world not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life a ransom for others, we must serve mankind with one clear purpose before us—that we may regenerate society, and not simply ameliorate or improve it. In other words, the best way to serve our neighbour is to save him.

In Proverbs xi. 30 Scripture makes this clear affirmation: "He that winneth souls is wise," and the Revised Version renders it: "He that is wise winneth souls." The statement is true whichever rendering you take. The man that is truly wise will win souls, and only he that is wise can win souls. In other words, there is a secret to this work, and, like all God's secrets, it is known only to those who fear Him.

THE SECRET OF SOUL WINNING.

First and last, there can be, of course, only one secret of soul winning, and that is the Holy Spirit's co-operation with us. Without His aid our mightiest effort will be impotent, and with His help our weakest effort will be omnipotent; and, speaking again fundamentally, there is only one thing that conditions the Holy Spirit's co-operation with us, and that is our co-operation with Him.

(1) We co-operate with the Holy Spirit when we yield ourselves to His influence, and become the personal subjects of His gracious operation. Otherwise, what are we doing? We are resisting the Holy Spirit; and what is resistance but the very opposite of co-operation?

(2) We co-operate with the Holy Spirit when we share His purpose, and share it so truly and so deeply that it stirs our being to its depths, and fires us as with an all-controlling and consuming passion. If that be not the case, then in our purpose our face is in one direction, and the Holy Spirit, in His great impelling purpose, has His face in the opposite direction. We are at variance, and there can be no co-operation between us.

(3) We co-operate with the Holy Spirit when we join Him actively in His work, for a co-operation that is only negative is no co-operation at all.

I believe we shall discover the secret of the Lord in this matter along those three paths. I believe with my soul, and I believe so that I am willing to act it out, that we must go to the people. If they will not come to the church, we must carry the church to them; let us have our tents; let us hire our theatres; let us go to the race grounds and to the fair grounds—anything that is legitimate, in order to bring the life-saving Gospel of Jesus Christ to dying men around us.

When we are willing to give up some of what I call our conservatism of methods, and do that thing, or some other thing that is the likely thing and is the right thing under our conditions, God will honour His Word. What we want is the soil to get the seed into. It will sprout when we get the seed and the soil in contact; there is no doubt about that. Our business is to get the seed into the soil.

THE PERSONAL TOUCH REQUIRED.

There is one line that I want to suggest much more emphatically than any other. With all our living, and all our praying, and all our preaching, I believe there is something else. I believe that to render any one of these effective, we need the personal touch, what we choose to call in these days personal work, and in which we are altogether too neglectful; personal work that reaches a man where something else has failed fully to reach him. I believe that there are men in our churches to whom we are preaching every Sunday that are unsaved men, and will stay unsaved men so long as we depend upon our preaching. We may be afraid to go and speak to them. That man is the president of our board of trustees; that woman is one of the social leaders of our church; nominally they are Christians, but they have never taken a stand for Christ; they are dishonouring Him openly.

We are depending on our sermons, and our sermons are proving undependable. We need to say the word to such men, and, believe me, in my experience, such men have been surprised for years that we have never said the word to them. They have wondered why we have not come and talked to them on the subject of personal religion, as Dr. Adams' trustee in the Madison Square Church was surprised. When Dr. Adams came up on a Sunday night, after the service, to talk with him, the man looked him in the face and said: "Why haven't you done this before? For months now I have wondered why my pastor never said a single immediate and personal word to me about my own individual salvation." Men are waiting for it, and men are wondering why we do not give it.

MAKING HELPERS PRACTICAL.

Did you ever go over your church and pick out the men who have pews, and the members of their families sitting in those pews, who were unsaved, and hand them over to your officers, or to your active church women, to your other workers who were active in everything else, but were shrinking back when called to real spiritual personal service? I went over my pew record last spring, and I made up a list, and it astonished me. When I carried it to my session, the governing body of our church, and told Elder So-and-So that there sat twenty men and women, or young men and women, right around him in church Sunday after Sunday that had never confessed Christ, and asked him whether he had ever spoken to Mr. So-and-So and Mrs. So-and-So, and he confessed he had not, I saw one reason why the preaching of the Gospel wasn't so effective as it ought to be. Are you doing that sort of thing at home—saying that you are aflame with the passion for souls, then coming to Northfield, and going back and saying you are going to work for Christ as never before, and yet afraid to do personal work in your own church and among your own acquaintances? How about that boy in your family? You go to your minister, and say to him: "I don't know why it is that I cannot get hold of my boy; won't you come and talk with him and pray with him?" You have failed to say the personal word and give the personal touch in tactfulness and kindliness and persistence, and there is where your whole effort and your whole aspiration and desire have broken down, and broken down at your own door. Personal work: I have no other summons to give to the church to-day. Personal work—on the part of the minister, on the part of the church officer, on the part of the Sunday-school teacher, on the part of the rank and file of our membership; and until we have consecrated ourselves to that kind of work we shall pray to an unanswering heaven, and feel not so much as the first drops of rain in the shower for which we have been waiting all these years, and all these years upon years. God make us personal workers!

REACHING A COLLEGE BOY.

I came up here in New England to preach my yearly sermon to one of the colleges. I had preached to them annually for years. I had lived among these boys, for whenever I go there I stay in the chapter house of the fraternity, of which I am a member. I lived my life before them. I prayed for those boys. I had preached, with this thing in mind, the best Gospel sermons I could preach, but many of them had never been brought to confess Christ.

I made an appointment that afternoon in the Y.M.C.A. building, where I would meet those who wanted to talk to me on the subject; and one of the members of the fraternity chapter said, "I will go and show you the way." He knew perfectly well that I had been there years enough to know the way, and I thought there was something in the wind. When we got into the room I said: "Now, while we are waiting, suppose we talk upon the subject of religion." I saw his eyes begin to water. I knew there was something behind it; and then he said: "Yesterday was my twenty-first birthday, and I got such a letter from my mother that it just broke my heart. She said: 'Are you going to pass your twenty-first birthday and not be a Christian? I cannot bear to think of it. I pray of you to give your heart before nightfall to Jesus Christ. I have sent this letter just so it would reach you in the first mail in the morning, so that you might have all day and all the evening to think it over; and when you go to bed, won't you just kneel down and give yourself to Christ?' I am so glad you have spoken to me; it is just the time to speak to me." And we got down on our knees, and I prayed for the fellow and he prayed for himself.

Next morning, when I was on the way to the station in a cab, a snowy morning, at seven o'clock, he stood there by the roadside waiting for the cab to come along. Putting his head in he said, "It is all settled; I settled the matter before I went to bed last night, and you don't know what happiness is in my soul." Everything else had failed but personal work. May we not, many of us, trace our failure back to the same dereliction?

In the opening address of the Conference, Mr. Campbell Morgan made a striking and searching application of the message of John the Baptist; and at a later period also of 1 Cor. xv. 58, as a statement of "The Principal Work of the Church." Among the other leading addresses, Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke on "Rest in God" and "Sacrifice;" Rev. Dr. G. F. Pentecost (Yonkers, New York), on "Seeking the Law of the Lord;" Rev. Dr. H. C. Mabie, on "Evangelical Probation" (John ix. 39); Rev. Dr. Len G. Broughton (Atlanta), on "The Gift of Power" (Acts ii. 38, 39); Rev. Dr. E. Walpole Warren (New York), on "The Parable of the Unjust Steward;" Rev. Dr. Michael Burnham (St. Louis), on "Seeing Jesus;" Mr. Henry Varley, on "Hindrances to Obtaining Vigour in the Spiritual Life;" and Rev. H. W. Pope, on "How to Win Men for Christ." On September 1 President Roosevelt spent the night at Northfield, and delivered an address in the Auditorium. He also addressed some 500 young men at the Mount Hermon School.

Canary Islands Mission.

"THERE is no consolation here," said an old woman to me, with a sigh; and her poor old wrinkled face showed the sad meaning of her words. Therefore, believing it to be to the benefit of such sad ones, we report the little work we have been enabled to do in the course of another year, and send thanks to the kind friends who have helped to forward the work.

Tears of joy and relief rained down from the eyes of another old woman as she was told that there was no purgatory, and that by faith in Christ alone she would go to heaven when she died. One, having learned New Testament truth, has given herself to God and consecrated her life to Him; she is going among her friends with the "good news."

Many of the customs are the same as in the Holy Land. The camel is seen occasionally bearing the produce of the farm and ploughing the land. Oxen are seen treading out the corn and the whole family helping in the work. The women are the principal burden bearers, and carry everything on their heads, while the men have their horse or donkey to bear their loads, and never themselves bear anything.

The work grows rapidly. In every district there is wholesale inquiry and readiness to hear. We have hearers, and students, and believers. The afternoon class numbers five or six, and the people know by heart several portions of Scripture. We teach what we can in an hour daily, not so much the letter of the Bible as the spirit of it; we read the Bible to see God, to know Him, and that we may live with Him for ever. Thousands of people are against the priests; many are convinced that Jesus is the Son of God but are not converted, nor do many trouble to seek the truth. They still fear the denunciation of the priest; any religion is prohibited except the Roman Catholic.

This town of Laguna, from which I write, has many ancient palaces, also carved stone entrance ways, old iron lamp-work, projecting windows, carved and covered balconies up on the third floor; it is a centre of teaching and learning. Here is the university, the bishop's palace, also two convents; the influence of the place is felt over all the islands. Having given Gospels to many of the gentlemen of the town, and having opened a small library of Spanish books, we wait and pray to see fruit.

Thanks to the readers of The Christian for the gift sent, which is being used in the immediate work of sending out a Christian pedlar. A further report will be forwarded to those who wish. T. M. Macknight.

Miss Taylor's Work in Beyrout.

THE numerous friends of Miss Taylor will learn with much interest of a change which has taken place in the maintenance of her work at Beyrout. In June the proprietor of the house intimated that he was obliged to sell it, and that unless Miss Taylor could purchase it for £1,100 she would have to leave. No other house could be obtained in Beyrout. Rev. Thomas Young, of Ellon, brought the facts of the case before the Church of Scotland's Committee on the Jews, who contemplated establishing a boarding-school for girls in Beyrout, and believing that such a building as this would ultimately be of value to them, they agreed to purchase the house and grounds, and to rent them to Miss Taylor for as long as she is able to superintend the work.

The circumstances have brought out from missionaries and others warm testimony to the high purpose which the institution serves. Mr. Glockler, banker, Beyrout, writes: "At the present time I think I may safely say that this house is the only place in the whole city where Moslem men can be induced to come and listen to the Gospel message."

During the last six months no fewer than fifty-two girls—Moslems, Druses, and Jewesses—were boarded and educated in the institution, and over forty day scholars were taught at the Ras Beyrout School. The economy with which the school is conducted is shown by the fact that Miss Taylor, her two lady assistants, six or eight native teachers, fifty-two boarders, and over forty day scholars have been provided for at a cost of £282 for six months. Friends may communicate with Dr. Wm. Ferguson, Kinmundy, Mintlaw, N.B., or with the Editor of The Christian.

Orphanage for Hindu Boys.

FOR some months past there has been a little day school for boys, at Mukti Mission, India. This school is composed of the sons of Christian parents living at Mukti, a few Hindu boys, and some little fellows who came with sisters or mothers, who were too small to go to other places, and also two or three who were too weak to be passed on to other schools, who now seem to be a fixture, a part of ourselves.

Pandita Ramabai has been urging various parties to start a boys' orphanage in harmony with this work, and as a counterpart of it she feels that the time has come when she herself should start a boys' orphanage at Mukti. Her resident workers agree with her that the time has come for such a movement. As yet she has no building site and no workers; yet we know that when God commands the sea divides as His people go forward. Pandita Ramabai has a few boys as a beginning; more are expected this week.

A small printing press is to be put into operation soon, and other industries are already in operation in which boys can engage. The farm is here ready for their labours. A herd of buffalo cows and other cows, sheep, and goats are here awaiting their care. A tinshop, a tannery, and shoemaking are being started to keep these boys employed, and to furnish them with trades whereby they can earn a livelihood.

When Pandita Ramabai laid the corner-stone of Mukti, the following prayer came to her most forcibly: "That our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace" (Psa. cxliv. 12). One standing by asked why she included sons in her prayer. She could not then reply, save that the Holy Spirit gave the prayer. Ramabai hopes to see a great Christian settlement in these parts. In such a settlement there must be boys as well as girls. She hopes to see many Christian families spring forth from Mukti, who shall be prepared to spread the truths of God, not only by preaching the Word of God, but also by leading honest, industrious lives. It is no small responsibility which she undertakes in beginning a boys' school, and she has not taken up the work lightly and impulsively, but on the contrary, as a necessary outcome of the great plan God had prepared for her ere she knew how He was leading her on. Pandita Ramabai recognises God's hand, and has stepped out by faith, knowing that the same God who has hitherto supplied all her need, will not forsake her now.

We ask God's people to unite with us in prayer that the Lord may send workers filled with the Spirit, and in sympathy with the work, to live among these boys and train them for God. Minnie F. Abrams.

Among Soldiers at Bloemfontein.

AT No. 8 General Hospital, Bloemfontein, Gospel meetings are held four evenings in the week by an indefatigable chaplain, Rev. S. S. Stilt, who has the simple Gospel for his message, a message which always attracts the soldier as well as the civilian.

There is always a good attendance, the seats all being occupied by patients in the hospital, or soldiers from the neighbouring camps. The singing is most hearty, and the hour passes all too quickly.

The meetings are held in a tent comprised of two hospital marquees joined together, thus making quite a large room. The tables in one half are covered with papers, kindly sent from home, and which are greatly appreciated—being sent on to the blockhouses when a fresh supply arrive.

The work done at these meetings has been very successful, many recovering from dangerous illnesses having joyfully found Jesus as their Saviour, and taken Him as their Guide and Friend in the new life to which they have been raised up.

An Officer, R A.

No one who has not tried it would believe how many difficulties are cleared out of a man's road by the simple act of trying to follow Christ.—Alex. McLaren.

Miss Sandes' Soldiers' Homes

AT the opening a few days ago of the Soldiers' Home at the Glen Imaal Camp, in the Wicklow Mountains, the Duke of Connaught said to Miss Sandes (Soldiers' Home, Cork), before leaving, "I think it will gratify you to know that the officers commanding here have spoken to me of the excellent influence this Home has on the men; the behaviour in this camp has always been good, but this season it has been exemplary, and there has been a marked decrease of crime since the Home was opened."

A friend writes: "I met a young officer from the camp the other day, who was greatly struck with the way the men swarmed into your Home and left the canteen alone. He said the camp was quite different from what it was before your Home was open." "Eh," said one lad, "this camp is all right as long as Miss Sandes is here, but before the Home was built, I tell you it was the most miserable place you ever saw. We looked round the rooms; there they were, laughing, chatting, singing, playing, some writing letters to the old folks at home. At eight o'clock the meeting begins, the men crowd in, and settle down for a sing; as each hymn ends a dozen voices give out another, and so on till it is time for Miss Sandes' talk.

At present the Camp Homes at Glen Imaal and Ballykinler (co. Down) are in full swing; the former is paid for, the latter only partially so. At Kilbride a Camp Home is being built, and will be ready (D.V.) early next spring; for this there is very little money in hand. The needs of Kildare press heavily on Miss Sandes' heart. Six batteries of Royal Artillery are stationed there all the year round, and nothing is being done for them. These batteries have all been at Glen Imaal, and night after night they say, "What shall we do when we go back to Kildare? Can't you get us a Home there like this, we do want it so badly."

New Homes are now being opened in Dundalk and Londonderry; friends are collecting funds for Homes in three needy Irish stations—Holywood, Mullingar, and Cahir.

The needs of the British soldier in India are ever before us, and in addition to the six Homes already established, Miss Schofield is now making arrangements for work on a large scale during the great Delhi Durbar, which will open about January 1, 1903.

The Government have granted the use of twenty-six large marquees, and these she purposes using as temporary Homes for the six weeks of the Durbar, during which time thousands of British troops from all parts of India will be massed in Delhi. The only sad part will be when Miss Schofield has to say goodbye to the regiments going back to dark, lonely, neglected stations where there are no Homes.

Four men in Quetta, great drinking companions, used to spend all their free time in drink and sin in the bazaar. When the Soldiers' Home was opened they went in, with hundreds of others, and spent every night after that in the Home. By degrees each one of these four men was deeply convicted of sin. They tried to hide from each other how utterly miserable they were, and used to slip in to the nightly meetings, each by a different door, hoping to be unobserved by the others. One evening, about a week after the Home opened, one of the four definitely handed himself over to the Lord Jesus; the next night the second man trusted; the following night the third man, and at the end of the fourth day all four had found the living Saviour.

Christian Progress in Assam.—The latest census report from Assam shows an increase of more than 100 per cent. in the Christian population during the last decade, bringing the number up to 35,969 persons. Mr. Allen, the writer of the report, describes the increase as due largely to the great success of the Welsh Mission among the hill tribes. The absence of any caste system or social prejudice among the people makes them more ready to accept Christianity than the members of the great Eastern religions. The higher standard of morality demanded by the missionaries from their people is a stumbling block. The educational work of the missionaries is the subject of special commendation.

THE LATE

Dr. Joseph Angus.

THROUGHOUT all the churches there is a keen sense of loss through the death last Thursday afternoon of Rev. Dr. Joseph Angus, which took place at his residence, 5, Ellerdale Road, Hampstead, at the ripe age of eighty-six years.

Few men have left a deeper impression on the religious life and thought of our time than the well-known preacher, teacher and writer whose loss we mourn. He was held in deserved honour far beyond the limits of the denomination of which he has been so distinguished an ornament. Indeed, the whole Church of Christ was indebted to him for distinguished services rendered through his writings, and notably for his share in the revision of the New Testament. As we review the vast range of knowledge and activity of which his public work gives evidence, we find abundant proof that to the genius of natural aptitude there was added that invaluable species of genius which consists in the capacity for taking infinite pains. His indomitable industry and consecrated intellectual gifts have put Dr. Angus in the front rank of the religious leaders of the age.

Born near Morpeth, on the 16th of January, 1816, Dr. Angus came of a family which for generations has been noteworthy for sturdy adherence to principle, and has sent many of its sons into positions of honourable public service. Having received the elements of education in the Old Grammar School of Newcastle, he came to London in 1833 to attend classes at King's College. This became the turning point of his life. On the one hand, the brilliant promise of the young student pointed to a great career in one of the national universities; but, on the other, conscientious objections to subscribing the Articles of the Church of England prevented him from following out the inviting path which thus opened so invitingly before him. Following the dictates of a conscience,he was led to enter Stepney College as a student for the Baptist ministry. After a brief course there, he went to Edinburgh, where he had a brilliant career, carrying off most of the prizes and one of the gold medals of his year. His only pastoral charge was at New Park Street, Southwark, which had been the scene of the labours of the venerable Dr. Rippon, and in which he was destined to be succeeded by one of the greatest preachers of the time, and one of the most influential—Charles Haddon Spurgeon.

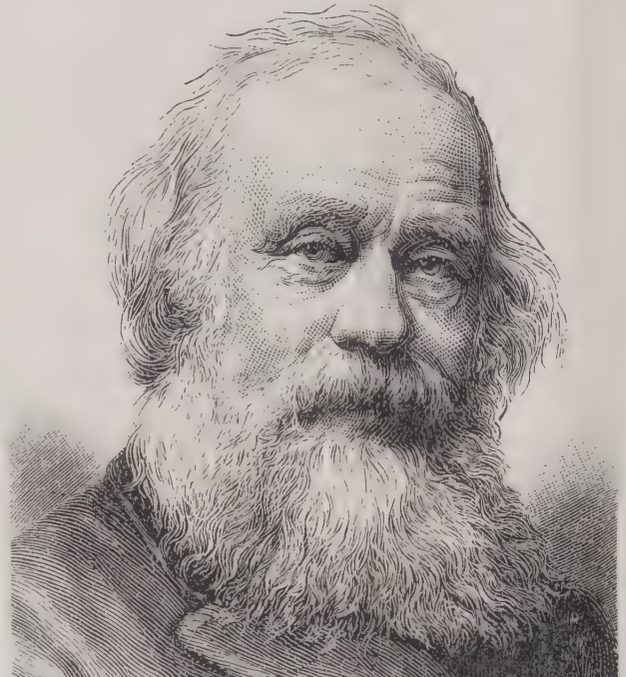
In 1839 Mr. Angus accepted the post of joint-secretary to the Baptist Missionary Society, which at that time was reaping the result of the magnificent appeals of William Knibb and others, and was being carried forward on a wave of consecrated enthusiasm and devotion to enlarged operations both in the East and the West. For ten years he rendered distinguished service in this responsible position, being mainly instrumental in the raising of the Jubilee Fund of £32,000 in 1842. He visited the churches in Jamaica in 1847.

Invited in 1849 to become president of the Stepney College, this trusted leader filled the position with conspicuous honour and success. The wise, statesmanlike policy which led to the transference of the College to Regent's Park—the residence of the late Mr. Holford—and the raising of a fund of £40,000 for the furtherance of the objects to which the institution is devoted, were largely due to his sagacity and energy. All over our own land, and in every other part of the world, men who passed through his hands are serving God with power and ability.

In addition to his numerous and heavy duties at the College, which he only relinquished entirely about nine years ago, and to the fulfilment of many preaching engagements throughout the country, Dr. Angus found time for writing books which give evidence of much research as well as original thinking, and have deservedly enjoyed a great circulation. Among these we may mention—"The Bible Handbook," "The Handbook of English Literature," and an edition of "Butler's Analogy" with notes. He possessed a remarkably clear style and a great power of methodical arrangement. His spirit was reverent and earnest, his piety sincere and unaffected, his sympathies catholic and generous.

In these days, when so many questions are raised respecting the authenticity and authority of the Scriptures, we seriously question whether the value of the "Bible Handbook" is sufficiently appreciated by those who are responsible for the training of the rising generation. The author sets forth in scholarly fashion the varied claims of the Holy Bible to be received as a Divine revelation of what is necessary for human salvation. The book is truly a valuable "introduction to the study of sacred Scripture."

Dr. Angus filled such important public offices as Examiner at London University and President of the Baptist Union. He was a member of the London School Board, and of the New Testament Revision Company. For some years he took a leading part in movements for the promotion of civil and religious equality, when outspokenness on such themes involved much more opposition and obloquy than now.



THE LATE DR. JOSEPH ANGUS.

Dr. Angus well deserved the esteem which must always gather around a man of a sustained and lofty character, chivalrous devotion to principle, high scholarship, and patient devotion to the work assigned by Providence.

Examination in Christian Evidences.—The books selected by the Christian Evidence Society for their examination next March are as follows: Gibson's "Rock v. Sand"; Row's "Manual of Christian Evidences"; Butler's "Analogy," with Eagar's "Butler's Analogy and Modern Thought"; March Phillipps' "Lectures on the Cumulative Evidences of Divine Revelation"; Flint's "Theism"; Wright's "Scientific Aspects of Christian Evidences"; Wright's "Introduction to the Old Testament," with Kirkpatrick's "Divine Library of the Old Testament." There is no restriction of sex, age, or religious denomination; any persons, whether studying alone or in classes, may offer themselves as candidates for examination. Copies of the regulations may be obtained of C. Lloyd Engstrom, M.A. (Secretary), 26, Charing Cross, S.W.

Reversing the Shadow.

By Rev. Dr. BALGARNIE, Bishop Auckland.

"Behold, I will cause the shadow on the steps, which is gone down on the sun-dial of Ahaz with the sun, to return backward ten steps" (Isaiah xxxviii. 8, R.V.).

THIS astounding miracle could only have been effected by a light "brighter than the sun" rising on the other side of the sun-dial. We all know how electric light reverses the shadow of gas-light. At St. Paul's conversion "the light from heaven," the Shekinah brightness of Immanuel, outshone the splendour of the noonday sun. In the heavenly city there is no need of the sun to shine on it, nor of the moon to lighten it, for the glory of God and the Lamb is the light thereof.

Unfortunately we cannot tell on which side of the temple at Jerusalem the sun-dial of Ahaz was situated. It was probably a monolith or obelisk, resembling that on the Thames Embankment, elevated on steps — translated "degrees"—and intended to regulate the hours of public worship. The setting sun had thrown the shadow across ten steps, it had gone down ten degrees, when suddenly from the gate or window, from the mercy seat behind the veil of the naos, or temple proper, there flashed forth the mystic light of Divine glory, that dwelt between the cherubim, reversing the shadow of the natural sun, and converting for Hezekiah the shadow of death into morning.

Was it this I wonder, that evoked from Isaiah's lips that unwonted outburst of enthusiasm in the chapter beginning, "Arise, shine, for thy Light is come, and the Glory of Jehovah is risen upon thee"? . . . "Thy sun shall no more go down . . . for Jehovah shall be unto thee an everlasting Light and thy God thy Glory"? If so, how appropriate the words to the occasion. It is easy to identify the Light of Israel with Christ, the Light of the world:—

Christ has dispelled the shadow of sin. Every setting sun from the beginning of the ages had revealed the deep, dark, ineffaceable shadow of sin. In every human temple under heaven that shadow lay at the door. No earthly power could dispel it. Only one light—that emanating from the mercy-seat and streaming through the rent veil of Christ's humanity—could dispel the darkness: "The light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." That sight revealed the love of God in the gift of His Son as the substitute and Saviour of the perishing, the efficacy of his atonement for the guilty, the gracious offer of His Spirit to regenerate, and His power to save unto the uttermost. "Arise, shine, for thy light is come," is the message of our Gospel day.

Christ has dispelled the shadow of grief. How wide the contrast between the spirit with which human sorrows are borne in the children of grace and in those of the world. There is a well for Zion's pilgrims in the Valley of Baca. There is the light of immortality for the bereaved, the grace of patience and hope of perfectness for the sufferer, the consciousness of Christ's presence and sympathy for the tried, and the tearless world for us at last. "He hath borne our griefs."

Christ dispels the shadow of death. Death to the child of God is no longer the end, but the beginning of a new and endless existence. It is the angel of peace, sent to summon him into life. With the light of Christ's presence in the death-valley, he fears no evil.

The clouds are departed, the shadows are past.

"If He be in thee," wrote John Pulsford, "Who is the Light of Life, very Light and very Life, then, when the candle-light of thy body's life goes out, the sunlight of thy soul's life shall be bright about thee." That Light dispels all shadows.

From Judaism to Christ.

REV. ISAAC LEVINSON AND HIS WORK.

FROM the seclusion and strict Judaism of a quiet Hebrew household in a small Russian town to the secretariat of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, the path of obedience and service has led Isaac Levinson, as he has striven for the truth and for the highest good of his race.

It was the aim of his parents, who were worthy townsfolk of Kovno, to bring up their children as devout Jews; accordingly, the teaching of the young people was entrusted to a zealous Rabbi, and with such good effect that on Isaac's thirteenth birthday the elders of the congregation expressed their confident belief that the lad was called to the ministry of the Jewish faith. "Nevertheless," he says in his brightly-written Life Story*, "I began to be much concerned about justification before God. I went to my mother, begging her to tell me what to do to be saved. She cried bitterly, and replied, 'It will be well with you if you continue in the written and oral laws.' . . . One night, while reading the Gemara I fell asleep, when, suddenly awaking, these words of Genesis xii. 1, 'Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee,' applied themselves to me in such a way that I could not possibly shake them off. So I said to my father that with or without his permission I must go, adding, 'If I die, I die, but go I must.' Upon this he consented, praying that wherever I went the God of Israel might be with me. I was then sixteen years of age."

EUROPEAN WANDERINGS.

The parting of the young fellow from his loved ones was a pathetic scene. The whole family, with a party of about a hundred friends, accompanied him to the railway station, some five miles distant.

First the earnest seeker after truth proceeded to Germany, where he obtained a situation in Berlin, but he found his co-religionists lax in their rites and worship. "For God's Name," his father adjured him in a letter, "keep the commandments very strictly—the oral and written laws. May they be the object of your life, and your near companions. Try and keep your phylacteries perfect."

At length, after many wanderings, he reached the city of Wittemberg, where friendly Jews took pity on him, and led him to the Rabbi of the town. Now came the reiteration to the learned Jew of the problem: "What must I do to be saved?" The answer afforded no fresh light. "You must obey the holy law given us by God through His servant, our lord Moses, and if you observe all the precepts of the law it will save you." The lad's reply, to the effect that all this, duly performed, failed to bring a sense of justification, drew forth a comment similar to that made by Festus on hearing Paul. "Hard study in Russia," said the Rabbi, "has injured Isaac Levinson's brain." "Nevertheless," said his inquirer, "I must travel the world until I find a cure for my soul."

The next stopping place in this arduous pilgrimage was Hamburg, whence, after many trying experiences, he was enabled to reach London. Obtaining a situation, he one day wandered, in the providence of God, into a Christian church. Aroused interest led to oft-repeated visits. Subsequently, at the conclusion of a service, a brief conversation with a converted Jew led to the dawn of the true light. "Here stood, before my eyes, for the first time, a man who could say he himself had everlasting satisfaction. My whole soul was filled with intense desire to know what he meant—what it was that he had, which neither my parents, nor my Rabbi in Kovno, nor my friends in Germany or in England possessed. . . I was in the presence of a man who had evidently had the same difficulties as myself. . . I prayed him to tell me all he knew of the mystery of Messiah; upon which he called to my mind the prophecy of Isaiah, especially chapter liii., relating to His rejection, and also many others which speak in the same way of the Redeemer of Israel."

This newly-found friend introduced his young catechizer to that large-hearted Jewish Christian, Rev. Dr. H. A. Stern, and it was by Dr. Stern's advice that Mr. Levinson entered a Home for Jewish Inquirers, where he employed all available time in the study of the Holy Scriptures. Communicating his hopes and fears by letter to his father, he was assured: "The doctrine Mr. Stern teaches is nonsense; he is only a meshumad (apostate). The coming of Messiah is not to be of humiliation nor of repentance, but of victory and infinite glory and dominion. He shall sit upon the throne of David, and make Israel happy for ever." So closely do the old, vain hopes of a merely national Messiah, and an earthly dominion, cling to Israel; so true is it, still, that He comes to His own, and His own receive Him not.

BELIEF IN THE LORD JESUS CHRIST.

Eventually Mr. Levinson was enabled to write home to Kovno the thrilling message, "The Messiah has come, and I believe in Him." He was baptized by Dr. Stern, and soon suffered the reproach of Christ. The cup of sorrow was full to overflowing when his father wrote: "Woe is me! You have filled us with eternal shame and disgrace. Your mother has become a different being since she heard the dreadful news. My heart is overwhelmed. Farewell! Farewell!"

Sunday-school work in connection with a Baptist cause was the commencement of a useful ministry, particularly among the poor. Entering the Pastors' College, and securing the warm friendship of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, Mr. Levinson made another step forward, and ultimately, in the course of the years, found wide scope as a missionary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

By this time great changes had taken place in the old home at Kovno. Bitter persecutions had broken out, and whole villages inhabited by Jews were burnt by cruel mobs, and the poor villagers chased away. Mr. Levinson, senior, had died, a victim to these persecutions, and his widow, with two young daughters, had been brought to desolation. In answer to a letter received at this time from her son Isaac, Mrs. Levinson wrote:—

> Your sweet letter came to hand when your sisters and myself were at prayers over the grave of your sainted father. We were there for several hours, prostrate. . . . Opening your letter, your dear sisters read it with me. I never thought that a Christian would show kindness to a mother in distress. If we had seen you on the streets of Kovno starving, we should have naturally rejoiced—we should not even have offered you a morsel of bread or a cup of water; and yet, as soon as God has visited us with trouble, you are coming forward to be a saviour to us.

THE BRITISH JEWS SOCIETY.

Two years ago, after sixteen years' service in deputation work, Mr. Levinson was appointed secretary of the Society in succession to the late Dr. Dunlop. To describe the manifold operations is not necessary; but it is gratifying to announce that the work goes forward. The Society has been led of late to take steps in the direction of a Forward Movement among the Jews of West London, a district which offers a splendid field for work. It is proposed to designate the building "The Wingate-M'Cheyne Memorial," since the active interest in Jewish missions of Robert Murray M'Cheyne resulted in the formation of the Society, while the devoted William Wingate (through whose labours, under the Divine blessing, came the conversion of such men as Adolph Saphir and Alfred Edersheim) was a member of the committee.

Part of the house is to be used as a residence for the missionary, the rest being available for the general work of the mission. It is hoped to provide a Home for young converts, more particularly for those who desire to become active Christian workers. Bible-classes for Jews, and meetings of Christians for prayer and Bible readings, will be frequently held, and the Wingate-M'Cheyne Mission House will become a centre of Christian activity in the West End. The reading room will be called "The Edersheim Room;" and a good library is to be provided, to which all Jewish missionaries shall have free access. The room for prayer meetings and Bible readings is to be named "The Saphir Room."

Necessarily, the carrying out of this important scheme entails heavy responsibilities, but Mr. Levinson is full of hope for the result, looking to the Source of all wisdom and strength for guidance and support, and asking the prayers of Christian people that this Forward Movement may take shape in accordance with the Divine will, and so prove fruitful in blessing to Israel.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, September 7. Judges xiv.

HOW often it happens that strong, athletic men, who could withstand the onset of a handful of armed foes, cannot resist one unholy desire, and are constantly being brought into subjection to some secret sin. Samson was peculiarly liable to the assaults of impurity. Truly the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. The weakest child of God, who is living in the Spirit, will conquer in that battle which will be too much for the strongest man who relies on his own might.

That episode of the bees and honey in the lion's carcase is most instructive. How many lions have been rent by the hands of faith, out of which there have come strength and sweetness for God's fainting warriors. Let us be of good cheer, as we remember how death and the grave were overcome by Jesus, and have yielded sweetness and strength, and how the fires and torture-chambers were overcome by the faith of the saints, and have yielded the strongest attestations to the power of Christianity—so it will be ever. The things that threaten us, and that we dread, will yet be compelled to yield nourishment for us, and glory for our Lord. Now the fight, now the awful agony, now the conflict at the Jabbok ford, but out of all this will be honey and the honeycomb, as you shall tread this path in after days. Always out of the eater, meat; and out of the strong, sweetness.

When we read of the exploits of Samson as in the 19th verse, we must not attribute them to great muscular development on his part. In all likelihood, in appearance he was much as other men, but he was filled with Divine might in response to his definite faith.

MONDAY, September 8. Judges xv.

It was a great indignity and affront that the father of Samson's wife offered him, and it was natural enough that he should be greatly annoyed. It was not taught in those days that we should treat with mercy those who despitefully use us, or conquer them by love.

It was about the end of April, when the shocks of corn were lying on the fields, waiting to be carried to the threshing floors; and therefore the devastation caused by these jackals, mad with fright and pain, as he sent them in couples into the plain of Philistia, must have been considerable. That the Philistines retaliated on his wife, whose treachery had brought this calamity about, was not to be wondered at, nor that Samson again repaid them in their own coin (8).

The incident that followed was remarkable. His retirement to the cleft of the rock, the treachery of the men of Judah, and their cowardly subservience to the Philistines, the sudden breaking of the strong ropes that bound him, the slaughter of the thousand men with so inadequate a weapon, the subsequent miracle to supply his maddening thirst; all these incidents were evidently part of a Divine programme—gleams of light from the Spirit of God, who must needs speak to the men of those days in the only language which they could understand. God spoke to the fathers in the prophets "by divers portions and in divers manners." But to us too He speaks. Are there any readers of these words who are bound by evil habits, as by new cords? Let such be of good cheer! Let them look up from this page to God, and receive, by a deep spiritual inbreathing, the Holy Spirit; and as they live in Him, He will deliver them from the strong bonds of evil habit, Their bands shall drop off their hands, as flax touched by fire.

TUESDAY, September 9. Judges xvi.

The hill of El-Montar, to which Samson carried the gates of Gaza, was three-quarters of a mile from Gaza. It was part of the mountainous country about Hebron. To have climbed to the top of this hill with the heavy doors and bolts on his shoulders, through a road of thick sand, was a feat "which only a Samson could have accomplished."

His subsequent experiences were very sad. His passion for the treacherous woman who so repeatedly deceived him; her wiles to extract his sacred secret; his successive efforts to free himself; but his final entanglement, capture, blinding, and degradation, are very significant. How many are there among those who have been the devoted servants of God, who have similarly fallen under the power of passion! They bade fair to do heroic service for their generation, but a face or figure fascinated them, and cast over them a fatal spell. Their friends saw and bewailed the awful fate, which, like an octopus, was casting its long arms around them to suck them under. From time to time they seem to have been themselves conscious of the peril, and, like a dumb animal in a snare, to have made convulsive efforts to escape; but all in vain. It has appeared as though no influence could save them, and at last they have gone down with the Niagara torrent into the boiling cauldron at its foot, to emerge therefrom shorn of all spiritual power, and wrecks of their former selves.

But even for these there is hope. Though they grind in the prison-house, they may be restored to the favour of God, if they penitently confess their sin. The locks of their strength will begin to grow again, and once more they may do a great work, not of destruction, but of salvation. Peter was shorn, but on the Day of Pentecost won 3,000 souls.

WEDNESDAY, September 10. Judges xvii.

From this story it is clear that Israel had fallen into a very corrupt condition. Again we have the familiar sentence which tells of the lawlessness of the land (v. 6). Micah acted in direct disobedience to the distinct letter and spirit of the Mosaic law, first in worshipping Jehovah under the form of images, secondly in instituting a rival centre of worship to that at Shiloh, and thirdly in calling to the priesthood one who did not belong to the family of Aaron. It may be that both his mother and he were animated by a sincere religious spirit, but it was terribly obscured by superstition.

We are all in danger of cultivating a religiousness which is not of God. We worship Him after our own devisings. Instead of submitting ourselves to His righteousness, we go about to establish our own; and in the place of the One Priest and the One Way into the holiest, we seek to invent something less spiritual, less exacting in its demands. How foreign to God's heart is all this. The worship of Cain, of Micah, and of Balaam is abhorrent to His holy nature, and as much needs forgiveness as the most heinous crime.

For the yearning of man's heart there is abundant provision in the Lord Jesus Christ. Thou needest no temple; thine own heart may be the temple of the Holy Ghost. Thou needest no outward semblance of the Deity; the risen Saviour is the manifestation of God. Thou needest no priest nor sacrifice, since Jesus Christ is both. God is a Spirit, worship Him in spirit and in truth; and the Lord will do thee good.

THURSDAY, September 11. Judges xviii.

The Danites had had territory assigned to them; but had allowed much of it to be wrested from their hands by the Philistines. Being therefore unable to find room for all their people, they resolved to send out a colony. This was preceded by the deputation, which arrived at Micah's house and asked for direction. Such direction, however, could only be given by the use of such arts as were known to the Delphic oracle, or, may be, resorted to by some of the modern substitutes for Divine guidance. Men cannot live without God, and if they are not religious they will be superstitious.

The spies discovered an earthly paradise at the north of Palestine, and hastened back to bring their compatriots word; and the colonists pillaged Micah's chapel on their way to it. It is a curious medley. Here are men on the way to deeds of sword and fire, who feel their need of some kind of religion, and who set up their religious rites on an act of spoliation and violence. It reminds us of the brigands of Sicily and South Italy, who are wont to enter the church and invoke the assistance of the Virgin on acts of atrocious crime which they are about to perpetrate.

The priest seems to have had no compunctions in leaving Micah, who had treated him fairly and kindly. Evidently he was set on making the best of this world, at any rate. His heart was glad when he saw the chance of being priest to a family and tribe of Israel. Let us be on the watch lest our religious life be counted by us as a means of making money. Nothing so hardens the heart and opens the door to enormous wrongs. If the servants of God are true to Him, He will see to their material interests, and there is no need of their scheming or anxiety.

FRIDAY, September 12. Judges xix.

This is a terrible chapter, but it gives a marvellous insight into the condition of Israel at this time. The conviviality day after day in the village of Bethlehem; the condition of the country, which made a Hebrew village more to be dreaded than one inhabited by the people of the land; the absolute callousness of these two men to the fate of their women, so closely related to them, as wife and daughter; the shocking behaviour of the ruffians who perpetrated this deed of shame; the almost inconceivable indifference of the husband to the fate of his poor wife, and her despair as she clung to the threshold of the door of the house; the man's bidding to arise, that fell on the deaf ear of death; his awful appeal to the country to avenge the deed of blood—it is a most moving collection of incidents, which reveal much of the lawlessness of the land.

It is quite well that the Bible holds up the mirror to the human heart, and shows what it is without God. When men will not retain Him in their knowledge, He gives them up to the workings of their own evil passions, and each of us may see in these men, what the heart of man is capable of. Yes, my heart and yours. But whilst we abide in Christ, and He abides in us, such things as these, so far from having a fascination, fill us with a holy dread and horror. Oh, that we may ever look at sin as God does!

SATURDAY, September 13. Judges xx.

This convocation of all Israel, of the Eastern as well as the Western tribes, shows that the heart of the nation was still true to its old traditions of unity and morality. It was felt that this sin could not be permitted to pass without some condign punishment. The claims of justice were also respected in the demand for inquiry; the request that, if the men of Gibeah were found to be indeed guilty, the tribe of Benjamin should deliver them for execution. This demand was haughtily refused, and the whole tribe became accessory to the crime.

It is remarkable that on the first two occasions, the men of Israel met with such crushing defeat, but this may have been due to some vindictiveness, or secret pleasure in their brethren's crime, or jealousy of each other. When we are called to put right our brothers' sins, we must be broken-hearted and self-judging. We must not attempt to take the mote from their eyes, till we have taken the beam from our own. We may have to wash the saints' feet—but never in scalding water. Ye that are spiritual, restore the fallen in a spirit of meekness, considering yourselves, lest ye also be tempted.

These are awful scenes; we turn from them with pain. But may we not obtain from them new incentives for missionary work? Incidents like these still take place in heathen lands. The heathen are perishing in this life and the next; let us save them, morally and socially, as well as spiritually, by sending forth the Gospel.

A Nonogenarian Minister.

Rev. J. T. WIGNER.

"I AM weak in body, and quite blind; but the Lord is very gracious to me, and I am patiently waiting for His call." Such were the words of the aged Rev. J. T. Wigner when saying a cordial good-bye to me on Saturday last. Having known and loved him for some years, I had looked in upon him at his home, The Manse, Breakspears Road, Brockley, for a brief conversation on Christian life and work. During his long ministry, our friend has always commanded leisure for the discussion of practical religious questions; and now, in the evening of life, he combines a warm interest in Evangelistic endeavour with a quiet and confident waiting upon God. His eyes are ever toward the Lord; and the joy of the Lord is his strength.

Having been endowed with a wonderful constitution physically, Mr. Wigner cannot remember to have passed three days in bed owing to sickness throughout his life. Should he be spared until October 12, he will complete his ninetieth year; yet he is still in the joyous possession of many powers of body and mind. His sight is shaded by cataract on both eyes, and he is too weak to walk alone, but his memory is marvellously active, and for this blessing he praises God continually.

SEVENTY-TWO YEARS A PREACHER.

It is seventy-two years since Mr. Wigner preached his first sermon, as a lad, at Althorne, near Burnham-on-Crouch. His last pulpit effort was made just nine months ago, when he read the Scripture lessons from memory without seeing a line of the print, and gave out the hymns in the same way. He was always independent of notes as a preacher, so his sermon on the occasion referred to was delivered extempore and with accustomed vigour. It was based on the familiar words, "For God so loved the world," &c. Mr. Wigner never, during his active career, preached without aiming to present the glorious message of this great Salvation text.

It was a peculiar delight to listen to the personal story of the patriarch, as he told of the Lord's dealings with him during recent months. In hours of enforced rest an active mind cannot but review the past; so Mr. Wigner has been living over again the years of long ago, and one may well believe fighting again and again the great battle against ungodliness and sin.

A METHOD FOR INVALIDS.

"Though (he said) I have my daughter and granddaughter to read to me, and kind friends constantly calling, yet I am in a measure thrown upon my own resources; and I cannot sufficiently thank my heavenly Father that in the years gone by I was enabled to commit to memory such large portions of Holy Scripture and so many of the Songs of Zion.

"I have been reading without the book—that is, repeating from memory—not only the Psalms, but Matthew, John, Acts, Romans, Corinthians, Ephesians, and Hebrews. Then my acquaintance with hymns is large. I remember once, during a vacation, learning by heart the whole of Rippon's Selection; and I do not think there are twenty pieces in the 'Psalms and Hymns' collection—some twelve hundred and fifty in all—that I cannot give out from memory. My daily exercises are simple. Every morning I repeat five hymns; also rehearse two psalms, and a chapter from the Old Testament. In the evening I also repeat five hymns, combined with other two psalms and a chapter from the New Testament, Where memory fails, my loved ones read to me. These exercises form part of my daily devotions, and most graciously has the Lord appeared to me from time to time during my months of quiet waiting upon Him in this way."

It was inspiring in a high degree to listen to the aged Christian's grateful acknowledgment of God's goodness to him in the hours of life's evening, filling with blessing the means of grace that are available for such as have been designated the Lord's "shut-ins." May many others follow the excellent example of the aged preacher, and reap a like blessing in their souls!

TWO PASTORATES IN HALF A CENTURY.

Before entering the stated ministry, in 1839, Mr. Wigner was trained at Stepney (now Regent's Park) College. He established the church at Brockley Road, having come to London from King's Lynn, where his pastorate extended over twenty-six and a-half years. His two pastorates covered a period of fifty years, and he continued preaching afterwards (as intimated) until December last.

In the course of his remarkable career, Mr. Wigner built seven churches, baptized two thousand believers, and introduced twelve men into the Gospel ministry—a noble record, and no mistake. Moreover, much honour was put upon the worker by his brethren, when they made him president of the Baptist Union, and three times voted him to the chair of the London Baptist Association. In his varied recollections, however, the veteran speaks with bated breath of his own performances. He gives all praise to God who called him into the ministry, and graciously deigned to acknowledge his abundant labours in the name of Christ. And a like reserve will assuredly be continued in the world of eternal realities:—

The Bride eyes not her garment,
But her dear Bridegroom's face;
I will not gaze at glory,
But on my King of grace—
Not on the crown He giveth,
But on His pierced hand;
The Lamb is all the glory
Of Immanuel's land.

J. W. T.

"The Name Above Every Name."

I HAVE the deepest sympathy with the esteemed and beloved brethren who have written on this subject, and whose only motive is, I am well assured, to give to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ the honour and the glory which are His right by His Divine Sonship; the due reward of His obedience unto death; and the essential result of His resurrection from the dead by the glory of the Father, who set Him at His own right hand, far above all principality and power.

Yet, while affirming the principle that such homage should and must be rendered to our Lord, I am not prepared to say that the use of the name of Jesus alone is necessarily irreverent, or implies a want of godly fear. Can we attribute to the saintly Tersteegen want of respect or reverence to his and our Lord in his hymn—

"Jesu's Name! thou pearl divine,
Precious art thou still to me.
Treasure which I choose for mine;
All I want is found in thee!"

Or to Wesley or Zinzendorf—when the one wrote "Jesus, the Name high over all;" or the other "Jesus, Thy blood and righteousness." Or to Bernard, in "Jesus, the very thought of Thee"; or to Watts, the writer of "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds in a believer's ear"; or to George Herbert and many more, whose writings of prose or verse in praise and adoration of Jesus, "that highest Name, at which all creation bows," are some of the most precious parts of our literature and our worship.

Nor can I think that those who read or sing these sacred songs are necessarily on a lower plane of reverence and godly fear than was Thomas when he exclaimed, "My Lord and my God!"

For who is Jesus? He is the Seed of the woman, formed and born by the holy power of the Eternal Spirit, and called Jesus, because He should save His people from their sins.

"'Twas great to speak the world from nought,
'Twas greater to redeem."

The reason for forbidding the use of the Name alone, without the prefixed title "Lord," seems to be that it was His human name. But it was not merely so. May there not, indeed, be a lack of reverence in so regarding the Name which is above every name? For Jehovah is in it. The Name signifies, "Jehovah is Salvation." To the name Oshea (Salvation) was prefixed the Divine Name Jah, and it became Jehoshua, abbreviated into Joshua, of which Jesus is the Greek form.

It is affirmed by some that Lord and not Jesus is the Name above every name. But this, if I may be excused for saying so, seems to arise from the exigencies of the position assumed. The passage in Phil. ii. 9 leaves little doubt on the mind of a simple reader as to its being the intention of the inspired writer to exalt Jesus, who had humbled Himself to the death of the cross; and by what name could He so appropriately be exalted as by his own God-given name, which he bore in His humiliation: "Wherefore God highly exalted Him, and gave Him THE NAME, which is above every name, in order that in the name of JESUS every knee should bow, of beings in heaven, and on earth, and under the earth."

It is true that the commentators do not all agree, but I have met with no exegesis which so commends itself to my own sense of the fitness of things and the necessity of the case as that of Alford (which is that of others also)—"The name is the very name which He bore in His humiliation, but which now is the highest and most glorious of all names, the name of JESUS. Compare His own answer in glory (Acts, ix. 5), 'I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest.'" Surely no other name so appropriate as "Jehovah-is-Salvation," could be the designation of the redeeming God.

There is a peculiar, and, indeed, a necessary fitness in the exaltation of Jesus under this, His own prenatal name. For under whatever designation he was humiliated, under that very name he was or will be glorified. If He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, He is in the midst of the throne, a Lamb as it had been slain.

If it was asked in derision and mockery, "Who is this Son of man?" "All judgment is committed unto Him because He is the Son of man."

If the accusation and superscription written by the Roman Governor was, "This is Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews,"—He said, out of a light from heaven above the brightness of the sun, "I am Jesus of Nazareth."

If the scoffers round the cross say, "If He be the King of Israel let Him now come down from the cross and we will believe Him"—adoring angels in heaven say, "The kingdom of this world is become the Kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ."

If Jesus humbled Himself, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and became obedient unto the death of the cross—God raised up His Son Jesus, and highly exalted Him, and gave Him the Name which is above every name, that in the Name of Jesus every knee should bow, of the universal Creation in heaven, on earth, and in the underworld.

The name of Jesus is, indeed, often used with lack of reverence, and when every consideration requires "the Lord Jesus." But in order to remedy this, should not the aim of the Christian teacher be rather to elevate the conception of the Name to its proper Divine and royal dignity, than to accept a depreciated estimate of it, as though it was the merely human name of the Son of Mary?

The name by which each person of the Triune God is designated in the Old Testament and the New is in invariable accord with the context. There is always a reason why Elohim is used and not Jehovah, or Adonai, and vice versâ. Christ is not used when Jesus is the appropriate term, nor Son of God when Son of man, nor Jesus Christ, nor Christ Jesus, when Jesus alone is necessary to the subject.

It is possible for one person to use the words "Lord Jesus" with less reverence than there is in another's use of "Jesus" alone. For reverence is primarily of the heart, and secondarily of the expression. M.

A Song to Sing.

Ye who have a song to sing
To the weary and the weak,
Song of hope and comforting,
Such as trembling hearts would seek;
Let God's breath within you speak.

With a courage true and strong,
Shrink not from thy task aside;
Break the torpor of thy soul,
Let its portals open wide,
With a welcome nought may hide.

Sing of joys serene and pure,
Heavenly hopes that cannot die.
All the flowers of life unfold,
Bring the leaves of healing nigh;
Sing of immortality.

'Mid the sound of human woe,
'Mid the world's light laughter free;
Rest content! thy story tell,
Ever praying fervently
God's own messenger to be.

About River-Fishing.

A FORTNIGHT ago we had a chat about the fishing-nets at the seaside. This week our subject is fishing with a rod and line. I can't say I know much about it from practical experience, as there was no river where I lived when I was a boy. The most enthusiastic fishing I ever did was with a bent pin and a worm, catching newts in a pond; and when I had caught all I could and put them in a tub, I threw them back and caught them again next day!

But I had some very good times even at that, and the newts and I were on very friendly terms, for they got quite used to being caught, and didn't seem to mind it a bit! I once put a few in a bottle, but they started eating bits of each other, so I gave that up. I did have a proper fishing-rod given me once by a sympathetic uncle, but I turned it into a whip, and used it for very unworthy purposes, so I had to give that up, too—from necessity, not from choice.

(1) But I have watched other people river-fishing, and have wondered at their patience in fishing so much and catching so little. I saw a picture of some one day which was called "A Band of Hope"; and, judging by a glimpse at a basket by their side, there seemed more hope than supper about it. Still, the fishers looked content, which was something to be thankful for! The virtues of patience and perseverance, then, are good lessons to learn.

(2) Another feature of river-fishing is that you (try to) catch one fish at a time. A good many of us spend a lot of time trying to do too much, and we generally find that after all we have accomplished very little. The boy or girl who runs about doing a little bit of this and a little bit of that, does nothing well. We cannot all be like the sea-fisherman, who catches crowds of fish. The man who lives inland has less opportunity, but he makes the best of the little opportunity he has. Do not be discouraged if, as yet, you cannot do great things. Do the little things well, and then you will be the better able to do the greater ones by-and-by. One fish caught is better than a hundred lost.

(3) And it is possible to be quite keen even over little things. I don't know any people who are more keen upon their sport than river-fishermen. Perhaps for days they catch nothing, but they "live in hope," and when they do catch a big fish, my, don't they take care to let their friends know about it!

One of the lodge-keepers in Richmond Park has in his sitting-room two very small fishes preserved in glass cases. I didn't like to ask him about them, but I suppose whoever caught them was very proud of his exploit. There are many little acts of kindness and courtesy that your parents have treasured up in their memories, of which perhaps other people would not think much, but of which they are very proud; and it is worth living for to give them all the joy we can, even in little ways. Don't forget this, even during your holidays.

(4) But there are two words I should like to give you by way of warning. The first is, do not think that the prizes of life will come to you while you sit down doing nothing. Life is like a river, always flowing on, and you will not catch its fish by sitting looking at it. The fisherman must take pains to provide himself with the necessary appliances, and, if he is to be successful, must read up a good deal about it, as to the kind of light and weather in which it is best to fish, and the sort of bait it is right to use. This is why you go to school, to learn how to take advantage of your present and future circumstances, so that they may yield the best results. Try and look at your school and lessons in this way. Seize every opportunity of getting a step higher, in work and in Christian progress. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might" (Eccl. ix. 10).

(5) The second warning is, talking of bait, that as the fisherman varies his bait to suit his fish, so, too, Satan uses all sorts of temptations to win boys and girls away from God. "We are not ignorant of his devices," said the Apostle (2 Cor. ii. 11), and it is well for us to be always on our guard against them. Otherwise we shall bring more sorrow on ourselves than even the poor fish experiences, as it lies gasping on the bank, removed from its native element, and from that which to it means life. Our native element is in God; "in Him we live and move and have our being," as the Apostle Paul said to the men of Athens (Acts xvii. 28). Let us watch, therefore, that we are not enticed away from Him by the cunning inducements of our great enemy. Let us "take the water of life freely" here on earth, and we shall dwell by "the pure river of the water of life" in heaven hereafter.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

NEW TERM.—Rules for Bible Searchers.

Answers to the "Bible Searcher" are acknowledged in two lists:—

(1) Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue.

(2) Those received later, in the one following. Answers for the "second list" which reach the office after mid-day Wednesday are too late. Those from Scotland and Ireland only will be received till Thursday morning.

No Concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary.

No papers can be re-examined.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly. A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

All communications must be addressed to "Uncle Tom," the Young People's Editor of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

☞ PRIZE COMPETITION.—RULES.

The Prize Competitions are held at the end of April, August and December in each year,

There will thus be sixteen weekly Searchers before next Competition, for which those will be eligible whose names appear as correct in the weekly list twelve times between September 4 and December 25.

Those whose 10th or 13th birthdays occur during this period may continue the weekly Searcher in the same division, but must enter for the Prize Competition for their actual age. There is no limit of age for weekly Searchers; but no one above eighteen years of age can enter for the Competitions.

NEW TERM.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 346).

Perseverance and Zeal.

1. What encouragement to perseverance did Paul give to the (a) Galatian Christians (Gal. vi.); (b) Hebrew Christians? (Heb. vi.).

2. To whom and by whom, and for what reason, was the command given—(a) "Be ye steadfast" (1 Cor. xv.—end); (b) "Be zealous" (Rev. ii.-iv.).

3. Who was clad with zeal as with a cloke? (Isa. lix.).

4. Of whom was it said, "He was zealous for his God?" What was his reward? (Num. xxv.).

5. Who said, "I was zealous toward God?" (Acts xx.-xxv.).

6. What is the promise to those who endure? (a) (Jas.); (b) (Mark xiii.).

7. Why did Jacob persevere with the angel? (Gen. xxxii.).

8. Quote a text appropriate to perseverance (Phil. iv.).

9. What will make us able to persevere? (2 Cor. xii.).

10. How did Jude exhort his fellow Christians?

11. What is said of those who persevere in their search after God? (Heb. x.-xii.).

12. Who was very zealous with wrong intentions? (Matt. i.-iii.).

Those under ten, do any 4; under thirteen, any 7; under seventeen, any 10.

Children and Ritualism.

"HE'S blossomed into an advanced Ritualist!" This remark was made in a letter to the writer, respecting one in whom he had been deeply interested for many years. The young man's parents were strict Wesleyans, his father holding a prominent position in the church of which he was a member. And what was the cause of the son's perversion? Though, perhaps, impossible to specify any one particular cause, it is not difficult to trace out certain things which undoubtedly led to this crisis.

Years ago this son's heart was very open to spiritual impressions. He was kindly spoken to by Christian friends, and he listened to the truth with considerable interest. At one time, indeed, it seemed as if he were almost at the point of accepting Jesus as his Saviour. But other influences were brought to bear upon him. It was represented that such a course as that advised him would be "going too far," and gradually, one knows not how, the heart was turned from spiritual truth. Not that "religion" was altogether set aside; no, the desire "to be good" still remained, and conscience was soothed by strict regard to outward religion.

Years passed on, and the young man preferred to go to church; and the one chosen was extremely "High." The remainder can easily be imagined; it ended in his adopting the form of religious life which justified the remark alike with which this paper opened—"He's blossomed into an advanced Ritualist."

This story, we can quite believe, is typical of others that could easily be narrated. And what do such stories mean? Are they not pictures of hearts seeking rest and finding a certain sort of repose in the "form of godliness" without its "power"? Such souls may be in a sense sincere in their desires, but surely, with all their respect for outward religion, there is no apprehension of what true religion really is; there may be certain emotions of reverential awe, but to that which constitutes the very essence of Christian life—the Divine assurance of sin forgiven, the certainty of Salvation, the revelation to the soul of the living personal Christ, the joy of communion with Him—such persons are entire strangers.

What is the moral of all this? Does it not speak loudly to Christian parents, that they should, above all things, teach their children, as our fathers did, the essential spirituality of Gospel truth—that if the heart be unchanged, no amount of external propriety is of any value? We "must be born again."

Oh that parents would recognize that it is not enough even to bring up their families to attend church or chapel regularly, to take a position in the Sunday-school, or even to become active members of the Church. There may be all this, and yet the utter absence of vital godliness, of heart-trust in and love to a once crucified and now risen and ascended Christ. Oh that every reader of these lines might have written on his heart by the finger of God those memorable words uttered by our Lord to the woman of Samaria—"God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship in spirit and in truth" (John iv. 24).

It is often said, and that truly, that Ritualists are helping forward the advance of Romanism in our land; but, be it observed, that the same may be also said of Protestant parents who are directly or indirectly assenting to an external religious life in their children, while paying little or no regard to their having true repentance, and faith, and genuine conversion.

READY FOR HIS COMING (Luke xii. 31-40).

THAT the Lord is coming again is the universal testimony of the New Testament. The Church looks back to the first Advent and forward to the second. She stands at the oriel window looking for the secret sign, which will be recognized by those who love Him, and listening for the notes of the angel's song, as the bright hosts of Heaven again accompany Him to the confines of earth.

In the first instance, these announcements will not be recognized by men generally. They are only for those "who love His appearing." But the heart that really loves can do no other than keep on the tiptoe of expectation as the signs multiply that the Advent cannot be long delayed. In the meanwhile, certain injunctions should be obeyed:—

1. We must do our best for the interests of God's Kingdom (31). As we give ourselves to promote them, God will see that all other things are added to us. Faraday, the great scientist, was so absorbed in prosecuting his investigations, that he said, "I've no time to make money." Should we not be so absorbed in our work for God, that we should be content with only what is necessary for the well-being of ourselves and our families? "See after my business," said Queen Elizabeth to one of her Court, whom, at inconvenience to himself, she was despatching on State business to the Netherlands, "and I will see after yours."

2. We must place our money in heavenly investments (33). Evidently business is a Divine institution, and it needs capital. We are at liberty to put this aside for the development of business and the payment of wages, up to a certain amount, dictated by our own powers of oversight. It is also imperative that we adopt the principle of life insurance against our old age and death. Every young man, especially, ought to insure his life. For myself, I do not sympathize with those who ignore the benefits of mutual help and co-operation in this respect. I think that life-insurance should be counted as equally necessary as the provision of furniture in the expenditure of setting up a home. Besides these, we have a right to live in a manner suitable for the position to which God has called us, for this is in itself a sacred talent. But, beyond this, we should spend all for God, and set apart for Him the results of His blessing on the work of our hands. This is investment in Heavenly stock, which will yield good interest for ever.

3. We must be watchful. I sometimes hear God's servants say that they are off duty. It seems incredible that any should think that they are able, at a given moment, to relax the attitude of obedient, devout, and consecrated servants. We have been purchased by His precious blood, that we should be His, only, utterly, and always. The world needs our testimony in our leisure moments as well as in our business hours. There can be no needful and lawful relaxation that may not be taken legitimately and joyously under the sense of Christ's presence. Wesley was asked once what he would do if he knew that the Lord would come before nightfall, and he answered by enumerating the plans for travelling and preaching which he had already made, and saying that he would certainly go through with them. Surely this is our right attitude. To live a perfectly natural life, in the presence of Christ, believing that to fulfil always the manifest duties of each moment for His glory is the truest way of preparing for Him.

The watchful and prepared soul will have a great reward. What is meant by the Lord girding Himself, and coming forth to serve, we cannot tell; only that it suggests that the King will think no personal service on His part too great, that can make heaven sweeter. May we all be amongst His specially welcomed guests! F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

Newcastle Endeavourers are making excellent progress with their preparations for next year's National Convention. Already there have been three meetings of the General Committee, with an average attendance of 100 members. Eleven sub-committees are also at work getting the machinery into good order.

It has been decided to enlarge "The Church of England Endeavourer" in order to give topic notes. Dr. Clark has invited Rev. F. J. Horsefield, president of the Church of England Union, to take part in the next American Convention at Denver, Colorado, in July, 1903, and to undertake a tour through the United States and Canada in order to strengthen the movement in the American Episcopal Church.

Caution!—We are requested to caution our readers against "A Converted Irishman" passing under the names of James M—— and James N——. He comes from America, and has recently been in Ireland and the South of England.

LOVING AND OBEYING GOD (Deut. xxx. 11-20).

GOLDEN TEXT.—1 John v. 2.

ON the grassy plain near the Jordan, with groves of acacia trees interspersed among their tents, and the hills rising behind, Israel had now peacefully encamped, and were waiting the final orders for entrance into the promised land. The last battle on this side of the river had been fought; the eastern part of the land already assigned to two-and-a-half tribes, who had been laid under promise by Moses to help their brethren of the other tribes conquer the parts west of the river before they finally took possession of the portion allotted to themselves on the east (Num. xxxii.).

All Israel had assembled to hear the parting words of their aged leader (Moses was twice the age of the oldest among them). Captains, elders, officers, men, wives, and even children, with "the stranger in thy camp," and the servant. By Divine command they had solemnly renewed their covenant with Jehovah, embracing in their oath of allegiance their "children's children" (Acts ii. 29; Deut. xxix. 1-15).

Moses knew well that his last opportunity of impressing upon his people the truths of God for their practical guidance reviewed his former teaching, but he needed not to recall or correct, for he had spoken only the message given to him from God. He reiterated to them the central truth

JEHOVAH IS GOD, AND THERE IS NONE ELSE.

LOVE TO HIM must be whole-hearted and sincere; the moving power for their obedience to His laws (11).

FAITHFUL DEVOTION and service to God would ensure long life and prosperity (16); while disobedience and idolatry would as surely bring down upon them the curse of God (18).

He swept away all excuses (14, the first and greatest Commandment is in one-syllable words), and brought them face to face with a DEFINITE CHOICE (15, 19).

Life and good, death and evil, blessing and cursing. The patriarch spoke with the spirit of the true seer. He had been given to see a long way down the "untrodden paths" of the people. He foreheard them call for a king like the nations round (xvii. 14). He saw them under the blessing (xxviii. 1) and under the terrible curse (15). Become a byeword for their idolatry (37) under the power of the besieger of "fierce countenance" (30-32), as well as the plague and sickness. Just there he called upon them for the covenant of establishment (xxix.), and immediately threw over the host the searchlight of the faithful messenger of God (18-29). But he did not close his prophetic oration until he had once more proclaimed the loving-kindness and forgiving mercy of God to the captives scattered among the nations (xxx. 1-10) making first (xi. 13) and last to hinge on the words, "Hearken," obey and do (10).

I. Character of the Commandments.
   Not obscure, not impracticable.
   Plain and easy to learn and do (by love).
II. Highest interest presented (15-20).
   The result of obedience (15, 16).
   The result of disobedience (17, 18).
   Choice insisted on (19, 20).

We are not ignorant of God's will. He invites us as well as commands us to love and serve Him. He pleads by His messengers (parents, S.S. teachers). Read 2 Cor. v. 20 as His message to you. How can one hesitate between LIFE and DEATH. "The law is plain and easy, but the Gospel is more so." "He is thy Life." "Why will ye die?" Ez. xviii. 21 answers Ez. xviii. 20. What is the will of God concerning this truth? (John vi. 40, 47; iii. 36; xx. 31). For "Cleave unto Him" (v. 20) we read John xv. 4, "Abide in Me and I in you," and "because I live (says Jesus) ye shall live also" (John xiv. 19). David said Ps. xxvii. 1, read with John xi. 25-26.

LESSONS.

As the mainspring of a watch controls and moves all the works, so love to God will keep our lives right, even to the minute hand. "If ye love Me keep My commandments." "Whether ye eat or drink do all in the name of the Lord Jesus" (Col. iii. 17, 23). The Lord Jesus taught love as the fulfilling of the law (Matt. xxii. 36-40).

"What shall we do?" answered John vi. 29. Moses called "heaven and earth to record against" the people of Israel that he had delivered Jehovah's messages to them with all faithfulness; had set before them "life and death, blessing and cursing," and had admonished them "to choose life" (19) (Deut. xxxi. 28).

Are there, somewhere in God's wonderful universe, phonograms being recorded TO-DAY of the choices made for eternity (or neglected) among the scholars in our Sunday-schools? And are there records being kept of the lessons which are given for God and eternity by faithful Sunday-school teachers? "The Book of remembrance" is a glorious reality, for "the Lord hearkened" (Mal. iii. 16, 17, and Rev. xx. 12). Is your name and mine in that "Book of Life?" "Hearken" (v. 10) is the name of the first step to "life," and love is the foundation and law (Rom. xiii. 10).

No religion outside the Bible teaches or commands the duty of love to the deity it represents; and in no other religion is the deity presented in such a light as would awaken love.

"God is love." "We love Him because He first loved us."

The foundation truths of the Bible are so clear that "the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein." (Verse 14 can be interpreted by Deut. xi. 18, 19.)

"The power of choice is at once the glory and peril of our being." We can each cry to God for His Holy Spirit to show us our need and to show us Jesus as our Saviour (John xvi. 9, 14; Matt. vii. 10). Moses taught that each should think of God as his own God; the God of his fathers; the God of his children; the God of the nation; the God of the Gentiles. "Hear O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord (vi. 4).

LOVING AND OBEYING GOD.

THE WAYS OF LIFE AND DEATH.

When passing through a country road, one often sees a board displayed on behalf of cyclists, and informing them that "This hill is dangerous." Occasionally another board may be found, close by, directing the wheelmen to another road which may be traversed in perfect safety, and can be used instead of the dangerous route. When the two directions are given, it is as if the roads to death and life are indicated, and anyone disregarding the warning, or neglecting the invitation, has only himself to thank should he fall into danger. "See," says God, "I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil" (v. 15).

GOD WILL POINT THE WAY.

On the prairies of Texas there is a small plant, whose leaves and flowers invariably point in the direction of the north. Whatever the weather, a traveller has but to look around him to know the way he should take, and many a weary man, without even a star to guide him, has found in the humble plant all he has needed to lead to his desired haven. The Israelites had but to follow the leading of God, walk in His ways, and keep His commandments (v. 16), which pointed invariably to the right path to the promised land. To-day the Word of the Lord remains, and as in the days of the psalmist, He says, "I will guide thee with Mine eye."

MAKING A CHOICE.

When Archdeacon Paley was a young man at Cambridge, he wasted much of his time in idle amusements. Early one morning, and after spending most of the night with his companions, he was startled to see someone standing by his bedside. "Paley," said a solemn voice, "I have been thinking what a fool you are, and can get no sleep on account of my reflections. I have now come to inform you that if you persist in your indolence I must renounce your friendship." Paley that night had to make his choice, and to his credit be it said he came to a right decision. Most of next day he spent in revolving plans for the future, and, as is well known, eventually he rose to a position of great eminence, as a result of his wise choice. God's voice calls to-day as in the lesson, "Therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live" (v. 19).

FOLLOW OBEDIENTLY.

Some time ago a traveller in South Africa was anxious to go to a certain place which could only be reached by the aid of a Kaffir guide. Into his hands the traveller was compelled to commit his life, and he says: "It was not long before I saw that the old man was guiding me along some recognised path invisible to my eyes, but plainly designed to carry us round clumps of thorn and treacherous stones. Not a landmark could I see to indicate the turnings of the route; but our guide was never at a loss." Only by implicit obedience did the traveller reach his goal; and God's command to the Israelites ran, "Thou mayest love the Lord thy God, and thou mayest obey His voice" (v. 20). Obedience must be the outcome of love, and God will then guide us through the intricacies of life to our desired haven.

Quaint Texts from Queer Places.

By Mr. CHAS. COOK.

QUO VADIS?

IT was one of the most artistic posters London had seen; but many were asking, "What does it mean?" It was advertising a certain religious play, and the query is supposed to be addressed by our Lord to Peter. Let us take it from its histrionic setting, and ask ourselves, "Whither goest thou?"

Modern philosophers are more anxious to find out whence they came than whither they are going; but the true lover of wisdom "takes time by the forelock," "makes hay while the sun shines," and thinks of the future with special reference to eternity.

In the drama bearing this title, the question had to do with earth and time; but we wish to put the question with a far deeper meaning. "Whither goest THOU?" not thy body, but thyself, the soul that dwelleth in the body.

Life is real, life is earnest, and the grave is not its goal;
"Dust thou art, to dust returnest," was not spoken of the soul.

There is, however, an intimate connection between "The life that now is and that which is to come."

The tissues of our life to be
We weave with colours all our own;
And in the fields of destiny
We reap as we have sown."

"Quo Vadis?" No more important question ever confronted man; let us not evade it, or neglect it, or turn aside from its keen questioning, searching light. 'Tis true we are all voyaging o'er the sea of time to the shores of eternity, but the receptions we may meet with will differ.

"Homeward bound for Liverpool was a stately liner. On her decks was a young lady recently married, whose husband had been called home hurriedly by business, and who had arranged to meet her at the landing stage. On the same ship was a detective in charge of a criminal, who was to appear at the Old Bailey to be tried. With what different feelings they approached our island home! The one to fall into the arms of her beloved husband, the other to stand before the Judge.

What will Christ be to us? The Bridegroom or the Judge? "Quo Vadis?" Is it to inherit "the Throne of Glory," or to sink in the depths of despair? To sit beside "the river of life," or to be "cast into the lake of fire"? To be for ever where "there is no night," or to be where it is said, "they shall never see light"? May our gracious God enable us to answer the question, "Whither goest thou?"

TO BE CONTINUED IN OUR NEXT.

It was at the bottom of the page, the end of the chapter, and broke off most abruptly, in fact, quite dramatically; leaving the reader wondering what the next chapter would reveal, and anxiously waiting till the next number was published.

We dare not write FINIS at the end of this life's history, but rather "to be continued in our next."—How awfully real does this make "the life that now is" if in "the life which is to come" we begin up there as we leave off down here.

The question should not be "How did he die?" but rather, "How did he live?" See the great mass of mankind! They are excited about trifles, and unconcerned about eternals! Aye, they laugh through a speck of time, but they may wail through an immeasurable eternity.

This life sometimes ends abruptly. Quite recently friends of mine have been called hence in a few hours; they have entered eternity! For them the temporal has vanished before the eternal, and earth has given place to another world.

Some years ago a Canadian farmer had driven his wife to a meeting at the nearest church, where a faithful preacher had delivered a solemn address. At its close he said, "Mary, I think I will go and see the minister." He reached the vestry, and, in the act of turning the handle, the tempter whispered, "Go home, there is time enough yet." He let go the handle, returned to the wife, saying, "I won't go to-night, there is a storm gathering; I'll go and put the horses in the buggy." "Oh, do go; I will wait." "No; I'll go home." He brought the carriage round, they started, but on the way the horses were frightened, and descending a hill the buggy was overturned and both thrown out. The wife was seriously hurt, but she managed to crawl to her husband. "John, are you hurt?" she asked. "O, Mary," he whispered, "that was my last chance." In a few moments he expired.

Family Worship.

DEAR SIR,—For eighteen years I was a travelling secretary for the Church Temperance Society, and visited many hundreds of parishes from Berwick-on-Tweed to Rugby, from Peterborough to Hereford, and have been guest to all sorts and conditions of men in those travels. Of the hundreds of my clerical hosts, not six omitted family prayers; of the scores of laymen three out of four had family worship. I do not think the custom is so well-observed among the better-off laity as it was forty years ago, but I am happy to know that in my present parish a goodly number of professional men, tradesmen, and artizans find time at least once a day for united worship. If my experience has been exceptional, it is highly to the credit of our temperance workers who have usually been my hosts.—I am, yours faithfully, William Kipling Cox.

Sunday-School Progress in India.

DEAR SIR,—I observed with pleasure the article on Sunday-school work in India by "W.M." The most recent report shows that at the end of the year 1900 there existed in India and Malaysia 8,000 Sunday-schools, with an aggregate membership of 333,000. The membership increase in the ten years ending in 1900 was more than 226,000. These Sunday-schools are conducted in thirty-two vernaculars, and in most of them the International Lesson is studied. Literature for the help of teachers and scholars is provided in twenty of these thirty-two vernaculars.

May I be allowed to add that the general secretary is supported by the half-penny annual subscriptions of the International Bible Reading Association, conducted under the auspices of the S.S. Union, London. I venture to state these facts because I know how interested your readers are in Sunday-school progress in this needy India. Yours truly,

R. Burges,
General Secretary, I.S.S. Union.

"The Preaching of Hypotheses."

DEAR SIR,—A cordial appreciation of the interesting matter which The Christian so abundantly supplies for all who have the progress of the Gospel at heart, must not restrain me from a serious protest against the remarks contained in your article, "The Preaching of Hypotheses." Without touching on doctrinal questions, I would only affirm emphatically that when Dr. Beet is virtually charged with "teaching" his "hypotheses as if they were proven truths," with being "struck with a new idea" and "rushing into print" with it, and so forth, the charge is the precise contrary to the truth. Dr. Beet's writings on future punishment are nothing if they are not warnings against dogmatism. His conclusions (1) are tentative and cautious, (2) are based on a careful examination of Scripture, with a most scrupulous avoidance of going beyond what is definitely taught. It is not my intention to discuss whether the conclusion to which he inclines is right or wrong, but to speak of "preaching hypotheses" in such a case is astounding.

Certainly Dr. Beet is able to take care of himself without the aid of such as I, but so staggering a misrepresentation (unintentional though, of course, it was) of a venerable Evangelical professor, ought not to pass unchallenged. Could you, sir—forgiving the warmth of this protest—find room for at least some notice of it in your columns?

Yours very truly, A. R. Whately.

National Sins.

SIR,—As a constant reader of The Christian, I rejoice in the faithful manner in which you deal with the Protestant questions of the day. God's chastening hand in various ways has lately been upon us as a nation, calling forth much searching of heart among His people; and again and again they have come together to confess national sins and to seek a spiritual revival in our land. But there is an omission which has struck me very much in these gatherings, as also in articles on the same subject, and that is that there is so little mention of the increase of Romanism. Yet many feel this the greatest national sin of the times; certainly it is second to none, and it lies at the root of many others. It was idolatry which repeatedly brought down judgments upon the chosen nation of Israel, and God changes not.

On all sides we find the encroachments of Rome while the people either favour them or are apathetic. (I refer to the mass of the English people. I thank God He has not left us without some faithful ones, and that their labours also are not without result.) The new departure in holding communication with the Vatican by the Earl of Denbigh being sent from the King to the Pope; Mr. Balfour's proposal for a Roman Catholic University for Ireland; the public performance of a Roman Catholic priest in "blessing the colours" in the presence of Royalty; the persistent refusal of Parliament to decree the inspection of convents; the laudatory tone of the Press towards Romanism, are all in evidence. The great secret conspiracy to undo the work of the Reformation, which began with the Oxford Movement—has even brought about the idolatry of the mass in our churches. Then there is the Education Bill, which is not a question of Church and Dissent, but of Protestantism v. Popery. Protestant National Churchmen and Protestant Free Churchmen are alike attacked in it, and the sooner they recognise their common foe, and close their ranks and stand shoulder to shoulder, the better. Therefore let this great national sin and danger have a foremost place in prayer, that He who delivered our fathers in old time may arise for us now.

The Bible at Work on the Continent.

From the new Report of the British and Foreign Bible Society.]

"COMFORT YE, COMFORT YE MY PEOPLE."

"I HAVE lost my husband and all my children," said a woman to Colporteur Le Dréau (Nantes), "but this book has comforted me. It was lent me by one of my sisters, and I found in it such consoling words that I no longer mourn for those whom I have laid in the grave, for I entertain the hope of meeting them again in heaven. I could weep for joy that God led you hither to bring me such a treasure. May He give you courage and strength to carry it to others."

"It is striking to notice in these regions," writes Marilleaud, "how the curé holds people under a sort of terror. Many are quite astonished that we are free to move to and fro, since we carry on our work without his consent. The curé dominates these people, constraining them to hate the Jews, and with the Jews the foreigners, representing us as agents of England." However, even in the most unfriendly places exceptions occur. "Souls," says Billy, "are to be found who, though under the rule of the priests, are longing for something better." "Many will buy," says Marilleaud, "though not without apprehension, for the need of greater light makes itself felt. 'I will buy two books,' said one, 'to get knowledge. If M. le curé forbids me to read them, I shall answer that every one must look for himself.'"

TRIALS OF THE COLPORTEURS.

It also speaks volumes for our colporteurs that, although their work must be trying in the extreme, their reports are seldom pitched in a minor key. They always see the bright side of things. Here, for example, is Colporteur Seiler, stationed in Lemberg. He has had a hard time there among the Jews, who threatened him with bodily injury. But he found a friendly Jewish innkeeper who wakened him in the middle of the night, and warned him of the hostile attentions in store for him. A short time afterwards Seiler was arrested by a policeman, and lodged in prison among a lot of dirty vagabonds. No reason was assigned, and it was only after he had induced a friendly police officer to convey a note to his colleague Reichel, that help came from influential friends. Colporteur Reichmann was arrested in the streets of Czernowitz, the capital of Bukowina, and led like a criminal before the magistrate, who, however, set him at liberty. Colporteur Kunz, within a short space of time, was twice arrested and robbed of his papers and books; but here, also, help arrived. At nearly every step our Biblemen face difficulty, and often danger; but with the danger there is always shown a means of escape; and so, as we have said, our brave workers go on their way rejoicing.

ENCOURAGEMENTS AND REWARDS.

They also have their rewards. Against the policeman who arrested Seiler and locked him up among those unpleasant companions may be set the policeman who told one of our colporteurs that were everyone to read the New Testament his work would be less trying, there would be less crime and misery. Curious sidelights are thrown on various classes of the people by our colporteurs' letters. One tells of a Roman Catholic priest who bought three New Testaments, "trembling lest they might afterwards be seen in his possession by his superiors." Tramping through the forest, a young man was overtaken by our colporteur, who asked him if he were not afraid to travel there by himself. The young man took a New Testament from his pocket and replied, "This is my staff, my companion." The incident is all the more noteworthy as it happened in the great solitary forests of distant Bukowina. A poor Roman Catholic labourer was met by one of our men, who sold him a Bible, and his words to the colporteur are worth quoting: "I am in perpetual wonder about this book," he said, "for there is no book in all the world so suited to all conditions of life—none so suitable for every rank and class."

Nothing is clearer than that our Biblemen seek to visit all classes of the people; and when we endeavour to strike the balance of drawbacks and encouragements, we cannot but feel that our work has indeed a far-reaching influence; and that, despite the trained and organised hostility of the Roman priests, and the cowardly action of the Jews, there is still a vast field left to us where our Biblemen win acceptance, and find hearts attuned to hear the Divine message.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER.

"I am rather old to buy books, said an old man to Colporteur Derré; "I am eighty-two." Then looking at the Bible, "This looks like a Church book. Strange I never saw it, for I have been churchwarden for years and years. Our curé never told me of this Book." "But this is the very Book from which your curé has to draw his sermons. If not, he does not preach you the truth." "Well, I will take your Bible. I see it is a good Book, and if I mean to read it, it is time for me to begin."

On the border of Charente Inférieure, in Dordogne, Colporteur Moizant, a modest, gentlemanly, and winning man, has great encouragement in his work. He writes: "In this region many minds are stirred up, and at almost every door I find people eager after religious truth. . . . Not a day passes without earnest and profitable conversations. I believe we are on the eve of a great spiritual awakening that will sweep over this whole region."

THE COLPORTEUR'S BODYGUARD.

In Cuellar, Segovia, one of our Madrid colporteurs happened to put up at an inn whose landlord proved to be the father of the parish priest. An early visit from the Señor Cura was the result. "What books are these you are selling?" The colporteur replied, and the battle began to wax hot. "How can they be prohibited, when they contain nothing but the Word of God?" "They are unauthorized by the Church." The colporteur assured the priest that the books were authorized by the great Head and Builder of the Church, and that they bore everywhere in their pages the marks of His precious blood, and that therefore, in his opinion, no other imprimatur was needed. The priest, with his father and mother, hereupon began to wax wroth, and to say all manner of angry things—amongst others, that a thief had a more honest calling than the man who went about selling such books. Then they began to push the colporteur out of the inn in the presence of not a few people whom the noise had attracted. "I praise God," says the colporteur, "that somebody is always raised up to take our part. One man told the priest and his parents that they ought to think shame to themselves for their words and actions. He also spoke of my wares being the Truth. For fear of greater disturbance I wanted to pack up on the spot and go. But the men would not hear of it. 'We are not going to let you,' they said, and they would insist on my going the round of the whole pueblo in their company, which I did with no further molestation."

AN EPISCOPAL MALEDICTION.

"At Irsina, after working all day with some success, I went in the evening to the Cathedral to hear two friars who had been sent here for a 'mission.' After both had spoken, we were preparing to leave, when a loud voice shouted, 'All come this way, for I have something to say to you.' I turned with the rest, and saw that it was the Bishop of Gravina. When all the people had crowded round him he said in as loud a voice as he could, 'My children, to-day wolves have come to this place, yea, rapacious wolves, who are here to steal and ruin your candid souls. The Protestants have come with false books, which they call Gospels, but which come from the devil. Do not take such books, and let those who have taken some carry them at once to the feet of the Virgin. If you are offered books like these' (and so saying, he showed one of our little Italian Gospels), 'take them and tear them to pieces, thus,' and he tore to pieces the little book. Then he went on to say: 'Take all the books you have in your houses to your priests; they will set aside the good ones and bless them. The bad ones they will place at the feet of our Immaculate Mother, that she may crush them as she crushed the head of the Serpent. So then beware.'" Though our colporteur was standing among the crowd, many of whom knew him and watched him intently, he escaped unscathed. On leaving the Cathedral he went to a club, with not a few who had heard the bishop's speech, and after a discussion which lasted till midnight, succeeded in selling two Bibles and six Gospels.

Happily all priests are not like the Bishop of Gravina. The same colporteur writes:—"At Bassano, for two evenings in succession, we had long conversations in a friend's house with two young priests. They were astonished at the Scripture quotations I gave them from Martini's version, of which my friend had a copy. They had never heard such things, and promised that they would study the Bible in earnest."

A BAND OF BIBLE READERS.

In company with Colporteur Jardella, Vecchi arrived at Asciano, a town in the province of Siena. Scarcely had they entered a small inn when a local bookseller and newspaper vendor presented himself and asked for a New Testament. It appeared in conversation that this man and some of his friends meet regularly in his little shop for reading the Scriptures. He invited the colporteurs to join them the same evening. They found fifteen people assembled, reading not at random, now here, now there, but in regular succession, a chapter each night, which the bookseller expounds to the best of his ability. The colporteurs were asked many questions, and the conference went on till near midnight. It is noteworthy that these people did not profess to be Evangelicals; their sympathies are rather Socialistic. But if they persevere in the study of the New Testament they will surely be led beyond shadows to the one substance, and through all illusions to Him who is the Truth.

AMONG MOSCOW FACTORIES.

In the neighbourhood of Moscow are many factories, which our colporteurs have always visited. But there are signs that the easy admission which they have hitherto enjoyed in many cases will be taken away from them. The special desire of a colporteur in visiting a factory is, first, that he may get authority from the office to go through the factory in work hours, and, secondly, that he may get payment for the books which he sells advanced by the office out of the wages of the workmen. But as time passes he gets a less favourable reception, and finds more and more that his colportage among factory hands must be carried on by dealing directly with the people outside their hours of work. The colporteur's report shows him naturally disconcerted and disappointed at having to give up his old method.

SAVED BODY AND SOUL.

Colporteur Pantel (France) who has now retired, wrote last June: "Three weeks ago I was offering my books to a group of working men, and one of them said, 'I am glad to see you. Don't you recognise me? Two years ago you saved my life.' He reminded me of the following facts: Two years before I had offered a Bible to a workman, who replied, 'I have eaten nothing for two days. I am penniless. My strength is failing. I am going to drown myself.' I had done my best to dissuade him, giving him a Gospel, and twenty centimes to buy bread. This was the very man: 'You then saved the life of my body and the life of my soul. By God's grace I am now rescued. I have been in work ever since, and I now attend the temperance meetings.'"

A Plea from Chili.—Friends interested in South America, with spare Christian literature, will be glad to know that Rev. A. Leutwyler, Waisenhaus, Casa de Huerfanos, Traiguen (Casilla 44), Providencia, Chili, will welcome such gifts. He has a home for English-speaking orphans, and on his mission journeys visits English residents, who are most thankful for Christian literature.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

THE "EDINBURGH CASTLE," E.

DURING the month of August it was our privilege to have the ministry of Rev. Dr. Henry. Our hearts are filled with deep gratitude to our Heavenly Father for the instructive and gracious messages it has pleased Him to send to us by His honoured servant. Truly, we have had times of refreshing from the Divine presence. Dr. Henry is not only a temperance advocate, but an equally able and eloquent expositor and preacher of the Word of God. No uncertain sound characterizes his ministry, for he is thoroughly evangelical. The doctrines of grace are clearly and fully declared, the Atoning Sacrifice of the Son of God being set forth to his hearers, as God's only way of salvation. It has done our hearts good to see the thousands held spellbound by the passionate and eloquent presentation of the great truths of the Word which one cannot fail to see is part and parcel of the preacher, for he believes and feels all he declares. The Divine Spirit will bless such a faithful testimony. It has been a choice time for the children of God. The prayers of the people worshipping here will accompany Dr. Henry in his great and important work.

Walter Notman, Superintendent.

Before concluding his mission in East London, Dr. Henry addressed an immense number of persons gathered, by the kindness of the vicar, in the Vicarage grounds, Bromley-by-Bow, E. The vicar, Rev. Henry S. Sanders, is an ardent temperance advocate in a district where such work is sorely needed. The boys' brass band from Dr. Barnardo's Stepney Homes enlivened the proceedings by their excellent music.

Lord's Day last found Dr. Henry in the city of Lincoln, when three times he addressed large and enthusiastic audiences. Despite the unfavourable weather, the Hannah Wesleyan Church was crowded in the morning, there being fully 1,000 present. It was shown that the Temperance Reform is the supreme duty of Christian and patriotic citizenship. In the afternoon the meeting was held in the Corn Exchange, which was again largely attended. The impression produced was of a profound character.

In the evening the great Newland Congregational Church overflowed with eager listeners. Under the powerful eloquence which cast a spell over the assembly the people both wept and prayed, and at times seemed awe-struck at the personal accountability involved. It was indeed a high day in the annals of Temperance Reform in this beautiful cathedral city. An earnest wish was expressed for a return visit by Dr. Henry, and an extended mission as soon as possible to be held in the very fine Temperance Hall now near completion.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Sept. 4, Louth; 6-9, Taunton; 10, 11, Newport, Mon.; 13-14, Taunton; 15, 16, Llanelly; 18, 19, Dunfermline; 21, Free St. George's, Edinburgh (Dr. Alex. Whyte's); 22-24, Dunfermline; Sept. 26-Oct. 3, Alloa; 4-17, Perth; 18-31, Greenock; Nov. 2-Dec. 4, Ireland (Nov. 2-5, Cork; 6-9, Limerick; 10, 11, Athlone; 12-14, Wexford; 15-25, Belfast; 26-Dec. 4, Dublin); Dec. 6-16, Worcester; 21, Brighton; Jan. 9-15, 1903, Motherwell; 16-29, Lisburn; 31-Feb. 6, Newton Abbot; 21-27, Sunderland; 28-Mar. 6, Middlesbrough; 7-13, Dundee; 14-20, Stirling.

"His Servants Shall Serve Him."

(Rev. xxii. 3.)

His servants serve Him all the wide world o'er—
Some, ploughmen, breaking up the fallow ground,
Some, sowers, scatt'ring the good seed around;
While others reap where good men toiled before,
All working to increase the garnered store.
And soon shall he who ploughed while winter frowned
See harvest gathered in, and hear the sound
Of glad rejoicing at the threshing-floor.

His servants serve Him—not alone to-day—
Through cold and heat, through pain and weariness.
We all shall serve Him in that glad new day
When face to face we see His loveliness;
Where failure and mistake shall never more
Mar the glad service yielded evermore.

Indigent Blind Visiting Society.

THE sixty-seventh annual report of this Society records encouraging progress. In 1834, when the work began, the lot of the blind was pitiable in the extreme. They were found hidden away in cellars and garrets, uncared for, unvisited, without occupation for either mind or body, and in many cases almost without food, clothes, or bedding. The object of the founders was to raise these people out of their degradation and misery, and to do this they took the Bible to them in their homes; but it was soon seen that if the Society's work was to succeed, the bodily wants of these poor people must also be attended to as much as possible; so relief in cases of distress became part of the work. The next thing was to teach them reading—at that time known to but few blind, and not always taught even in the institutions for the blind.

A small class was got together with much difficulty, and not without a promise of payment as an inducement to learn. Nothing shows more clearly the alteration of the general intelligence of the blind than the comparison of the unwillingness of those days with the thirst for information that distinguishes them now. At first all the paid visitors were sighted; but for the last thirty-seven years, none but the blind have been appointed—a change which has become possible owing to their education. Experience has shown that when the right men are selected, the blind make better visitors to their fellow-sufferers than those who see, and there is also this advantage—that the money subscribed for the blind is expended on them and not on sighted persons.

A very useful branch of the work is to assist the blind, whether trained at institutions or otherwise, to start in life; and, by grants or loans, to obtain the materials for their trade in larger quantities, and therefore at a cheaper rate than they could obtain them without such assistance, and to help them in times of sickness and temporary trouble.

The offices of the Society are at 8, Red Lion Square, W.C.

The Promotion of Public Morality.

A PERUSAL of the annual report of the operations of the London Council for the Promotion of Public Morality is particularly encouraging, since it indicates the progress that continues to be made in the work of redeeming London from being an open market for body and soul.

To the method of endeavouring to form public opinion by holding public meetings, the Council found it necessary to add some other means of bringing this matter before the influential people of London. The plan accordingly adopted was the printing of small booklets, giving an outline of what was being done, and the objects in view, and sending these in addressed envelopes to the owners of houses in the various neighbourhoods of London. A letter or circular accompanied each of these booklets, and in order to work as economically as possible, these letters and circulars with others, amounting to over 40,000, were duplicated in the office of the Society.

The second great object was to invite and stimulate the exercise by public authorities, and especially by the new Borough Councils, of the large powers for good which the law puts into their hands. Seeing that Westminster might be said to suffer from this evil more than any other of the new areas of our city, it was decided to concentrate efforts there, and a petition signed by 8,500 people was presented to the Westminster City Council. This resulted in a deputation awaiting upon the Home Secretary.

The report of the deputation was printed and placed before the Westminster City Council on February 13, by the Watch Committee, who say in their report: "This reply we regard as distinctly disappointing and unsatisfactory, as being indeed the way not to do that which, for the public weal, should be grappled with, even though a mistake may now and again be made. Evidence is constantly afforded to your committee by the police, in their report on disorderly house observations, showing that a very large number of common street-walkers are well known to them, and we fail to see why the police should not rigorously suppress, on their own initiative, the open solicitation which takes place nightly in the public streets by disreputable and, in many instances, notorious persons, as to whose identity and character there cannot be the smallest doubt."

Particulars of the movement may be had from the Council, 37, Norfolk Street, W.C.

Among Jews in East London.

THE new report of the London Society for Promoting Christianity Among the Jews takes account of manifold operations at home and abroad. Writing from Spitalfields, Rev. W. H. Davies tells of progress. He speaks wisely when he says:—"There is great danger of work amongst Jews becoming exclusively work amongst foreign Jews, not only because they are in the majority, but because they are the more accessible. On the other hand, the English Jew is less fettered by the Talmud than the foreign Jew. And yet, as the English Jew grows up, he often adopts a position as hostile to Christianity as that of the most fanatical rabbinical Jew. This tendency can be counteracted by work amongst children and young people, and they can be influenced possibly to look at Christianity without fanatical prejudice."

The late Rev. J. A. Faithfull, describing work at Whitechapel, wrote:—

"In spite of all difficulties, there is much reason to be encouraged in Jewish work. I believe there is no place in the world where Jews are more accessible than in Whitechapel. There is no doubt that they listen to the Gospel as never before in the memory of Jewish workers. And in St. Mary's pulpit, both indoors and out, we give it them very straight. Sometimes it is true they get angry when Christ is forcibly presented to them, but more often they listen attentively; some with contempt stamped upon their faces, but many with real interest, and a few with unmistakable heart-hunger.

"It is at present a time of sowing in Whitechapel, though we are not without marked signs of harvest also. One cannot fail to notice that the class of Jews attending the services is somewhat different from what it was two years ago; now that it is thoroughly understood that no pecuniary benefit accrues from attending the service, the mere beggar has quite disappeared. I have reason to thank God that the fears I had as to the future of the work early in the year, when Mr. Weinberger left, were groundless, as God in His goodness has amply supplied the need. Much good is resulting from ladies and missionaries visiting from house to house, as also from a Jewish mothers' meeting recently opened by Mrs. Neugewirtz. Every now and then there is organized opposition to our work, and we feel it to be rather a compliment that circulars, bearing the name of the Chief Rabbi, have been sent round the parish warning Jewish parents against allowing their children to come to our various classes.

"Of course, we are particularly careful to avoid receiving children unless the parents give their consent. Another result of our work is that some Jewish ladies have themselves started sewing classes for the children. Though we feel the greatest respect for the earnest Jews who are trying to hinder our efforts, yet, having a direct command from our Lord and Master, we cannot on that account desist from our endeavours to lead them to know the Messiah; nor can we forget, much as we love peace, and desire to be on friendly terms with our neighbours, whether Jews or Gentiles, that Christ Himself said, 'I come not to bring peace on earth, but a sword.' When asked why we do not let them be, without trying to Christianize them, we have one conclusive answer—viz., that we must do what our Master has bidden us."

New Housing Scheme.

BRITAIN'S next campaign, according to a band of earnest reformers who have just completed a great scheme for rousing the country on the subject, will concern itself with the housing problem. By means of lectures, limelight, cinematograph, and with the co-operation of mayors, bishops, Nonconformist leaders, and other public men, the chief towns of England, and all the boroughs of London are to be urged in the coming winter to take up the question of housing reform in a thoroughly practical manner.

A guarantee fund of considerable amount has already been raised to carry out the scheme. The fund has been placed in the hands of the Bournville Village Trust, and any balance that remains at the end of the campaign will be handed over to the Garden City Association. Individuals and societies that assist in the work of spreading the light by means of this new effort will thus be relieved of all cost of organization and hire of halls.

By way of tribute to the memory of the pioneer of housing reform, it has been decided that the new movement shall be known as "The Shaftesbury Lectures." Practically the only stipulation made by the promoters is that the lectures shall serve no party, sectarian, or private interest. Merely to give a lecture in a town and then depart is not the aim at all. Unless something practical is done — the municipality's housing work popularized, or the work of local societies strengthened, or new propagandist bodies called into life—the promoters will feel they are not doing enough.

The movement is to be under the management of Mr. Budgett Meakin, and it has been arranged that the first fifty lectures shall be given by him. Answering a Daily News representative a few days ago, Mr. Meakin said:—"We begin in Sheffield in October, and from then into the New Year we have nearly every day booked up, although we are still open to visit towns not yet included. In December we hope to be in and around London. We shall first point out the many evils of the existing state of things as regards the homes of thousands of our fellow-creatures. We shall then show the moral, physical, and economic effects, and point to the various schemes, public and private, that have already done a great deal towards lessening the evil, and in particular we shall urge upon our audiences the duty of personal service."

Friendless and Fallen.

ALL through the year, thus far, the work of the Homes and Open-all-Night-Refuge has been carried on continuously; and, as the name of the Refuge implies, it has been in active operation when most persons have been safely and peaceably at rest in their own homes. Not long ago a young woman, aged nineteen, applied at 1.30 a.m., and was received. She had come to London from the North, without the consent or even knowledge of her parents, intending to go to a friend here. Alas! she found on arrival that she had either lost her friend's address or left it behind her, and but for this Refuge, to which she was directed by a policeman, she must have been destitute in the street. Next morning a telegram was sent to her people, and within a few days she was safely home again.

It is very difficult to realize what it means to be destitute, hungry, and homeless in the streets at night; and especially to a young girl such as the one referred to. The sense of utter loneliness, the tormenting thought of the sore difficulty of their forlorn and helpless condition, and the inability to extricate themselves from it, have led to many becoming reckless and yielding to temptation. The record of the rescue homes proves this. "I didn't care what became of me," is the despairing remark not infrequently heard.

Every suitable applicant has received prompt and sympathetic help, and testimony to the good accomplished is constantly coming to hand.

There is great need of assistance just now to meet current expenses, for the exciting and exceptional events of this year have very largely attracted attention to themselves. Nearly 180 inmates have to be fed, clothed, housed, and instructed, and as there is no reserve fund, the voluntary gifts of God's stewards are the only source of supply.

About Books.

The portraiture of character in The Courtship of Sarah (6s. John Long), by Sarah Tytler, is natural and instructive, and an interesting view of Nonconformist ministerial life is presented to view.

The Popular Library of Art now includes a well-informed sketch of the career of Albrecht Dürer, by Lina Eckerstein, with thirty-seven attractive reproductions of his pictures. (2s. Duckworth & Co.)

A stirring appeal to those who neglect God's House is made by Rev. J. Rogers (Dundee) in his booklet, Why is Your Seat in Church Empty? Already the publication has reached its 225th thousand. (1d. Partridge.)

There is much that is informing as well as truly helpful in the sermons—preached in Craigrownie Parish Church, Dumbartonshire—which Rev. Kenneth A. Macleay has gathered under the title The Never-Changing Creed (2s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell).

The sixteenth volume of Mr. A. H. Stockwell's "Popular Stories," £50,000, by J. Dodd Jackson (2s. 6d.), contains a series of short narratives with that true ring which is sure to win for them a warm place in the hearts of many readers.

Rhymes from Time to Time. By Wm. Croswell Doane. (6s. Henry Frowde.) Those who know the venerable Bishop of Albany will want to read his poems—some religious, others personal, and yet others miscellaneous. The book bears witness to the remarkable versatility of its author.

The sermon recently preached by Rev. H. J. R. Marston, at Belgrave Church, on behalf of the Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution, Our Souls, Our Work, Our Wages, may now be had in pamphlet form. (1d. 32, Sackville Street, Piccadilly, W.)

The Whisper of God, and Other Sermons, by Rev. F. W. Boreham, president of the New Zealand Baptist Union, is the latest issue in the "Baptist Pulpit" series. (2s. 6d. net. A. H. Stockwell.) The discourse which furnishes the title is founded on Job xxvi. 14. In all there are eleven, and they are striking in style, as well as sound in substance.

The Church Epistles, by Rev. Dr. Bullinger, is a volume dealing with the importance, order, interrelation, structure, scope, and interpretation of the seven letters of Paul—Romans to 2 Thessalonians inclusive. Reprinted from "Things to Come," it is the outcome of much thought and study; and even where we would hesitate to follow the author, we recognise his purpose and anxiety that the Spirit's teaching through the great Apostle shall not be neutralised by the theories and prejudices of men. (3s. 6d. The Author, 25, Connaught Street, W.)

The Emphasized Bible. This work, by Joseph Bryant Rotherham, has at length been completed by the publication of the third Old Testament volume—Proverbs to Malachi. (8s. H. R. Allenson.) As we have more than once described the features of the version—all of them valuable and some of them of unique interest—it is sufficient now to commend the work once again to the attention of careful students of Holy Scripture. The complete work—Old and New Testaments—may be had in four divisional volumes or bound in one, and in either form it is eminently suitable for presentation to preachers and teachers, or other Christian workers.

Stories for Children.—Among the smaller stories just published by the Religious Tract Society is one of attractive sixpenny books, including the following:—Joe Davy's Trade Mark; or' Where's the Light? by E. M. Waterworth; Hero Charlie, by Mary Hampden; Flowers in the Desert, by C. A. Mercer; Dick Deane's Adventures, by E. H. Stooke; Sally, a Little Sister, by Edith Cornforth; The King's Wheel, by Rev. John Isabell. In a second series at fourpence each we find—The Queen of Beauty, by Ida Lemon; Sophy's Perilous Adventure, by Florence E. Burch; The Lily of the Valley and other stories; The Sliding Panel, by Mary Rowles Jarvis; The Village Shoemaker and other stories; Chrissy's Glad News, by J. E. W.

The thick veil of mystery which overhangs everything east of the Suez Canal becomes more personal to us as affecting our own great Eastern Dependency. Viewing life from a Western standpoint, a fundamental difficulty lies in the understanding of a country the real importance of which is to be found in the villages rather than in the cities. Much has been already written on the subject; but there is abundant room in missionary libraries for Village Work in India (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier), by Norman Russell. As a missionary in Central India of the Canadian Presbyterian Church, the author has been a keen observer of men and manners, and has given us a series of vivid word pictures, full of suggestion of the actual conditions and circumstances under which the people live.

Hints on the art of preaching are ever in demand; and the appearance in volume form of a series of papers contributed by Rev. John Edwards to The Preacher's Magazine—Nineteenth Century Preachers and their Methods. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly)—calls for cordial mention. Taking a number of men whose praise is in all the churches, much that is helpful and instructive is extracted from their own utterances on the subject, or deduced from their practice. In nearly every case characteristic outlines or extracts are given; and while imitation of the example of leaders is dangerous, the volume abounds with most valuable advice, the following of which cannot fail to be fruitful. While the list of names is by no means exhaustive, even of front-rank men, no distinction is drawn of church or sect. The true preacher is recognized wherever he might be found, and with kindly, appreciative, and discriminating description, presented to the reader.

A notable and praiseworthy instance of the carrying of a war into the enemy's country is to be found in Criticism Criticised (1s. net), in which the Bible League (186, Aldersgate Street, E.C.) has published the proceedings of their Conference held at Oxford last February. The editing has been ably done by Prebendary Wace, who was also chairman. The ground on which Scripture is and has been attacked is well covered, and our readers will the more readily appreciate our hearty commendation of the volume—as a most informative one for the men and women who must confine their study to the English versions—when we say that the list of contributors includes the names of Rev. H. E. Clayton, Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, Professor Margoliouth, Rev. Chancellor Lias, Canon R. B. Girdlestone, Rev. F. E. Spencer, Rev. James Douglas, Dr. C. H. H. Wright, Rev. John Tuckwell, Professor Langhorne Orchard, and Prebendary Webb Peploe.

We have not gathered from the volume itself whether the "addresses" of which Faith and Life in India, by Rev. Robert Lee Lacey (of the Baptist Missionary Society, stationed at Puri, Orissa), is composed, were spoken to actual audiences; but in reading them we find ourselves taken into the deepest confidence of a keenly observant missionary, who at once strikes into the heart of the most outstanding difficulties in the way of the proclamation or acceptance of the Gospel in India. Perhaps because he speaks as one actually born in the "holy land" of the Hindus, Mr. Lee Lacey has certainly made some matters plain which are understood by very few who have never left this country. This is a missionary volume of an unusual type, the place of which may possibly be alongside others which give facts and figures more systematically; but it is certainly calculated to burn its lesson into the heart of the thoughtful reader. (2s. 6d. net. A. H. Stockwell.)

Volume VI. of The New Biblical Guide (7s. 6d. Partridge) deals with the books of Joshua, Samuel, and Kings. It forms a veritable storehouse of information for those who find themselves surrounded by enemies or critics of the Word of God, and are thereby called upon to give reasons for the hope and belief that are in them. In the nature of things it is impossible for the great majority of Christians personally to investigate antagonistic assertions; and consequently a high value attaches to the products of devout scholarship, as a means of strengthening the hands of the rank and file of believers. Very many are joyfully assured, from their daily experience and the inward witness of the Holy Spirit, that the Word of the Living God is invulnerable; and yet are anxious to be supplied with reliable data for use in aggressive work. Not only are a large number of difficulties (real or so-called) dealt with and satisfactorily cleared up, but no one can read these volumes without learning to test many onslaughts for himself, by comparing Scripture with Scripture, and in some cases even by the application of simple common-sense reasoning. Readers who appreciate the real value of the book will be grateful to the editor, Rev. John Urquhart.

A new COMMUNION REGISTER, on an improved plan, applicable to the use of all denominations, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

Rev. Dr. Adamson, of Windermere, has been engaged for a considerable time in the preparation of a LIFE OF DR. JOSEPH PARKER, which it is hoped to publish this month. As a life-long friend of Dr. Parker, Dr. Adamson has had altogether unusual opportunities for qualifying himself to do this.

Evangelists at Work.

Rev. Dr. Torrey's Movements.

WRITING to a friend on July 11 regarding his movements on his present tour, Rev. Dr. R. A. Torrey reported that he was then leaving Australia for two weeks at Hobart, Tasmania. His intention was then to return to Australia for a week at Ballarat and fifteen days at Sydney, leaving the latter port on August 20 for New Zealand. Ten days at Auckland were to be followed by a like mission at Wellington. The evangelist thereafter expected to return to Australia, en route for Calcutta, sailing from Adelaide September 25 or 27, and being due in Calcutta about three weeks later than was originally planned.

Blackpool Theatre Services.

Under the auspices of the Blackpool Y.M.C.A. largely-attended Gospel services were held in the Alhambra Theatre, Blackpool, on Sunday last, conducted by Mr. Jas. B. Wookey, deputation secretary of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. The local committee have been much encouraged by this visit of Mr. Wookey, who was also cheered in the fact of meeting converts from his ministry during the last twenty years from all parts of the kingdom. The attendances on Sunday were very large, the evening meeting numbering nearly 3,000 people.

The Open-Air Mission at Lancaster.

We have again received a visit from four open-air preachers, Messrs. Heath, Gray, Alexander and Parker, who have held meetings twice and three times each day, also addressing Lord Ashton's men at the works, and Mr. N. W. Helme's men. Glasson Dock was also visited. We desire to thank God for the visit of His servants, and feel quite sure that some lasting results will be the outcome. On Lord's Day the evangelists addressed the Men and Women's P.S.A., also taking charge of the Town Mission service in the Collegian Rooms. The last service in the Market Square will be long remembered.

G. H. W., Hon. Sec., Town Mission.

Children's Seaside Services.

An esteemed correspondent, describing the meetings at Broadstairs, conducted by the Children's Special Service Mission, and typical of gatherings at numerous seaside resorts, writes:—An interview with one of the Broadstairs helpers elicited the fact that without exception the mission workers are honorary, some of some of them being missionaries home on furlough. The mission services are interdenominational, and the methods are simple yet effective, and certainly not lacking in attraction, as the sustained interest and size of the congregations testify.

Briefly the lines upon which the services are conducted are these:—Children are invited to bring Bible objects, bearing a card upon which a text is written. The text is, of course, to describe the object. One card bore a bunch of grass, some faded flowers, and a diminutive Bible. Beneath, in legible round hand, was written, "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the Word of the Lord remaineth." Another effective object was a basket containing five barley loaves and two small fishes, the attached label of course bearing the words: "There are five small loaves and two fishes; but what are these among so many?" Each object is held up for inspection, and the inscription is read aloud by the missionary, who delivers a sermon in brief on the text upon which the object happens to bear.

At the conclusion of the service prizes were given for the best objects. Each little visitor also received an illustrated Bible story. Another innovation of Mr. Stanes is the Chinese lantern service, which is held on Broadstairs sands. In wet weather a hall is chartered in which to hold the services. Members of the Scripture Union are enrolled daily, and not only at Broadstairs, but at many other watering-places our friends of the Children's Special Service Mission are doing a grand work for the Master.

By favour of the Evangelization Society, very successful tent meetings of nearly three weeks' duration have been conducted in Newport, I.W., by Mr. Alexander Clark, upon whose labours, both in conversions and cementing the love of the scattered saints, the Lord has graciously set his seal. These meetings on neutral ground tend to bring the children of God together for prayer and united interest in the Lord's work, and so assisting the coming of our still waiting Lord. May the deep interest excited still extend!

A. M.

On Thursday evening last a very spirited open-air meeting was conducted near Gloucester Gate, Regent's Park, under the combined auspices of the Y.M.C.A., Camden Road, and Park Chapel, Arlington Road, N.W. Mr. Bob Johnson held a large and interested crowd with his Gospel Temperance songs, and his address and the attention of the crowd was maintained to the last. May God bless the Word!

Writing of a mission recently held at Billesdon by Mr. F. Chapman, a correspondent says: "Truly, we have cause for praise for blessing given. There was a spirit of unity among God's people, and willing co-operation with the missioner, as well as a great awakening among the careless and godless. Several cases of conversion took place, especially among the young. Great regret was expressed that the mission could not be prolonged."

Mr. Newton Jones gave the addresses in connection with the Tent Mission at Bromley, Kent, last Sunday. A flower and egg service was held in the afternoon on behalf of the work among the cripples in East London. The assistance rendered by Mr. T. Armon Jones, of Wrexham, was much appreciated. His magnificent voice was heard to great advantage in "Lead kindly Light" and other solos, and we feel sure his cultured singing will be greatly used in the Master's service.

In one of the Evangelization Society's Tents, at Hanley Castle, Worcestershire, Mr. James Wharton has just concluded a very successful mission. Although the population is a scattered one, and busy harvest time, good congregations have come together night after night. There is no doubt that Mr. Wharton's daily visits to the homes of the people, and even to workers in the fields, has in no small measure contributed to the success of the services held. Quite a number have professed conversion, and the services have been a source of inspiration and strength to the children of God in and around the locality. On every hand regret is expressed at the termination of the mission.

Requests for Prayer.

For the tent mission to be held during the month of September at Notting Hill.

For a tent mission conducted by Mr. F. Chapman, at Great Easton, commencing Thursday, September 4.

That an aged Christian may be guided and sustained during a period of weakness and perplexity.

For a fifteen-days' mission at Slade Green Baptist Church, commencing October 19, to be conducted by Mr. Bell, of the Evangelization Society.

For blessing on a Tent Mission for the men employed on the new railway works at Uxbridge, September 6-15, conducted by W. H. Holt, of the Navvy Mission Society.

Thanksgiving.

To the Lord that He is working in Conference Hall, Eccleston Square, S.W. Though the enormous majority of people in the neighbourhood are out of town, numbers in attendance increase, and the Lord is manifestly drawing some nearer to Himself.

The Medium of Spiritual Truth.—Ephes. i. 18 (R.V.), "Having the eyes of your heart enlightened." It is the heart and not the intellect that is the medium of spiritual truth. Culture your heart. Beware of a nourished intellect with a starved heart. —(From "Unfamiliar Texts.")

American Notes.

SOME of the leading Presbyterians are quite enthusiastic over an idea lately suggested for adding five million dollars to the Twentieth Century Fund of that denomination. Rev. John H. Fazel has proposed that each member of the Presbyterian Church should give to the fund one week's wages above the actual cost of living, and suggests the five working days of Thanksgiving week (the last week in November) as a good time for the experiment to be made. Mr. Fazel thinks that a million Presbyterians working five days ought to average at least a dollar a day over the cost of living; and if so, of course the large sum named would be raised with little effort.

The second priest to be sent to Northfield this year, after leaving the Roman Catholic Church, by Rev. James A. O'Connor, of Christ's Mission, in this city, was Rev. John H. Hemes, formerly priest of St. Clement's Church, Navarre, Ohio. He first heard of Christ's Mission through a parishioner who brought him a copy of "Father" O'Connor's magazine, The Converted Catholic, that he might pass judgment upon it. It had been sent to her by a friend in another city, and she thought it was a bad paper. The priest read it through, with the result that he wrote to Mr. O'Connor that night. A short time later he came to New York, and after prayer and conference resigned his position. He is now at Northfield preparing for the Protestant ministry.

New York. Roger Martin.

A Pilgrim's Prayer.

"Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of His servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light?"

"Let him trust in the Name of the Lord, and stay upon his God" (Isaiah l. 10).

Lord, I am wandering—lead me.
Lord, I am hungering—feed me.
Far from my Home—direct me.
Fearful and faint—protect me.

(Psa. lxxiii. 24)

Lord, I have none beside Thee,
Into the safe path guide me;
Give me Thy strength in weakness,
Give me Thy power—with meekness.

(Isa. xxxii. 2.)

Tempest and dark surround me,
But Thou hast loved and found me;
Onwards I press, not knowing
Whither my steps are going.

(Psa. xxxviii., xvi. 11.)

Lord, is there joy before me?
(Deeply the sharp thorn tore me),
Fiercely the rain-drops beat me,
Cold are the eyes that meet me.

(Isa. xli. 10.)

Still—let me know Thee near me,
This shall suffice to cheer me;
Darkness and death appal not,
Held by Thy hand I fall not.

(Phil. iii. 13, 14.)

Hush Thou my feeble fretting,
Thus, the sad past forgetting;
Peace to my heart is stealing,
Thou the Unseen revealing.

(1 Cor. xv. 57, 25.)

Yea, let me love Thee dearest,
Yea, let me feel Thee nearest;
Come, for my heart is failing,
Love over loss prevailing.

C. Maud Battersby.

A correspondent would like to know where to find a hymn in which the following verse occurs:—

Angels! assist our mighty joys,
Strike all your harps of gold;
But when you raise your highest notes,
His love can ne'er be told.

Obituary.

MR. JOHN WOOLDRIDGE.

THE death is announced of Mr. John Wooldridge, for many years a devoted Christian worker. As a tent preacher Mr. Wooldridge was widely known, and held in warm esteem for his straight speech and consistent life. He was confined to his bed through sickness for four months, and passed away in peace on Friday last.

MRS. EDWARD KEMP.

After four years of intense suffering, borne with Christian resignation and fortitude, Mrs. Edward Kemp, of Plumstead, passed to her rest on the 28th ult. Converted in 1856, she was a power for good and an earnest supporter of Christian and philantropic efforts. A member of St. James' Church, and superintendent of the Infant Sunday-school, &c., her memory will be held dear to those with whom she was brought in contact, many of whom were led into the way of eternal life through her instrumentality. Affecting reference to the deceased lady was made by Rev. S. Henning on Sunday last to a deeply-moved congregation.

REV. J. W. GILBERT.

When we went to India we had fifteen missionaries as fellow-passengers. One was Miss Williams, who was returning to be married to Mr. Gilbert, of the Baptist Mission at Serampore. We called upon them after their marriage, and found Mr. Gilbert a bright, happy, and apparently healthy man. It is, therefore, with exceeding regret and deep sympathy with his so early widowed wife, that we have received the following sad news in a letter from our friend, Rev. F. S. Hatch, the general secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavour in India, Burma, and Ceylon.

R. C. MORGAN.

"I am writing now to tell you of the death of Mr. Gilbert. You met him at Serampore. He died on Tuesday, July 29, and a letter from Rev. Herbert Anderson, the secretary of the Baptist Mission, says: 'It was my mournful duty to lay his body to rest in the sacred spot at Serampore, where are the tombs and graves of the pioneers of our Indian Mission, Drs. Carey, Marshman, and Ward. This bereavement will be more deeply mourned by our Mission than you will well conceive. Brother Gilbert was a man of very exceptional ability and of very deep spiritual character and experience; one we could in no way spare, looking from the human standpoint; but God had greater work for him in his own home above, and though we are so stricken we are not dismayed.'

"Mr. Gilbert was my associate in editing the India Christian Endeavour, and was secretary of the Bengal C.E. Union. He was my own personal helper and friend, and was on the whole the man I most relied on in the vicinity of Calcutta. I know not what I shall do in Bengal without him. This event and the death of Brother Chew, of the M.E. Mission, with whom I boarded in Calcutta, have cast a gloom over me, for I feel lonely here in India without these men."

Scottish Notes.

THE conference of ministers usually held at Craiglockhart will take place, for this year, at Deeside Hydropathic, Aberdeenshire, Nov. 3-5. The general subject will be "The Spiritual Opportunities and Responsibilities of a National Church."

The annual conference of the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild is to be held at Hamilton, September 21-23. This marks the completion of the Guild's twenty-first year of work. The Guild Sermon will be preached in Dalziel Parish Church, Motherwell, on Sunday evening, 21st inst., by Rev. Principal Lang, D.D. Arrangements have also been made for special sermons to young men being preached in all the churches within the bounds of the Presbytery on that day, the list of preachers containing the names of Rev. Drs. Norman Macleod, Macadam Muir, Mitford Mitchell. Theodore Marshall, George Wilson, M'Clymont, with Professors Cooper and Kennedy, and other well-known ministers.

The Churches.

Church of England.

An authoritative contradiction has been given to the statement that the Archbishop of Canterbury contemplated resigning the Primacy. Dr. Temple is taking a rest at Canterbury, and proposes to go to Scotland later in the year.

The foundation stone of the new church in course of erection at Badshot Lea was laid last week by Viscount Midleton. The new ecclesiastical parish is situated on the borders of Aldershot, and during the past few years has so rapidly increased in population that the arrangements hitherto in existence for the carrying on of the work of the Church have been found to be utterly inadequate. The church is to cost £3,000.

Churchmen and Nonconformists have combined in restoring the ancient parish church at Llandingad, as a tercentenary memorial to "Vicar Prichard," who was presented to the living in 1602. Prichard turned his sermons into rough popular verse, and his compositions have exercised almost as much influence over the religious life of Wales as the "Pilgrim's Progress" has done in England. Prichard, in addition, is said to have been the first clergyman to introduce open-air preaching in connection with with the Established Church.

The old parish church of Mundesley, Norfolk, for more than 100 years has had half its nave and the whole of its chancel in ruins. There is now a movement on foot to pull down the old roof and reroof the whole of the nave, and also to take in a small section of the old ruined chancel. This enlargement will give about 160 additional seats, which are much needed, as even in the winter months the little old church is often quite full; but in the "season" the rector (T. Tegg Harvey) is obliged to duplicate his morning service (making five each Sunday), and many people are turned away, as porch, aisle, and gallery are as crowded as the benches.

Congregational.

The centenary of Zion Chapel, Flockton, has recently been celebrated Though Nonconformity existed in Flockton as far back as 1678, Oliver Heywood, among others preaching here, it was not until 1802 that a Nonconformist place of worship was opened, this being Zion Chapel.

Claremont Mission, Pentonville, the first "centre" established by the London Congregational Union, is to be opened on October 2. Rev. C. Silvester Horne, of Kensington, will preach in the afternoon, and Mr. W. H. Brown, who gave £4.000 of the £8,000 which the initiation of the mission has cost, will preside at an evening meeting. On the following Sunday Rev. F. W. Newland, [the superintendent of the work, will commence the mission services.

Baptist.

Rev. W. Harrison, after ten years' ministry at Speen, Bucks, has accepted a unanimous invitation from the church at New Romney.

In connection with the jubilee of the church at Ilfracombe, advantage is being taken of the holiday season in making a special effort to remove the debt of £2,200 remaining on the enlarged chapel premises.

An invitation to Rev. A. Emlyn Jones, of New Barnet, to become pastor of Buckingham Chapel, Clifton, has been accepted, and he will begin his ministry on October 5. The thirteen years pastorate of Mr. Jones at Barnet has been singularly successful, and he has done excellent service as secretary of the local Free Church Council.

Mr. A. Cunningham Burley, of the Pastors' College, has received a cordial and unanimous invitation to the pastorate of the Baptist Church, Windsor. He has accepted the call, and hopes to commence his ministry on Lord's Day, October 5. During his college course Mr. Burley undertook the pastoral oversight of the Avenue Church, St. Margarets; also assisting the recently-formed Church at Newhaven.

At Woolwich Tabernacle, S.E., on Thursday last, Pastor John Wilson received a hearty welcome home, after his summer holiday, from a large and enthusiastic meeting. The twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. Wilson's settlement was also celebrated. Hearty recognition was made of his pastoral labours, and £335 was gathered for the building debt. During the twenty-five years the membership has increased from ninety to 1,500.

Brighton Grove Baptist College, Rusholme, on September 11, 12, and 13, will be the scene of the gathering of the fifth annual Conference of the Baptist Students' Fraternal Union. A reception will be given to the students in Union Chapel, Oxford Road, under the presidency of Rev. J. E. Roberts. The speakers will be Rev. John Thomas, of the Myrtle Street Church, Liverpool; Principal Marshall, of the College; and Rev. Samuel Pearson, of the Broughton Park Congregational Church.

The cause at Church, near Accrington, is making gratifying progress, and is now pushing on in forward work of a promising nature. For about eighteen months past the Ernest Street Church have taken up extension at Great Harwood, which has proved so successful that urgent necessity is laid upon them to make further advance. There are now thirty-seven members, eighty Sunday-school children, and eight teachers, meeting in a cottage in School Street. The congregations have outgrown this accommodation, and to meet the situation a site has been secured in Moss Street, on which it is proposed to erect a school chapel.

Methodist.

It is stated that the recent Wesleyan Conference cost the Methodists of Manchester £1,300.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes hopes that not a single foot of the Royal Aquarium property will pass out of the hands of the Wesleyans. It is expected that the point will not be settled until late in the autumn.

Under the ministry of Rev. J. T. Barkley, the new Primitive Methodist church at Harrogate is prospering. A scheme has been launched to reduce the debt by £1,000 during the next year. A site has been secured for a new church in High Harrogate.

Hinckley Road (Leicester) Primitive Methodist circuit is making substantial progress. The Sunday-school at the circuit chapel has no fewer than 1,300 scholars. All the churches on this circuit have been either built or rebuilt during the last thirty years.

The new church enterprize of the Primitive Methodists at Knaresborough has been a great success. Rev. W. Thoseby has received subscriptions from all parts of the country. The report shows that over £1,900 has been raised—a result that was thought impossible a few years ago.

The first anniversary of Nether Green United Methodist Free Church, Sheffield, has just been held under favourable circumstances. Congregations, offertories, and public interest in the services (conducted by Revs. G. T. Candlin and G. Wheatley) give promise of the building up of a strong church.

Presbyterian.

During August, Professor McComb, D.D., has occupied Dr. Meharry's pulpit at Crouch Hill with much acceptance. Before returning to Canada he will preach at Harrow on September 21 and 28.

After careful consideration, Rev. P. Carnegie Simpson, of Renfield Church, Glasgow, has intimated to the Westbourne Grove congregation that he does not see his way to encourage them in the further prosecution of their call.

A valedictory meeting is to be held in Stratford Church (Rev. A. Jeffrey) early in October to take leave of several missionaries who will be sailing for China on the 10th and 24th of that month. The departing missionaries will be Dr. Whyte (son of the well-known elder), Rev. George and Mrs. Ede, Rev. A. T. M. Anderson, Rev. C. C. Brown, Miss Rickett, Miss McArthur, Miss Gillespie, and Miss Brander.

Presbyteries are just now expected to give special attention to the claims of Sunday-school work. Conferences are being arranged for in all the large Presbyteries, at which the alleged decrease in attendance and its causes will be considered. The superintendents of schools, in response to a series of queries sent out by the Synod Committee, have made a number of valuable suggestions for improving matters, and these also will be carefully considered.

Society of Friends.

By their voluntary contributions, the members of the adult school at Pleasley have purchased a plot of land for the erection of school premises. At present the school meets in a small room.

Harriet Green recently spent a week at Manchester, in New England Yearly Meeting, and during her stay a series of special services was held. The meeting has been much blessed, and its numbers increased.

Joseph S. Elkinton, who has recently returned from an extended visit to the Dukhobor colonists, is hoping to get a school built shortly in the Saskatchewan Colony, where the people are favourable to instruction. Ten acres of suitable land have been promised to him free of charge, and the cost of the building and equipment are estimated at £400.

Fallen Asleep.

At his home in Dudley, aged 81, Mr. SILAS HENN, a writer and preacher of considerable note. He was closely associated with the Reform and Chartist movements; he was charitable in controversy, and wrote with much force on pulpit power.—Rev. GEORGE HARGREAVES, at Sandbach. He entered the ministry of the United Methodist Free Church in 1859, was a diligent and affectionate pastor, and highly esteemed.—At Colwyn Bay, Rev. R. D. GREEN (Congregational), for some years pastor of the church at Market Drayton, and brother of Rev. D. D. Green, L.M.S. missionary in Madagascar.—Captain RICHARD SOULSBY in his 81st year, one of the oldest inhabitants of Hu l, and for sixty-five years a member of the Wesleyan Methodist church, faithfully serving in many offices, and notably a class leader.—Rev. JOHN NELSON, who for 43 years laboured faithfully as a Wesleyan minister in a succession of circuits, stimulating many to Christian service by example as well as precept.—Dr. JAMES E. TUXFORD, aged 73, consulting surgeon of Boston Hospital, and a devoted member and generous supporter of Zion Church.

Welsh Notes.

THE annual meetings of the South Wales Temperance Association are to be held at Abersychan, Monmouthshire, on September 22, 23. Several conferences and public meetings are to take place on the occasion. A women's conference will be one of the features of the meetings.

The North Wales Summer School of Theology held its meetings at Ruthin on August 26, 27. The chief feature of the gatherings was a series of exceedingly able and valuable lectures on the attitude of recent thought to religion by Professor Henry Jones, of Glasgow. It has been decided to hold the school again next year, when it is hoped to have the services of either Principal Fairbairn, Rev. A. E. Garvie, or Dr. James Denney as principal lecturer.

The quarterly meetings of the North Wales Calvinistic Methodist Association were held at Carnarvon on August 26, 27, 28. The programme consisted of business meetings, conferences, and preaching services. The report submitted of the work done at the Bala Theological College was a thoroughly satisfactory one. Another report of marked importance dealt with the Protestant schools maintained by the Association in North Wales. These schools, the existence of which is not so widely known as it should be, are maintained by the Calvinistic Methodists of North Wales in order to counteract the pernicious influence of the Roman Catholic educational establishments in one or two counties. The report of the position of the Connexion in Carnarvonshire was satisfactory. In 1891 there was a population of 67,532 in the county. Of this number over 41 per cent. were Calvinistic Methodists. In 1901 the population had increased to 71,099, and the Calvinistic Methodists to 29,058. At the beginning of the present year there were eighty-six churches, with 104 ministers and preachers. During the past twelve years the communicants have increased by 2,129.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

St. Giles Christian Mission—S.H., A parcel of clothing.

Personalia.

Mr. CHARLES INGLIS hopes to sail on October 8 for America by ss. Oceanic. Many readers will follow him with their prayers in his evangelistic and prison work.

Mr. R. P. WILDER (a son of a missionary family) is now the travelling secretary of the Indian Y.M.C.A. He is in Switzerland, seeking recuperation from overwork. Will readers pray for his entire restoration to health?

The numerous friends of Rev. Dr. CALEB SCOTT, chairman of the Congregational Union, will regret to learn that he is again seriously ill, suffering from an attack of pneumonia. It is not anticipated that he will be able to preside at the autumnal meetings of the Union, to be held in Glasgow this month.

Mr. and Mrs. W. V. BAKER are meeting with much success in their work in America. In the middle of August they were at Seattle, Washington, from whence they were going to Tacome, and then to Portland, Oregon. These friends may be addressed c/o Mr. Jesse E. Thomas, 724, Shirley Street, Philadelphia, or 80c, Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

Rev. Dr. PIERSON will commence his seven months' ministry at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, S.E., on Sunday next, September 7, when he preaches at 11 a.m. and 6.30 p.m. Rev. F. B. Meyer will be present to welcome him in the name of the Church. Dr. Pierson hopes to preach at Christ Church also on Thursday evenings at 8.30 p.m.

Acknowledging God.

In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths (Prov. iii. 6).

WE often miss our way in our journey of life through forgetting the Great Leader and Guide. Note one or two lessons:—

1. The exercise of Providence in the affairs of life. (1) God is not an unconcerned spectator. (2) He does not allow His almighty powers to lie idle or dormant.

2. A direct acknowledgment of this Providence is demanded of men. It is the way of the world to attribute the circumstances of life to "chance," or "fate," or personal acts. But it is the mark and act of every Christian to look to the true and only Author of all things.

3. A distinct connection between piety and guidance. God will direct the man who trusts Him. He will lead him in a safe way. The path may not be agreeable at present, but it will lead to a blessed immortality. Take courage when overcome with difficulties, and know that all things work together for good to them that love the Lord Jesus Christ.

The King of Love my Shepherd is,
Whose goodness faileth never;
I nothing lack if I am His,
And He is mine for ever.

Plymouth. THOMAS HEATH.

For Missionaries on Furlough.—A small country house has been furnished and set apart for missionaries on furlough and Christian workers needing rest and change. It is situated in Lindfield, one mile from Hayward's Heath Station, and although in the heart of the country, is close to church, chapel, post-office, shops, and schools. It contains seven beds, and a woman is engaged to cook for the families staying there. Friends desiring further particulars should write to the Dowager Lady Tankerville, The Welkin, Lindfield, Sussex.

The Missionary Association convenes a meeting at the Police Institute, 14A, Adelphi Terrace, Adam Street, Strand (kindly lent for the occasion), on Wednesday, September 17, at four o'clock, to which Missionaries and those interested in missions are cordially invited. The object is to wait upon the God of Missions seeking the creation or revival of missionary interest in every member of the Church of Christ, to encourage and to strengthen one another's hands in God for obedience to the appeal of the Lord Jesus to go into all the world and proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to every creature.
